"Ever since Mother turned 50, she's been goin' through the Change. On the upside, we've got fewer bugs."

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Gummy bears often go fishing for swedish fish. They use gummy worms for bait.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
It is not safe to assume that nobody wants to date a fish. Some people might.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
It is better to be impeded than it is to be an actual impediment.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
You're not nearly important enough to have a blog. A pre-teen girl diary will suffice.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Give someone the famous vulture soliloquy. "Love be a vulture tonight..."

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Watching a person eat creeps them out and greatly increases their risk of choking.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Live by the sun, love by the moon, and watch out for seizures during eclipses.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Print your next important homework assignment on double quilted toilet paper.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Do not laugh at bike cops. They may look hilarious but they can still arrest you.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Change your middle name to Cougar. This will be a huge addition to your existe nce.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
The picture in the top right corner of this page is a portrait of you.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Maybe people who talk to themselves have a highly advanced cell phone in their brain.

How about a nice comics sandwich with bacon and cheese?

collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Activities

Montreal weekend from $99.00. Complete, motel, transportation and more. Montreal express.net 781-979-9001. Lowest Prices on campus

Apartment for Rent

4 Bedroom Townhouse. Amherst, AC, on bus route. $1799/month. All utilities included. Contact caseofme@gmail.com

Auto for Sale

1997 SAAB 900S 5 spd. white, CD, sunroof, new tires. $2150 413-323-6362

2002 KIA SPORTAGE 4X4, 2dr, 5spd, maroon, CD, air, cruise, 77K. Warranty. $5250, 413-323-6362

Child Care

Drive children to and from school, some childcare too. Must have safe car, excellent driving record, love children. References required, 10-20 hours per week. Call Mary 549-5691

Employment

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520. Ext. 162

Help Wanted

Recreation Leader - After School Program. The Town of Amherst seeks Recreation Leaders for its Prime Time After School Program operated by the Leisure Services and Supplemental Education Department (LSSE). Camp counseling, other experiences working with school age children, and/or related course-work in Elementary Education preferred. $8.60 to $9.03 hr; 5-15 hrs per week. Applications available from Human Resources Dept., 4 Boltwood Walk, Amherst or LSSE, 70 Boltwood Walk, Amherst or call S. Lecuivre @ 259-3191. Equal Employment Opportunity/Affermative Action Employer.

Motorcycle

SAVE GAS - BUY A SCOOTER 2005 Verruci 49cc. $900 or best offer 413.423.3050 (leave message)

Services

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906.

Services

1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

Concerned About Your Eating? Do you eat too little? Eat too much? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

PAPER HELP
Help write, research, organize, edit, type papers. $25/hr. UMass local. Harvard Graduate English M.Ed 413-230-8578

TAPESTRY HEALTH
providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling & rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable,

Services

Safe. 413-548-9992
27 Pray Street, Amherst www.tapestryhealth.org

Solons and Spas

Holistic Solon And Spa
Beautiful organic haircolor! Foils. Hi. Lowl. Party. Etc.
www.ShearBlissAmherst.com
413-253-2322

Travel

#1 Spring Break Website! 4 & 7 night trips. Low prices guaranteed. Group discounts for 8+. Book 20 people, get 3 free trips! Campus reps needed. www.StudentCity.com or 800-293-1445

Spring Break 2008 Sell Trips, Earn Cash & Go Free. Call for group discounts. Best Deals Guaranteed! Info/Reservations. 800-648-4849/ www.ststravel.com

Wanted

EGG DONORS NEEDED $15,000 (PLUS ALL EXPENSES) We are seeking women who are attractive, under the age of 29, SAT 1300+ (math+verbal), physically fit and maintaining a healthy lifestyle. If you have a desire to help an infertile family and would like more information please contact us. Email darlene@aperfectmatch.com www.aperfectmatch.com 1-800-264-8828

SEP 24 2007

SEP 25 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Three if by land

Red-shirt senior running back Matt Lawrence and the Minutemen improved to 4-0 on the season by defeating Maine, 38-7, on Saturday in Orono. Lawrence ran for 176 yards on 20 carries and scored three touchdowns, including a 62-yarder on UMass's second offensive play of the afternoon; he also scored touchdowns of one and four yards.

Lawrence's three scores carry UMass

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

ORONO, Maine – This is how bad it was for Maine against the Massachusetts football team on Saturday afternoon. After two minutes and two seconds – and just three UMass offensive plays – the Black Bears trailed 14-0.

But then it got worse.

Down 24-0 with 40 seconds remaining in the first half, Maine lined up to kick a 25-yard field goal in an effort to salvage the half with some points on the board. But they botched it.

The Black Bears botched just about everything on their home turf Saturday, losing to the No. 3 Minutemen, 38-7. Tailback Matt Lawrence torched a typically sound defensive team for a career-high 176 rushing yards and three touchdowns on 20 carries. Backup running back Tony Nelson had 104 yards of his own, as the Minutemen totaled 289 yards on the ground.

UMass	38
Maine	7

"First and foremost, they came in here like a defending champion and they played like it," said Maine coach Jack Cosgrove. "Lawrence impressed the heck out of me today. I think they have a shot to be better than last year, I really do."

"We came into the game with the thought process that we were going to mash the ball," UMass coach Don Brown said. "To think that you're going to mash the ball for 289 yards and have two guys over 100, I didn't know if we would be that successful."

The Minutemen (4-0, 2-0 Colonial Athletic

See FOOTBALL on page 7

UM rights ship in time for BC

Jeremy Rice

The season may have started on Sept. 1, but the Massachusetts football team finally arrived on Saturday, just in time for a 38-7 rout of Colonial Athletic Association rival Maine.

The Minutemen jumped out early against the Black Bears and never let up. That's something we've yet to see from this team – a complete performance. A win from opening kickoff to the game-ending kneel down.

In the three games prior to Saturday's win in Orono, Maine, UMass stumbled, struggled and fumbled its way to a 3-0 record. The Minutemen were undefeated, yes, and off to their best start since 1986, but had a tough Maine team ahead and Boston College looming a week beyond that.

The Maroon and White survived its early gaffes unscathed, but needed to right the ship before the waters became too turbulent. That's just what happened against the Black Bears. UMass finally looked like the team UMass coach Don Brown said was coming.

None of the first three games were pretty – penal-

See RICE on page 7

Minutemen roll over Huskies

Hogan, DeSantis score in '07 home opener

BY JOE MELONE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

As the final whistle approached in the Massachusetts men's soccer team's match against Harvard last Sunday, the Minutemen faced their third consecutive game without scoring a goal.

Freshman Stuart Attuck broke that streak in the 89th minute against the Crimson, and despite the loss, the goal sent a shot of confidence through the Minutemen (3-4-0). This confidence was visible in Saturday's 2-0 win over Northeastern (2-5-0). Whenever a UMass player previously missed a scoring chance, a look of frustration immediately overtook his face.

UMass	2
NU	0

"We know we can score. We've been having some problems lately," sophomore Bryan Hogan said. "We get opportunities. I think we had 17 shots today. We're going to get the chances; it's just a matter of putting them away."

Hogan got UMass going with his second goal of the season off a high cross from freshman Ben Arikian in the 56th minute. Junior Mike DeSantis doubled the UMass advantage with a goal just three minutes later.

With the score 2-0, the Huskies struggled to force any real scoring chances. But in the early minutes of the first half, NU looked primed to take a lead.

A Northeastern midfielder cleared the ball into the left flank and freshman Santiago Bedoya ran it down. UMass sophomore defender Dan Lepone tried to dispossess Bedoya, who then flipped the ball over Lepone and broke in alone on goalkeeper Zack Simmons.

Bedoya looked right, but shot the ball low to Simmons's left, trying to tuck it in the near post. Simmons deflected it wide to preserve the scoreless tie.

The Huskies's best scoring chance came in the 9th minute, however. Senior Greg Kilkenny broke in on Simmons, who came out to cut down the angle. Kilkenny tried to flip the ball past the UMass goalkeeper, but Simmons made the play once again.

"If they get one of those in, it's a completely differ-

See SOCCER on page 7

Maroon and White adjust to physical play, prevail

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

An aggressive style in soccer does not require a great deal of skill – only enough hustle and effort to outdo the other team.

On Saturday, Northeastern simply did not invest the necessary effort. Meanwhile, the Massachusetts men's soccer team adapted to Northeastern's physicality and didn't let the Huskies dictate the pace of play, despite favoring a finesse style of its own.

"It's a part of the game," UMass coach Sam Koch said. "[Soccer] is a physical game in general, even though it's not a contact sport."

Not only did the Minutemen earn their first shutout of the season, the team brought its three-game losing streak to an end. Sophomore forward Bryan Hogan knows that the Minutemen were able to adapt to Northeastern's style by playing hard for 90 minutes.

"I thought we played really well," Hogan said. "I think the key to this season is just to play hard. When we come out and play 50 or 75 percent, we play slow and we just don't win games – that's why we've been losing to teams that we should be beating. Everyone came out and just played tough and we got the result."

With the significant contact resulting from players fighting for possession, both teams combined for 23 fouls. Northeastern's physical play visibly frustrated the Minutemen in several instances. Though the Huskies committed more fouls, midfielders Mike DeSantis and Chris Vaccaro each received yellow cards.

Koch emphasized the value of smart decisions from his players so as to avoid giving Northeastern unearned opportunities, in addition to fighting for balls.

"You know that they're going to put you under pressure and challenge for every 50-50 ball," Koch said. "You've got to do the same thing. You have to play smart and pass the ball so you don't get into situations

See PHYSICAL on page 7

Bryan Hogan and the Minutemen fought a physical Northeastern team to a 2-0 win on Saturday. Hogan scored UMass's first goal.

Don Brown's Minutemen committed a season-low four penalties for 20 yards in Saturday's win over Maine.

NO 'LUCK' FOR ALBA & COOK | PAGE 4

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SUNNY : HI: 87 LO: 59 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 2007

SGA election results tallied

Campus living area senators and government positions announced

BY CARA GRANNEMANN AND EDEN UNVER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Final votes for the 2007-2008 Student Government Association elections have been tallied and the results are in.

The elections were held just last week for local area senator and certain area government positions at the University of Massachusetts.

According to the SGA elections report, Central Residential Area had the largest voter turnout, with a total of 338 validated votes. The North living area had the lowest voter turnout, with a total of 13 validated votes.

The ballots that were not considered to be "validated" included, but were not limited to, those that were "not marked clearly," "scratched, erased, or otherwise altered," "multiple ballots per voter," "votes that held personal information," or "votes that were cast in the wrong area."

For the North Residential Area, Matthew Granola won the position of senator. Daniel Semenuk won the position of North area governor, Nick Motyl won lieutenant governor, Ryan Fitzgerald won the position of secretary and Olivier Van Houtte and Matthew Giancola tied for the position of treasurer.

For the Northeast Residential Area, Maria Payano won the position of senator with a total of 24 votes. Kenneth Seriboru won the Sylvan area senate position and Michael Greehan won the position of secretary.

For the Orchard Hill Residential Area, Constantinos Stivaros won the position of senator.

In the nearby Central Residential Area, Jason Behrens won the position of senator with a total of 106 votes.

In the Southwest North Residential Area, Shania L. James won the position of senator, while Kevin Bolduc won senator in Southwest South Residential Area.

For commuter representation, Nathaniel Lane won the position of senator. The position of lieutenant governor was won by Scott Greenberg. The secretary position was won by John McCarthy. David Prevost won the position of treasurer.

In a ballot survey, students were asked to vote whether the University should put more energy into gaining state funding or gaining private donations.

The majority of students in most living areas chose state funding, with 599 votes for state funding, and 190 votes for private donations.

Students were also asked which type of school-sponsored event they would most likely attend out of a political forum, musical guest, party gala, comedian or other. Musical guests and comedians were the most popular choices among almost all living areas.

Cara Grannemann can be reached at cgrannem@student.umass.edu

Eden Unver can be reached at eunver@student.umass.edu

UMass students took time to vote in area senators and other positions last week at locations around campus and in the dining halls.

Campus 3-D map designed

BY DEVON COURTNEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Soon, students might be able to take an online tour of the University of Massachusetts campus before even coming to school, thanks to students in a drafting class.

Professor Alexander Schreyer of Wood Science and Structural Engineering assigned his students to create 3-D models of campus buildings for a Web-based program called Google Earth.

Although not integrated with the program yet, there are over 100 UMass buildings sitting in the Google Earth Warehouse waiting to be checked for accuracy before they are uploaded.

"Students might want to know what a dorm looks like," said Schreyer. "They might soon be able to take virtual walking tours of campus."

Students in Schreyer's class, "Advanced Topics in Computer Aided Design," were assigned to create online replicas of UMass buildings as part of a nationwide competition between universities.

"Each student was assigned three buildings," Schreyer explained.

Once the buildings were created using Google's Sketchup software, files were uploaded to the Google Earth Warehouse. Once uploaded, they began the process of awaiting review and accuracy checking from Google.

After the graphics are reviewed, they will become part of the Google Earth application. Presently they

See GOOGLE on page 2

Water treatment such as coagulation were found to remove salts, lower the amount of nitrogen and other contaminants in Nevada residents became skeptical of this treatment as reports began to surface that endocrine disruptors such as estrogens and pharmaceuticals were present in the wastewater.

The next Water Sustainability lecture, Understanding the Global Water Crisis, will be held by Kelly Lorcan on Oct. 22 at 3:30 p.m. in the Earth and Learning in the Student Union Building.

First in lecture series launched yesterday

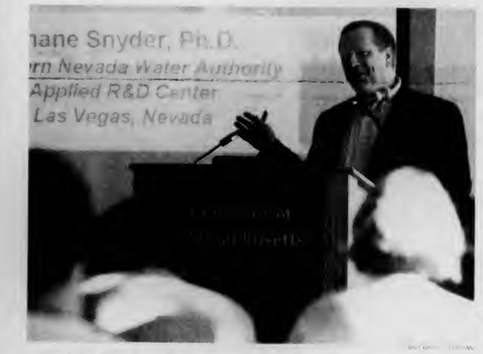
BY LAURA ORENTHAL
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The first lecture in a series of four promoting water sustainability was launched yesterday at the University of Massachusetts.

The Environment Institute (EI) launched the lecture that took place on campus at the Student Union building.

The research and development project manager of the Southern Nevada Water Authority (SNWA) and respected publisher, Shane Snyder, is the first guest lecturer in this series. Snyder's talk, "Emerging Contaminants and Water Quality: Endocrine Disruptors and Pharmaceuticals in the Environment," discusses water epidemics afflicting various parts of the world, especially the Southwestern United States.

Rapid population growth and increased concentrations in states such as Nevada have sparked a need for something that most people take for granted: fresh water. While some believe that water is a never-ending resource in arid environments such as Las Vegas, drought is a very real threat.



Large bodies of water in Nevada such as Lake Mead have gone nearly dry, dropping 83 feet in the last seven years.

The demand for fresh water is too high to sustain its limited inflow," said Snyder.

The Colorado River, which supplies the U.S. with 10 percent of its drinking water and Nevada with 90 percent, decided to tackle the fear of drought in a different manner.

To prevent a water crisis, a rigorous, expensive process has been developed where reused waste water is essentially recycled.

As Las Vegas grew in popularity, it was dubbed the "most visited city in the U.S." increasing its water demand, causing 88 percent of the water supply to be reused.

Guest lecturer Shane Snyder, Ph.D., spoke yesterday at the Student Union building on campus about promoting water sustainability.

Hostess Twinkies may come to an end

BY KATE OLSEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

One of America's most common snack foods is on the verge of disappearing – the infamous Twinkie.

Interstate Bakeries Corp., the creator of the Hostess line, Wonderbread and Drake's coffee cakes, announced recently that if it can't win concessions from its 20,000 union workers soon, they will close.

"That kind of junk food that has no purpose in the human body should be eradicated," said University of Massachusetts senior Joshua Farrell-Starbuck.

Sept. 30 is the final date for union workers to give the corporation concessions – and for the decision of the Twinkie's fate.

The 77-year-old Hostess Twinkie has endured criticism from students, dietitians and even authors.

In March, author Steve Ettlinger wrote the book "Twinkie, Deconstructed: My Journey to Discover How the Ingredients Found in Processed Foods Are Grown, Mined (Yes, Mined), and Manipulated Into What America Eats."

According to Publisher's Weekly, each chapter examines the ingredients in a Twinkie snack, in the order presented on the wrapper.

At one point, the author found himself at heavily-fortified manufacturing plants that produced small quantities of toxic chlorine to make the bleached flour found in a Twinkie.

But UMass students are divided when thinking about the fluffy, creamy cake.

Some students were excited for its proposed liquidation, like freshman M.J. Furtna, who said "Hostess is the devil."

Other students, who claimed that they had never tried a Twinkie, said that they wouldn't mind if the snack – or even just the wrapper – became a rare item.

"I've never really been into Twinkies," student Asher Putnam said. "It would be nice to see what the wrapper looks like and keep it for future generations. But I like my arteries the size they are."

The idea that a Twinkie snack is indestructible was also on many students' minds.

"I've heard they last forever so at least we'll have them for novelty items," said sophomore Sarah Jaffe.

Students also focused on how there are plenty of other foods that are better for the body than a yellow sponge cake filled with synthetic cream.

"I don't even like Twinkies," said freshman Mike Mills. "There's just a lot of crap in it."

The nation's sudden attention to low-carbohydrate diets has cut into dessert and white-bread sales, according to an ABC News report. The

See TWINKIES on page 2

Controversy after Kerry lecture

BY ALYSSA MONTAMBAULT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Last week at University of Florida student stirred up controversy at a lecture held on campus by Massachusetts Senator John Kerry and was Tasered by police.

Before getting up to ask Kerry questions at the lecture held Sept. 17, the student, Andrew Meyers, gave another student behind him his video camera.

Meyers began by getting up to the microphone and thanking Kerry for coming to the University. But soon, Meyers started shooting off question after question, not giving Kerry a chance to respond to them.

The microphone was finally cut, but Meyers refused to leave the stage. Four campus policemen dragged him off away from the microphone. Meyers refused to leave quietly, flailing his arms and trying to break free. He screamed, trying to get help from his fellow students. Police pinned Meyers to the ground.

Meyers yelled at the officers to release him and the rest of the audience heard him say, "Don't Tase me, bro," just before he was shocked by the Taser and escorted out of the room.

Meyer was later charged for resisting an officer and disturbing the peace and spent the night in Alachua County Jail. The police officers who arrested Meyers suggested that he be charged with violently resisting arrest, disturbing the peace and disrupting the school administrative function.

University of Florida student Andrew Meyers was arrested last week for resisting an officer and disturbing the peace during a lecture held on campus featuring Senator John Kerry.

The University of Massachusetts police force refused to comment when asked what they would have done in a similar situation, stating it would be "inappropriate" to do so.

However, UMass students were willing to speak.

"He completely deserved it. He was pushing the officers down trying to run away and not cooperating at all," said UMass sophomore Alexander Ramos. "On top of that, he kept yelling 'help' which meant for people to come get the police away from him."

Sophomore Jennifer Heraldo disagreed. "I think he was being a little obnoxious with his questions but he didn't deserve being tasered," she said. "Locking him up and fining him and kicking him after he was already on the ground was excessive. Simply escorting him out would have been enough."

Along with talking to students about their opinions on the issue, there were also some faculty mem-

See CONTROVERSY on page 2

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXXIII
2006-16
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Nicholas Belanger
Managing Editor Katie Heaton
Business Manager Dan Carr
Production Manager Chris Martin
Night Supervisor Meghan Murphy
Advertising Manager Alex Bender
Arts & Living Editor Lou McGill
Comics Editor Adam Stanton
Editorial Editor Sean Sullivan
News Editor Derrick Perkins
Sports Editor Jeremy Rice
Asst. Business Manager Eric Szymczak
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Linda Nichols
Asst. Arts & Living Blair McAskill
Asst. Arts & Living Stephanie McPherson
Asst. Arts & Living Teresa Reilly
Asst. Editorial James Mathews
Asst. Editorial Melissa Garber
Assistant News Will McGuinness
Assistant News Kate Flesia
Assistant News Holly Seibers
Assistant Sports Michael King
Assistant Sports Joe Mahon
Assistant Sports Eli Rosenwaike
Web Editor James Hale
Photo Editor Tom Trinh

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday-morning-Friday during the University of Massachusetts Amherst's academic year. The Collegian is independently owned and operated. An advertising supplement published in 1890, the first publication of Alex Lee became the College Signal in 1907. The Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Daily Collegian in 1956. Periodicals postage paid at the Collegian and additional mailing offices. Postmaster: Send address changes to the Collegian, 113 Campus Center, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, MA 01003.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Will McGuinness

COPY EDITOR
Kirsten Sorrentino

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1809
Your idea can be tomorrow's front page!

A 3-D map of campus from Google Earth, shown above, was created by Professor Alex Schrever and his Advanced Topics in Computer Aided Design class.

UM design course uses Google Earth

GOOGLE from page 1

are still accessible online and can be viewed by the public.

Although UMass was not one of the seven winning schools in the Google Earth competition, Schreyer and his students made good progress in getting UMass represented online.

Once the buildings are incepted with the Google Earth mainframe, they will serve a variety of functions. They can be looked at by prospective students thinking about coming to UMass. New buildings can be drawn up and placed on Google Earth to give an idea of what those buildings would ultimately look like. People confused about where a campus building is located can even reference it before braving the campus in person.

UMass isn't the only local area represented in Google Earth, downtown Amherst is also creating an online layout for itself.

"Students can even look for Antonio's," Schreyer said.

Schreyer also enlisted a group of students in the spring semester to organize and finish the project.

The students, Guy R. O'Donnell, Jason P. Miller and Diane M. Verdi, are from various departments, including Landscape Architecture and Regional Planning, Building Materials and Wood Technology, and Architecture and Design.

The schools that won the Google Earth competition for campus design can all be seen online through Google Earth. The schools, the University of Minnesota, Purdue University, Concordia University at Loyola, Stanford University, Indiana University, Franklin W. Olin University of Engineering and Dartmouth University, will be awarded the first-place prize by Google.

The participating members of each school will be flown to Google's headquarters in Mountain View, CA, for a 3-D modeling technique workshop.

Although Schreyer isn't sure what his next in-class assignment project will be, he is certain that it will be finalized in the spring.

Devon Courtney can be reached at dcourtne@student.umass.edu.

Fate of twinkies in company's hands

TWINKIES from page 1

company has been under bankruptcy since September 2004.

In 2000, poor diet and lack of exercise caused 400,000 deaths in the United States – a 16.6 percent increase since 1990, according to Today's Dietitian.

Many UMass students don't want to lose their Twinkie memories, since they frequently stuffed the snack into their lunchboxes in elementary school.

"I'd be kind of sad [if they got rid of Twinkies] because as a kid I would pack them in my lunch," said junior Bonnie Solomon. "They're a childhood food."

Other students said the desire to consume a Twinkie is tempting when the snack is right in front of them.

"Here's the thing with me and Twinkies," said senior Brittany Gwinn. "I think they are poison. But my mom once gave me a box of Twinkies for Christmas. If you gave me one right now I would probably eat it … but I still think they're poison."

If Interstate Bakeries Corp. sells the company, the buyer would most likely continue to produce the popular snack food.

Kate Olesin can be reached at kolesin@student.umass.edu

Hostess twinkies, created by Interstate Bakeries Corp., may retire after a decision to be made September 30.

Student tasered

CONTROVERSY from page 1

bers who voiced their opinions.

"The First Amendment doesn't just protect polite speech," said Karen List, head of the journalism department at UMass. "In fact, that's the speech that needs the least protection. Based on what I saw, I can't believe they kept the student in jail overnight for asking his questions in what looked to be a public forum."

"I certainly cannot understand why four police officers were not able to subdue one journalism student without the use of a Taser," said Barbara McGlynn, the journalism department advisor at UMass.

"Tasers can cause serious injury, even death, so I wouldn't agree with the use of the Taser under any circumstances unless someone else was in danger, which obviously wasn't the case."

Alyssa Montalbano can be reached at amontalb@student.umass.edu.

Eat, drink and write for the Collegian
News@DailyCollegian.Com

KAUST Discovery Scholarship

Full scholarships for science and technology students

The King Abdullah University of Science and Technology (KAUST), a 21st century graduate level, research university, is offering scholarships for future leaders in science, engineering, and technology.

The benefits of the KAUST Discovery Scholarship include
- Full tuition at current institution
- Living stipend, book and computer allowance
- Upon graduation, admission and full scholarship for the KAUST master's degree program at the University's Red Sea campus

The KAUST campus opens in September 2009. Highly talented students with one to three years remaining in first university degree programs can apply now.

Visit www.kaust.edu.sa/discovery, or email scholarships@kaust.edu.sa

KAUST

CONTACT

Office of Programs and Services for AN Students

Grab a friend, get your passport stamped and you will have an opportunity to win a $250* gift card towards the Textbook Annex/ U-store along with other great prizes

Bring your passports to the culminating reception September 27, 2007 from 7pm-9pm in the Cape Cod Lounge.

There will be [illegible] performances and at the end we will raffle off prizes

* In order to qualify for the grand prize you must have your passport submission slip into the OPSAS Office by 5:00 Student Union prior to 9 PM on September 27, 2007

S E P 25 2007

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
Editorial Opinion
Tuesday, September 25, 2007
"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it" Voltaire
Editorial@dailycollegian.com

No amnesty for illegals

Greg Collins

A Boston Globe headline last week contained an amusing non sequitur: "Quietly Living American Dream: No laws broken as illegal immigrants obtain loans, buy homes." As Congress revives debate over immigration reform, it is worth noting two clear distinctions.

First, the fact that illegal immigrants are good people is not sufficient enough of a reason to implement comprehensive immigration reform, like President Bush's proposal to create a guest-worker program seems to suggest.

Few would doubt that foreigners are a source of strength for America. Many come from countries that stress education in subjects like engineering and science, specifically those in Asia. Professionals with backgrounds in these areas have skills who are in perpetually high demand in America. The diversity of international students at the University of Massachusetts, spanning academic interests, religions and socioeconomic statuses, exemplify their undeniable contributions to this country and its educational systems.

Furthermore, the moral character of foreigners, legal or illegal, are not in question by those who maintain that current immigration laws should be upheld. Some illegal aliens are good people, and some are bad people. Some are family-oriented; and some aren't, just like Americans. FOX News conspicuously highlights brutal crimes committed by illegal immigrants, while there are, of course, countless other aliens who follow most of our country's laws. The Boston Globe story, for instance, reported how illegal immigrants raise families and pay taxes.

But the most important law illegal aliens reject is our country's legal procedures for assimilation. This is where the crucial distinction manifests itself: within the highly emotional debate about immigration, there is a large segment of politicians and liberal activists who claim that we should grant temporary legal status to illegal immigrants because they are law-abiding people in good moral standing and have established families here. But the mere fact that these characteristics apply to foreigners is a reason not strong enough to legalize illegal immigrants.

A second distinction needs to be made. The fact that enforcing the existing law will create turmoil for those illegal immigrants who broke it does not justify granting them amnesty. Few will dispute the idea that aliens, whether they have established themselves here or not, will have to change their lifestyle by reentering the country legally. But the fact that aliens may experience turmoil does not mean we should legalize them.

So why are these two reasons too weak to justify granting amnesty? Because they allow emotional subjectivity to play a large role in what should invariably be an objective way of implementing and enforcing public policy. Maintaining objectivity enables policy makers and Americans to preserve consistent application of the law, regardless of a person's skin color or religion, a principle stressed in the U.S. Constitution's 14th Amendment.

> "Imagine if an intruder entered your private property and started using your kitchen and laundry machines."

Imagine if an intruder entered your home or apartment and started using your kitchen and laundry machines. Imagine if he used resources in your child's cash-strapped public school system. How would you feel if police refused to criminalize him because they felt bad for him, and they thought it would create turmoil in his life, without considering the burden he placed on you and your child?

The central point is not that this person should be arrested because you are mad at him or that he shouldn't be arrested because he is a nice guy. From an objective point of view, it is because he did not follow a law which was intended to protect the lives and property of others. Disregard for objective enforcement weakens the importance of maintaining immigration procedures that ensure safety, maintain an awareness of who is and who is not in this country and stress that becoming an American citizen is a privilege and not a right.

To further anchor these principles, law enforcement officials should not only deport illegal immigrants but also encourage them to reenter the country legally.

They should also continue to build the physical fence and employ advanced technological devices to identify illegal aliens crossing the border, a plan proposed by presidential candidate Rudy Giuliani. Additionally, in an objective and conceivable fashion, U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services should make a concerted effort to grant green cards and visas more quickly to those foreigners coming into the country legally.

As the immigration debate resurfaces in Congress and newspapers, be wary of politicians and editors who use emotional arguments to debate this issue. There may be legitimate reasons to support a temporary worker program. But, as unfashionable as it is to say so, the fact that illegal immigrants have good moral character is not a good reason to grant them amnesty.

Greg Collins is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu

Regulate Tasers

John Gruenenfelder

Last week's Tasering of University of Florida student Andrew Meyer and subsequent viewing (thanks to YouTube) by millions of people has brought inappropriate Taser use back into the spotlight. It's a light that unfortunately keeps turning on and off, perhaps because it is becoming far too common, especially as more and more police departments are equipping themselves with Taser devices.

Police officers often face dangerous situations, so it can be difficult to argue against a new tool for them. There exists a large gray area between calmly arresting somebody and having to fire a gun at an armed suspect. A Taser can fit into that area and give officers a new way to proceed.

This presupposes, of course, that police use Tasers correctly, but one incident after another has proved that good judgment is sorely lacking. Like a firefighter, a police officer accepts some risk of personal injury by doing his or her job. Attempting to use a Taser in an effort to remove any chance of risk is terribly irresponsible.

In the Florida incident, for example, the student had already been subdued by four officers before a Taser was used. Just because he was offering some resistance does not require a shock when the four officers were perfectly capable of removing him from the auditorium.

Because Tasers are advertised as non-lethal devices, the bar on when they may be used has become dramatically lower than where it should be. Police often find it easier to fire Tasers than to properly assess the situation. And then there are, sadly, bad cops who use Tasers as a punitive measure on people who are already under control.

Beyond inappropriate use is the danger that Taser can kill a person. Since 2001, over 200 people have died from Taser use. In the majority of these cases, the person being shocked was under the influence of some other substance, such as drugs or alcohol. Unfortunately, that is all the coroners' reports typically show, and there is rarely a mention of a Taser as a contributing cause.

The fact that Tasers can and have caused people to die should push the threshold for their use far higher, but it has not. This is partly due to a lack of real studies or inquiries regarding Taser fatalities and partly due to an enormous public relations campaign by Taser International, the primary supplier of stun guns. Taser adamantly denies that Tasers have caused any deaths, and they push that idea to the various police departments they supply.

The lack of any comprehensive studies is not very surprising when considering the rapid rise in Taser use. The company was founded in 1993, but it was not until the release of the M-26 model in 2003 that police departments began to routinely outfit them. In 2000, only 50 agencies owned them versus the more than 9,000 police departments that use them now.

A central role of when – and in what situations – a Taser can be used needs to be decided upon. Tasers are not the first in a new class of non-lethal electric weapons, and regulating measures can prevent deaths where no lesser force is warranted.

Raytheon has developed a non-lethal weapon called the Silent Guardian, but in reality it can only be called a primary gun. Mounted on the back of a small vehicle, like a Hummer, it can break out of radiation tuned to surprising human nerve endings. The result is that the person on the receiving end of the ray feels as if a pain throughout his or her body. Afterward, there are, according to Raytheon, no effects of lasting physical effects, but that remains to be seen.

There is little doubt that exceptionally this weapon will be militarized, possibly into something that actually resembles a ray gun, and will lead its way into civilian police use. Without strict, clear and strictly-enforced rules on the usage of this non-lethal weapon, it could become another tool that sees all-too frequent use.

Devices such as the Taser or the pain ray can easily be misused, make it easier for city governments to inflict pain on people. Because of their design, there is little or no visible physical impact afterwards. It is much less evocative than hitting somebody with a baton but just as easy to do.

All Tasers and newer devices are treated as the dangerous weapons they are, there will continue to be cases after cases of abuse and irresponsible use. Many police officers and departments seem to treat them as equal to the standard police baton when they should really be thought of as only being preferable to a gun.

John Gruenenfelder is a Collegian columnist and can be reached at jgruenen@student.umass.edu

Guns are not a solution

Joshua H. Wilder

It has been almost a year since the gruesome school house shootings in the Amish community of Bart Township, PA shocked the nation. Violence in schools has been an issue of concern since the Columbine tragedy, but this massacre caught everyone off guard.

While you can never "predict" where or when such a shooting would take place, the fact that a gunman would choose a one-room Amish school house proved that no school in the country is safe.

Whether you are in the suburbs of a city like Boston or in the middle of rural America, the potential for violence comes along for the ride.

A grim reminder of the questionable safety of our schools, the shootings raised the question: How can we prevent these tragedies from happening in the future? The subsequent shooting spree at Virginia Tech showed that we still haven't figured that out yet. The issue rages on today, with various "solutions" being offered.

A teacher in Ashland, Ore. has offered her thoughts on the subject, and quite possibly the worst ideas to date. This teacher, who is known by the pseudonym "Jane Doe" in court and newspaper articles, wants to bring her 9-mm pistol to school with her while she teaches.

She originally got the gun to protect herself from an ex-husband who has frequently threatened her with violence. There is only one problem, though – the law in her district states that only law enforcement officials can bring guns into schools.

Well, that didn't sit well with Ms. Doe, and she has decided to challenge the school district in court. And lucky for her, now she has some supporters.

Like always, those wacky NRA nut jobs have found a way to get involved in the situation and now are turning it into a Second-Amendment showdown.

This issue isn't really about the right to carry guns because, well, for starters, that right will never be revoked or changed. This really comes down to logic – sitting down like big boys and girls and talking about an issue intelligently.

How do we protect students in schools? Jane Doe and the NRA are arguing that giving guns to the teachers will give them the power to regulate such violence; and in case another kid snaps during fifth period, they will be there to pop a cap immediately.

> "Guns don't kill people, people kill people. Well that is true, but the guns sure make it easier."

Guns don't kill people; people kill people. Well that is true, but the guns sure make it easier. The problem with this rationale is that you are trying to stop school shootings by putting more guns – the tool used for shootings – in the school, the place where the shootings take place.

Say your buddy is trying to cut back and lose a few pounds. 'Today is the day I lose the weight,' he says, as he fills his house with Oreos, Ring Dings and peanut butter cups. He is surrounding himself with the things he is trying to avoid.

Of course, some will say teachers are responsible, stable figures, so we should give them guns to mediate a situation. From my experience in school as a child, I can tell you that many teachers are completely off the wall. Some are great people, but many are high-strung, overworked control freaks. They need vacations, not guns. Not to mention the teachers who have sex with students – not the most grounded folks.

Let's follow this dangerous line of thinking a little farther. Campus safety is on everyone's minds these days, and the University of Massachusetts is as susceptible as any other university. So in order to make the area safer for students, how about giving guns not just to the professors but to the students also?

You check in on move-in day and get an assignment book, key and a gun. But it is a B.Y.O.B. affair – bring your own bullets, of course. Upperclassmen get bigger guns, since they have paid their dues. If anyone around here thought about trying something, they would know that everyone else had a gun too. Problem solved, right?

This example, while perhaps far-fetched, illustrates the crux of this issue. Bringing guns to school is a reactive solution, not proactive. If lawmakers are serious about implementing safety measures in schools, they could start with some common sense.

Instead of giving teachers guns, why not give students bulletproof vests? Sure they might be bulky, but does anyone doubt that students would feel safer if they knew they had a safety net like that?

Or what about installing shields on the desks or putting metal detectors at the entrances to schools? These ideas are really common sense; it doesn't take a rocket scientist to figure it out.

Americans love guns and the right to use them, but those who deny the role they play in school violence are kidding themselves. If we are serious about preventing further tragedies, we need to put the guns down and pick up our thinking caps.

Joshua H. Wilder is a Collegian columnist and can be reached at jhwilder@student.umass.edu

The British are coming, the British are coming

C.A. Chase

The United Kingdom has given us many things: our independence, Shakespeare, fish and chips, Harry Potter, the Beatles, Trainspotting, Earl Gray tea and exchange students. On the University of Massachusetts campus, the stars and stripes are competing with the union jack.

You may have noticed a few more dulcet-toned accents mixed in with the usual Boston ones. Why are our cousins from across the pond studying in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts?

When I interviewed exchange student Katie Fowler, a blond Brit from the University of Sussex, she informed me, in quite the British accent, that she and many of the British students on campus are part of an American Studies major that requires spending a year in the United States.

What led Fowler down the strange and twisted path of American Studies? "Well, I took a course in American Studies mainly because I'm interested in the literature, and the year in America was an added bonus. I think given the size and influence of America, it's a pretty interesting country to study."

In American Studies, one can focus on American history or American literature. Fowler is studying American literature in tandem with British literature, but she also knew about the American history angle.

> "Although I've been told that the British exchange students are here to study, I have a better theory."

"For history, it's America 'inside out,' like America's opinion of itself versus how the rest of the world views it." She likes UMass a lot, although the set up is different from British universities, where instead of continuous papers and evaluations, there are usually just two big essays or projects.

And why UMass? "I picked UMass mainly because I thought the courses looked good and like they would offer something different from what I study in England (particularly the English department), and also the location. I liked the idea of being near places like Boston and New York."

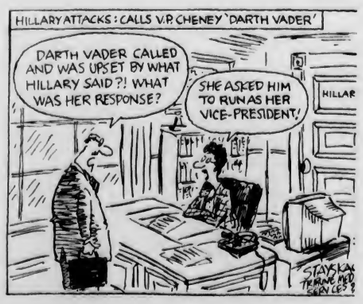
As the University of Sussex website says, "Although the United States and the United Kingdom share the same language, American Studies majors need to understand and come to terms with the 'foreign-ness' of American life as well as to have an opportunity to study their subject on its home territory and acquire a closer knowledge of American society and its culture."

If this is not a cover for British cultural black ops, then I don't know what is. Although Fowler says there are only about 15 English students here on exchange, don't underestimate the British threat: 15 is more than enough to sow and reap dissent.

A fact which may surprise American students is that our neighbor to the north, Canada, is included in "American Studies." Fulfilling the American Studies study-abroad requirement includes studying at a Canadian university – clearly an identification that is foreign to all that we hold holy and dear as Americans.

Given that few Americans can actually name the current Canadian Prime Minister, Stephen Harper, this is a shock indeed. Although as far as Rock 'n' Roll goes, John Lennon and Yoko Ono chilled with former Prime Minister (and groupie – hysteria inducing) Pierre Trudeau.

Although I've been told that the British exchange students are here to study, I have a better theory. I think they are here to facilitate the third British invasion by wowing us with their accents and Britpop. It has happened before, in fact, twice before. The first British invasion, during the '60s and '70s, hypnotized aurally-vulnerable American teens with the Beatles, the Rolling Stones, Led Zeppelin, Pink Floyd, the Who, the Yardbirds and the Kinks, among other bands.



Melding soul sounds with spine-tingling guitar riffs, the Brits brought more than just mop-top coiffures to the New World; they served as an accelerated generation gap. John Lennon infamously said that the Beatles were bigger than Jesus, and for a time, he may have been right. With music like this pouring onto our shores, with the added threat of awesome accents, I have serious fears for the stability of our government.

The second British invasion saturated the American music scene in the nineties with bands like Blur, Oasis, Radiohead and Coldplay. When you somehow fit in bands like the Clash and the Sex Pistols into the mix, one can only wonder how Uncle Sam wasn't replaced by John Bull.

In fact, besides American-based artists like Regina Spektor and Ben Lee, Fowler mostly likes English bands. Could they possibly be British bands with subliminal, seditious messages? So watch out for rebellious Brits disarming the ladies with their charming accents and bludgeoning everyone else with Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix – it was 870 pages long.

They may replace the Constitution with the works of J.K. Rowling, tax our tea unfairly (and without representation!), but hey, at least they gave us Morrissey and the Smiths.

C.A. Chase is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at cchase@student.umass.edu

SEP
25
2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

NEW MUSIC TUESDAY

Canadian sisters' new album continues to 'wow' listeners

In recent years, Tegan and Sara have performed on tour with Weezer, Neil Young and the Killers. The twins have also appeared on their own headlining tours and on "The Late Show With David Letterman."

BY STEPHANIE MCPHERSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Tegan and Sara, identical twins from Canada, released their new album, "The Con," on July 24. The fifth recording for the duo stays true to their original sound, making use of the easily distinguishable voices of the sisters, as well as interesting instrumentals.

Tegan and Sara began making music when they were fifteen-years-old. Together, they formed the punk rock band Plunk. According to the sisters, they were, "kind of [a] wussy punk [no drums or bass], and we were really bad." PLUNK evolved into Sara and Tegan, under which they won a Canadian garage band contest in 1998. From their winnings, they recorded their first three demo tapes, the "Red," "Yellow" and "Orange" tapes and their first independent album, "Under Feet Like Ours." This was later re-released under Tegan and Sara, which they are now known for.

Since being signed to an official label, Tegan and Sara have released four albums and two DVDs and have been nominated for a number of awards, including the YTV Achievement Award and the Western Canadian Music Awards, both of which they've won. They have scored magazine covers and TV appearances, including David Letterman, and their songs have been featured on the soundtracks to many popular television shows and movies, from "Grey's Anatomy" to "Monster-in-Law." They have opened for bands like the Killers, Weezer and Neil Young and have headlined tours throughout North America.

TEGAN AND SARA
THE CON
SIRE RECORDS
4/5

"The Con" lives up to the sisters' legacy-in-the-making. The songs on the new CD have enough of the group's familiar sound to keep their fans happy, but each track is different enough to avoid redundancy. Each song is a chapter of the album, rather than a track number, giving the album a storybook feel.

Tegan and Sara make full use of their song writing talents, as every track is an original piece. With lyrics like "I felt you in my legs. Before I even met you," it's hard to not enjoy this CD. With its mix of upbeat jams, like "Hop A Plane," and low-key melodies, such as the waltz feel of "Soil, Soil," the CD is full of musical surprises. With none of the songs over four minutes, each track makes its point beautifully and succinctly, making the entire CD an enjoyable listening experience.

The duo is currently touring the United States and Canada. Many of their shows are completely sold out, a testament to the group's growing popularity. Bands in the past, including Motion City Soundtrack and the White Stripes, have done covers of Tegan and Sara originals, including "You Wouldn't Like Me" and "Walking With a Ghost."

"The Con" is an impressive CD and an essential item for any alternative-rock library.

Stephanie McPherson can be reached at smcpherson@student.umass.edu.

Latest Babyface album highlights growth and maturity on new disc

BY STEPHANIE MCPHERSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Kenny "Babyface" Edmonds new release, "Playlist" sounds as mature as the new addition to his stage name. Formerly known as simply Babyface, Edmonds reaches into the past to pull out classics, updated with an R&B feel.

Edmonds has been in the music industry since 1986, writing songs for many successful artists of the 90's, including Celine Dion, Whitney Houston, Phil Collins and Aretha Franklin. He co-wrote the Eric Clapton hit "Change the World," found on the "Phenomenon" soundtrack. He also started Edmonds Production Company and has put out movies including "Soul Food" (1997) and "Josie and the Pussycats" (2001).

"Playlist," from Mercury Records, is mostly covers of familiar songs, from James Taylor to Eric Clapton to Bob Dylan. Edmonds adds nice twists on these old songs, keeping just enough of the acoustic guitar to pay tribute to the original artists but adding smooth R&B vocals and a steady beat to make it more modern. Some of the songs actually sound as if they were taken off a country album.

The CD starts with two James Taylor covers, "Shower the People" and "Fire and Rain". Edmonds stays true to the mellow vibe characteristic of Taylor with R&B percussion and piano additions. He trades the coarseness of Dave Loggins' "Please Come to Boston" for smooth and gentle vocals. He pays tribute to Clapton, covering "Wonderful Tonight," and Dylan's "Knockin' on Heaven's Door" has a new, distinctly country feel.

Only two of the ten tracks on "Playlist" were written specifically for the CD, but they both match the laid-back mood of the rest of the album. "Not Going Nowhere" and "The Soldier Song" both tell a poignant story. The former is a message from a father to his children, and the latter tells the tale of a young man and young woman who lost their lives in war.

Though all the songs are good, the best is the cover of "Time in a Bottle," the classic love song originally recorded by Jim Croce. Edmonds adds a strong Latin, R&B flavor on top of the haunting melody, which takes the song to a whole new level.

"Playlist" is a good tribute album, making modern those old favorites for a new generation to enjoy.

Stephanie McPherson can be reached at smcpherson@student.umass.edu.

KENNY "BABYFACE" EDMONDS
PLAYLIST
MERCURY RECORDS
3.5/5

Kenny "Babyface" Edmonds' latest album is full of classic rock 'n' roll covers such as Bob Dylan's "Knockin' on Heaven's Door" and Eric Clapton's "Wonderful Tonight" among others.

No good luck for Chuck

A bad plot and poor writing leaves viewers wanting more

BY PETER RIZZO
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

"Good Luck Chuck" contains most of the elements that should add up to a blockbuster Hollywood comedy. A possibly entertaining premise, physically appealing female star Jessica Alba, hilarious stand-up comic, Dane Cook.

All these things, however, can't save "Good Luck Chuck" from the movie doldrums. Placed in the barren movie wasteland that has been the month of September, it is easy to see why the ad campaigns for this movie changed so suddenly.

The first previews for the film had women chasing after Dane Cook ("Waiting," "Employee of the Month"), and Dane Cook chasing after Jessica Alba ("Sin City") in what appeared to be a promising film.

However, before the movie's release, the trailer abruptly shifted its tone, showing Jessica Alba's character, Cam, falling over and making no mention of the original premise of the movie. This, as it turns out, is a perfect allegory for the movie itself. The film has no idea what it is trying to be or who it is trying to please, and it ends up just like the ads: extremely confusing.

One part sex comedy, one part romantic comedy, "Good Luck Chuck" harkens back to the days of "There's Something About Mary," where this sort of combination would have worked. The problem is that in the face of this summer's blockbuster successes such as "Knocked Up" and "Superbad," "Good Luck Chuck" just feels outdated.

The former examples, which represent a new breed of comedy that bases its humor within its characters, have more of a naturally funny feel. "Good Luck Chuck," on the contrary, feels the need to toe the line of bad taste in order to strive for its jokes.

After viewing the movie, I had no idea what to think about it. Did I laugh during the movie, yes, but I didn't feel good about laughing at

See CHUCK on page 5

Dane Cook stars in the title role of the movie "Good Luck Chuck." He has previously acted in "Waiting" and "Employee of the Month."

Danticat captures the pain of Haiti

BY CHARLNOEY MARIE
SOUTH FLORIDA SUN SENTINEL

In her family memoir, "Brother, I'm Dying," Edwidge Danticat has produced a nearly perfect little book. Not only is this a consistently engaging account of fraternal devotion between her father and uncle, but it also serves as a miniature dramatization of the tragedy besetting her beloved, benighted native land, Haiti.

What's more, Danticat, for the most part, tells the story rather than showing it, thereby demonstrating one way in which autobiographical writing may be rescued from the excessive novelization that has plagued the memoir throughout its rise to literary and commercial prominence.

Danticat, of course, is a novelist of proven ability. Indeed, she is among the first important Haitian-born literary figures to write in English rather than in the island nation's colonial tongue, French, or the vernacular language of its people, Creole. She emerged as a prodigy when her creative writing theses at Brown University were published as the novel Breath, Eyes, Memory in 1994. Oprah Winfrey catapulted Danticat to superstardom by selecting the novel for her TV book club two years later.

"Brother, I'm Dying" engages the reader's attention from its opening sentence, "I found out I was pregnant the same day that my father's rapid weight loss and chronic shortness of breath were positively diagnosed as end-stage pulmonary fibrosis."

Quickly sketching in the details of a 2004 visit to New York, Danticat introduces us to the extended family centered on her father, a retired gypsy cab driver. At first, it seems as if she is laying the groundwork for a lovely, mournful meditation on the symmetry of life's cycles, as a revered father prepares to die and the family readies itself for the birth of a child.

Yet when Danticat pulls back in subsequent chapters to show her early life in Haiti, it is not her father but her uncle, Joseph, who becomes the protagonist of the story. Joseph is the brother who stayed behind in Port-au-Prince, where he served as pastor of a small Protestant church, a local eminence who ran a school, raised his own and other children and survived cancer of the throat to return to his pulpit.

See MEMOIR on page 5

Cook and Alba fail in new flick

"Good Luck Chuck" may have been better off being released ten years ago alongside movies like "There's Something About Mary," but with its dated jokes and cliche characters. Comparing the movie to latest comedies, the premise falls short.

CHUCK from page 4

As a reviewer, the movie seems suspicious to any sort of critical acclaim.

The main character in this film, Charlie (Dane Cook), has sex with women and following their encounters with him, they are consequently unable to find their true love.

The movie can be described, as the character of Charlie so aptly describes his love for Cam, "it is." At this, he pauses for effect so that one can ponder over the grandeur of this statement. It merely exists in the moment without any purpose or thought of how the movie might end up as a whole.

The movie is a series of things that movies have shown before and are better, more creative ways. Dan Fogler ("Balls of Fury") and Lonny Ross ("40 Rock") bring some needed hilarity to the premise, but their characters are merely a group of clichés that have been rearranged for this movie. The stoner brother, the sex-crazed best friend. Been there, done that.

As the plot evolves, Charlie, who was cursed as a child so that any woman he had sexual relations with will then find their true love with their next partner, is faced with the repercussions of this situation.

This naturally becomes a problem when he falls for the penguin caretaker at the local zoo, Cam. For a while, this love vs. lust plotline works with the movie. The movie slowly runs out of gas, while it proceeds to its inevitable conclusion.

The movie makes full use of its R rating, seemingly throwing in every token gross-out joke in the book in hopes that something might get a laugh. Watching this, one can't help but wonder who decided that this is a film that people might actually want to see.

Their efforts are not completely in vain as the movie's jokes hit and miss at about an even level. But on comes my moral dilemma of reviewing this film: It's critic-proof. One can not possibly pass judgment on something like this. How can someone critically assess a film in which Dane Cook performs sexual acts on a stuffed penguin? At the sight of a woman with three breasts?

"Good Luck Chuck" has its moments. Sometimes for the jokes, other times for the terrible conception of the movie's ideas. Overall, it was an experience comparable to a night out drinking until you get sick. It was fun, I had some laughs, but in the end, I just wish that it never happened.

Peter Rizzo can be reached at prizzo@student.umass.edu.

GOOD LUCK CHUCK
STARRING DANE COOK AND JESSICA ALBA
C-

'Brother, I'm Dying' highlights family

MEMOIR from page 4

Little Edwidge, though aware of her real father and mother far away in New York, regarded Joseph and his wife as her parents until she was 11-years-old. When her parents call to say they can finally afford to bring her and Bob to the United States, she is reluctant to go.

"I reached over and pinched him on the back of the hand that was holding the phone. My uncle slapped my hand away, all the while shooting me a reprimanding glare. Even though we had been expecting it, how could I tell him that I didn't want to leave him? What difference could it make? For better or for worse, I had to go. These were my parents, my real parents, and they wanted me to come live with them."

Danticat refrains from the false drama she might have obtained by shaping her nonfiction story into the tropes of a novel. On the contrary, as she relates anecdotes of family triumphs and misadventures, births and deaths, secret pregnancies, origin stories of long marriages, terrifying encounters with the Tontons Macoutes, her prose sometimes takes on the tone of a poetic fable, but never seems anything less than an honest attempt at factual accuracy.

In some ways, "Brother, I'm Dying" is an archetypal American immigrant story: parents move here and through hard work and sacrifice, lay the foundation for their children's prosperity, but in its details it remains distinctly Haitian, encompassing, by means of the sad end of her uncle's story, the particular tragedy of that downtrodden island.

Joseph refuses to leave Haiti and the Bel-Air neighborhood, even as conditions worsen over the years. On the eve of a long-planned trip to visit churches in Miami, his neighborhood is riven by a battle between U.N. troops and local gangs.

His house and church looted and in ruins, Joseph flees to the United States, where he is caught up in a Kafkaesque bureaucratic nightmare, mistakenly interned at the Krome Detention Center by indifferent functionaries. Despite frantic efforts by Danticat, her husband and an immigration lawyer, this dignified and blameless man, aged 81, is jailed like a criminal.

It is here that Danticat's stylistic restraint serves her best. Instead of ranting about the injustices inflicted upon Uncle Joseph, her narrative voice, if anything, grows quieter, even as she relates the series of indignities he suffers before the conclusion of his awful little drama. Joseph's story would have been forgotten had not his niece been a famous American writer with the skill and platform to report it.

Haitian-born novelist, Edwidge Danticat, is making a big name for herself among U.S. readers with her latest novel titled "Brother, I'm Dying."

The Third Annual Journalism Program Lecture Series on Broadcast and the Media presents...
The New New Journalism:
Challenges and Opportunities in Multimedia Reporting
Monday, October 1, 2007
7-8:30 p.m.
6:15 Free Pizza
Memorial Hall, UMass Amherst
Featuring:
Patrick Stiegman
Executive Editor and V.P. ESPN.com
Chet Rhodes
Assistant Managing Editor, News Video Washingtonpost.com
Emily Sweeney
Reporter
The Boston Globe
Moderated by Journalism prof Steve Fox
This program series is funded by David '79 and Tseela Kantor

Break the silence about sexual violence by creating a shirt that gives voice to these personal experiences. The shirts are hung shoulder-to-shoulder in a clothesline for public viewing, as if the survivors are standing there themselves, sharing their experiences.
The Clothesline gives voice to the experiences of survivors, victims, friends and family members who have been affected by violence. Men, women and children are encouraged to participate.
The Clothesline will be displayed:
Thursday, September 27
9 a.m. - 2 p.m.
Campus Pond Lawn
Raindate: Friday, September 28
We Encourage Women to be Empowered by their Choices.
UMASS AMHERST University Health Services
For more information, call Health Education at 577-5181
For more information about EWC services call 545-0883.
5 College Clothesline Project
Sponsored by The Women's Health Project of University Health Services Health Education, and The Everywoman's Center Rape Crisis and Violence Prevention Programs

FRESH, LOCAL & ON THE DC MENU
At UMass Dining
Tuesday, September 25
5-9 pm • All DCs
MEET OUR LOCAL FARMERS
ENJOY LIVE FIDDLE MUSIC!
MENU FEATURING:
Butternut Squash Soup (local)
Roast Turkey (local)
Herbed Roast Pork
Swordfish
Ratatouille (local)
Stuffed Peppers (local)
Harvest Fall Vegetable Medley (local)
Fresh Corn on the Cob (local)
Salad Bar (local)
Warm Sour Cream Apple Crisp with Local Ice Cream
GUEST FARMS:
1. Australis
2. Bart's Homemade Ice Cream
3. Bashista Orchards
4. Clarkdale Fruit Farm, Inc.
5. Cold Springs Orchard
6. Cook Farm
7. Cook Honey
8. J. Czajkowski Farm
9. Lightlife
10. Mapleline Farm
11. North Hadley Sugar Shack
12. Nourse Farms, Inc.
13. Pine Hill Orchard
14. Rao's Coffee
15. Warm Colors Apiary
16. Diemand Farm, Inc.
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
umass.edu/diningservices

Pride and Respect for UMass Amherst: Why it is Important

Both the fall semester and the final weeks of the Major League Baseball season are in full swing and it is an exciting time for all fans. As we approach the playoffs, we want to wish you and your favorite team the best of luck.

Enjoy the playoff games in your own rooms, with friends or on the big screen in the Blue Wall. When you celebrate your team victories, do so wisely and responsibly. And accept the losses with equal levelness.

The past few years, we have seen destructive student action associated with athletic events. While we personally do not understand this concept of violence and rioting as an expression of celebration, nonetheless it is a phenomenon we are currently witnessing nationally on college campuses and in major cities. Here, on our campus, these riots are usually related to the Boston Red Sox and the New England Patriots.

Student behavior reflects upon the entire campus and, as a result, influences the entire reputation of the University. When students engage in such destructive behavior, the public no longer sees our renown faculty, our cutting edge research or the majority of students who are truly interested in their academic careers.

All of the elements that make the University of Massachusetts Amherst a place of academic prestige are overshadowed by this destructive behavior:

- The reputation of the University is compromised, and by extension, the value of a student's degree is also lessened. A student's investment of intellectual discipline, time and financial resources is compromised.
- In addition to the academic compromise, University students are not regarded for their personal development or leadership skills. In seeking career or graduate school, a UMass Amherst student may be held in less regard than the graduate of another university.
- Our elected officials look upon the campus with concern and state funding for the campus may be jeopardized.
- Talented faculty and deans may be less likely to consider the University as a place of employment.

Collectively we can make a difference, and collectively we can instill pride in and respect for the University of Massachusetts Amherst.

Sincerely,

Charlena Seymour
Provost and
Senior Vice Chancellor
for Academic Affairs

Michael Gargano
Vice Chancellor
Student Affairs and Campus Life

SEP 25 2007

Nelson, Lawrence eclipse 100-yard mark

FOOTBALL from page 10

Brown was the defensive coordinator for the 1989 Ivy League champions. Brown was then head coach at Plymouth State (N.H.) from 1993-1995, winning two Freedom Conference championships, before spending two years as Brown's defensive coordinator and two years at the same position at UMass in 1998 and '99.

From 2000-03, Brown was head coach at Northeastern, winning one Atlantic 10 title in 2002. In 2004, Brown returned to UMass as head coach, leading the team to the NCAA championship game in 2006, his third year at the helm.

Because Brown was in Orono, Maine, at the time of the induction, his wife, Deborah, accepted the honor on his behalf.

FIRST TIME IN A LONG TIME

UMass is 4-0 for the first time since 1986 when the Minutemen, under head coach Jim Reid, defeated conference rivals James Madison, Richmond, Northeastern and Rhode Island before falling to Delaware in Week 5, 41-13.

The Maroon and White went on to finish the season 8-3 and win the Yankee Conference championship with a league record of 5-2.

The only better start to a season came in 1990, also under Reid, when UMass went undefeated until the final game of the season, a 36-18 loss to New Hampshire.

The Minutemen tied Holy Cross, 10-10, in the season opener, then ripped off eight consecutive victories before losing to UNH. UMass reached the NCAA Division I-AA playoffs, falling in the first round, 38-0, to William & Mary.

RUNNING BACK AND FORTH

In Saturday's 38-7 rout of Maine, Matt Lawrence (176 yards on 20 carries) and Tony Nelson (104 on 18) each eclipsed the century mark in rushing. The Minutemen totaled 289 yards on the ground in the game.

The tandem performance by Lawrence and Nelson was the first time UMass had two backs over 100 yards in one game since Steve Boylark and Rich Demers did so in 2003 in a 30-17 victory over Richmond.

In that game, the Minutemen stepped all over the Spiders for 258 yards rushing. Baylark led the way with 145 yards on 21 carries, and Demers was not far behind, with 128 yards on 18 carries.

Both Lawrence and Nelson had runs over 60 yards. Lawrence's came on the Minutemen's second offensive play, a 62-yard romp up the middle. Lawrence was hit at the line but never hit the ground, breaking several tackles before torching the secondary, which never had a chance to catch him.

Nelson's big run came on the final possession for UMass. With the game already out of hand at 31-7, Nelson broke off a 61-yard run, starting at the UMass 30-yard line. Nelson broke free and appeared to have a touchdown but was chased down at the Maine nine. UMass scored three plays later on a 5-yard Breyone Evans touchdown run to ice the game, 38-7.

TRUSTING YOUR LEG

UMass placekicker Chris Koepplin kicked the seventh 40-yard field goal of his career, with a 45-yard kick at the end of the first quarter against Maine.

Koepplin tied his career long in the season opener against Holy Cross, splitting the uprights from 48-yards out. The senior booted a 48-yarder last season against Stony Brook in a 48-7 win. He also made a 41-yarder in that game.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jerymyr@student.umass.edu

Sophomore running back Tony Nelson ran for 104 yards on 18 carries on Saturday in UMass's 38-7 win over Maine.

Minutewomen take on Brown, Albany

FIELD HOCKEY from page 10

five goals were the most on the team, and her three assists tied Katelyn Orlandos' for the team lead.

The conference games are the ones that determine whether or not UMass qualifies for the A-10 tournament, so it will be important for King to carry over her success from freshman year.

A-10 PLAY AROUND CORNER

After games against Brown this Wednesday and Albany this Sunday, the Minutewomen begin the A-10 portion of their schedule.

The top of the A-10 certainly looks different than it did last season. Richmond, who went a perfect 7-for-7 in the A-10, has struggled out of the gates this year.

Its lone win of its non-conference schedule came in its opening game against Hofstra. Since then, the Spiders have lost eight straight. However, the team could still be a force within the conference as five of their eight losses have come against nationally-ranked teams.

No A-10 teams have cracked the Top 20 in the STX/NFHCA poll, but Temple and St. Joseph's have received 17 and three votes, respectively.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

Freshman Jamie Bouraceris scored her first-career goal against UConn on Saturday. The back has started all nine games this season.

CAA teams climb polls after ASU loss

CAA FOOTBALL from page 10

all those who watched him play. We thought it was his shoulder because he injured [it] at North Carolina. And, actually, he was injured on the first play of the New Hampshire game. We didn't know it; he injured his knee," Coach Mickey Matthews said. "We decided we are going to scope his knee this week and because he's a true senior and not a red-shirt senior. He can medically hardship this year because of the small amount of games he's played. Unless anything happens, we are going to scope his knee, and he will be out for the year."

Coach Matthews might revisit the option of playing him if the team were to lose another running back, but as of now, Holloman is planning to red shirt this season. Last season he played in 10 games, rushing for 1,085 yards and scoring eight touchdowns.

Delaware linebacker Matt Marcorelle recorded three sacks in the Blue Hens' win over Towson on Saturday to win CAA Defensive Player of the Week.

TOP RANKINGS FOR CAA TEAMS

The CAA has five teams in the Sports Network Top 25 rankings as of Sept. 24. Massachusetts is No. 2 in both rankings followed by No. 9 James Madison, No. 11 New Hampshire, No. 12 Delaware and No. 14 Hofstra.

UNH improved its records to 2-1 after running up the score against Dartmouth, 52-31. Quarterback Ricky Santos threw two touchdown passes and ran for one. Wide receiver Mike Boyle took the opening kick off 91 yards for a score, and on the next UNH possession, he scored a 3-yard touchdown.

"We put Mike Boyle back deep for the first time in two years returning kickoffs for us," UNH coach Sean McDonald said. "Mike caught it and got a great block and a big seam, [he] hit a 91-yard touchdown out the gate."

UNH plays Richmond this weekend, and these two teams could combine for a shootout with the amount of points they are able to put up.

"Watching Hightower not only against Bucknell and Northeastern, but how well he ran against Vanderbilt," McDonald said. "We have a major challenge stopping [Richmond's] offense on Saturday."

Hofstra turned some heads this weekend after trailing, 24-7, at halftime, the Pride scored 30 unanswered points in the second half to win, 37-24 at URI. The offense exploded for 27 points in the third quarter alone, with the touchdowns being spread around.

Running back Kareem Huggins scored on a 5-yard run to cut the lead in half. Four minutes later in the third, wide receiver Ottis Lewis caught a 33-yard touchdown pass from quarterback Bryan Savage. Savage hit wide receiver Charles Sullivan with a 4-yard pass. On the next drive, Savage took it himself 21 yards to score the fourth touchdown in a 12-minute span.

"Rhode Island did a great job of getting after us in the first half," Hofstra coach Dave Cohen said. "A lot of things went bad, but to our players credit, they kept their heads up and they kept their composure and we were lucky enough to get out of there with a win."

Northeastern has the best percentage for red zone offenses in the league for the few times it's made it down in scoring position. They are 7-for-7 with six touchdowns and one field goal. Delaware is second going 22-for-23 with 17 touchdowns and five field goals. Hofstra has committed the fewest penalties through three games with 15 for only 94 yards. Villanova has the league's best turnover margin at plus-8, averaging a two more turnovers than its opponents.

Steve Gaines can be reached at sgaines@student.umass.edu.

PEARSON

National Evaluation Systems (NES) is a leader in the testing industry, providing customized assessments for teacher licensure. NES is part of Pearson Education, one of the world's premier education companies.

PART-TIME TEMPORARY POSITIONS

We are looking for part-time assistance with a variety of office and clerical tasks. Preferred candidates will work quickly and accurately, pay attention to details, and be comfortable in a busy work environment. Various work schedules are available between 9:00 a.m. and 9:00 p.m. Additional ongoing positions are available during conferences at our Hadley office. Hours for these table assistant positions are 8:30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. Preference will be given to individuals who can work 15+ hours a week. Pay rate starts at $8.00/hr. (Req. #20165)

Applications accepted only at www.pearsoned.com.

E.O.E.

Wake up Wednesday with Flap Jacks & Funnies!

FREE Pancake Breakfast

Wednesday, September 26
8:30 - 11:30 a.m., Memorial Hall

Start your senior year off with a FREE breakfast and animated comedy! Stop by Memorial Hall anytime between 8:30-11:30 a.m. where you can enjoy pancakes piled high with sweet maple syrup, breakfast sausage, coffee and juice, all while you kick back and relax watching morning cartoons! Roll out of bed, stop by before or after class and bring your appetite!

This breakfast is exclusive to seniors!
No registration required... Just stop in!

ALUMNI ASSOCIATION STUDENT ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

Visit UMassAlumni.com/students for more information

let your imagination soar

School of Engineering Career Fair
September 26
10 a.m. – 3 p.m.
Campus Center Auditorium

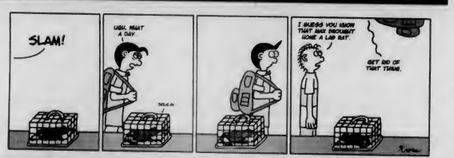
Don't be Hatin'

collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Free Delivery to UMass Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

			5		3
		1				3
8	3						2	4
		3		9		5		7
7	6						8	9
		4		7		1	2
1	9						3	2
		2				6
			1		6

Quote of the Day



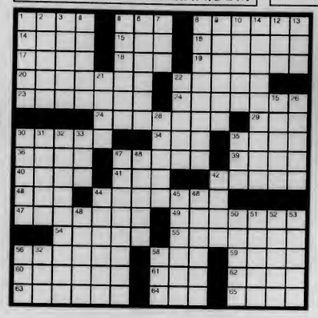
"In real life, I assure you, there is no such thing as algebra."

-Fran Lebowitz

Ecology By Jen Fell

Last Ditch Effort By John Kroes

Labrat By Richard Martelly



Crossword

ACROSS
1 Pitt of "A River Runs Through It"
5 Mongrel dog
8 Infuriates
14 Last gasp
15 ... port in a storm
16 Brunei's island
17 Declare positively
18 Either half of a fly?
19 Spirited mounts
20 Green Mountain State
22 On the wagon
23 Toronto's lake
24 Reng loudly
27 Clap
29 One of the Gebors
30 Make off with 34 Table scrap
35 Goblet part
36 Prong
37 No longer current 39 Employ
40 "Peanuts" expletive
41 Chill
42 Breakaway religious factions
43 Bauxite or galena
44 Adore
47 Gin or vodka cocktail
49 Charms
54 Twill weave
55 Business case
56 "Sanford" character
58 Pub quaff
59 Like a waiter
60 Reverse dive
61 For each
62 Look after
63 Deed holders
64 NFL scores
65 God of love

DOWN
1 La Scala cheer
2 Portentous bird
3 Wide-mesh
4 Stuffed deli delicacy
5 Herb for felines
6 Pop the cork from 7 Cereal grass
8 Positive
9 Pretty good
10 Inexperienced
11 Vigorous
12 Blushing
13 Distress letters
21 Spoken
22 Cicatrices
25 Six-time U.S. Open champion
26 Ladies with titles
28 Falls short of victory
30 Senator Thurmond
31 Beauty pageant crown
32 Amuse
33 QDE's opponent
35 That ... blows!
37 Early settlers
38 Bitterly pungent
42 Petty quarrel
44 Frankfurter
45 Effected a cure
46 Buries
48 Wind
50 Dull surface
51 Reddish yellow pigment
52 Endangered Afr. ungulate
53 Transmits
56 Braggart's problem
57 Jurisprudence
58 Suitable

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Graduate Lounge

Not Just For Grads Open To All 21 + Serving Beer & Wine

CAMPUS CENTER CONCOURSE

Union Billiards

Pool, Games & More Open To All Ages Great For Functions

DOWNSTAIRS STUDENT UNION

BOTH OPEN MON-FRI 11-9 CALL 545-2045 FOR INFO

Submit your comics!

collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Submit your classifieds!

(413) 545-3500

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Life is one big game of Candyland, and you are stuck with the scary licorice man.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Your incredible irregularity calls for unparalled quantities of Metamucil.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
All that pepperoni pizza you eat is really not helping your greasy skin problem.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Create a hyper-confident alias with a smug swagger and overbearing voice.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Add Twinkies to your sexual repetoire to increase the sweetness of your game.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Carry a dodgeball around campus and throw it at ugly people. YOU'RE OUT!

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Simply gracing the world with your affable smile counts as a good deed.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Kanye West is a college dropout. 50 Cent got shot 9 times. Where's the contest?

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Opening your refrigerator over and over again will not generate more food.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Buy day old bagels from People's Market, and feed them to animals. Animal's Market?

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Your life may or may not be worthless, but you will be a posthumous millionaire.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Every single day Tom Hanks' nose looks more a more like the snout of a swine.

GET FREAKY!

collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Activities

Montreal weekend from $99.00. Complete, motel, transportation and more. Montreal express.net 781-979-9001. Lowest Prices on campus.

Apartment for Rent

4 Bedroom Townhouse, Amherst, AC, on bus route. $1799/month. All utilities included. Contact: caseofme@gmail.com

Auto for Sale

1997 SAAB 900S 5 spd, white, CD, sunroof, new tires. $2150 413-323-6362

2002 KIA SPORTAGE 4X4. 2dr, 5spd, maroon, CD, air, cruise, 77K. Warranty. $5250, 413-323-6362

Child Care

Drive children to and from school, some childcare too. Must have safe car, excellent driving record, love children. References required. 10-20 hours per week. Call Mary 549-5691

Employment

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520. Ext. 162

Help Wanted

CAFE HELP PART-TIME nights and weekends must be fast, accurate, efficient and friendly. Apply in person at the wood-star cafe. 60 Masonic St. Northampton.

Recreation Leader - After School Program. The Town of Amherst seeks

Help Wanted

Recreation Leaders for its Prime Time After School Program operated by the Leisure Services and Supplemental Education Department (LSSE). Camp counseling, other experiences working with school age children, and/or related course-work in Elementary Education preferred. $8.60 to $9.03 hr; 5-15 hrs per week. Applications available from Human Resources Dept., 4 Boltwood Walk, Amherst or LSSE, 70 Boltwood Walk, Amherst or call S. Lecuivre @ 259-3191. Equal Employment Oppertunity/Affermative Action Employer.

WWW.DailyCollegian.com

Motorcycle

SAVE GAS - BUY A SCOOTER 2005 Verruci 49cc. $900 or best offer 413.423.3050 (leave message)

Services

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org.

Concerned About Your Eating? Do you eat too little? Eat too much? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH, providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling & rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992 27 Pray Street, Amherst www.tapestryhealth.org

Services

Travel

*#1 Spring Break Website! 4 & 7 night trips. Low prices guaranteed. Group discounts for 8+. Book 20 people, get 3 free trips! Campus reps needed. www.StudentCity com or 800-293-1445

Work From Your Dorm Need additional money? full/pr supported by an 8 trillion dollar industry - please visit www.WantYourOwn.biz or www.8Trillion.com - all information is inside the web site and do view extra

Travel

tab on the booking engine 413.695.5973 Laighton Allenby

Wanted

EGG DONORS NEEDED $15,000 (PLUS ALL EXPENSES). We are seeking women who are attractive, under the age of 29, SAT 1300+ (math+verbal), physically fit and maintaining a healthy lifestyle. If you have a desire to help an infertile family and would like more information please contact us. Email: darlene@aperfectmatch.com www.aperfectmatch.com 1-800-264-8828

GW drops annual matchup with Rider

SLU rises to No. 18 in poll, Bonnies battle illiteracy

By Sam Ehrlich
Collegian Correspondent

Andy Stadler scores quickly and often for George Washington, but sometimes, it just isn't enough.

Despite a goal 13 seconds into the match, the Colonials (3-3-4) lost to Rider on Saturday, 2-1.

Stadler has scored a point in each of GW's last five games.

He also leads the team with five goals and is leading the Atlantic 10 with two points per game.

The sophomore's goal on Saturday came right after the first whistle of the game for the second year in a row in the Colonials-Broncs rivalry.

Last year, Thomas Stuber scored 18 seconds into the match at Rider. GW won that game, 2-1.

However, some unlucky defense for the Colonials caused this match to end with the opposite outcome.

Rider junior Colin Jennings scored the game-tying goal in the 15th minute when his seemingly-harmless free kick from midfield glanced off a GW defender's head for the first Bronc goal.

Freshman forward Tom Antonucci later headed in a pass from teammate Lee Lomasso to give the Broncs the 2-1 lead and victory.

Billikens blank Bradley

After moving to No. 18 in the National Soccer Coaches Association of America coaches' poll, Saint Louis flexed its nationally ranked muscles with a 2-0 shutout at Bradley Saturday.

A-10 Soccer

Junior forward Dado Hamzagic led the way with a goal and an assist in the game, with sophomore midfielder Scott Wisniewski adding a late insurance goal to ice the game for the Billikens.

Hamzagic broke the scoreless tie with just over 15 minutes remaining after receiving a cross pass from sophomore back Rob Viviano on the left flank, sending a shot past BU goalkeeper Mike Havnes' right side.

The new rankings came after Saint Louis' wins against Loyola-Marymount and previously No. 2 Indiana.

Sophomore midfielder Josh Aranda was named to the Top Drawer Soccer's National Team of the Week after earning Co-Most Valuable Player honors at his team's hosted tournament last weekend.

Teammate Kyle Patterson was also named to College Soccer News' Team of the Week after netting the game winner against Indiana.

Bonnies promote reading

For the third straight year, St. Bonaventure will not only be taking on their Atlantic 10 and non-conference opponents, but illiteracy as well.

The team will visit Boardmanville, Washington West, Ivers J. Norton and East View elementary schools in upstate New York to help launch the new and improved "Get a Kick out of Reading" program, which is designed to encourage the area's children to implement reading into their everyday lives.

The program will reach approximately 1,300 students.

The Bonnies will visit the schools up to six times towards the end of October and early November to check up on the students' progress, including an introductory assembly to decide their reading goals for the two-week period.

At the end of the program, the students who meet or pass their set goals will receive prizes, such as pizza parties. Bonnies memorabilia and a lunch and/or recess with the team.

Spiders egged late

Despite freshman Jake Russell's second goal in his last three games, Richmond couldn't hold on against George Mason in its first of four straight games against 2006 NCAA tournament teams.

Already down 2-0 with just under six minutes remaining, Russell took a pass from junior Delano Pierre and one-timed it into the net. The reigning A-10 Rookie of the Week has scored a point in each of his last four games.

However, despite a 16-12 shot advantage, the Spiders had already fallen behind on a hard shot by George Mason's Parker Walton that was perfectly placed in the upper right corner of the cage from 20 yards out.

The Patriots were later awarded a penalty kick for a takedown in the goalkeeper's box at 80:07. Chris Chaves shot it past Spider goalkeeper Eric Sciocchetti to give George Mason an insurance goal that proved the difference in the game… La Salle made a statement in its home-opener and first conference game, beating Saint Joseph's, 4-1. Junior forward Ryan Daugherty scored two goals for the Explorers to bring them to a 2-3-1 record. The Hawks are now 1-5-0.

Elsewhere in the A-10

Charlotte fought its way to a 1-0 win behind sophomore goalkeeper David Martin's six saves. Junior midfielder Kent Long shot the game-winner in the second overtime to beat Presbyterian … Dayton senior Zac Gibbens also made six saves in goal Sunday, but the Flyers' offense wasn't so lucky against Belmont. The teams ended in a scoreless tie … Fordham (1-4-2) also could only manage a scoreless tie against Delaware. Freshman keeper Dan Hajducky tallied 10 saves for his first-career shutout.

Sam Ehrlich can be reached at sehrlich@student.umass.edu.

La Salle junior Ryan Dougherty scored two goals and assisted on another in the Explorers' 4-1 win over Saint Joseph's. He tallied all three points in less than two minutes.

Spiders struggling against nationally-ranked opponents

A-10 F. hockey from page 10

Orange helped them win 5-0. On Sept. 23, the Billikens played No. 16 Louisville. The game was tied in the second half, but Louisville scored two goals within three minutes to rally past SLU.

The Cardinals are the fourth nationally ranked opponent the Billikens have faced this season. Jacklyn McGranahan scored the Billikens' lone goal. SLU is now 2-8 after this weekend's losses.

Lechner leads La Salle

La Salle's Colleen Lechner scored the only goal for the Explorers on Sept. 21 in a 3-1 loss to Lehigh.

On Sept. 23, La Salle beat Saint Francis, 4-1. Kara Harpel scored her seventh goal of the season for the Explorers. Adrianna Lalli scored the second goal in the game, which in turn was her first-career goal.

Maria Allegretto and Kelly Dougherty scored the third and fourth goals of the game, bringing the Explorers record to 6-5.

Spiders still struggling

Richmond lost to No. 13 Duke, 4-1, on the road on Sunday.

Sophomore Megan Thompson scored her third goal of the season. She is now ranked second on the team with six points. After this weekend, Richmond has dropped to 1-8 on the season.

Five of its losses were against teams currently ranked in the NFHCA Top 20. Richmond has lost to No. 8 James Madison, No. 9 American, No. 13 Duke, No. 15 Virginia and No. 17 Delaware.

West Chester's woes

West Chester held decided advantages in shots and penalty corners but was unable to beat visiting Colgate. West Chester lost 2-0; although, it out-shot Colgate 17-7.

Katherine Sarasohn can be reached at ksarasoh@student.umass.edu.

WWW.DailyCollegianSports.Blogspot.com
From the Press Box

Attention First-Year Students:

TIME'S ALMOST UP!

Have you completed MyStudentBody? It's easy, interesting ... and required for all first-year students. To avoid a registration hold, you must take and pass the course no later than Monday, October 1st. For instructions, go to:

www.umass.edu/uhs/cadap/msb/

Center for Alcohol and other Drug Abuse Prevention

GET YOUR CAREER IN GEAR!

ALDI

SHIFT YOUR CAREER INTO OVERDRIVE

Fascinating. Challenging. And very, very rewarding. If you're looking for a career where you'll have the responsibility and decision-making power to impact an international company's future — and your own — then check out ALDI.

$70K Starting Salary

We're looking for smart, confident, dynamic leaders to grow with us — beginning as District Managers, and on a career path leading to a Director position (Director Starting Salary is $70K). You'll motivate. You'll empower. You'll transform management potential into leadership experience while overseeing 5 to 6 of ALDI's 850+ U.S. stores.* And you'll do it all while enjoying a generous compensation and benefits package:

- 10 days of vacation first full calendar year
- 20 days of vacation second year
- A company car (Toyota Camry)
- Disability and life insurance
- Medical, Dental & Vision insurance
- A retirement savings plan

THE ROAD TO SUCCESS

Great pay, great benefits, and the kind of responsibility that requires a full year of hands-on training. This isn't just a job — it's a career. Interested? Let's talk.

EOE M/F/V/D ALDI.com

*International Opportunities Also Available

Visit our booth at the Fall Career Fair on Tuesday, October 2 • Contact Career Services for details

SEP 25 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Moore eyes receptions record

Brown honored by alma mater, UM 4-0 for first time since '86

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

When your team is as successful as the Massachusetts football team has been recently, the all-time statistics lists change more often than the names on the back of the jerseys.

Add another adjustment after Saturday's win over Maine. Wide receiver J.J. Moore caught seven balls against the Black Bears for 71 yards. Moore now has 25 receptions this season, giving him 130 in his career at UMass, good enough for third best in UMass history.

UMass Football

Moore passed UMass running back Marcel Shipp (1997-2000), who caught 126 passes out of the backfield during his record-breaking career.

Moore was tied for fourth on the list with Jason Peebler's (2001-2004) entering Saturday's contest with 123 career receptions.

Next on the list for Moore to catch is 2006 alumnus, Brandon London. The wide receiver is second on the all-time list with 148 career receptions. Moore will need about three catches per game the rest of the season to pass London. He's currently averaging more than six.

Adrian Zullo (1998-2002) is far and away the Maroon and White's all-time reception leader with 187 over four years. Moore will need 58 catches over the final seven games (not including possible postseason games) to become the top pass-catcher for UMass.

COACH 'EM UP

While UMass coach Don Brown was in Maine leading the Minutemen to their fourth win of the season, Norwich University was honoring him by inducting Brown to the school's Athletic Hall of Fame.

Brown graduated from the military academy in 1977 and was a four-year letterwinner in football and a two-year letterwinner in basketball.

Norwich honored him for his career as a football coach, not just his accomplishments while attending the school, though he was a celebrated athlete. He was the starting running back and team co-captain his senior year.

After leaving Norwich, Brown began his road toward becoming head coach at UMass as an assistant coach at Hartford High School in White River Junction, Vt., for five years. From there, Brown jumped to the collegiate level as an assistant at Dartmouth in 1982 and at Mansfield University (Penn.), in 1983. Brown returned to Dartmouth as defensive coordinator from 1984-86.

Five years at Yale followed, where

See FOOTBALL on page 7

MICHAEL HOLLIN/COLLEGIAN

After catching seven passes on Saturday, J.J. Moore is now third all-time on the UMass career receptions list with 130.

Hightower torches Bisons in UR victory

Marcorelle's three sacks lead Delaware past Schaefer, Tigers

BY STEVE GAMES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Richmond running back Tim Hightower earned Colonial Athletic Association Player of the Week honors for the second time this season. Hightower rushed for a Richmond record 295 yards and four touchdowns, leading his team over Bucknell, 45-14.

CAA Football

His performance was the seventh-best single-game rushing mark in league history. He averaged 12.3 yards per carry and gained 20 yards receiving. His total of 315 yards ranks as the highest single-game total this season Division I-Football Championship Subdivision. His four scores came from 57, 52, 37 and 36 yards.

"He's made some really big runs. I think our offensive line has done a nice job of keeping people covered up and allowing us to have some seams in the running game and Timmy's done an outstanding job of getting out into the second and third level pulling away from people," Richmond coach Dave Clawson said during the CAA teleconference.

Hightower leads the CAA in rushing with 614 yards on 57 carries in three games. The second highest rusher is Massachusetts running back Matt Lawrence with 517 yards on 82 carries in four games.

Delaware's Matt Marcorelle was named CAA Defensive Player of the Week leading the Blue Hens over Towson, 27-7. Marcorelle totaled three sacks for a loss of 27 yards and anchored the defense that allowed an explosive Towson passing attack to 157 total yards.

"Matt was getting frustrated because [he] is the type of guy [who] wants to make every play, and I think what Matt is finally figuring out is that in this game that we play and the defense we play, He can't make every play," Delaware coach K.C. Keeler said. "He just needs to make the plays that we allow him to make based on the defense."

Marcorelle also notched six tackles as the Blue Hen defense moved the Tiger rushing offense backwards for negative 16 yards.

INJURY HITS JMU

James Madison (3-1, 1-0 CAA) beat up on Costal Carolina 45-10. Leading the way for JMU was running back Scott Noble, who scored two touchdowns. JMU piled up at least 40 points in its last three games, including 41 against New Hampshire last week. JMU takes on Villanova this week for its fourth home game in five weeks. Despite playing without starting tailback Eugene Holloman, the team put up solid numbers behind quarterback Rodney Landers, who threw for 163 yards and rushed for 129 yards.

"Well Eugene didn't play very well in the New Hampshire game for

See CAA FOOTBALL on page 7

Loss to UConn not without positives

Gillespie, Bourazeris tally first goals of 2007 season

BY MIKE CONNORS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Though the Massachusetts field hockey team's bid for an upset over No. 4 Connecticut fell short this past Sunday, two players were able to beat UConn's Andrea Mainiero to collect their first goals of the 2007 season.

UMass Field Hockey

Jaime Bourazeris came into Amherst as a four-year starter for New Hyde Park Memorial High School (N.Y.). Her high school success has translated into success at the collegiate level as well.

The freshman's maturity has impressed UMass coach Justine Sowry immensely this season. Bourazeris has started all nine games this year, and she was rewarded with her first goal against the Huskies.

She also registered another shot in the first half that went wide of the net.

In last year's 6-14 campaign, Lauren Gillespie was a bright spot for the Minutewomen with 13 goals coming off the bench. Her goal total nearly doubled that of anyone else's on the team, and her 38 shots on goal were second to Cher King's 38.

Gillespie did not start the season very well, but she did net her first goal of the season against UConn in the first half.

Last season, Gillespie had eight goals through nine games, including a hat trick in a 4-2 victory over Fairfield. However, she did have a five-game scoring drought last year, so her first goal of this season may be able to give her the momentum needed to collect more tallies in upcoming games.

UCONN USED TO TOUGH WINS

The No. 4 Huskies suffered a scare when they had to rely on a goal with 1:17 left in the game to surpass the Minutewomen, but winning tight games has been their blueprint for success this season.

In its nine wins, UConn's largest margin of victory has been two, and its total margin of victory is 14. The Huskies endured a one-goal loss to Villanova on Sept. 22.

FOUR-GAME SCORING DROUGHT

UMass goal-scoring leader Cher King has yet to score a goal since the Minutewomen's 3-1 loss at Vermont on Sept. 8. UMass is 1-3 over that period. Two of these games include 1-0 and 2-0 defeats at the hands of New Hampshire and Boston University, respectively.

Sowry has mentioned that the most important member of the offense is King, who leads the team vocally and by example. It appears that King is the driving force behind the Minutewomen's success, and the team has struggled as her success has fallen.

Last year, King did lead the team in Atlantic 10 scoring. Her Junior Lauren Gillespie scored her first goal of the season against Connecticut on Saturday. She led the Minutewomen with 13 last season despite coming off the bench.

See FIELD HOCKEY on page 7

Richmond running back Tim Hightower ran for 295 yards and scored four touchdowns in the Spiders' 45-14 win over Bucknell on Saturday.

Minutewomen perform well in Philly

Pozar, Boney continue strong play in preseason tourney

BY ADAM MILLER
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

With slightly over four months until the start of the regular season, the Massachusetts tennis team is already gaining significant experience that it hopes will lead to a competitive season.

Three UMass players participated in the Cisse Leary Invitational over the weekend in Philadelphia, Pa. The tournament featured many elite schools including No. 65 Pennsylvania, No. 67 Virginia Tech , No. 72 Yale and No. 73 Princeton.

UMass coach Judy Dixon feels that this team is already "35 percent improved," in comparison to the last tournament after a promising run from senior Masha Pozar and freshman Candyence Boney. The pair reached the semi-finals, beating a top 8 pair from Penn State featuring senior Michelle Mitchell and freshman Alexa Ily, 8-2.

In just two weeks of practice together, Pozar and Boney had more success in the invitational than Pozar did with her former doubles partner, UMass alumnus Michelle Spiess.

Boney and Pozar did not continue their success as they lost to a No. 2 seed, also from Penn State, senior Julia Koulbitskaya and sophomore Ekaterina Kominskaya, 8-3.

"Most [players] don't come in with doubles knowledge because doubles isn't something that [people] play a lot of," Dixon said. "Candyence is placed in this enviable position of playing with Masha."

Dixon was most impressed that Boney still found ways to score points regardless of the pressure teams put on her.

"Mentally [getting to the semi-finals] helps me realize that I can play well on the college level," Boney said.

Boney also gained experience from participating in the singles' tournament. She struggled in the first match of her collegiate career, losing to Columbia junior Sydney Murray in two sets, 7-6 (3), 6-3.

During that game, she felt that she didn't play to the best of her abilities because of the nervousness from playing in her first game. In the consolation round, she overcame her nerves to beat Kansas freshman Mymee Tokudu in two sets, 6-1, 6-3.

"When I first started playing, I was really nervous," Boney said. "But then I started to loosen up because if I play nervous then I'll play badly anyway, so it was best if I just relax and play my game."

Dixon said instances like these are why tournaments such as the Cissie Leary Invitational are important even though they do not count towards the regular season. It helps freshmen such as Boney and Kaitlyn Carpenter, who also lost in the first round, get over the pressure of playing college tennis.

These tournaments also sharpen skills for a veteran like Pozar, who defeated Yale senior Lindsay Dashiell in two sets, 6-3, 6-1, to advance to the quarter-finals.

Pozar challenged third-seeded Penn State senior Yulia Rivelis for three sets but lost, 1-6, 6-1, 10- 4.

After two successful tournaments, Dixon feels the team possesses plenty of potential for the upcoming season, considering the improvement already made in these past two weeks.

While the Minutewomen were not so successful as they were in the Army Invitational, the team still exceeded expectations by holding its own in a more competitive tournament.

Dixon believes that the results on paper do not equate to the true progress of the team.

"We are, at this moment, not the same team even though we won the Westpoint tournament," Dixon said. "We are playing better."

UMass brings its tournament tested team back to Amherst as they play rival Connecticut in a pre-season match, Sept. 26 at 2 p.m.

Adam Miller can be reached at ajmill@student.umass.edu.

Saint Joseph's wins fourth straight game

BY KATHERINE SARASOHN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

For the second week in a row, freshman Jen Wrublesky of Saint Joseph's was named Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week.

St. Joe's won its fourth straight game with a 2-1 overtime victory over American on Sept. 23. Wrublesky, a Langhorne, Pa., native scored the game winner. This was SJU's second win of the season against a ranked opponent; American sat at No. 9 in the polls prior to the matchup. Theresa Barbati scored the first goal of the game, her second of the season.

A-10 Field Hockey

The Hawks are 2-1 against ranked opponents, 1-1 in overtime games and 2-2 on the road for their 2007 season.

PLAYERS OF THE WEEK

Rhode Island's Jill Powers was named co-Player of the Week for the Atlantic 10 alongside Temple's Alfi Lokey. Over the weekend, Rhode Island lost to Maine in a 1-0 overtime game. URI goalkeeper, M.J. Britt had seven saves in the game. This weekend's loss brings the Rams to 6-3 for the season.

Temple, on the other hand, recorded its fourth straight victory with a pair of wins. Temple defeated Vermont, 2-1, in overtime on Sept. 21. The Owls then shut out Lafayette, 2-0, on Sept. 22. Lokey scored the second goal of the game on a pass from teammate, Dannah Brehm. Lokey has eight goals on the season, and the Owls' record is now 8-3.

WASSERMAN LEADS BILLIKENS

Amy Wasserman, the goalkeeper for Saint Louis, made a season-high 14 saves against Syracuse on Sept. 22.

Three second-half goals by the

See A-10 F. HOCKEY on page 9

BROWN BEARS COME TO GARBER | PAGE 8

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

MOSTLY SUNNY : HI: 91 LO: 61 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 2007

Students feel pinch as ATM fees rise

Bank of America sets standard for new rates

BY STELLA CERNAK
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Setting ATM fees at an all-time high, Bank of America increased its ATM surcharges for non-customers from $2 to $3 last week.

The new fee will also affect Bank of America members who use other ATMs. As a result of Bank of America's decision, some banks, such as U.S. Bank and Wachovia, have decided to follow suit and raise their fees for non-customers to $3 at a number of machines.

ATM fees cost consumers $4.2 billion in 2006.

According to Greg McBride, senior analyst at Bankrate.com,"Banks often move like a school of fish on punitive charges such as ATM surcharges and credit card late fees, so it's just a matter of time before others follow suit."

The increase in Bank of America's charges, spokeswoman Betty Reese explained, are being implemented in order to improve access and convenience for the bank's account holders.

Yet, for the millions of Americans who do not hold accounts with the bank, the increase will only aggravate current inconveniences.

The new policy hits home at the University of Massachusetts, where Bank of America, which has a contract with the University, is the only bank that has ATMs on campus.

UMass junior Bill Thompson has a Bank of America account, but keeps most of his money in other banks. Thompson uses the Bank of America ATMs to withdraw money from his other accounts due to the large number of Bank of America machines available in the area, which outnumber those offered by his other banks.

"It's ridiculous, you have to pay money to get money. You don't have to tip a human teller – Oh, thanks for my money, Susan, here's three bucks," Thompson said.

John Hall, a spokesman for the American Bankers Association, defends the fees, stating that banks actually lose money because the machines cost banks a lot in operations and maintenance and because ATM services are free for the bank's customers. Automated teller machines cost $9,000 to $15,000 and an additional $12,000 to $15,000 in annual maintenance. Bank customers, who use the machines for free, make up the majority of the ATM's users, according to Hall.

Heather Heath, a UMass student from Connecticut, ended up opening a Bank of America account last year

See ATM on page 2

Banks across the nation, including Wachovia and U.S. Bank, are following Bank of America's lead by raising the cost of transactions for non-customers to $3.

Movie nights may violate copyright laws

BY DANIELLE KAHN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

While there are times when setting up a movie night in your residence hall lounge with a few friends may seem like fun, you may be inadvertently breaking the law.

Part of U.S. copyright law states that movies are not allowed to be shown in public places without purchasing a license beforehand. You may not look at your residence hall lounge as a public place, but according to the law, dorm lounges can fall under that heading.

Students at the University of Massachusetts do not seem to feel the copyright law poses a huge inconvenience for them.

"If the RA told me I couldn't watch a movie in the lounge I'd just go up stairs and watch it in my room," said UMass student Alicia La Rosa, "No one ever even told me about that rule, I haven't seen anyone get in trouble for it."

It is stated in the Resident Assistant manual that students are not allowed to watch movies in the lounges. The penalties for doing so are fines between $500 and $20,000.

If any UMass staff member is charged with a lawsuit due to these copyright infringements, the University will not offer them any legal support in their case. Students are allowed to watch movies in their rooms, but it is still considered illegal if they advertise the watching of the movie as open to the public.

So far, not many students at UMass have run in to a problem with the copyright law.

"I didn't know that law existed I haven't even seen an RA enforce it yet," said another student, Sarah Nabulsi.

RAs are also not supposed to allow the use of UMass equipment to watch these copyrighted movies. The RLRC (Residence Life Resource Center) has a few movies that are allowed to be shown publicly, but the selection is slim. If you want to order a new movie for the library, it usually costs up to $500 to do so.

Danielle Kahn can be reached at dkahn@student.umass.edu

Residence hall lounges are considered public spaces making the playing of copyrighted movies a violation of UMass regulations and illegal under U.S. law.

UMass activists canvass N.H. for Obama

BY JENN BERGEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

KEENE, N.H. — UMass students supporting Senator Barack Obama headed north last weekend to speak with New Hampshire residents.

Members of UMass for Barack Obama, a chapter of the national Students for Barack Obama (SFBO) organization at the University of Massachusetts, took part in canvassing the city of Keene, N.H.

"The purpose of the group really is to help out the Obama campaign in any way we can. Fortunately we live close enough to New Hampshire that we can make a real difference in the country's first primary," said Matthew Cadwallader, the founder of the official UMass chapter of the Obama for America campaign student wing.

The group plans to make more canvassing trips to New Hampshire throughout the semester. UMass for Barack Obama has also registered dozens of voters and is planning on holding voter registration drives in the future.

"There are tens of thousands of students here at UMass. If we can tap into a percentage of those and get them active in the campaign, then I think we will have been successful," said Cadwallader.

"As for our goals during this semester, we want to conduct more canvassing and phone banking and maybe even bring some speakers to the campus."

Erin Staff, a member of the group and a UMass freshman, supported Obama's position on the war in Iraq.

"His dislike on the war, he's not trying to accommodate anyone else. He's like, 'Get us the hell out the first thing that you do,'" she said.

UMass for Barack Obama holds weekly meetings where members get together and relay information regarding Obama's campaign. The meetings are both to further educate the students involved on the presidential campaign and serve as a place in which the students can gather and show their support for the senator.

"Our meetings serve as a place where anyone interested in Senator Obama can come and feel free to talk about him and ask us questions about him and just show support for his candidacy," said the group's media coordinator Ashley Coulombe.

Members of UMass for Barack Obama took to the streets this past weekend to drum up support for the senator's presidential campaign.

"We also talk about events we're planning for the upcoming week and do our best to keep students updated about our group and Senator Obama."

The student run organization also maintains a Facebook group called UMass for Barack Obama, which had over 120 members at last count. The online group has many benefits for the organization, especially serving as an easily accessible source for students to connect on the issues important to Obama.

Students joining the Facebook group show their support for the senator and have the opportunity to mingle with students who share their concerns.

The members of the Obama support group consider themselves lucky to be so close in proximity to the early primary state of New Hampshire. Canvassing is a crucial support of UMass for Barack Obama, according to the members.

The group members who attended the canvassing trip to Keene were Coulombe, Coulombe, Biraba a Kaindo, Hannah Wilson, Alexis Rea, Devon Pittsley, and Erin Staff.

Jenn Bergen can be reached at jbergen@student.umass.edu.

UM mental health adds two clinicians

BY DOMENIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts Health Services has added two clinicians specializing in individual and couples therapy to the Mental Health Services staff.

The additions are Michelle Carbonneau, M.S.W., L.I.C.S.W. and Jennifer Lexington, Ph.D. Harry Rockland-Miller, Ph.D., the director of MHS, made public the additions to his staff early last week.

Carbonneau is a psychiatric social worker with clinical interests in individual and couples therapy, gay/lesbian/bisexual and transgender issues, women's issues and crisis intervention. She earned her master's degree in 2003 from the Smith College School for Social Work, and is a member of the National Association of Social Workers.

Lexington is a psychologist whose clinical expertise includes psychotherapy, behavioral medicine and clinical supervision. A graduate of Temple University, she came to UMHS in 2005 and completed a postgraduate fellowship last semester.

Rockland-Miller, who could not be reached for comment yesterday, is also a clinical psychologist specializing in individual, couples and family therapy, consultation and crisis intervention. He joined UMass in 1998.

Previously, Rockland-Miller served as acting vice president of Behavioral Health Services at Holyoke Hospital, where he directed the hospital's Center for Psychiatry and coordinated psychiatric crisis services. He is also a licensed psychologist in Massachusetts and New York, and is on the National Register of Health Service Providers in Psychology.

Mental Health Services, located at 127 Hills North on Infirmary Way on the UMass campus, provides support and therapy groups, confidential counseling, behavioral medicine, medication management and eating disorders clinic, as well as consultation and education for the campus and surrounding communities.

The MHS staff includes social workers, psychiatrists, psychologists, advanced practice nurses and interns, all of whom focus on issues and concerns faced by students.

Anyone who would like to contact the Mental Health Service can call (413) 545-2337 or go to www.umass.edu/shs/mentalhealth.

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu

Board honors UM professor

BY EVA WILLIAMS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

University professor John J. McCarthy has been appointed Distinguished Professor by the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees.

He joined the UMass faculty in 1984 as a world-renowned leader in the field of phonology," said Chancellor Robert C. Holub. UMass Chancellor John V. Lombardi recommended McCarthy to J. Mass President Jack Wilson for the honor, distinguishing him as a leader in the field of linguistics.

McCarthy was an important contributor in the formation of the optimality- theoretic linguistic model which is a development of generative grammar and which is applied to phonology, syntax and semantics.

McCarthy was also one of two developers instrumental in the development of the prosodic morphology theory.

See AWARD on page 2

SEP 26 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 17

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3499 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exler
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Amy Binder
ART. & LIVING EDITOR Tim Metcalf
COPY EDITOR Adam Seagren
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.E. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Dominick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rust
ART. BUSINESS MANAGER Lisa Szymaszak
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallace
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Emily Nichols
ASST. ART. & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ART. & LIVING Ryan McAvoy
ASST. ART. & LIVING Teresa Reilly
ASST. EDITORIAL James Matheos
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Gartner
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesen
ASSISTANT NEWS Will McGuinness
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seaborn
ASSISTANT SPORTS Michael King
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Mirkin
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenzweig
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Evan Tirnh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST SUMMER AND WINTER SESSIONS. IT IS INDEPENDENTLY OWNED AND OPERATED BY STUDENTS. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS A NEWSLETTER FOR THE COLLEGE TEAM. IN 1907, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN BECAME A DAILY. IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PURCHASED IN 1947, THE COLLEGIAN WAS INDEPENDENT UNTIL JANUARY 1964 FOR ADMINISTRATIVE, NOTE, AND INFORMATION CALL MARGARET WEBER AT 10:30 A.M. 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Katie Huston

COPY EDITOR
Domenic Poli

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1809 and snap a photo, then send it to news@dailycollegian.com

UMass SGA Results
2007 – 2008

SENATOR POSITIONS

NORTH:
BRYAN ST. GERMAIN
MARIANNE CONBOY
STEPHANIE HOVAGIMIAN
DAN SEMENUK

NORTHEAST:
MARIA PAYANO
EDWARD MCCORKINDALE

SYLVAN:
KENNETH SCRIBONI
EVAN TURELL

SOUTHWEST NORTH:
SHAHNA L. JAMES
SHAUN ROBINSON
CHERYL FEINSTEIN
TIFFANY ALEMAN

SOUTHWEST SOUTH:
KEVIN BOLDUC
AMANDA WILSON
MELICIA MORRIS
STEVE GEROME
YANNICK BROOKES
SHANE COLEMAN

CENTRAL:
JASON BEHRENS
ALAIN STEPHEN
RUDY MAHOTIERE
KATELYN CANTY

ORCHARD HILL:
CONSTANTINOS STIVAROS
ISAAC FAIRBANK
TREVOR BECK

COMMUTER:
NATHAN LANE
VANESSA SNOW
SHEA SWAVELY
ALEX PETERKIN
IGOR ROMASHKO
JONATHON WERNER
DANIEL URANKUR
MATT GIANCOLA
DEVIN ASHE
JEREMY GIBBS
ZACH CAUNTER
SCOTT DRESSER
MATTHEW MORIN
ELIZABETH PROTZMAN
MICHELLE ROBINSON

OTHER ELECTED SGA MEMBERS

DAN SEMENUK
NICK MOTYL
RYAN FITZGERALD
OLIVER VAN HOUTTE
MICHAEL GREEHAN
SCOTT GREENBERG
JOHN MCCARTHY
DAVID PREVOST

Professor named linguistics leader

AWARD from page 1

McCarthy has worked on discovering the universal principles governing the sound structure of human languages.

His current research revolves around the theory that the existing differences between languages result from the assigning of different priorities to conflicting constraints.

McCarthy joined the linguistics faculty at UMass in 1995 and has been a professor since 1989.

As a professor of graduate and undergraduate courses in phonology, McCarthy is teaching Linguistics 101 this semester.

He previously taught at the University of Texas at Austin, Stanford University, the University of California at Santa Cruz and Cornell University.

McCarthy earned his bachelor's degree at Harvard College and a doctorate in linguistics and philosophy from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in 1979.

Among his other honors are the Guggenheim Fellowship and the University of Massachusetts Amherst Award for Outstanding Accomplishments in Research and Creative Activity.

He is the author of six books and recently put out a new book called "Hidden Generalizations."

Leif Walcutt can be reached at lwalcutt@student.umass.edu

Fee increase upsets UM bank customers

ATM from page 1

out of frustration. Although this is her third year at the University, Heath maintained a bank account with a smaller Connecticut bank her freshman year. She eventually switched to Bank of America when she grew tired of paying a fee each time she accessed her account when at school.

Dan Babineau, on the other hand, also a junior at UMass, does not have a Bank of America account, nor does he plan on having one in the future.

"I find it quite ridiculous in the first place that you're being charged your own money to get your money, but that's what banks do. Raising the fee by a buck won't change too much in my opinion, other than the fact that people will go to their bank more often to withdraw or find a Bank of America ATM," Babineau said.

Incidentally, Babineau does not think that the fee increase will encourage more people, including himself, to join the bank.

Thompson on the other hand, feels that the bank's fee increases will discourage people from becoming members of smaller banks.

"It hurts small businesses. I don't even like shopping at places that don't take debit cards because it's inconvenient, and it's all the big places that take cards."

UMass senior Bill Chisholm became a Bank of America customer after the company bought out a smaller bank he began using almost eight years ago. Although he liked the excellent customer service offered by a smaller bank, he continues to use Bank of America out of pure convenience.

"I stuck with the company mostly due to the fact that they have branches nationwide. This allowed me to grow my bank no matter where I moved from home to college or even when on vacation in another state," he said.

Chisholm is unhappy with how the bank has used its control as the holder of the largest ATM network in the country to charge people more money.

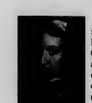
Thompson, who has decided that he will try to use other ATMs to withdraw money from his non-Bank of America accounts, could not agree more.

"It makes me mad, especially if I want to just take out a small amount of money. I just end up spending more. It's a vicious cycle of losing," He said

Stella Cernak can be reached at scernak@student.umass.edu

FROM THE WHITE HOUSE TO UMASS

GUEST CHEF WALTER SCHEIB, WHITE HOUSE CHEF 1994-2005 WAS AT BERKSHIRE DC ON SEPTEMBER 19, 2007. OVER 3500 MEALS WERE SERVED.



THANK YOU FOR MAKING THIS EVENT A GREAT SUCCESS. WE HAVE MANY MORE GUEST CHEFS ON THE WAY TO SERVE YOU.

DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
umass.edu/diningservices
2007 Grand Prize Winner
YCMP

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
EDITORIAL OPINION
WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 2007
"I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it." -Voltaire
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Reopening old wounds

Dan Nicastro

It's been 50 years since the Little Rock Nine entered the Central High School and became symbols of overcoming racial oppression and a clear reminder of the uphill racial battle this country faced. When reading the news, though, it's hard to see what lessons we've learned in the last half century because everyone is so unwilling to call a racial hate crime a racial hate crime. While many will say we've come a long way since the federal government intervened to enforce Brown v. Board of Education, the recent Jena Six incident is an example of what's still wrong with our discussion of race.

The accounts of what happened in Jena, Louisiana are muddled, but nonetheless horrific. At the public high school in Jena, a black student attempted to sit underneath a tree which had been deemed the "white tree." The next day, white students had hung two nooses from the tree. The students responsible for hanging the nooses (which helped incite a race riot, resulting in six black students being charged with attempted murder) were suspended for a total of three days.

No one is willing to call this incident what it is: a racially charged hate crime. Donald Washington, an attorney for the Justice Department and the man who investigated the noose incident, did not believe this could be considered a hate crime.

Residents of Jena are also downplaying fears that these incidents were racially based. One resident of the town commented that "this whole thing ain't no downright racial affair," while another commented "[t]his thing has been blown out of proportion."

As was true with the Little Rock Nine, officials and townspeople have both made arguments that overt racism did not play a part in what transpired, saying a "few bad apples" took matters into their own hands. They even went so far as to say there were whites in the community who supported the black students.

It's easy to feign – or even truly feel – moral outrage for a few weeks, even a few months.

However, this is part of the problem. We as a country are so hesitant and afraid to talk about race that we feel the need to downplay anything race-related, hoping that if we ignore the issue long enough, it will die down and become yesterday's news. This is true on both sides of the argument: the students and parents who supported the rights of black students did so silently, unwilling to let their true feelings be known or to upset the status quo.

I know that I'm just as guilty of this as anyone else. I've resisted writing about race for the two years I've written this column because it's an issue which is hard to discuss rationally and I didn't want to step on anyone's toes.

Every few months the racial debate stirs up again and forces the citizens of this country to ask hard questions about race and to take an introspective look at ourselves. However, this self-analysis usually consists of the media asking how far we've really come in race relations.

After a possibility exists for an intelligent discussion about race, the conversation is relegated to the back burner until a new racial crisis reignites the whole process. This formula has played out exactly according to plan in Jena. Billy Wayne Fowler, a white school-board member even told reporters that if he could "take you back to 60 years ago, and then fast forward to today, you'd have to say we've come a long way."

Unfortunately, because of our unwillingness to talk about race, we're relegated to saying race relations have improved from the time when public lynchings were commonplace and an entire race was segregated because of supposed 'inferiority.' Hooray for progress.

It's easy to feign – or even to truly feel – moral outrage for a few weeks, even a few months. The racial debate comes up constantly. But as quickly as it rises up, it's pushed under the rug and we're told by both sides that things are being blown out of proportion. Hurricane Katrina helped to point out horrific preexisting racial inequality and it seemed as if we may actually be forced into a discussion about race in this country. However, three months later, we moved on, content with thinking someone else was taking care of the problem.

We wonder how issues like school segregation could have even been an issue 50 years ago, while we ignore the Supreme Court's recent decisions to end school integration. It's time we sit down and talk.

Obviously, there's no easy answer to racial questions, and they may never been fully solved. However, we can't just be content to hide from the question of race. We need to create an atmosphere and a mindset which makes it acceptable to at least broach ideas and start a conversation without fear of retribution. Otherwise, we'll continue to live in a country which denies that racial problems are hidden as they continue to build, getting ready to burst. The room keeps getting smaller while the elephant just keeps growing. Pretty soon there won't be any room left to talk anything else, and by then it may be too late.

Dan Nicastro writes on Wednesdays. He can be reached at dnicastr@student.umass.edu.

Culpability made in China

Michael Dennis

Every American knows that just about everything is made in China. Look at every tag on every piece of clothing, or look at the bottom of any toy or electronic, and you will see the name of China or Taiwan or India. Every child's toy box is a geography lesson waiting to happen. We see that this is going on, but we rarely consider why it's going on.

And now, of course, this age-old conundrum is on every front page from sea to shining sea. We've all heard about the recalled toys. It hasn't been going on for that long, but it already seems like another tiresome, worn-out storyline.

Another unfortunate downside – as if there weren't enough to begin with – of these recalls has been the way in which they've further strained the international affairs of the United States. Rather than taking such a disaster as an opportunity for introspection – to reflect on the damaging effects of our unbridled capitalist thirst – Uncle Sam's finger has pointed squarely toward the Eastern world. (True fact: the finger that Uncle Sam uses to inflict blame on others was manufactured in Indonesia.)

One could say that thriftiness has led us down this path. Sure, there's nothing wrong with people who are cheap. There is something wrong, however, with corporations who are cheap. Individuals are cheap to save a buck here and there so they can get by, or spend money on leisurely activities. Companies are cheap to save a billion dollars here and there so they can further fatten the pockets of their executives.

These companies cut costs by shipping overseas, where regulations are much looser and workers have very few rights. The result? Lots of saved money. In fact, one could argue that many American corporations today are nothing more than glorified middlemen – they import products from overseas (some shoddy, some made well, but almost all produced under woefully unregulated circumstances), slap their name on it, and call it their own.

The blame placed on China and the demonization of an entire society is not only an obvious copout, but a shamefully hypocritical one. The reality is that on an everyday basis companies like Mattel have no problem taking the credit for their products. Were you to call up their headquarters before the massive recalls and question their manufacturing process, you can bet that you would have received a good ol' corporate message, right through the phone. "Oh no, sir, Mattel products are all-American. Our production may have shifted overseas, but in such a global economy, it's a normal part of everyday life. But Barbie is a proud American and an integral part of the fabric of Mattel."

Mattel's products are Mattel products – until the you-know-what hits the fan.

In other words, Mattel's products are Mattel products – until the you-know-what hits the fan. And then they become tainted, ticking time bombs that those crazy Chinese conjured up to kill our children.

What can we do about this? I don't profess to have any concrete solutions of how it is that we can reduce our reliance on stone-cold, blindly-racing-at-90-miles-an-hour capitalism. Though I express an affinity for cheapness on a personal level, and I often see it as an antidote to capitalism, i.e. I'm saving money so therefore I'm screwing over the man by not paying what he wants me to pay. This often ends up adding fuel to the fire.

Companies cut corners not only to richen the lives of their executives, but to keep prices low and make stingy, tire-kicking consumers happy. Ever wonder why Wal-Mart's prices are so low? Ever hear criticisms of their workers' rights track record? Yep, there's a correlation there. Keeping wages low is the easiest way to keep prices low.

What's needed here is a fundamental change in the way we buy things, in which we're willing to pay prices that may be a bit higher for a better product. A better product would be made by workers that are being paid fairly, and its production process would be without such egregious flaws. Of course, such products do exist – fair trade coffee, or locally grown produce, for example.

The cynic in me says that it would be hard for most Americans to handle fair-trade, locally-made kids' toys without fearing that someone's going to shove a flaming wad of tofu down their throat. But by appealing to the proud, eagle-worshipping patriot in them (USA! USA!), as well as highlighting the concern that their children may be at risk, it might be possible to make some headway.

What's that you say? I'm crazy? Yeah, I probably ingested too much lead paint as a child. But please, whatever you do, don't blame China. It's too easy of an excuse, and unless we're willing to reexamine our ways, it's about time we stopped using it.

Michael Dennis is a Collegian columnist and can be reached at mdennis@student.umass.edu.

Mobilizing immigration law

Ben Duffy

As the debate over illegal immigration rages on, it's important to keep in mind that the issue is economic at its base. The United States is a rich country that shares a long border with Mexico, a nation in a much different economic position. While not all illegal aliens enter the United States across the U.S.-Mexico border, that line in the sand appears to be the hot point of national debate.

The people who come here are not evil. Technically speaking, they are criminals because they entered our country illegally, but I certainly would not put them in the same category with the hardened criminals you might find at a federal penitentiary. They're simply people who want a better life but can't be bothered to play by the rules in order to obtain it. They are only pursuing their best interests when they come to the United States.

We as Americans have a right to stand up for our best interests as well, and that includes halting the flow of illegal immigrants into our country. Ours is a great nation, but that doesn't mean that we can take in every single person who wants to come here. As usual, American liberals find it vaguely chauvinistic to even suggest that we should do what's right for our people first. As Robert Frost once quipped, "A liberal is a man too broadminded to take his own side in a quarrel."

To tell the truth, I like immigrants, especially Latino immigrants. I work with a number of immigrants at my job, and I taught quite a few of them at a language school in Northampton over the summer. I much prefer their company to the company of silly white liberals. Latino immigrants are generally family-oriented, cheerful, God-fearing and hard-working. Liberals, on the other hand, are none of the above. They're just downright miserable.

With this in mind, I propose that the thrust of our efforts should not be limited to deportations or building a border fence. Although these tactics are necessary, they are not enough. The focus needs to be on punishing the employers who hire illegal immigrants in the first place. Illegal immigrants come here because they know they can find work for wages far higher than they would ever be able to find in their own country. If they could not find those jobs, they wouldn't even bother coming.

Why is it that employers are scared of the Board of Health ... but hire illegal aliens without fear of legal consequence?

Unfortunately, hiring illegal aliens has become so legally tolerated that employers are now blatantly violating the law in plain sight. Speaker of the House Nancy Pelosi has some shady employment practices at her California vineyards that probably include employing illegal aliens. A landscaping company hired to take care of Mitt Romney's Belmont home used illegal Guatemalan immigrants almost exclusively. That's right, employing illegal immigrants has become so acceptable that there's almost nothing scandalous about illegal immigrants picking grapes for the speaker of the House or tending to the lawn of the governor of Massachusetts.

Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) needs to turn up the heat on law-breaking employers. Enforcing some laws can be difficult, but immigration laws don't have to be. Just let employers know that ICE is watching them and that there will be stiff fines for hiring employees without valid papers.

The employer's incentive to hire illegal immigrants is that illegal labor is far cheaper than American labor. Let them know that the money they are saving by shortchanging American workers can disappear in the blink of an eye if they are caught breaking the law. After a second infraction, ICE should shut the business down indefinitely. I guarantee this approach will get the attention of employers in a hurry.

American liberals are far too quick to throw up their hands and declare the problem so daunting that we shouldn't even bother enforcing the law. When I think about enforcing immigration law, I think about all the many years I have spent working in restaurants, and how scared the owners were of the dreaded Board of Health. The BOH might show up every six months or so, but you never knew when they were coming, so the owners wanted to keep the kitchen respectable at all times. That's how ICE should operate: they should make unannounced inspections every month or two, and always when it's least expected.

I also think of the summer I worked at an amusement park and how seriously the management took child labor laws. If a minor worked one minute past the hour she was legally allowed to work, some supervisor's head would be on the chopping block.

Why is it that employers are scared of the Board of Health, and afraid to violate child labor laws, but hire illegal aliens without fear of legal consequences? It's because legal consequences are so seldom brought to bear on them. This problem is not difficult to solve, and we certainly don't need to grant amnesty to every illegal alien to do it. We simply need to enforce the laws we have now. Without that, we will never have true immigration "reform."

Ben Duffy writes on Wednesdays. He can be reached at bduffy@student.umass.edu

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Editorial@DailyCollegian.com

DEFINE 'DAMAGED'

Dear Editor:

Re: "Sept. 11 memorial damaged," News, September 18.

I can't knowingly accuse Danielle Kahn of being a card-carrying member of the UMass Republican Club. However, when I read her article, "Sept. 11 memorial damaged," that was the first thought to cross my mind.

The headline alone arouses some serious suspicion. The word "damaged" would seem to indicate that the flags comprising the memorial had somehow been destroyed or even ruined. Having seen the final result of the alleged "vandalism," I can honestly say that the memorial was, if nothing else, improved.

Only once in Kahn's article do we read that the new arrangement of the flags was meant to form a peace sign – one of the most recognizable symbols on the planet, and representative of what a lot of people on this campus and across the country think is a good idea.

In the past I have seen various community displays of one sort or other be "vandalized" – whether it be a community garden in my hometown that was repeatedly broken into and trampled over, or the spray-paint graffiti found on the entrance to my synagogue.

What happened to the flags of the Sept. 11 memorial was not "vandalism." In fact, it was one of the most creative displays of public politics I've ever seen in my time at UMass. At least, it was far more creative than the memorial itself, which was made of several hundred Chinese-manufactured U.S. flags planted in crooked rows.

Furthermore, the question I have for Kahn, the Republicans, and the police involved is: What makes you so positive the person or persons who rearranged the flags was/were "a group of leftist activists?" Considering that none of these parties actually saw the incident take place, it could just as well have been a campus religious organization, or an athletic team, or even the Mac User Group.

The peace sign could have been the doing of any one or several of thousands of students on this campus who are fed up with the way a national tragedy was used to launch this country and many others into an unbelievably expensive, exhaustive, and overall disgusting war. Or this could have been yet another meager attempt of the UMass Republicans to give the public the idea that they are an "oppressed" group on campus, subject to constant "discrimination" from such a radical body of students.

But perhaps it was a group of leftist activists who took charge of the unoriginal display and turned it into something truly beautiful. I don't see a problem with that. Again, having seen the end product of the "vandalism" first hand, I affirm that it was a wonderful and moving sight: a hopeful image of what is yet to come for this country. My only regret is that certain people didn't allow the rest of our campus the opportunity to see for themselves such a shining example of elegant political demonstration.

Joe Mirkin
UMASS student

NO HUMANITY FOR ILLEGALS

Dear Editor:

Re: "No amnesty for illegals," Ed/Op, September 25.

Greg Collins's regurgitation of the common arguments against granting amnesty for illegal immigrants is tiresome and ill-informed. He immediately parrots a policy suggested by Bush to salvage his sagging approval ratings: a guest-worker program. While I had thought indentured servitude went out of vogue in the 1700s, Mr. Collins appears to find merit in the creation of second-class citizens with limited rights. Guest-worker programs are popular in such socially-backward places as the Persian Gulf, as is the abuse of those workers.

He calls for objectivity when regarding illegal immigrants, but perhaps the most objective metric is the bottom line or what illegal immigrants contribute to the economy. Even if that figure was miniscule, how could it not outweigh the exorbitant costs our government currently spends on building a Great Wall of Mexico or on transportation needed for deportation? If Mr. Collins seeks objectivity through the rule of law, then is it safer to encourage illegal immigrants to come forward and be documented through amnesty or to frighten them into a numberless anonymity?

According to the U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services Web site, it currently costs a deported individual over $500 to reapply for permission to reenter the United States. For a naturalization application, one must pay nearly $600.

These fees are just for filing the application! Finding that much spare money would be difficult among many students here at UMass, so try to conceive how a poor laborer could afford it.

The misconception that likely snags Mr. Collins and other like-minded people is that amnesty is akin to letting criminals out of jail. The goal behind amnesty is not to reward nefarious wrong-doers for their crimes, but to document and integrate immigrants so they can become a successful, tax-paying citizen. I'd like to know if the blood of Mayflower passengers flows through your veins, Greg, or if your life and the lives of so many others were made possible by the generous immigration procedures of the previous century that you decry.

Chris Amorosi
UMass student

The Daily Collegian encourages reader responses. Letters to the editor can be submitted to editorial@dailycollegian.com and should be no more than 350 words in length.

DO YOU LIKE TO DRAW COMICS?

WE ARE LOOKING FOR YOU!

THE COLLEGIAN SEEDS EDITORIAL COMICARTISTS!

GET YOUR ARTWORK PUBLISHED!

Technology in concert

Sound Tribe Sector 9 to use computers during show

BY LAUREN MODESETTE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Sound Tribe Sector 9 takes their two passions – playing instruments and sound exploration – and melts them together. Along with the traditional use of pianos, drums, bass and guitar, STS9 also features samplers and computers in its performances. They will be coming to the Calvin Theatre in Northampton tonight.

Relix Magazine said, "This band is making electronic music relevant again and people from all over the musical map are taking notice, as they did when such acts as Chemical Brothers and Prodigy brought something new to the table back in the 90s."

Every band has a die-hard network of fans but Tribe fans take their band very seriously and almost religiously. "[They] combine computers and organic sounds into a big, sweaty, funky dance party" the Boston Globe reported.

The band has had the privilege to share the stage with musical wonders like James Brown, the Roots, and Blackalicious. Over the summer, Sound Tribe played at several music festivals like Bonnaroo and Camp Bisco, but the band has also made its mark in the tres cher California music festival Coachella.

The Tribe's loyal fan base purchases about 1,900 tickets per city, which scored them No. 29 on Pollstar Magazine's Top 50 touring acts in America. Within the last year, STS9 has been asked back to multiple venues and festivals like Bonnaroo – which increased its callback rate by over 50 percent.

The band is currently finishing up their 2007 tour and is planning on hitting the studio to compile another recording to add to its tri-album collection. Not only that, but STS9 uses its very own record label, 1320 Label, to record their studio albums and the two live albums they have available.

"[Sound Tribe] is proof positive that technology and soul can work together in a single musical form without sacrificing the personality of either in the process," reported Amplifier Magazine.

In addition to STS9's unique sound, Bassnectar is also scheduled to perform.

The face of Bassnectar is Lorin Ashton, and he's reported to have lent a hand in morphing the underground dance scene in the past ten years. He has collaborated with bands like Michael Franti and Spearhead, String Cheese Incident, Buckethead and yes, Sound Tribe Sector 9.

Ashton averages about 120 shows

See STS9 on page 5

COURTESY STS9.COM

STS9 will be bringing their innovative music techniques to the Calvin Theatre in Northampton tonight. Bassnectar will open with lead singer Lorin Ashton.

Bands sell music through games

COURTESY OF ELECTRONIC ARTS

"Major League Baseball 2K6" includes Interpol and Pavement. The Pornographers were banned from the game because of their name.

BY JEREMY BUCKLEY
DAILY NEBRASKAN (U. NEBRASKA)

LINCOLN, Neb. — Each year the music recording industry faces new challenges in keeping music in people's ears.

CD sales have long been in a slump, and selling digital files through services like iTunes isn't making up the difference. Additionally, illegal file sharing services give consumers an extra way to get music without paying for it.

As a result, record labels have had to become more ingenious in finding ways to increase revenue from their bands' catalogs, and with only so many markets available, the competition can be fierce. One alternative is the inclusion of bands on the soundtracks for video games.

"Generally, a game company will come to us with their new game and ask us to submit songs that we might think might work for them," said Lacey Swain, licensing director for Seattle's Sub Pop Records. "But occasionally these companies will know exactly what songs and bands they'd like to use."

Sub Pop has several bands on its roster that take advantage of the video game sector. For the 2K Sports hockey franchise, Sub Pop contributed the entire soundtrack, including songs by Sleater-Kinney, Mudhoney, Kinski and Band of Horses.

Swain said the benefit of song placement in video games is hard to determine, just as it's difficult to gauge purchasing habits based on video game playing habits.

"I think a lot of bands are

See GAMES on page 5

'Grey's Anatomy' drama moves from behind the scenes to the TV screen

BY CHUCK BARNEY
CONTRA COSTA TIMES

Over the second half of last season, "Grey's Anatomy" went from being the TV pal with whom every get-together feels like a giddy first date to the grating housequest who constantly gets on your nerves.

You know the storyline: Off screen, cast members squabbled over Isaiah Washington's nasty homophobic slur. On screen, a dark cloud hung over Seattle Grace as death, destruction and personal devastation reigned. And oh, those creative missteps: George (T.R. Knight) and Izzy (Katherine Heigl) making booty calls? Ugh.

By the time the season of discontent was over, two key members of the cast were gone – Washington getting the heave-ho and Kate Walsh getting her own spin-off show in "Private Practice" (9 p.m. Wednesday, on ABC). Gone, too, was much of the good will the show had built up with fans and critics.

As "Grey's" returns for its fourth season (9 p.m. Thursday, ABC), its vital signs are flagging and one has to wonder: Can this show get back to being the frothy, intoxicating guilty pleasure it once was? Fortunately, creator Shonda Rhimes is saying all the right things: It's time to lighten up, sex it up and have a ball.

"I came back to this season sort of mandating that we have a lot of fun," she told TV writers this summer. "I felt like Season 3 is a darker season. It just is. I mean, Meredith's (Ellen Pompeo) mother dies. George's father dies. Meredith's stepmother dies. It was a bloodbath. But I want to get back to us enjoying it and having fun."

Still, Rhimes by no means oops to creative mismanagement. While she admits the behind-the-scenes rancor of last season was "difficult," she stands by the direction of the show's storytelling. ("It felt like the journey these characters needed to take.") And she even defends the hotly debated "Gizzie" plotline.

"I understand it," she says of negative fan reaction to the unexpected coupling. "I think, when Meredith and Cristina (Sandra Oh) and Alex (Justin Chambers) find out, they are going to have some pretty vitriolic reactions as well. I think that's part of what makes it interesting. The characters are flawed. The characters are really human.

And I'm not necessarily saying that George and Izzie are the love story of the century. People make mistakes. And perhaps this is a mistake. Perhaps it isn't. But I think it's an interesting thing to explore when you decide that your best friend is your soul mate."

She has a point. That "Grey's" has adventurously embraced personal flaws and messy "mistakes" is one of the traits that makes it so intriguing. How many shows, after all, have a put-upon title character who inspires so much love-her, hate-her buzz? But it's a tough act to consistently pull off.

If plot developments become too outrageous and/or annoying, it becomes much easier for us not to care. How much longer, for example, will fans put up with the George-and-Lizzie melodrama? And more importantly, how many more Meredith-Derek (Patrick Dempsey) breakups can we take?

The cast departures also are cause for concern. Washington's complex genius Dr. Burke was a fascinating character and proved to be the perfect yin to Ms. Yang. As for Walsh's Addison,

See GREY'S on page 5

COURTESY ABC.COM

Season 4 of "Grey's Anatomy" will return this Thursday night with a few less cast members. Dr. Burke (Isaiah Washington) and Addison (Kate Walsh) will both be going their separate ways, with Walsh starring in a new ABC spin-off series called "Private Practice."

iZon sunglasses fix sight irregularities

COURTESY OF LUXOTTICA

The new iZon lenses consist of three layers that are designed specifically for each customer.

BY CHERYL POWELL
AKRON BEACON JOURNAL

AKRON, Ohio — For years, Terry Demeter lost his freedom when the sun slipped into the horizon.

Demeter, 64, a longtime Barberton, Ohio, resident, dreaded driving at night so much he planned his life around the rise and fall of the sun.

Even with his glasses, distracting halos appeared around oncoming headlights, traffic lights or construction blinkers whenever he tried to drive after dusk. When a car approached, he slowed down to about 10 mph, much to the annoyance of drivers behind him.

So he often left social gatherings before sunset unless he could find a ride home to avoid getting behind the wheel at night.

"I called it 'white-knuckle driving' at night," said Demeter. "I'd be scared to death."

But now Demeter is crediting a new type of lens in his glasses for sharpening his vision and putting him back behind the wheel after dark.

Demeter is one of the early adopters of lenses to correct vision problems that, until recent years, couldn't be measured.

The lens, called the iZon lens, corrects what are called "higher-order aberrations," or microscopic irregularities in the structure of the eye that affect the way light travels to the retina, said Mary Lack, an optometrist with NEO Vision Group, which offers exams for the iZon lenses.

These small irregularities in the eye can cause patients to see blurring, halos, streaks or flairs around light.

Traditionally, lenses have been used to correct farsightedness (problems seeing anything close), nearsightedness (problems focusing on distant objects) or astigmatism (visual distortion from an imperfectly shaped cornea).

But vision experts have long known that other irregularities existed that could cause subtle vision problems, said Chris Calaway, another optometrist with NEO Vision Group.

Ophthonix Inc. of California, the maker of the iZon lens, sells a computerized examination machine known as an aberrometer for about $29,000 to check for the higher-order aberrations, along with farsightedness, nearsightedness and astigmatism.

The machine sends safe, invisible laser lights into the patient's eye and then measures the tiny twists and bends the light takes because of individual structural differences, Lack said.

Patients stare into the machine for about one minute and watch a screen with a red ball surrounded by yellow circles.

"It produces an 'eye print' that's unique to the patient," Lack said.

For patients who chose the new style of lenses, their "eye print" is sent to Ophthonix, which uses the computer-generated prescription to create custom lenses to fit into most frames.

Unlike typical lenses, the new lenses are made up of three thin layers that vary the prescription at different spots to take into account the higher-order aberrations, Calaway said.

"Each patient's eye is unique," said Dennis Jarvis, vice president of marketing for Ophthonix. "These aberrations do affect the overall clarity of vision. We take that eye print involved when we make the lenses."

For most people, Calaway said, the result is sharper, clearer vision and reduction of halos and "star bursts" around lights at night.

Proponents of the new, custom lenses call them the spectacle equivalent of high-definition television.

Pictures are sharper and colors are brighter, said Calaway, who switched to the lenses.

The lenses aren't for everyone, though.

People with advanced cataracts aren't good candidates, Calaway said.

Likewise, he said, patients who are happy with their overall sight and night vision with their

See iZon on page 5

COURTESY ABC.COM

In the new season, "Grey's Anatomy" will have to keep fans interested while still following tired plot lines. Izzie (Katherine Heigl) and George (T.R. Knight), as well as McDreamy (Patrick Demsey) and Meredith (Ellen Pompeo), still need to resolve their problems.

Band creates own record company

STS9 plans to release one studio, two live albums

STS9 from page 4

a year, spreading his influence through his turntable. He works with different genres like hip-hop, reggae, and electronica to create a musical experience like none other.

Bassnectar is bass'd out of San Francisco, Calif., and was also at Camp Bisco this past summer, where it put on an incredible show with mixes that fused "Strawberry Fields" by The Beatles or "In The Mood" by Glenn Miller. Judging from the diversity of those two songs, an outstanding and eclectic performance can be expected.

"The new Bassnectar music is an exotic blend of both the listening experience and the dance experience," Jambase reported.

His influences range from Simon and Garfunkel to Led Zeppelin to Frank Zappa. He lists many genres to describe his sound, and they range from belly dancing to something called "raw grinding boom shaka laka."

Ashton will be on tour with Sound Tribe Sector 9 throughout the next couple of days as they venture to the Avalon Ballroom in Boston and Nokia Theatre in New York. When Tribe and Ashton part ways, Ashton will be making a couple stops in select cities before heading down to the eco-friendly and active festival, The Echo Project, in Atlanta, Ga., for the event's debut.

In the mean time, STS9 will make its last trek across the country with stops in Milwaukee, Wis., Las Vegas, San Francisco, Calif., and finally Atlanta, Ga., for Tabernacle.

Doors open at 8 p.m., and concerts traditionally run until around 11 p.m.

Lauren Modisette can be reached at lmodiset@student.umass.edu

COURTESY STS9.COM

Thanks to their loyal fan base, STS9 is No. 29 on Pollstar's Top 50 Touring Acts in America.

New glasses remove halos around lights at night

Customers of the new iZon lenses have reported some delay in adjusting to their new glasses, but say that the extra cost was worth it, especially at night.

iZON from page 4

current glasses probably don't need to make the switch.

The new lenses require some adjustment, Calaway said.

When he started wearing his new glasses, he said, it took him a day or two to get used to the prescription variations at different points on the lenses.

The iZon lenses are available only for glasses, not contact lenses.

About 225 practices nationwide are offering the lenses, but Ophthonix is continuing to expand to more locations, Jarvis said.

The price is about 25 percent higher than standard lenses, Calaway said. (The cost for the exam, however, is the same, whether the patient selects standard or iZon lenses.)

But Demeter said the improved vision, especially at night, was worth the extra cost to him.

"They have made everything clearer," he said. "How much is it worth to drive at night? It's freedom."

Series opens tomorrow

GREY'S from page 4

she arrived on the scene as a bit player whom you wanted to detest. But she deepened into a strong, classy, engaging woman who provided a welcome respite from the intern drama queens. Both were key components.

As "ER" repeatedly proved over the early part of its run, a medical show can withstand significant departures and remain involving if it makes the right casting choices. Maybe Chyler Leigh, who joins the Seattle Grace gang as Meredith's half-sister, Lexie, will make us forget Burke and/or Addison. Maybe not.

Either way, it will be interesting to see if "Grey's" can recapture the magic. When the show is at its best, it delicately blends sober drama and real emotion with unpredictable twists and breezy humor (with breezy being an operative word). It's a potent brew that keeps us captivated and gets us talking.

"I take really seriously what the fans say. I kind of love that people feel this strongly about the show," Rhimes says. "What that means to me is that they are watching it and that they care about it and that they feel as emotionally connected to the characters as I do."

New marketing strategy employed

GAMES from page 4

just excited to have their music in games," Swain said. "Most of the people we work with all grew up playing video games, so I think it's just cool to beat up a hockey dude while rocking out to your own music."

Jenn Lanchart, senior director for film and television for the London record label collective The Beggars Group and New York's Matador Records, said it's becoming an integral part of her job to keep in close contact with video game companies to know what games are being released and to have a keen ear for the types of music that fit with each game.

"With a game like "Grand Theft Auto," [the game designers] want all kinds of music, but if you're playing a game like hockey they might be more inclined to want a metal song," she said.

Matador artists were also given the chance to put together a complete soundtrack for a game, offering 15 songs to 2K Games' "Major League Baseball 2K6."

Bands showcased on the game's sound track include Interpol, Pavement, Belle and Sebastian and Yo La Tengo.

Lanchart said a lot of planning goes into considering what bands and songs get some loving from the gaming companies because sometimes even a band's name can have unexpected consequences.

"The New Pornographers couldn't be a part of the baseball game because of the name of the band," she said.

Higher prominence in placing the music in games is another challenge labels face. Lanchart said she pushes to get her bands' songs featured in promotions and advertisements for the game or in the title menu since that is a common screen for gamers to interact with.

Low fees, exclusivity issues and general disinterest from bands are some other obstacles Swain said she faces.

"We hold on to the hope that some of the people playing these games may not have already heard these bands," Swain said. "We cling even more to the further, related hope that, on hearing these bands, these gamers will enjoy the music enough to buy it."

Guest Chef Series
RETURNING BY POPULAR DEMAND
Chef Iliana de la Vega presents...
Regional Mexican Oaxaca Cuisine

You don't have to head south of the border to enjoy great Mexican food.

MENU
Botanas (Appetizers):
Sincronizadas de Hongos
Sopas (Soup):
Sopa de Tortilla
Fuertes (Entrees):
Mole Rojo
Conchinita Pibil
Tinga Poblana
Camarones Con Poblanos y Crema
Postres: (Dessert):
Flan de Vainilla
Arroz Con Leche (Salsa de Fresa)

Highly acclaimed Chef from the city of Oaxaca in southern Mexico.

Thursday, Sept. 27th
Hampshire DC
From 5 to 9 pm

DINING SERVICES
UMassAmherst
umass.edu/diningservices

The Third Annual Journalism Program Lecture Series on Broadcast and the Media presents...
The New New Journalism:
Challenges and Opportunities in Multimedia Reporting
Monday, October 1, 2007
7-8:30 p.m.
6:15 Free Pizza
Memorial Hall, UMass Amherst
Featuring:

Patrick Stiegman
Executive Editor and V.P. ESPN.com

Chet Rhodes
Assistant Managing Editor, News Video Washingtonpost.com

Emily Sweeney
Reporter
The Boston Globe

Moderated by Journalism prof Steve Fox
This lecture series is funded by David '79 and Teena Kantor.

Minutewomen host Brown

FIELD HOCKEY from page 8

The teams share two common opponents on the season so far, Sacred Heart and Harvard. The Minutewomen beat Sacred Heart Aug. 29 1-0, whereas Brown fell to the Pioneers, 4-2, on Sept. 12.

The Minutewomen's largest victory on the season came Sept. 2, when Cher King scored two goals and recorded an assist in a 5-0 Minutewoman victory. Harvard has gone 5-1 since that opening game, and downed Brown Saturday.

King is leading the UMass offense in 2007. Her 11 points and five goals lead the team, although she is looking to get back on track in the scoring department. She has not registered a point in the last four games.

Despite her recent drought, King focuses on team play.

"I think it's a whole team effort," she says. "The forward lines have been doing well and not everyone has to score all the time. I've got to help the girls out and get them on the scoreboard. As long as UMass scores, it doesn't bother me."

However, King hopes to return to her early season scoring form.

"I really am looking forward to scoring more goals, helping the forward line, and being a leader out there," she said.

While King hasn't scored goals recently, two UMass players recently inserted their names into the 2007 scoring column.

Against UConn, freshman Jaime Bourazeris took a Kristina DoRosario pass in front of the net to score her first collegiate goal. Bourazeris has started every game in her first season.

Lauren Gillespie, an integral part of the UMass offense with 13 goals last year, also registered her first goal of the season in the loss to UConn.

Sowry is hoping the defense and offense are able to work together to give the team a chance to succeed.

"I want to be able to link all three lines together from the defense through the midfield and the forward line," she said. "On the forward line, I want to continue our circle efficiency. If we're getting into the circle I want to be getting some kind of return, whether it be penalty corners or a quality shot on goal."

Brown goalkeeper Kristen Hodavance has made 48 saves on the season and has a respectable .706 save percentage, but she has faced 68 shots on goal in seven games. Lauren Kessler backs up Hodavance. The only 23 minutes she has seen this season came at the end of the Harvard game. Kessler didn't allow the Crimson to score a goal in that time.

For UMass, Becky Letourneau and Sarah Williams have alternated games for the season so far. Letourneau started against UConn, so Williams would start if the pattern continues. The sophomore has a 3-1 record with a 0.68 goal against average.

This meeting is the first time the teams have met since 1982. UMass is 5-0 all time against Brown, sweeping a five games from 1978-1982.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

CHRISTIAN LOMBARDO/COLLEGIAN

Junior Mary Shea assisted on two goals this season, including one in the loss against UConn Saturday. Her other assist came on the game-winning goal against Siena back on Sept. 16. The pair of assists ties her with teammate Erin Parker for the team lead.

Pozar and Co. take on UConn

TENNIS from page 8

in two tournaments leading up to the dual match, including this weekend in Philadelphia and two weeks ago in New York City.

In the Cissy Leary Invitational in Philadelphia, Kaitlyn Carpenter, Candynce Boney and Masha Pozar all competed with varying degrees of success.

Carpenter failed to make it out of the first round in both the singles main draw and consolation matches. She also fell in both first-round tries in the doubles tournament while paired with Princeton's Sarah Hoffman.

Pozar faired a little better, making it all the way to the quarterfinals before falling to Yulia Rivelis of Pennsylvania.

The senior also paired with Candynce Boney in doubles play, reaching the semifinals before falling to the defending champions, Ekaterina Kosminskaya and Julia Koulbitskaya of Penn.

This was the second time Boney and Pozar have teamed up, as they had previously taken the Army Invitational the previous weekend, defeating Anela Dujsic and Polina Zareise of Rutgers, 9-8.

Those matches gave the freshman Boney valuable experience pairing with the dominant senior, Pozar.

"My freshmen are really on a learning curve; they have to learn how to play college tennis," Dixon said. "Candynce wishes she played better, but as the tournament progressed they got better."

DiPiero, a senior, can attest to the freshman to how important the UMass-UConn rivalry is to the team.

She feels the tournaments were good for Boney and the other freshman, as it helped them "[get] some of their nerves out."

"The freshman might be nervous, as it's their first dual match," she said. "[But] everyone played really well [in the tournaments], especially doubles."

When DiPiero was a freshman herself in 2004, she and then-senior Sasha Edelstein helped in the Minutewomen's drubbing of the Huskies, 6-1. She and Edelstein defeated Christine Burek and Ashley Petruzzi, 8-4.

She also knows some of the UConn players from her days in the Top-15 for the Girls' 18s category of the United States Tennis Association middle states junior league.

Despite the experience, DiPiero still feels UMass has the upper edge.

"The UConn roster is good, solid players all the way down," she said. "But we're stronger from every spot down."

Sam Ehrlich can be reached at sehrlich@student.umass.edu.

Masha Pozar was the Minutewomen's best player at the Cissy Leary Invitational, advancing to the quarterfinal round.

UMass preps for Atlantic 10 action

See SOCCER from page 8

UMass hopes to avenge last year's 1-0 loss. Julia Bradenberg scored the game-winning goal in the 82nd minute. UMass will meet the Billikens in St. Louis Oct. 28.

Going into conference play last year, the Minutewomen lost one of their key players in senior Tina Rodriguez. Rudy said it took a while for the team to get comfortable and used to playing without her. This year they hoped she might return; however, the defense has been solid with steady goal play by red-shirt senior Kristin Walker and sturdy defensive play from junior Melissa Toulouse, freshman Alyssa Visconti and senior Kaelyn Caldwell.

At the beginning of the season Rudy said he doesn't like to set goals for the team, but it is obvious he wants the team to win the A-10 and reach the NCAA tournament as he has in years past.

"I mean, certainly we want to get to the A-10 tournament. We haven't been there in the last few years, although we have had a team that's been good enough to get there," Rudy said before the season started. "The long shot of making the NCAA tournament is part of our journey back to respectability."

The Minutewomen have not made the NCAA tournament since 1997.

BUDGET CUTS FORCE TEAM TO TAKE THE VAN TO GAMES

Recent budget cuts have forced the Minutewomen to take vans to their road games when they do not need to fly. UMass teams generally take coach buses to games that are within the New England and New York area.

"Were traveling with what we can afford," Rudy said. "You get a budget and you have to make it work. That's the way it is."

The Minutewomen will start A-10 conference play Friday at Saint Joseph's.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu.

Bastianelli's 16 saves negated by shutout

A-10 SOCCER on page 8

OFFENSE FAILS TO DELIVER

Saint Joseph's sophomore goalie Megan Bastianelli set a career high with 16 saves Sunday.

Despite their defensive efforts, the Hawks were blanked by Princeton, 2-0, bringing their record to 2-5. Princeton allowed three shots while taking 30 on St. Joe's defense.

St. Joe's suffered its fourth straight loss on the road since Sept. 9, being outscored 1-14 throughout the four games. The Hawks finished their road trip yesterday against Rider and start conference play Friday against Massachusetts.

PLAYER OF THE WEEK

The Atlantic 10 named Rhode Island sophomore Jill Powers its Player of the Week, after she recorded a hat trick against Brown Sept. 19.

Powers is among the Top 5 in six other categories and is delivering in the clutch with a league-leading three game-winning goals. Powers currently has 14 points on six goals and two assists.

ROOKIE OF THE WEEK

The league also named Temple goalkeeper Kara Williams its Rookie of the Week after the freshman recorded two shutouts this weekend.

The offense helped on its end as Temple beat St. Peters, 2-0, on Friday and tied Monmouth, 0-0, on Sunday. Her goals-against average is now 1.09 and has an 80.5 save percentage ... Duquesne lost to Hawaii, 2-0, Sunday. It's the first time the Dukes have placed a team from the Western Athletic Conference since 2001 ... Dayton picked up their fourth straight win Sunday, shutting out Oakland, 5-0. Four different Flyers scored their first goal of the season to boost the team record to 7-2 ... Charlotte blanked Western Carolina, 2-0, Sunday as 49er sophomore goalkeeper Nicole Mercer recorded her first shutout of the season. The 49ers are currently 5-3-0. Charlotte has shut out opponents in four of its last five games. The team opens up its conference schedule Sunday against Fordham.

Adam Miller can be reached at ajmiller@student.umass.edu.

Former Amherst Drop Zone
227 Russell Street (Route 9), Hadley, MA
Everything Must Go!!
Complete Liquidation
$5,000,000.00 Inventory
30 - 50% OFF
Something For Everyone
• Army-Navy Surplus
• Pea Coats
• Leather Jackets
• Boots & Work Clothes
• Lg Inventory T-Shirts
• Sweatshirts
• Camping & Hunting Equipment
• Flags
• Blankets
• Knives
• Huge Paintball Department
GREAT DORM SUPPLIES!
National Brands Include: Timberland, CAT, Carhartt, Doc Marten, Woolrich, Sorel, Harley Davidson, Buck, Swiss Army, Corcoran, Magnum, Chippewa, Nexgen, Leather King, Tony Lama, Etc.
All Sales Final
Sale Under The Management Of:
CRG Auction
Hours Of Operation
Mon.-Sat. 10am - 7pm | Sun. 12pm - 6pm
Sale Ends November 26
www.crgauction.com • (800) 300-6852

UMASS CAMPUS RECREATION
GET THOSE FORMS IN BY:
Foul Shooting (M/W/C)..... 10/4
3-Point Shootout (M/W)..... 10/4
Shoot-Around(M/W/C)..... 10/4
STILL TIME TO ENTER:
Tennis Singles..... A.S.A.P.
Ultimate Frisbee..... A.S.A.P.
Weekend Softball..... A.S.A.P.
Volleyball..... A.S.A.P.
On The Web: www.umass.edu/campusrec

Attention First-Year Students:
TIME'S ALMOST UP!
Have you completed MyStudentBody? It's easy, interesting ... and required for all first-year students. To avoid a registration hold, you must take and pass the course no later than Monday, October 1st. For instructions, go to:
www.umass.edu/uhs/cadap/msb/
Center for Alcohol and other Drug Abuse Prevention

Seven Os
EVERY WEDNESDAY
KARAOKE
LIVE BAND
SATURDAY 9/29/07
4 ON THE FLOOR
STUDENT BAND WANTED
NEED A PLACE TO PLAY?
COME TO SEVEN O'S
LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO HAVE A PRIVATE EVENT/PARTY?
CALL 413-530-6996
ROUTE 116, 230 AMHERST RD SUNDERLAND, MA 01375 (413) 665-8788
2 PM TO 1 AM M-F
1 PM TO 1 AM SATSUN
NEXT TO CUMPIOS ARTS

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

	2			9
3						7
8		7	9		1	6
	6		5		8
4			7	6		5
		5	9		7
	1	8		7	5	4
2						6
		4				8

QUOTE OF THE DAY

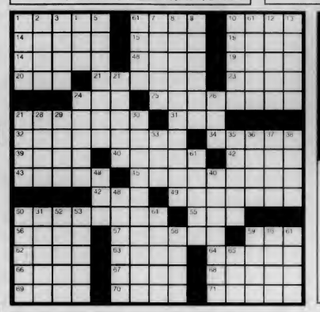
"Common sense is the collection of prejudices acquired by age eighteen."

-Albert Einstein

ECOLOGY By Jen Fill

THE IMMUNE SYSTEM By Tyren Barker

LABRAT By Richard Martelly



ACROSS
1 "A League of Own"
6 Gardener's soil
10 Swindle
14 Remove lather
15 Formerly
16 Jubilee Line e.g.
17 Spoken
18 Religion spin-off
19 Russian river
20 D.C. wheeler-dealer
21 Main course
23 Mickey and Minnie
24 Soup veggie
25 Laggard
27 Pig squeaks
31 Memorable period
32 Camp worker
34 Ignominy
39 Mother's sister
40 Miser Marner
42 Charles Lamb
43 Staff of life
45 Unimportance
47 NCAA grouping
49 Most weird
50 Organized multitude
55 Squeeze (out)
56 Wine casks
57 Shuns
59 Unit of electrical resistance
62 Per person
63 Brooks and Gibson
64 Past hit
66 Cairo's river
67 Bird's carriage
68 Natural satellites
69 Pinder products
70 ID info
71 ___ Day (April 22)

DOWN
1 Lobster catcher
2 Hawaiian city
3 Organic compound
4 Bird's alma mater
5 Buys back
6 Like Bo Peep's sheep
7 Lulus
8 Speed up
9 Shooting star
10 Tree remnant
11 Bric-a-brac piece
12 One way to be taken?
13 Battle royal
22 Backs of necks
24 Vessel of 1492
26 Existed
27 Wound crust
28 Appointed time
29 Old Norse character
30 Davenport wrappers
33 Gonda cry
35 Skater Sonja
36 Toward shelter
37 Wide shot
38 Roosevelt Island's river
41 Proud mount
44 Family member
46 In-training
48 Muscle maladies
50 Secretarial talent
51 Dennis or Randy
52 Sam. for one
53 Grate collection
54 Pitcher Ryan
58 Distinctive doctrines
59 Smell
60 Subtle clue
61 Network
65 Mauna ___

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

GRADUATE LOUNGE
Not Just For Grads
Open To All 21 + Serving Beer & Wine
CAMPUS CENTER CONCOURSE
UNION BILLIARDS
Pool, Games & More
Open To All Ages
Great For Functions
DOWNSTAIRS STUDENT UNION
BOTH OPEN MON-FRI 11-9
CALL 545-2045 FOR INFO

Submit your comics!
collegiatecomics@yahoo.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Quit being so Machiavellian and back off the little prince.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
If you attempt to teach a starving man to fish he will just kill you and eat your body.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
You may be lighthearted and jovial, but your liver is like a brick.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Throughout its life, pizza is undoubtedly the world's most geometric food.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
You will be struck in the head by a hippie-propelled spaceship. See Libra.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Avoid napping in class by rubbing hot peppers in your eyes. No sleepy for you.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Don't be afraid to try new things - for example, soap on a rope or chia pets.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Other than Halo 3, there is no substitute for a healthy meal and sound sleep.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Frisbees are the intergalactic equivalent of Power Wheels for baby aliens.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Shave your head and ask everyone "Deal or no deal?" You truly are Howie Mandell.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Throwing your algebra book off of a cliff is the closest you'll ever get to physics.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
You're a slippery sea bass with a big mouth made for spitting and swallowing gossip.

Shear Bliss
Holistic Salon and Spa
Follow your bliss to upscale botanical hair coloring at...
253-2322 • www.shearblissamherst.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ACTIVITIES

Montreal weekend from $99.00. Complete, motel, transportation and more Montreal express.net 781-979-9001. Lowest Prices on campus.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

4 Bedroom Townhouse, Amherst, AC, on bus route. $1799/month. All utilities included. Contact: caseofme@gmail.com

CHILD CARE

Drive children to and from school, some childcare too. Must have safe car, excellent driving record, love children. References required, 10-20 hours per week. Call Mary 549-5691

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520. Ext. 162

Business Student
For data entry and answering phones. Must have car. 413-210-5295

CAFE HELP PART-TIME nights and weekends must be fast, accurate, efficient and friendly. Apply in person at the woodstar cafe. 60 Masonic St. Northampton

TO PLACE A CLASSIFIED AD WITH THE COLLEGIAN VISIT OUR WEBSITE OR CALL 545-3500

EMPLOYMENT

Recreation Leader - After School Program. The Town of Amherst seeks Recreation Leaders for its Prime Time After School Program operated by the Leisure Services and Supplemental Education Department (LSSE). Camp counseling, other experiences working with school age children, and/or related course-work in Elementary Education preferred. $8.60 to $9.03 hr; 5-15 hrs per week. Applications available from Human Resources Dept., 4 Boltwood Walk, Amherst or LSSE, 70 Boltwood Walk, Amherst or call S. Lecuivre @ 259-3191. Equal Employment Opportunity/ Affermative Action Employer.

SALONS & SPAS

Heated stone massage with shiatsu!
www.shearblissamherst.com
413-253-2322

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

Concerned About Your Eating? Do you eat too little? Eat too much? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH, providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling & rapid testing, STD screening & treatment. GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential. Affordable. Safe. 413-548-9992 27 Pray Street, Amherst www.tapestryhealth.org

TRAVEL

#1 Spring Break Website! 4 & 7 night trips Low prices guaranteed Group discounts for 8+ Book 20 people, get 3 free trips! Campus reps needed. www.StudentCity.com or 800-293-1445

Work From Your Dorm
Need additional money? full/pr supported by an 8 trillion dollar industry - please visit www.WantYourOwn.biz or www.8Trillion.com - all information is inside the web site and do view extra tab on the booking engine 413.695.5973
Laighton Allenby

WANTED

EGG DONORS NEEDED $15,000 (PLUS ALL EXPENSES). We are seeking women who are attractive, under the age of 29, SAT 1300+ (math+verbal), physically fit and maintaining a healthy lifestyle. If you have a desire to help an infertile family and would like more information please contact us. Email: darlene@aperfectmatch.com www.aperfectmatch.com 1-800-264-8828

Please Recycle Thank You

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

SEP 26 2007

SEP 27 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Brown Bears at Garber

Winless Bears seeking first victory at UM

By Mike Connors
Collegian Staff

The Brown Bears have yet to win a game this season, and the Massachusetts field hockey team looks to help continue that trend when it hosts them tonight at Garber Field.

UMass (4-5) is coming off a tough loss to No. 3 UConn. The Minutewomen had the game in their grasp before the Huskies scored a goal with 1:17 seconds left to escape with a 3-2 victory. With this near victory, the Maroon and White received two votes in the most recent NFHCA Coaches Poll.

UMass coach Justine Sowry thinks the loss to the Huskies will give the team confidence heading into tomorrow.

"The UConn game should give us great confidence going into this next game and beyond," she said. "Being able to compete against a No. 3 in the country, and hanging onto the lead for a good chunk of the game was testament to the amount of work that we do on the field, but also the preparation leading up to that game."

Brown (0-7, 0-2 Ivy League) should prove easier opposition than UConn. The Bears have been outscored 20-6 this season. They have also scored just one goal in their two road games.

Senior Andrea Posa leads the Bears with two goals this season.

See FIELD HOCKEY on page 6

Senior midfielder Kara Murphy recorded her only point of the season against Siena on Sept. 16. She has 21 points on five goals and 11 assists in her career at UMass.

UMass faces rival Huskies

Minutewomen take on UConn in exhibition

By Sam Ehrlich
Collegian Correspondent

As the Massachusetts tennis team prepares for its only dual match of the fall, all the focus is on one of the biggest rivals for every UMass team – Connecticut. The Minutewomen take on the Huskies today at 2 p.m. on their home courts for the preseason match.

"In general, UMass-UConn is just a huge rivalry," senior Kristin DiPiero said.

The Huskies have led the way since the two teams first met in 1975. They are 24-13-1 all time against the Minutewomen.

Recently, though, UMass has dominated the grudge match; UConn's last win came in 2002. The Minutewomen have won their last four meetings, including a 7-0 blowout in 2005.

UConn has crept back slowly but surely, however, fighting UMass to the final point last year in a 4-3 loss.

Despite the possible momentum swing, the Minutewomen are confident they can keep things rolling on their side of the court.

However, the team doesn't want to lose focus on fundamentals to prepare for the match – after all, it is still the preseason.

"I want to beat UConn next week, but the most important thing is to watch the kids develop over the next three, four weeks," UMass coach Judy Dixon said. "The freshmen first have to buy into the hard work and then get past the nervousness."

The team has had a chance to get in some practice

See TENNIS on page 6

Unbeaten UM ready for Atlantic 10 play

Freshman Kelsey Anderson is the the Maroon and White's top rookie in 2007, scoring five points on two goals and an assist. Her two goals have come on just four shots.

By Steve Games
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's soccer team has not seen the best competition this season. The Minutewomen play only the teams on the schedule and they have succeeded so far.

UMass is 5-0-1, dominating non-conference play again this season. Last year it went 6-2 against non-conference foes. The strength of schedule favors UMass, as its opponents' record is under .500 for the season, at 12-35-5 as of Sept. 24.

"Not to diminish the other teams that we've played, but we haven't played a really, really strong schedule," UMass coach Jim Rudy said Sunday after a 3-1 win over Vermont. "We went up to Dartmouth the other day and they were 1-5, but we pinched a win up there under tough circumstances, but they had played a much, much better schedule.

Rudy doesn't like to look at records as an indication of how good the team actually is. He watches the play on the field and will then notice how good of a team it is.

"Everyone we're playing is putting us under pressure, they're fighting and challenging, so I'm happy to be where we are," he added.

This is the first time UMass has gone unbeaten through non-conference play since joining the Atlantic 10 in 1993.

Sneak preview of A-10 matchups

The top six teams make it to the A-10 tournament and UMass was picked by the coaches to finish fifth in the standings. Last season the Minutewomen finished one win shy of the tournament, ending the season 11-6, and 5-4 in the conference.

St. Louis is picked to win the conference after finishing second last season in the standings. The Billikens won the A-10 championship last year, beating Fordham, 2-1. They have started the season off 3-3.

UMass Soccer

See SOCCER on page 6

Senior captain Masha Pezar and the Minutewomen host one of their biggest rivals, UConn, today at 2 p.m.

COLLEGIAN SPORTS ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Running back Matt Lawrence exploded for a career-high 176 rushing yards and three touchdowns against Maine Saturday. For his efforts, Lawrence earns this week's Collegian Sports Athlete of the Week.

Lawrence scored on a 62-yard touchdown run on the Minutemen's second play from scrimmage, helping the Minutemen jump out to an early lead. He added touchdown runs of 4 yards and 1 yard in the first and third quarters, respectively. UMass went on to trounce the Black Bears, 38-7.

The red-shirt senior toted the ball 20 times, racking up an 8.8-yard average. He also caught two passes for a total of 4 yards.

"Lawrence impressed the heck out of me today," said Maine coach Jack Cosgrove in the press conference following the game.

A starting tailback has impressed all season long, and has done an admirable job of replacing star Steve Baylark, who is now a member of the practice squad with the Arizona Cardinals.

The 6-foot-1, 210-pound tailback currently ranks second in the Colonial Athletic Association in rushing, with 129.2 yards per game – a figure that ranks him eighth in the nation. Lawrence has averaged 6.3 yards per carry on 82 attempts, totaling 517 yards. He already has five touchdowns, after having only two last year on 54 carries.

Entering the 2007 season, Lawrence was expected to split carries with red-shirt junior Tony Nelson, but his strong play has earned him the majority of the carries. Nelson has half as many rushing attempts (41) as Lawrence, but a number of them have come in situations in which the game was already decided.

Lawrence has rushed for over 1100 yards in three of the four UMass games this season. He ran for a then-career-high 153 yards in the season opener against Holy Cross, a 46-30 UMass victory. He ran for two touchdowns in that game.

Runner-up: Zack Simmons

Men's soccer red-shirt junior goalkeeper Zack Simmons earns this week's runner-up award on the strength of Saturday's shutout win over Northeastern. Simmons recorded his first shutout of the season, stopping all four shots the Huskies attempted.

The 2-0 victory at Rudd Field stopped a three-game losing streak for the Minutemen. The shutout Simmons's his 15th of his career – leaving him one short of tying the school-record set by Bryan O'Quinn (1998-01).

Simmons has started and played in every minute of the seven UMass (3-4-0) games this season. He also started all 19 games in 2006, finishing with a record of 8-8-3.

Simmons has stopped 25 shots this season, and has a goals-against average of 1.42. Last year his average was 0.96.

Mehlert, Hextall take charge in A-10

By Adam Miller
Collegian Correspondent

George Washington junior midfielder Keara Mehlert scored a thrilling 103rd minute goal Friday against Buffalo as GW won, 2-1, in double overtime, snapping a two-game losing streak.

The game went scoreless for the first 38 minutes before the Colonials (4-2-0) took a 1-0 lead. GW junior defender Lauren Kelly sent a corner kick high enough for teammate junior Kerry Philbin to head the ball into the net. It was her first goal of the season.

Nearly three minutes later, Buffalo converted a penalty kick after a handball by the Colonials. After that goal, neither team could find the back of the net, sending the game to overtime.

GW missed an opportunity to win the game in overtime after senior Nicole Trickett had a shot ricochet off the crossbar. It was not until the second OT that Mehlert handled the ball under control and nailed her second career game-winner.

Hextall leads the way

La Salle senior forward Kristin Hextall scored two goals in the first half as part of the Explorers (5-3-0) victory over Lehigh, 3-1.

Hextall netted her first goal 37 seconds into the contest, tying the same record he set Aug. 31 against Wagner for the fastest goal in a match.

The Mountain Hawks fought back and capitalized on a penalty kick after a La Salle foul in the box.

Yet it was La Salle sophomore forward Traci DePasquale who shifted the momentum back toward the Purple and White as she scored for the fifth time this year on a wide-open net.

Hextall cashioned the lead with another goal to bring her team within two. She currently has five career two-goal performances and is tied for third all time with La Salle alumni Krista Fee with 25 career goals.

The Explorers start their Atlantic 10 Conference schedule against last year's conference champions, Saint Louis.

A-10 Soccer

See A-10 SOCCER on page 6

UMASS, BC SET FOR BATTLE | PAGE 10

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

PARTLY CLOUDY : HI: 84 LO: 64 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 2007

Presidential candidates debate in N.H.

Focus falls on War in Iraq

By Derrick Perkins
Collegian Staff

HANOVER, N.H. – Differences over the Iraq War and Middle East policy dominated the Democratic Presidential Candidates Debate last night, overshadowing domestic issues and questions of leadership ability in the run-up to the primaries.

While all the candidates supported the withdrawal of American servicemen and women in some fashion, former senator John Edwards criticized the phased withdrawal proposed by Senator Hillary Clinton.

"There are differences between us, and those differences need to be made aware. Good people have differences about this issue," Edwards said. "I heard Senator Clinton say on Sunday that she wants to continue combat missions in Iraq. To me, that's a continuation of the war. I do not think we should continue combat missions in Iraq."

The first to challenge Clinton in the debate, Edwards pledged to reduce the number of U.S. soldiers from 100,000 to around 80,000 immediately following his election as president, if troop levels remain at the amount projected by the Presidential candidates who debated last night at Dartmouth College in New Hampshire included (left photo, from left to right) New Mexico Gov. Bill Richardson, former U.S. senator Barack Obama, former senator John Edwards and (right photo) Senator Hillary Rodham Clinton.

See DEBATE on page 2

Sen. Clinton proves strong

By Katie Heston
Collegian Staff

HANOVER, N.H. – Can Hillary be caught?

It was the question on everyone's lips during the run-up to yesterday's Democratic presidential hopeful debate in Hanover, N.H.

The answer perhaps, but it'll be a battle.

Before the debate, a University of New Hampshire poll showed that 43 percent of New Hampshire primary voters supported Senator Clinton – more than twice the 20 percent share captured by freshman senator Barack Obama. Former senator John Edwards came in third, favored by 12 percent of voters.

There was speculation would Obama finally attack Clinton on her vote for the Iraq War, a move political analysts have called his best chance to regain ground in the polls?

During the debate in Dartmouth College, Clinton certainly took hits on her foreign policy, however, it was Edwards, not Obama, who openly criticized Clinton's stance on the Iraq War.

Edwards pledged to immediately lower troop levels in Iraq to 50,000 when he came into office, and said Clinton's withdrawal stance is not aggressive enough. He called her willingness to maintain counter-terrorism missions "a continuation of the war."

See CLINTON on page 2

Speaker Carla Dominguez addresses the audience at the SGA's first meeting last night and asks that new members take an oath.

SGA holds first meeting of year

By Tucker Merrick
Collegian Staff

The year has begun, the elections are over, and the Student Government Association is back in session.

Last night, with over 50 students meeting in the Campus Center at the University of Massachusetts, the caucus officially assembled at the sound of the gavel.

President Aaron Bufoso, who opened up with the first speech of the year, announced that he was "hopeful for the positive energy that this room possesses." He further alluded to preparatory work that had been carried out this past summer, and remarked on his goal to "grow in number and carry-out our shared vision."

Although he did not get too specific, he ended with words to motivate the soon-to-be sworn in SGA senators, encouraging them to "dive into the issues."

The SGA, along with controlling a $1.8 million budget, is also the voice of students to the administration on campus. After Bufoso stepped down from the podium, other SGA members stepped up, and with their statements helped to clarify some of President Bufoso's words.

Issues like improving funding for public higher education, affordable textbooks, diversity on campus and judiciary concerns were touched upon.

Also touched upon was the way in which students give the voice of the SGA to get heard by the administration. Having the new senators stand, Speaker Carla Dominguez asked them to repeat the oath. "I do affirm to faithfully execute the office of SGA senator and support the Constitution and By-laws of the Student Government Association."

After they were officially sworn in, Student Trustee Ruth Thompson exposed on what those oath meant. Thompson, a voting member of the UMass Board of Trustees, put it to senators to "continue communicating with your constituents and make sure your job gets done."

With only 7.2 percent of the student population voting, it seems that the SGA senators have their work cut out for them in order to reach the rest.

To help the breaker was settled for a commuter senator seat that is, those who represent off campus students. In the tie breaker Elizabeth Portzman and Nechelle Robinson were asked to give speeches to the floor after which they exited while a vote determined Robinson to be the senator. Dean M. Fonash, Brian St. Germain and Managing Undecs were officially sworn in as senators of North after a spot on the agenda was created.

Taylor Murray, Class of 2010, resigned at last Tuesday's meeting.

NSF grants UMass $3 million to grads

By Andy Smith
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts announced yesterday that the National Science Foundation awarded a $3 million grant to a graduate program.

The Institute for Cellular Engineering (I.C.E.) received the grant to fund the training of graduate students in various aspects of biomedicine and biotechnology. The hope is to prepare UMass graduate students for life in one of the country's emerging fields of employment.

This will include hands-on research opportunities in such fields as generating artificial organs and tissues, the study of biological pharmaceuticals and plant-derived fuels and processes that clean up contaminated wastewater and soils.

To go along with the research funding, part of the money will be allocated in the form of fellowships, which are merit-based scholarships. Twenty-five second and third-year graduate students will each receive $30,000 for two years.

"This is the first training program at the University designed specifically to address the interface between engineering and the life sciences," said Susan Roberts, director of the I.C.E. and professor of chemical engineering at UMass.

Twenty faculty members from nine departments and three graduate programs at UMass are involved in an NSF-funded program called Interdisciplinary Research Training in Cellular Engineering. The program focuses on research in the field of cellular engineering, which integrates biology, chemical engineering, computer science, animal science, microbiology and materials science.

"Essentially, cellular engineering is applied cellular and molecular biology. By understanding basic cellular processes, cells can be directed to function optimally for specific applications," said Roberts.

The I.C.E. is "a multidisciplinary, interdepartmental research initiative focused on coordinating and expanding cellular engineering educational and scholarly activities on campus and enabling translational research through strategic industry partnerships," according to its Web site.

Some features of the program include summer workshops for both life scientists and engineers in the fundamentals of cellular engineering and a weekly research seminar series.

The school is currently in the process of creating a bioengineering-based industrial group of New England companies to work with UMass in an effort to build a regional workforce in cellular engineering.

"The primary outcome of this training program is establishing a well-trained workforce in state-of-the-art technologies," said Roberts. "A workforce that is poised to take a leadership role in cellular engineering both in academia and industry."

Andy Smith can be reached at asmith@student.umass.edu.

Campus group bike rides for fundraiser

By Lucas Cobeta
Collegian Staff

Ride to Provide, a student-run community service project, is set to take place this Sunday.

The first annual charity event will include members of the Hillel House and other participants at the University of Massachusetts biking through the Pioneer Valley in order to raise money for upcoming events.

The money raised will help to provide funding for Hillel's community service projects. One of these better-known activities is "Challah for a Dollah," when students bake and sell food to raise money for the Save Darfur Coalition and the American Jewish World Service. So far, the event has raised over $6000.

Hillel students are also part of the "Meals on Wheels" program at the Anne Whalen House in Amherst. Every other week, students prepare meals for the low-income, primarily elderly residents of the home.

Members also sit down and share the meals with the residents, which is greatly appreciated by the recipients of their company. One resident said that it is one of the "highlight social events" for what could be "a somewhat lonely day for many of our residents."

The Ride to Provide event will also increase funding for Alternative Spring Break. In the past two years, Hillel members have been making trips to the South to provide relief for the victims of Hurricane Katrina. They have helped rebuild homes and rejuvenate community centers in Mississippi and Louisiana.

Two of the event's founders, chairperson Belya Bedzuzy and Rabbi Saul Perlmutter, enthusiastically await Sunday.

"We are hoping this event will bring the community together to celebrate the season, community and family in a healthy and positive way, while also supporting the many wonderful service projects performed by the students of UMass Hillel," said Bedzuzy.

The bike ride will start and end at Hillel House. There are two courses set up, one of which is a 25-mile ride to begin at 9:30 a.m. The other is a 10-mile ride to begin an hour later.

Participants who register any time up to a half-hour before either ride. The ride costs $18 for students and all participants under 18, and $100 for all other participants. At noon there will be a post ride celebration. Entry forms can be dropped off at Hillel House in person or submitted online at www.umasshillel.org/rideto90.

Riders will be able to make rest stops at Sukkahs, traditional huts that are a part of the Jewish holiday Sukkot, which this year runs from Sept. 29 to Oct. 7.

Rabbi Perlmutter is very happy about the turnout so far. He said he is glad that so many people are willing to help their [illegible] be able to help others.

Lucas Cobeta can be reached at lcobeta@student.umass.edu.

Members and participants of another Hillel House event, "Challah for a Dollah," raise money for several charities.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVIII
Issue 18

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Nicholas Belanger
Managing Editor Katie Huston
Business Manager Dan Ester
Production Manager Chris Martin
Night Supervisor Meghan Murphy
Advertising Manager Alex Bender
Arts & Living Editor Tim McCall
Comics Editor Adam Staggin
Editorial Editor Sean Sullivan
News Editor Derrick Perkins
Sports Editor Jeremy Bier
Asst. Business Manager Eric Szymczak
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Emily Nichols
Asst. Arts & Living Stephanie McPherson
Asst. Arts. & Living Ryan McAskill
Asst. Arts & Living Teresa Reilly
Asst. Editorial James Mathews
Asst. Editorial Melissa Garber
Assistant News Kate Olesin
Assistant News Will McGuinness
Assistant News Holly Seabiers
Assistant Sports Michael King
Assistant Sports Joe Meloni
Assistant Sports Eli Rosenswaike
Web Editor James Hale
Photo Editor Toan Trinh

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts Calendar year. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising, rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Senator Clinton shows poise at democratic debate

CLINTON from page 1

Clinton also drew criticism for her foreign policy positions from New Mexico Governor Bill Richardson and former Alaskan senator Mike Gravel.

"I don't believe that Congress has done anything to end this war," Richardson told Clinton, after she said Democrats have pressed extremely hard to change President Bush's course in Iraq.

Gravel put Hillary under fire for voting earlier that day for a measure to rebuke Tehran that has been called too open-ended. He said the amendment to the pending Defense Authorization bill was "essentially a fig leaf to let George Bush go to war with Iran."

"I'm ashamed of you, Hillary," he said angrily, pointing out that Biden and Dodd had voted against the measure, and that Obama was not even present to vote. The pointed remarks were enough to elicit the trademark cackle Clinton uses to open her responses to difficult questions.

Yet despite a few uncomfortable moments, including a dispute with moderator Tim Russert over the strength of the U.S. Social Security program when her husband, former U.S. president Bill Clinton, left office, Clinton retained the poise and competence under fire that has become her trademark on the campaign trail.

She treaded carefully around hypothetical questions, leaving the other frontrunners, Obama and Edwards, to invoke diplomacy and multilateral economic sanctions when questioned about Iran.

She moved past broad rhetoric to address the realities of immigration law at a local level more comprehensively than the other candidates, and emphasized that her failed healthcare plan from the early '90s taught her valuable lessons that will make her plan viable today.

Unlike Clinton, Edwards stated that he was wrong to have voted for Iraq in 2002. He took a definitive stance on healthcare, pledging to take health coverage away from politicians in Washington if universal care had not been achieved by July of 2009, six months into his term.

"I will never pull the universal health care bill. I will put everything I have behind making sure that it's enacted," he said.

However, he grew defensive when questioned near the end of the debate about his campaign finance practices, including accepting $500,000 for working for a hedge fund and $800,000 from Rupert Murdoch.

"I'm proud of what I've done with my life, and I do not apologize for it," he said. When pressed as to whether he would do things differently, he repeated, "But look at what I've done. Look at what I've done."

Obama referred repeatedly to his wife and kids, appealing to American family values, and invoked his campaign pledge to not only change who is in the White House, but "change the broken politics of Washington that stand in the way of progress."

However, several times his arguments were heavier on rhetoric of "hope, reason and tolerance" than concrete plans.

He certainly did not challenge Senator Clinton, as supporters had hoped, let alone outshine her – although his stump speech to the Dartmouth student watch party after the debate drew thunderous applause, far and above the response to any other candidate.

Was last night a seminal debate?

"The press built it up that it would be an attack-fest, but none of those attacks really landed in any way," said Mark Penn of the Clinton campaign. "I don't expect that there will be any more changes after the debate."

Tim Altores, a Dartmouth student, agreed. "I wasn't swayed by any of the candidates' arguments tonight," he said.

Although other candidates put Hillary under scrutiny tonight, she did not strike back.

"It shows that they feel a need to kind of reach out and make those attacks," Penn said. "Hillary can run the type of positive campaign that I think voters want."

However, some students were not impressed with Clinton.

"Hillary Clinton tonight surprised me a lot," said Dartmouth student Abigail McCann. "She would get a question and totally skirt the issue and never take a stand. I don't want to get behind someone who isn't going to tell it straight."

Elizabeth Edwards, the wife of John Edwards, said that it is the coming months, not today's debate, that will be pivotal.

"Over the course between now and the election, that's what closes the gap," she said of her husband's campaign.

Katie Huston can be reached at managingeditor@dailycollegian.com.

Tim Russert moderated the debate last night, claiming there were positive differences made after Bill Clinton left the presidential office.

Democratic hopefuls speak on Middle East policy

DEBATE from page 1

Pentagon.

Clinton defended her statements, saying the continued threat of terrorism and the security of humanitarian aid workers required some continued U.S. military presence.

"There may be a continuing counter-terrorism mission, which, if it still exists, will be aimed at al-Qaida in Iraq," Clinton said. "It may require combat, special operations forces or some other form of that. But the vast majority of our combat troops should be out."

Governor Bill Richardson of New Mexico challenged the assertions made by the other candidates that it is necessary to maintain American troops in Iraq and criticized Clinton's praise of the democratically-controlled Congress' effort to end the war.

"I have a fundamental difference with Senator Obama, Senator Edwards and Senator Clinton," he said. "Their position basically is changing the mission; my position in bringing all troops out of Iraq is to end the war."

According to Richardson, American troops could be completely withdrawn in one year by moving quickly through Kuwait and Turkey and abandoning light equipment in Iraq. Richardson said the presence of U.S. soldiers in the region is a destabilizing force and argued that diplomacy with Syria, Iran and other regional players was the only way to end the conflict.

Senator Barack Obama agreed that diplomacy was the only solution to the problems facing the U.S. in the Middle East, arguing for face-to-face diplomacy as the only way to stabilize the region.

"We've got to talk to our enemies and not just our friends," Obama said. He added that the next president will have to engage in "personal diplomacy," although candidates and audience members alike differ on what that means.

Edwards differed slightly in opinion, instead calling for a policy of "sticks and carrots" for the Iranian people. Edwards praised Senators Joseph Biden and Christopher Dodd for voting against a resolution passed in the Senate yesterday which, according to Edwards, labeled the Iranian Revolutionary Guard a terrorist organization.

He criticized Clinton for voting in favor of the resolution and not learning her lesson for voting to use force in Iraq.

"I voted for this war in Iraq, and I was wrong to vote for this war. And I accept responsibility for that. Senator Clinton also voted for this war," Edwards said. "I have no intention of giving George Bush the authority to take the first step on a road to war with Iran."

The candidates arrived at a general consensus that diplomacy would ultimately bring an end to the strife in Iraq and stabilize the region. Both Richardson and Obama stressed the importance of bringing in other members of the international community to reduce tensions within the region.

"It's called diplomacy. It's called negotiation. It's called talking to Iran and Syria and trying to work out differences," he said. "You've got Hamas on one side, you've got Hezbollah, you've got Iran wanting to build nuclear weapons. But you do it through diplomacy. You do it through a Middle East peace process."

Derrick Perkins can be reached at dperkins@student.umass.edu.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Meghan Murphy

COPY EDITOR
Nichole Amaral

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

SEP 27 2007

Better
It's what we do...

Helping you feel better...
- routine, same-day and urgent medical care
- mental health care
- eye care and optical services
- physical therapy
- acupuncture
- mind/body medicine
- specialty care
- allergy clinic
- full-service pharmacy
- faculty/staff assistance program
- onsite laboratory and radiology services
- and more

Helping you live better...
- health education
- substance abuse prevention programs
- tobacco cessation
- nutrition and eating disorders services
- athletic health services
- travel medicine clinic
- support and therapy groups
- volunteer, outreach and academic opportunities
- online health information, resources
- big discounts on eyewear, pharmacy products and more

Taking better care of you...
- college health specialists
- convenient campus location
- open 24/7 during the semester

University Health Services
577-5000 • www.umass.edu/uhs
UMASS AMHERST

Guest Chef Series
Returning by popular demand
Chef Iliana de la Vega presents...
Regional Mexican Oaxaca Cuisine

Highly acclaimed Chef from the city of Oaxaca in southern Mexico.

You don't have to head south of the border to enjoy great Mexican food.

MENU
Botanas (Appetizers):
Sincronizadas de Hongos

Sopas (Soup):
Sopa de Tortilla

Fuertes (Entrees):
Mole Rojo
Conchinita Pibil
Tinga Poblana
Camarones Con Poblanos y Crema

Postres: (Dessert):
Flan de Vainilla
Arroz Con Leche (Salsa de Fresa)

Thursday, Sept. 27th
Hampshire DC
From 5 to 9 pm

Dining Services
UMassAmherst
umass.edu/diningservices

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

Editorial Opinion

Thursday, September 27, 2007

I may not agree with what you say but I will defend to the death your right to say it
Voltaire

Editorial@dailycollegian.com

Saturday at the zoo

I stumbled upon this really captivating show last Saturday night. At first I thought it was a Pacific Blue rerun. Remember that Baywatch knockoff where bike-cops on the beach chase down and flying-dive-tackle criminals off their bikes? Yeah, that show actually went on for five seasons, and I could have sworn I was watching one of the later episodes where Mario Lopez joined the cast and things got really hot. Of course, that was until I realized the officer I saw wasn't Mario Lopez.

Following that revelation, I looked around and remembered I wasn't in my room watching television, but rather standing on the corner of Hobart and North Pleasant St. watching the Amherst Police Department in high gear.

The police were out in full last weekend, exhibiting a Lance Armstrong-like determination to put the brakes on student debauchery. In the span of 25 minutes and two streets, I saw at least nine students get arrested. The police – for the most part – were just waiting in the shadows of one shamefully large party, snatching up unsuspecting alcohol abusers on the fringes. It was the predator stalking its prey, like what you see on the Discovery Channel, where the lion waits in the brush looking to pick off the stumbling antelope. In this scene, there were antelopes aplenty. At one point, I saw a cop confront three young men, all of whom suddenly scattered – two got away.

Approaching one of the officers, I asked him about the seemingly benign police response, and he informed me that they weren't breaking up the big parties, but rather just eliciting justice on the side. At first this seemed cowardly to me, but then I actually took a good look toward the party, which was out of control. Students had massed outside of the house, were drinking freely, and who knows what would have happened if the police had gone up and knocked on the front door. Remember how Mufasa died?

Police are stuck in a difficult situation. Even if they don't necessarily agree with a particular law, officers are obligated to uphold it. If someone under 21 is drinking, or a person is drunk in public, then a cop is duty-bound to arrest them. But with this truth, it must also be observed as to how jaded the system has become. Drinking has turned into this perceived problem that police can do very little about.

Drinking has turned into this perceived problem that police can do very little about.

It's actually coming down to situations like I observed on Saturday, where cops are gazing across the street at the herd of students, merely performing crowd control. They stand there in an uneasy peace, watching as students force fun down their throats while grazing around the various watering holes. Only when a member of the herd strays does the officer wheel into action.

I could go on from here and rant about the drinking age and police misconduct – which is rampant. I mean, I certainly question how many arrested students were just victims of societal circumstance. How many were affronted by the police, who came skidding to a stop and began yelling in the legally-ignorant student's face, just waiting for them to make a mistake? How about those three kids that ran – do you think they had any idea that by fleeing from a police officer, it gave that officer every right to legally search and arrest them?

Like I said, I could go on, but then again, many of the people I saw on Saturday were just being dumb. Not to say they deserved it, but illegally gathering in a crowd of drunks right in front of police is pretty stupid and obnoxious by any measure. Furthermore, anyone who is carrying an open container down Hobart is just asking to do some scene-work with the old cast of Pacific Blue. Forget about changing the drinking laws – students need to not only learn some limits, but also know their rights, and how amicable they can be in the face of authority.

I can see where the bike-tackling is coming from. If it were me and people were basically laughing in the face of my authority, what would I do? I'd find a way to release all of that pent-up frustration. I am sure some Amherst cop was sitting on his couch with Doritos-stains down his wife-beater at three in the morning when the intro to Pacific Blue came on, and so did a light bulb in his head. I can see him now, suddenly sitting upright and calling up Trek, only to find that they weren't open.

I mean, what better way to vent then initiating a little game of cat-and- mouse, arresting various unlucky students with gear-shifting grit and strong calf muscles? Nothing brings me more contentment – especially when it's ending in an airborne take-down.

Tucker Merrick is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jmerrick@student.umass.edu.

WRITE LETTERS TO THE EDITOR!

No minority debates

Over 40 years ago, when Democrats seized the momentum of the Civil Rights Movement for political gain, Barry Goldwater suggested that his Republican party "go hunting where the ducks are." He approached the issues of the movement with a cold and calculating political mind. Realizing that only one party would be able to control the black vote, Goldwater urged his party to give up on the black vote and focus on winning the votes of white Southerners.

Over 25 years ago, presidential hopeful Ronald Reagan sounded a similar theme when he traveled to Philadelphia, Miss. to kick off his presidential campaign. In the town nationally known for being the place where three young civil rights workers disappeared, Reagan stood up and said, "I believe in states' rights." Thus was born the Southern Strategy to emphasize federalism and lessen the federal government's role in daily life.

Today, the party continues to practice the same rituals. Despite being the party of Lincoln, Republicans have chosen to alienate the black vote, instead choosing to hunt where the ducks are. In the past few months, the Republican candidates have seemingly done everything in their power to push aside any minority influence in the spirit of the great conservative icons Barry Goldwater and Ronald Reagan. But have these presidential candidates chosen to back the wrong horse in this political derby?

Tonight PBS is hosting a Republican Presidential Debate specifically geared towards minority issues. At the Democratic edition this past June, all eight candidates attended the televised debate at Howard College in Washington, D.C. In contrast, the Republican debate will feature only five brave souls complemented by four empty lecterns to symbolize the missing. Rudy Giuliani, Fred Thompson, John McCain and Mitt Romney have all chosen not to attend the debate, citing scheduling conflicts. Their excuses are curious because the date was chosen by Ken Mehlman, the former head of the Republican National Committee, because he thought it was the ideal date for all of the candidates. The snubs by the leading four come on the heels of three insults to the Latino population.

Like the PBS debate, Univision, the Spanish language television network, set up separate debates for Democrats and Republicans. Held in the crucial swing state of Florida, the Democratic debate was held without any major problems, but the only Republican who accepted an invitation to their debate was John McCain. The Republicans also declined invitations to two other important Latino events, both of which were held in Florida.

Republican candidates have continued to ignore the minority population that now makes up one-third of the United States.

For a party that has almost done everything right politically to maintain control of Washington, D.C. for the last two and a half decades, it seems the Republicans are ignoring this golden opportunity knocking on their door. Despite having a president and first lady extremely popular in the Latino community and successful in winning the Latino vote, the current crop of Republican candidates has chosen to marginalize this vital voting bloc. There is a consensus among both Republican and Democratic strategists that to reach the White House, the next president will need to win at least 40 percent of the Latino vote. Having already taken unpopular stances on immigration, one might expect the Republicans to limit the damage they have already inflicted upon themselves. Instead, surprisingly, Republicans have chosen the alternate route.

Some might say that the treatment Republicans are giving minorities results from their attempts to run to the base during the primaries. Every candidate, save for Ron Paul, has made a concerted effort to be compared to Ronald Reagan. Who knows – maybe during the general election, they will run back to the middle. Even if this is the plan, one has to question whether it will work. The three Latino events that the candidates skipped all took place in Florida, a state that played a major role in deciding the past two presidential elections. It must be a mistake for republicans to avoid reaching out to their electorate.

The direct primary was established during the Progressive Era to take the power of candidate selection out of the hands of elites and party bosses. It was created to allow the people to vette the candidates and see where they had differences and similarities. Since this ideal situation, the primary has been a chance for candidates to bow to their base. Mitt Romney has moved farther right on just about every major issue since he was governor of Massachusetts. Rudy Giuliani has begun to qualify his pro-choice, pro-gun control and pro-gay stances. In doing so, Republicans have continued to ignore the minority population that now makes up one-third of the United States. Latinos are the fastest growing segment of the population and will start to affect elections with growing power. The situation is ripe for Democrats to sweep in and seize control of crucial votes. Will they be able to mobilize this population, or will they swing and miss at this fastball down the middle?

Neil Milano is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu

The truth about France

Here's the thing – unlike most Americans, I love the French. Not a month goes by in this country in which some broadcaster, writer or politician does not denounce the French people and their culture. I am not sure where or why it began, but for whatever reason, Americans have a problem with the French.

Recently I was talking to a co-worker about his political views for the sole sake of getting a laugh. He is a staunch republican – right wing all the way. He's the type of kid who believes Bill Clinton should have been thrown out of the White House for getting some from Lewinski, while our current President Numb Nuts, for all the harm and offenses he has caused the world, deserves to be re-elected. Again, I needed a laugh.

So, as it went, in the course of our conversation (which was leaning towards the war), he said something to the effect of, "It's going fine, yet it would have gone better if more nations joined our cause ... typical French." Now, my first reaction was to punch him in the nose for saying the war is going fine. Yet, because that's generally looked down on in friendly conversation, I retorted with, "This is France's fault?"

From that point on, he went on an anti-French rant, the kind of thing you would see on "Dennis Miller Live," yet nowhere near as articulate, or obscurely funny. Over the course of his rant, he mentioned their use of socialized health care, their want to live more than work, their lack of involvement in Iraq and something about wine and cheese.

At this, I punched him square in the nose and said, "Sorry, that's my natural response to stupidity."

So, being that it is a generally accepted notion that the majority of Americans disapprove of France, let's see why.

First off, socialized health care, which is another way of saying "universal health care." The fact of the matter is that of any nation, France has the single best health care system in the world, and we should steal it.

The fact of the matter is that of any nation, France has the single best health care system in the world, and we should steal it.

Another great facet of France they are completely independent of Mid-East oil. No Obama, no Al-Zarqawi – completely independent. As a nation, like the majority of Europe and the entirety of Asia, France has higher fuel standards than we do. Their cars are smaller, their mileage is better and their air cleaner.

France as a nation is much, much, much cleaner. Little known fact: France is the greenest industrialized nation in the world. Unlike America, which seems to love to destroy the natural world, France is making sure that their children four generations from now will know what leaves and grass feel like.

The fact of the matter is that of any nation, France has the single best health care system in the world, and we should steal it.

Guess what? As poverty goes, France has the lowest poverty rate of any first-world industrialized nation.

Unlike this country, in their most recent election, 85 percent of France voted. Eighty-five percent. You couldn't get that turn out in this country if people were voting on breasts or bigger breasts, and they were giving away free samples.

As far as America's manic fascination with politician's personal lives, the French don't care.

In their last election, one of the two frontrunners, Segolene Royal, a woman and a socialist, had four kids and wasn't married. The other candidate and current president of France, Nicolas Sarkozy, is said to have had an affair or two in the past. When he was married, he lived apart from his wife.

It might sound crazy to us Americans, but France actually cares about privacy. The electorate doesn't care about their politicians personal lives because they know they are voting for a public officer, not a Paris Hilton.

Their politicians are also not asked about where they stand on prayer in school, stem cell research, gay marriage, evolution or abortion. Again, they might be crazy, but who knows – keeping prayer out of public schools, allowing gay marriage, using stem cells to cure, allowing abortion and knowing that evolution is the truth all sound pretty sane to me.

For Christ's sake, they created lingerie, sex during the day, the croissant, fantastic wine and the tongue. I'm pretty sure we can learn something from them.

All of these things being true (well, maybe not the part about the wine), why is it that if an American politician even whispers the words, "France" and "good" in the same sentence his or her political career is done for.

For whatever reason, we as Americans seem to pride ourselves on our bluster and our swagger. We leap before we look, and speak before we think. On a global scale, our government and its supporters take great pleasure in being the first to the scene – yet we never finish the job.

So from now on, as Bill Maher said a couple of months ago, "politicians have to stop telling their exes every time they hear the word 'France.' I like just calling something French is the ultimate argument winner." As it to say, what can you say about a country that was too stupid to get on board with our wonderfully conceived and brilliantly executed war in Iraq?

Oh yeah, did I mention they created sex during the day?

Brad Tuckowitz is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at btuckowitz@student.umass.edu.

Happy tale a distraction

Youssif, the Iraqi boy who was severely burned by masked men last January, has become an icon among millions of Americans. At his new home in California, he's become a local celebrity; people in stores, on the beach, even at Disneyland recognize his face. His is a face that has sparked an outpouring of support and fundraising that have brought a family halfway across the world to change a little boy inside and out. However, this little boy's journey does not come without many risks that are being drastically overlooked.

It's been almost 10 months since the five-year-old Iraqi boy was playing outside his home in Baghdad when five masked men inexplicably grabbed him, doused him with gasoline and lit him on fire. It was just one of the many violent and unthinkable acts of brutality that happen every day in Iraq, and the assailants were never caught. The barbaric act left the young boy with horrendous scarring all over his face, masking the bright smile that defined him before that fateful January day.

Arwa Damon, a CNN reporter, found Youssif and his family and revealed his story to the American public about a month ago, complete with graphic before-and-after photos of his face. The story drew in thousands of pleas from readers to do something to help Youssif's face and make him smile again, as his parent's desperate attempts to get him treatment in Iraq had produced nothing.

The outpouring of American support to help this young boy led to the creation of a private fund, which raised hundreds of thousands of dollars. Along with the help of Dr. Richard Grossman, founder of Grossman Burn Center and the Children's Burn Foundation, Youssif and his family were brought to the United States to live here for a year while Youssif receives top-of-the-line surgical procedures to repair his wounds, all free of charge, thanks to Dr Grossman and the many Americans who donated to his fund.

This feel-good story of helping Youssif and his family, as well as bringing about a positive story during times of war and violence in the Middle East, has delighted readers. However, I feel the glorification of this good deed has caused many to fail to contemplate the risks that Youssif, his family and the United States are taking – risks that could have a much more lasting effect than Youssif's 12-month visit.

The glorification of this good deed has caused many to fail to contemplate the risks that Youssif, his family and the United States are taking.

Readers find themselves rapt by stories about Youssif playing with toy cars, going to the beach, meeting Spiderman at Disneyland and having his first taste of McDonalds in between his reconstructive surgeries. But I can't help but be drawn to the fact that the family cannot disclose their last name, that Youssif's father goes by a fake alias, and his face must be blurred out of every photo and appearance he makes on TV. This is because they are so concerned that their identities will be revealed or they may be discovered by someone in Iraq. They fear it flies disclose too much information they will return home only to be subject of more senseless violence at the hands of Iraqi insurgents.

I believe their fear is justified, and I wonder if we have overlooked the possible repercussions of bringing this family here to the United States for treatment for Youssif. What donors are doing is an admirable example of compassion to help other people, and it's a breath of fresh air from the daily reports of war violence and death. However, have we thought about what's going to happen to this family once Youssif's surgeries have concluded, and it's time for them to return home?

With this story so highly publicized, I find it hard to believe that it has not reached headlines overseas. Coupled with the huge volume of suicide bombings and violent attacks on Iraqi civilians this week on a daily basis, I am not out of the question that Youssif's family could be the target of Iraqi violence if they are sent back to Iraq.

Some people are calling for Youssif and his family to be allowed to stay here in the United States even after his treatments have concluded. But how likely is it that the U.S. government will allow this family, who came here with little more than the possessions they had in Baghdad, to remain here and start a whole new life in this country they've been in for barely a month? That's an even higher issue to tackle, and one that politicians won't get far on the drawing table.

I'm glad that Youssif and others in America receiving care from top professionals can repair damages that should have never been done in the first place. It's a life changing experience that no child should have to go through. And while Youssif could undoubtedly leave a smile on your face, I urge readers now, more than ever, to keep in mind the risks that this young boy and his family still face down the road. Time will heal Youssif's wounds, but the wounds that await back home in Baghdad remain to be seen.

Evan Powers is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at epowers@student.umass.edu.

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

SEP 27 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 2007 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Local band speaks truths on 'Walk Softly'

Quartet set to release third album

By Chantal Vacher
Collegian Correspondent

The jazz folk quartet Barefoot Truth, reminiscent of artists like John Butler Trio and Jack Johnson, get ready to promote their newest album, "Walk Softly," with a series of tours, starting with a CD launch party in Northampton this Friday. The band's original members got their start at UMass.

Barefoot Truth, a jazz-folk band with its roots at the University of Massachusetts, is soon celebrating the release of its third album. Originally formed as an acoustic duo, Barefoot Truth has risen from guitar riffs in the stairwell of John Quincy Adams in 2004 to a presently fully-fledged band.

The band has since expanded to include Jay Driscoll (lead guitarist, backup vocals, percussion), a geography major and recent graduate of UMass, as well as Will Benoit (lead vocals, drums, and guitar) who majored in global studies and history at St. Michaels college in Vermont. Andy Wrba (upright bass), a jazz studies major from Westfield State college, and Garrett Duffy (harmonica), who also attended St. Michaels majoring in business, have also joined the group.

Their music is influenced by the likes of John Butler Trio and Dispatch, with a twinge of Jack Johnson, yet they added their own UMass flavor into this mix to form a truly unique and catchy sound.

Initially named Barefoot, they were forced to change their name at the request of Jessica Simpson's father, who was already managing a band with the same name. The addition of "truth" to their name helped to "capture the organic essence of our sound we try to seek truth through our music," said guitarist Jay Driscoll.

And their new album does just that. Entitled "Walk Softly," produced by Jack Gauthier (who also produced Dispatch), it outlines themes of problems with Mother Earth, mother culture and the hands we are inevitably dealt in life.

The song "Broken Road" speaks to the heart, and is perfect for listening to while driving on a crisp fall day, especially around Amherst. Their folk roots, integrated with the interesting element of the upright bass, Wrba's jazz trained fingers and their contagious lyrics, will have listeners singing and dancing in no time.

Jay Driscoll, the lead guitarist, was kind enough to sit down and answer some questions about the band and their interests.

Chantal Vacher: What do you and your bandmates like to do for fun?

Jay Driscoll: Outside of just playing music together, we are all really close friends, and get along really well, which really holds us together as a band. We all like being outside ... hiking, kayaking, and things like that. Will and Garrett like to surf. They go on surf trips as much as they can. Andy likes to practice playing bass.

CV: What made you decide to come together and make music?

JD: Musically, Will and I just clicked as soon as we met. Within a few hours of meeting, we were both running to grab our guitars. We were into the same kinds of music, and just enjoyed jamming together. The other guys just seemed to fit in with us so well musically, and as individuals. We all have a blast writing and performing together.

CV: How did the name Barefoot come about?

JD: The summer that we first began playing, we generally didn't have shoes on. A fan yelled us that we should call ourselves Barefoot. So we said OK. We didn't add the "Truth" on until Jessica Simpson's father approached us with his band Barefoot and threatened to take legal action if we didn't change our name.

CV: That must have been weird, getting a letter from Jessica Simpson's father. How did you react to that?

JD: It was interesting and kind of funny actually, that someone of his status had actually heard of us, and thought of us as a threat.

CV: The song "Broken Road" is probably my new favorite song. Was it influenced by anyone you know?

JD: I was in Hawaii with my girlfriend, and we had to rent a car at this totally shoddy place, they only accepted cash, and all their cars were complete junkers. So they sent this guy to pick us up at the airport, and when we asked him how long he had been in Hawaii he said that he had been there six months but had only been out of jail for 10 days. Needless to say, we decided to find another rent-a-car place after that. Will kind of wrote the song based on me telling him that story. It's kind of just figuring out people and their lives without really knowing them.

CV: How far do you plan on taking your music?

JD: As far as it lets us. As long as it stays fun, and works realistically as a career, we will continue. I am already more than proud of what we have created.

The outdoorsy nature of each member of the band is reflected in the organic, earthy feel of their music. Their heartfelt lyrics, paired with their jazzy-folk sound, have rendered this up-and-coming band a musical force to be reckoned with.

Having fully dedicated their lives to music, Barefoot Truth has a plethora of tour dates, and this fall will be traveling all along the East Coast. This Friday, they will be having a CD release party at the Pearl Street Ballroom in Northampton.

Chantal Vacher can be reached at cvacher@student.umass.edu

Director introduces film series

Costa began two-week event

By Christina Fong
Collegian Staff

Amherst Cinema started off their film series "Pedro Costa Retrospective" Monday night with Pedro Costa himself. He introduced the first film of the series, "Where Does Your Hidden Smile Lie?," which is a documentary primarily about the tedious process of film making and editing.

A soft-spoken Costa made a simple introduction, although he said the practice of an introduction is "stupid" because it's as though the director is trying to "justify the film."

He made "Where Does Your Hidden Smile Lie?" in 2001 as a part of a film series in France called "Filmmakers of Our Time." As he said, he "used the film almost like a microscope" in how he magnifies and dissects the relatively mysterious world of editing. He ends with a fitting statement that there is very little lighting and basically "the only light comes from their work."

The two stars of the documentary are Costa's long-time idols, French filmmakers Jean-Marie Straub and Daniele Huillet. Through Costa's lens, the audience is along for the long and complex re-editing of their film "Sicilia!"

During the 38 days of shooting, Straub and Huillet work meticulously to perfect each scene. They go through frames no longer than a minute, constantly going back and forth, discussing what must be cut to achieve a desired effect. Everything is analyzed from a tree's irritating swaying leaves in the background to the way an actor's eyes slowly begin to light up just as he's about to smile.

This process is not done without argument. Straub and Huillet are rather comical in the way they bicker and interact with each other. Costa had said he "realized he made his first comedy and love story." The love story is obscure but made clearer towards the end of the film.

Straub is an intriguing character himself. Many times he goes on rants about the ethics and principles of film techniques and discusses such figures as Chaplin and Eisenstein. His audience is usually an uninterested Huillet or a few students in the editing room who aren't in the frame.

Costa shot the documentary from one unobtrusive spot in the room. This left him with the perfect continuous view of Huillet at the cutting table on the left and Straub strolling in and out of the room through the door on the right.

Costa said the door was "a miracle" because it acted like a window. He pointed out that there were two windows: the monitor on which the film was showing and the door Straub constantly walks past as he strolls the hallway in contemplation. This allows the audience a beautifully insightful perspective of the filmmaking process.

Editing is no doubt a difficult and scrupulous undertaking of filmmaking. Costa takes the audience through the same headaches and frustrations that Straub and Huillet experience themselves. That is what the documentary truly is: the editing experience rather than the capture of the editing experience on screen. Although it may seem slow and dull at times, it is a necessary evil that many filmmakers admittedly enjoy.

After the film ended, the audience was invited to stay for a question-and-answer session with Costa. He answered several questions ranging from the nature of the two avant-garde filmmakers to technical details of the filming process.

He revealed how he had shot the film with a small video camera with only the help of a friend. Straub and Huillet had very little funding, so they made deals with film schools in France to use their editing rooms in exchange for allowing students to watch and learn from their editing work.

Costa had in fact made a shorter version of the film for a German television station but after some difficulties, they discarded it as "too dark and boring." Fortunately for him, this gave Costa all rights to the film.

"Where Does Your Hidden Smile Lie?" is only the beginning of the film series. "Ossos" was shown Tuesday, Sept. 25 with Costa available again after the film.

More of Costa's films that will be showing are "Casa de Lava," "O Sangue," "No Quarto da Vanda" and "Juventude em Marcha." The final film will be showing Oct. 4. All the films are in Portuguese with English subtitles. The film series is made possible by the Five College Film Studies Program.

Christina Fong can be reached at cfong@student.umass.edu

Director Pedro Costa opened the two-week long film series at the Amherst Cinema called "Pedro Costa Retrospective."

Local farm night a success

Tuesday night, Worcester Berkshire and Franklin Dining Commons served locally harvested vegetables. In fact, all of the DCs on campus usually serve locally grown food, but what made Thursday stand out is the expanded involvement of the farmers.

Worcester Dining Commons featured locally free-ranged turkey and a variety of locally grown vegetables, including potatoes, squash and green beans. Local honey from South Deerfield was for also sale at the entrance of the DC. In the rear there was a cooler with fresh milk from South Hadley.

The milk came in three different flavors: regular, chocolate and coffee.

A fiddle player dazzled students with several fall-themed musical selections.

Pioneer Valley area farmers were also at the DCs giving free samples of locally grown apples and pears.

Apple cobbler and apple cider were available for desert. Toppings for the ice cream included fresh raspberries, along with the usual chocolate sauce and candies.

Local coffee shop Raos provided for students in Franklin.

Judging by the excessively long lines at the entrée stations, the night was a success.

—Tim McCall, Collegian Staff

Pride and Respect for UMass Amherst: Why it is Important

Both the fall semester and the final weeks of the Major League Baseball season are in full swing and it is an exciting time for all fans. As we approach the playoffs, we want to wish you and your favorite team the best of luck.

Enjoy the playoff games in your own rooms, with friends or on the big screen in the Blue Wall. When you celebrate your team victories, do so wisely and responsibly. And accept the losses with equal levelness.

The past few years, we have seen destructive student action associated with athletic events. While we personally do not understand this concept of violence and rioting as an expression of celebration, nonetheless it is a phenomenon we are currently witnessing nationally on college campuses and in major cities. Here, on our campus, these riots are usually related to the Boston Red Sox and the New England Patriots.

Student behavior reflects upon the entire campus and, as a result, influences the entire reputation of the University. When students engage in such destructive behavior, the public no longer sees our renown faculty, our cutting edge research or the majority of students who are truly interested in their academic careers.

All of the elements that make the University of Massachusetts Amherst a place of academic prestige are overshadowed by this destructive behavior:

- The reputation of the University is compromised, and by extension, the value of a student's degree is also lessened. A student's investment of intellectual discipline, time and financial resources is compromised.
- In addition to the academic compromise, University students are not regarded for their personal development or leadership skills. In seeking career or graduate school, a UMass Amherst student may be held in less regard than the graduate of another university.
- Our elected officials look upon the campus with concern and state funding for the campus may be jeopardized.
- Talented faculty and deans may be less likely to consider the University as a place of employment.

Collectively we can make a difference, and collectively we can instill pride in and respect for the University of Massachusetts Amherst.

Sincerely,

Charlena Seymour
Provost and
Senior Vice Chancellor
for Academic Affairs

Michael Gargano
Vice Chancellor
Student Affairs and Campus Life

UM, BC's long history

Even without disputed first meeting, Eagles own series

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

Apparently the Boston College-Massachusetts rivalry runs so deep that the two schools can't even agree on how many times they've played each other.

According to UMass, the two teams have met on the gridiron a total of 21 times – the first of which occurred in 1901. But if you look at BC's media guide, these rival squads took to the field on October 26, 1999 – an 18-0 Eagles victory.

When perusing the UMass media guide and old-school Collegian clippings (then known as The Aggie Life), there is no record of this contest. But that's a matter for another day.

Outside of a potentially phantom football game, there is much more at stake this Saturday at Alumni Stadium. Both teams enter the 1 p.m. kickoff with perfect 4-0 records, and national title aspirations – albeit at different levels.

It will be a battle of top-tier quarterbacks in BC's Matt Ryan and UMass's Liam Coen, but more than that, it will be a battle between teams that once shared a more storied rivalry.

Going by the theory that no game was played in 1899, the rivalry "officially" began in 1901 for their first career matchup. But UMass and BC only played twice more in the next 60-plus years, once a year later in 1902 and in 1912.

The rivalry didn't technically begin until 1966 – when the two schools agreed to an eight-year contract. That deal was extended, as UMass and BC played each other for 17 years in a row, up until 1982.

The gap between games after that series lasted over 20 years, when they finally met again in 2004 – a 29-7 BC win at Alumni Stadium. It was UMass coach Don Brown's first year at the helm.

Before the game is kicked off on Saturday, here is a look at some of the marquee matchups – which both teams account for, of course – in the history between the two schools.

Nov. 28, 1901: UMass 11, BC 0

UMass took the opening game of this matchup, 11-0 at Alumni Stadium on Thanksgiving Day. That year's UM squad (known as the Aggies) was considered by many to be the best in school history; a program dating back to 1879, its first year of varsity football.

That game was played with two 20-minute halves, and touchdowns back then were worth five points. It was extremely cold that day, causing both teams to frequently fumble. UMass capitalized on the turnovers, scoring two touchdowns (one missed extra point).

Oct. 4, 1902: UMass 30, BC 0

It was another win and another shutout for UMass over BC. This game was played with two halves, one consisting of 20 minutes, and the other for 15 minutes. UMass dominated play, especially in the second half – as UMass had possession of the ball for the entire second half.

Oct. 12, 1912: UMass 42, BC 0

For much of the game, the crowd chanted, "we want 47, we want 47!" in reference to the 47-0 win that UMass had over Dartmouth a week earlier.

It didn't get the 47 points, but UMass manhandled BC regardless, 42-0. UMass dominated the game from start to finish, leading 19-0 after the first quarter and 26-0 at the half.

Nov. 19, 1966: BC 14, UMass 7

BC had to wait 54 years for revenge from its previous loss to UMass. This matchup between the Eagles and the Redmen (changed to Minutemen in the '70s) was contested in Amherst.

"The Eagles have the biggest bulks of beef in the East in their front line," wrote the Collegian prior to the game. The average weight of their five offensive linemen was 235.6 pounds, which would be considered puny by today's standards. UMass's current offensive line weighs in at an average of 301 pounds.

Nov. 25, 1972: UMass 28, BC 7

UMass QB Peil Pennington led UMass to 473 total yards and the victory. UMass led 28-0 at the half.

"Many viewers felt that they were watching the wrong game," wrote the Collegian afterwards. BC was held to 9 yards of offense in the first half.

Nov. 24, 1973: BC 59, UMass 14

The score essentially says it all. But check out the first paragraph from the Collegian's story afterwards.

"It was the worst disaster to befall New England since the death of Calvin Coolidge, the worse defensive collapse since the days of Dick Stuart, the biggest sporting mismatch since Bobby Orr broke in alone on Helen Keller."

BC had 603 offensive yards, including an unreal 518 yards rushing on 72 attempts. UMass ran four plays from scrimmage in the first quarter, and that includes a punt.

Nov. 23, 1974: BC 70, UMass 8

If you thought the year before was bad, think again.

It was the worst loss for UMass since 1956 – when they lost to Connecticut 71-6. UMass fumbled six times and was intercepted three more. BC scored touchdowns on its first five possessions, taking a 42-0 lead at the half. UMass was held to 30 rushing yards on 38 carries.

But what angered UMass the most was that BC threw 10 consecutive passes in the third quarter, despite leading by 42.

"The ground was too wet for sound running game," coach Joe Yukica said after the game. Maybe that explains the UMass rushing total.

Nov. 25, 1978: UMass 27, BC 0

UMass coach Bob Pickett and the Minutemen beat up on perhaps the worst Eagles team in history, 27-0. BC finished that season 0-11.

"I love it, I love it," UMass player Steve Telander said afterwards. "I remember that 70-8 disaster more than anything … it was 42-0 and they kept throwing it. It's been a long wait."

In that game, Dennis Dent became the first UMass player to run for 1,000 yards in a season. He carried the ball 20 times in that game for 206 yards. The captain of that team was Joe McLaughlin, whose son Bob McLaughlin – currently plays defensive end for the Minutemen.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosenswa@student.umass.edu

1899: 18-0 BC ???	1973: 59-14 BC
1901: 11-0 UMass	1974: 70-8 BC
1902: 30-0 UMass	1975: 24-14 BC
1912: 42-0 UMass	1976: 35-0 BC
1966: 14-7 BC	1977: 34-7 BC
1967: 25-0 BC	1978: 27-0 UMass
1968: 21-6 BC	1979: 41-3 BC
1969: 35-30 BC	1980: 19-12 BC
1970: 21-10 BC	1981: 52-22 BC
1971: 35-0 BC	1982: 34-21 BC
1972: 28-7 UMass	2004: 26-7 BC

Coen, Ryan share respect

QUARTERBACKS from page 10

me," Ryan said. "[My teammates] are really talented, and I just try to distribute the ball to them as best I can. Hopefully that's good enough on Saturdays for us to get wins."

Behind Ryan, the Eagles are 4-0 and are ranked No. 11 in the ESPN/USA Today Coaches' poll. For his efforts, Ryan is ranked 7th on ESPN's "Heisman Watch."

Ryan came into national prominence last season, leading BC to a 10-3 season and a BCS Bowl Game (Meineke Car Care Bowl) victory on Dec. 30, 2006 over Navy, 25-24. Interestingly enough, UMass lost to Navy earlier that season – also in a one-point game – by the score of 25-24.

Ryan threw two interceptions in that bowl victory, but completed 20-of-29 passes for 242 yards and two touchdowns (one rushing, one passing), helping BC get into position in the final seconds for a game-winning field goal over the Midshipmen as time expired.

But Ryan's coming-out party really occurred in 2005, when he came into the game against Wake Forest, trailing 30-21 with 3:30 remaining. Ryan led BC to the comeback victory, completing 7-of-9 passes for 134 yards and two touchdown passes, including the game-winning 26-yard pass to wideout Kevin Challenger.

"I don't know if I've seen any weaknesses in him," Coen said. "He's sound; I don't see many mistakes he makes in a game. Obviously he's a big-time NFL prospect, and I have lot of respect for him."

That respect goes both ways, as Ryan thinks quite highly of the quarterback he will be opposing in Saturday's tilt at Alumni Stadium.

"From what I've seen from him in the past I think he's a really talented player," Ryan said. "He's done a great job up there in his career. He's a good player and I'm excited to watch him play on Saturday."

But while Coen and his coach – and seemingly everyone in the country – have sung the praises of Ryan, Brown is more than happy with the quarterback who will suit up for his team come Saturday.

"I've said it 100 times and I'll say it again, I won't trade my guy for anyone in the country," Brown said.

That statement comes with good reason. Coen, along with running back Steve Baylark and a strong defense, guided UMass to the national championship game against Appalachian State on Dec. 15, 2006. Coen and the Minutemen lost that game, 28-17, but the 6-foot-2, 220-pound quarterback gave his team a chance to win – throwing for 221 yards and a touchdown on 20-of-33 passing. He was, however, intercepted twice.

Interceptions were rather scarce for Coen last season, as he racked up just 10 of them compared to his 26 TD passes – which was 11 more than Ryan. He connected on a school-record 65 percent of his passes, and threw for 3,016 yards.

Coen's game is quite similar to Ryan's – minus the running, of course – in that he can consistently beat you with both his arm and his brains. Both are very knowledgeable and extremely well-coached quarterbacks who limit their mistakes and capitalize on the mistakes.

Both play for two of the elite teams in the country. The major difference, of course, is that Ryan plays for one of the elite teams in the Football Bowl Subdivision, while Coen plays for the No. 2 rated team in the Football Championship Subdivision.

But according to Ryan, you can throw all that out the window.

"He's a great player, and I'm sure he would do well at whatever program [FBS or FCS] he was at," he said.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosenswa@student.umass.edu

Big venue a change of pace for UMass

COEN from page 10

2 spot in several UMass career-passing lists, and is on track to pass Todd Bankhead (who holds most of the career passing records) and become the top quarterback in UMass history by the end of his career.

However, Coen can only wonder if his career would be different, for better or worse, had he become an Eagle.

Coen worked out in camp for a time with both Ryan and backup quarterback Chris Crane, so he has stood side-by-side with the current Eagles and gotten a glimpse of what it's like.

Yet Coen said he wouldn't change anything about his journey through the collegiate football world. Despite that sentiment, he said it would still be nice to prove to BC that they shouldn't have passed over him.

"That definitely stays in the back of your mind," Coen said of the chance to upset the Eagles. "It's not something we talk about much, but it's definitely fuel for the fire when you go up there and play in that atmosphere."

That atmosphere is BC's Alumni Stadium, which holds 44,500 people. The Minutemen have played in large stadiums before (Montana and Chattanooga, Tenn., last year, and BC in 2004), but the rarity of playing in those venues means it takes some adjusting every time.

"It's something that we're not used to as much," Coen said. "We've played in those types of venues before, but we don't practice in a big stadium. We don't play in that atmosphere every week so we'll get used to it over the first few drives of the game."

Coen was red-shirted in 2004 and did not play in the loss to BC, so this is his first chance to play in the stadium he once hoped to play in every week.

As far as Ryan is concerned, Coen said he has great respect for the Eagles' quarterback.

"I hope he plays well, I just hope we play better."

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu

Opportunity at hand for Minutemen

FOOTBALL from page 10

"It's too bad we're getting out of the I-AA right now, because I think we're playing really well going back into the non-league play," Brown said. "But the schedule's the schedule, and we're going to take it one at a time."

The Eagles – ranked 12th by the Associated Press and 11th by USA Today – are the second-highest ranked Football Bowl Subdivision team UMass has ever played – the Marvon and White lost to No. 7 Kansas State, 38-7 in 2003.

On top of that, Boston College has won 14 straight games at home.

"They're good in all three phases of the game," Brown said. "It'll be a great challenge for us. We've just got to get ready to play like we always do and focus on excellent preparation during the practice week and get ready to go."

The game will mark the eighth time in the last nine seasons that UMass will face an FBS team, a trend that began in 1988 – a 44-17 loss to Ball State – and ran through last season's 21-20 defeat at the hands of Navy. The Midshipmen were the only team to knock off UMass in 2006 until Appalachian State did so in the NCAA title game.

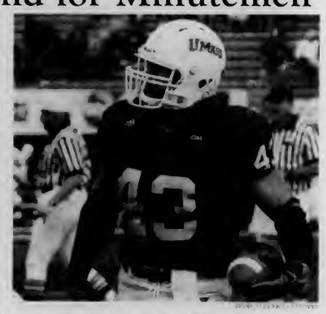
Since the split of Division I football into I-A and I-AA (now Championship Subdivision and Bowl Subdivision), the Minutemen and Eagles have played six times. UMass won the first game during that span, 27-0, at home in 1978 – the first year of the split – but has lost every decision since then, including a 29-7 loss in 2004. UMass is 8-18 all-time against FBS opponents.

If the Minutemen are going to pull any kind of upset on their cross-state rivals, they will have to find a way to shut down the Heisman Trophy candidate, quarterback Matt Ryan.

The senior has thrown for 1,341 yards this season with 10 touchdowns and five interceptions, along with a 61.9 completion percentage. Although the UMass defense has impressed thus far, shutting down high-power passing games like Sean Schaefer and Towson, as well as power-running games like Maine and running back Jhamal Fluellen, Ryan and the Eagles are obviously on a different level.

"We have a style that we play, and we're going to continue to play it," Brown said of defending against Ryan. "We're going to mix coverages and show him some pressure. We're going to do everything we can to try to get him off his rhythm."

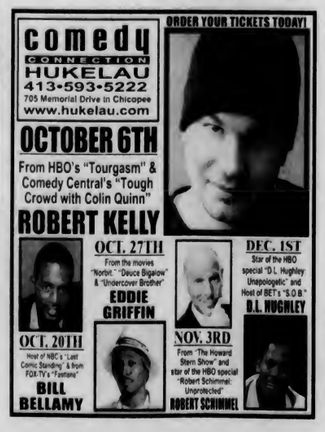
Coen's numbers this season are comparable to Ryan's – 814 yards, nine touchdowns, four picks and a 68.4 completion percentage. And it may not be the Heisman, but Coen is a candidate for the Walter Payton award (given to the top offensive player in FCS). The red-shirt junior said he's excited to play against Ryan and Boston College, but is not concerned about trying to keep up with the BC signal-caller and getting caught in a shootout.



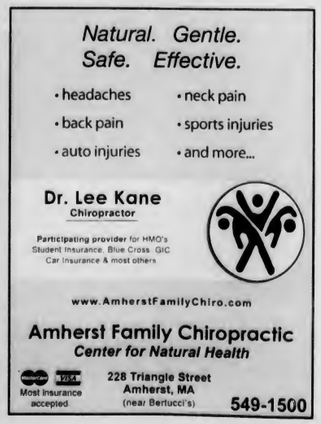
"He's a Heisman Trophy candidate; I'm not worried about that," Coen said. "He's a great player; I have a lot of respect for him."

Starting tight end Brad Listorti, who has missed every game this season with a back injury, will not play Saturday against the Eagles. Brown says the senior's condition is improving and he expects Listorti to return to the field relatively soon.

"He's coming along," Brown said. "We're expecting him back soon. He's had no setbacks, so we expect him to be ready to go coming up after the bye [home against Villanova]."



Coen is also fighting an injury. Despite hurting his left knee on a sack-strip against Towson (he missed one series), Coen was nearly perfect against Maine and appears close to 100 percent.



Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu

Senior captain linebacker Jason Hatchell and the UMass defense will need to put plenty of pressure on BC quarterback Matt Ryan this Saturday.

Brown no match for UMass

FIELD HOCKEY from page 10

ately, the referees decided there was no foul on the play. Orlando came out of the game but returned later in the half.

"[She's] very aggressive and she always wants the ball," UMass coach Justine Sowry said about Orlando's style of play. "She's a tough character and we knew she'd be back on the field at some point."

Two minutes later, the Minutewomen were attacking in the Brown zone when a defender lost her footing due to the slick field and ended up losing a shoe on the play.

In that same attack, the Maroon and White were able to draw four consecutive penalty corner, a very rare occurrence.

On the first corner, UMass ran another double slip. Cher King got the shot off but couldn't score and UMass was awarded another opportunity for a corner.

The second time, the team only ran a single slip and Bourazeris tried her hand at scoring, but could not convert and the Minutewomen got another opportunity.

The third try was a simple stop and shoot designed for King, who tried again but still could not convert and UMass got its final chance to score. The ball was put in play but senior Kara Murphy had a hard time corralling it and the play was whistled dead, thus ending the scoring threat for UMass.

Kelly made her presence known throughout the game. She was all over the field and nearly scored in the first half. The Bears took a penalty corner, which was stopped by Makaela Potts before it developed. Potts then fired a long pass downfield to an open Kelly.

She brought the ball down the near sideline and took it right onto the circle. She lifted a shot over the falling goalie but just missed the goal, putting it wide past the far post. That breakaway was just one of many times that Kelly was attacking or moving through the offensive half of the field.

"I'm trying to work on my forward movement more now because before I was just kind of lingering around," Kelly said. "And now I'm trying to make more of a presence on the field."

Justin McGrail can be reached at jwmcgrai@student.umass.edu

Freshman forward Katie Kelly brings the ball up the field yesterday at Garber Field. She led the team with two shots on goal in the victory, which evened the Minutewomen's record at 5-5.

Minutewomen sweep doubles matches

TENNIS from page 10

Dixon said Pozar gave LoRusso shots that were too easy and had to challenge her more.

"I told her that she could not keep it in LoRusso's strike zone," Dixon said.

Pozar adjusted her service, tossing the ball higher and wider, to keep her serve out of the middle.

Throughout the third set, Pozar noticed a more fatigued LoRusso, making more unforced errors than she did the previous two sets. LoRusso tried to catch her breath and took a longer time to rest between points.

"I think fitness was what made the difference because she couldn't really do anything more," Pozar said. "I'm happy that I won like this, struggling, because it had to take something else."

It was the second time that afternoon where LoRusso was on the losing end against Pozar. She teamed with sophomore Allison Campitiello in a doubles match against Pozar and freshman Candynce Boney, only to be routed, 8-1.

Boney and Pozar were off to a hot start and never looked back.

"I think we just started off quickly and didn't let them come back," Pozar said.

Boney found success on her own as well, defeating senior Jessica Porter in the No. 3 singles match 6-1, 6-2. It was her first win since the Cissy Leary Invitational, where she won her only match of the tournament in the consolation round.

"I'm excited because it's always good to get the first one," Boney said.

UMass thumped UConn for the remaining doubles matches.

Freshmen Kaitlyn Carpenter and Tanisha Hodgson beat senior Jessica Porter and junior BreAnn Cheung, 8-2, while junior Laura Murillo and sophomore Maude Lecluyse beat UConn freshmen Emily Herb and Katie Moritz, 8-5.

The Minutewomen started a young singles team against the Huskies with freshmen slotted in seeds two through four. While the freshmen went 1-2 against UConn, they gained much experience facing a team that beat them, 4-3, in 2006.

Carpenter fought to stay competitive, but lost against BreAnn Cheung in two sets, 6-2, 6-4.

The UMass singles' team suffered two tough losses in the No. 5 and 6 spots.

UM sophomore Maude Lecluyse lost to Campitiello in two sets, 6-4, 6-4 and Murello lost another close match to freshman Megan Doran, 6-2, 7-5.

The Minutewomen will have their last tournament of the fall season when they compete at the Big Green Invitational from Oct. 26-28.

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@student.umass.edu

As a part of the Minutewomen's sweep of doubles play, sophomore Maude Lecluyse won her match at number three doubles.

Simmons aids scorers from defensive zone

SOCCER from page 10

"If you're a good team player, it doesn't matter [to you]," UMass coach Sam Koch said. "If all you care about is your individual stats, then it can be a problem. But how many people want to get credit for something they didn't do? That's a problem we don't want on our team. They're not the guys who are going to win us a championship."

Goalie on offense

Though it's nearly impossible for a goalkeeper to score a goal – and most coaches would agree, inadvisable – red-shirt junior Zack Simmons does what he can for his teammates on the outside of the field out of his position in front of the net.

"It's certainly helps – making a big save is a huge boost to the team and letting in a soft goal is a big downer. So his play only makes the team better," Koch said.

Simmons made several key saves in the first few minutes to prevent the Minutemen from getting behind early against an aggressive Northeastern squad.

"I hope it lifts the guys up," Simmons said when asked about the effect of his early saves on the team's momentum after the game. "I prefer not to have any work, then I don't have to do anything. When the guys are sleeping, I try to get us lifted up."

No Eagles for UM

The team plays many of UMass's traditional regional rivals during non-conference play every year. This season the Maroon and White scheduled New England rivals Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont, as well as in-state foes Boston University, Harvard and Northeastern.

One Massachusetts school not on the list that UMass plays in many other sports is Boston College. When you consider that Koch was an assistant with the Eagles from 1980-82, it seems like BC should be a perennial staple on the Minutemen's schedule.

But scheduling teams for non-conference play is simply not that easy, according to Koch.

"Their schedule and our schedule, we just can't seem to find an opening," he said. "[BC] has a lot of people trying to get on its schedule."

The Eagles (5-1-0, 2-0-0 ACC) are ranked No. 21 in this week's NSCAA poll. The team also defeated BU 1-0 and Maine 8-0 earlier in the year for purpose of comparison. The Alumni game schedule for this Sunday was moved to Sunday, Oct. 28. It will take place the day after the Minutemen's match against Rhode Island … The Minutemen rank fifth in the Atlantic 10 with a goals-against average of 1.12.

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu.

Sophomore forward Bryan Hogan was originally credited with UM's second goal on Saturday before it was given to Mike DeSantis.

SEP 27 2007

Conference play set to begin

Teams look to qualify for A-10 tournament at season's end

By Adam Miller
Collegian Correspondent

With non-conference play not a distant memory, Atlantic 10 women's soccer action begins this Friday. Here is a summary of how the 14 teams fared during the first month of the season and what they can expect from the rest of the conference. The following teams are ordered according to the A-10 Preseason Coaches' Poll.

Saint Louis (3-3-0)

The 2006 champions and favorites to win the A-10 has not had the same success as last season. Before the conference schedule begins, Saint Louis is already one loss away from losing as many matches as it did all season last year.

The Billikens managed to score only eight goals while giving up 10. They won the Toys-for-Tots Tournament after beating Southeast Missouri on Sept. 14 and Army on Sept. 16. Saint Louis opens up play Friday against La Salle.

Charlotte (5-3-0)

The No. 2 team in the coaches' poll appears to be meeting expectations early in the season.

Charlotte freshman forward Whitney Weinraub is already taking a key role in the 49ers' playoff chances by leading the team with four goals and eight points.

The team went 8-1 in conference play last season and has a smooth schedule ahead facing five lower ranked teams from the pre-season poll.

The 49ers have plenty of momentum going into Pittsburgh to play Duquesne on Friday after a three-game winning streak to close off their non-conference schedule.

Dayton (7-2-0, 1-0-0)

Dayton currently has the most non-conference wins in the A-10.

Part of its success has to do with its balanced attack on offense. The Flyers have 13 players who have scored at least one goal this season. Sophomore forward Mandi Back leads the way with five goals.

Senior goalkeeper Niki Reed owns a goals-against average of 0.77 with total 28 saves. Reed has shut out opponents in five of the team's seven wins. The Flyers have outscored their opponents, 21-7.

Dayton has also won three overtime games against Loyola Marymount, (1-0), Minnesota, (3-2) and Iowa State, (2-1).

The Flyers took advantage of an early conference match when they shut out Xavier, 4-0. They open play Friday at Temple.

Rhode Island (5-2-1)

Rhode Island had the most successful home-stand against non-conference opponents. The Rams have outscored their opponents, 12-1, in home games, leading to a 3-0-1 record.

Their success on the road is another story.

URI has a 2-2 away record and has been outscored, 6-9. The Rams have a tough conference schedule ahead of them with a four-game stretch at Xavier, Dayton, Massachusetts and a non-conference game against Brown.

The team possesses several offensive threats in senior forward Deb Nelson, freshman forward Jessica Babice and junior midfielder Dora Larusdottir who have combined for 34 points.

Last season the team tied Saint Louis for the second best record in conference at 7-2.

Massachusetts (5-0-1)

Massachusetts is currently the only team in the A-10 to go undefeated in non-conference play. The Minutewomen took advantage of a schedule laden with almost entirely home games.

However, the conference schedule does not look nearly as friendly, as the team plays only two away games against teams below .500. Its toughest challenge looks to be early on as the Maroon and White faces Dayton on Oct. 5 and goes 12 days between its home game against Duquesne (Sept. 30) and Rhode Island (Oct. 11).

Still, UMass should challenge for the conference, especially with senior forward Britt Canfield. She is second on the team with three goals and leads the Minutewomen with six assists. The team also has allowed only three goals, the lowest out of the A-10.

Last year yielded similar results with a 6-2 non-conference record, but ended with a 5-4 record in the A-10.

Fordham (3-2-1)

With the exception of Fordham junior forward Katie Sanchez, the team has struggled to put points on the board.

They have been competitive throughout every game, losing to Army and Hofstra by one goal. The defense has allowed opponents to put 24 shots on goal out of 55 attempts this season.

La Salle (5-3-0)

La Salle become a serious threat in the conference this year after attaining a 6-2-1 record in A-10 play last season.

The Explorers feature senior forward Kristin Hextall, who broke the record in the first week of the season for fastest goal scored with 37 seconds, then tied her own record last week.

She has taken control of the offense by shooting early and often, recording seven goals off of 31 shots. La Salle also has another reliable scorer in sophomore forward Traci DePasquale, who has tallied five goals.

While the Explorers have a potent offense available for the conference schedule, they have not found much consistency this month. They have not had a winning streak for nearly a month after beating Wagner, 5-0, on August 31 and Monmouth, 4-0, on Sept. 2

Xavier (1-8-0, 0-1-0)

2007 is already shaping up to be a frustrating year for Xavier.

It has scheduled eight of its nine games away from home and has not yielded positive results. The Musketeers still might be looking forward to their conference schedule as they play in Cincinnati five times this season.

The early part of their schedule has them playing another struggling team in Saint Joseph's on Sunday at home.

The Musketeers took a dive compared to last year, when they went 5-5 in non-conference action, only to fail to live up to conference hopes, going 2-5-2.

Richmond (1-6-1)

This season has been one of frustration for Richmond after their non-conference record.

The Spiders have scored four goals this season. Their season has entailed being shutout in five of their six games and a lot of missed opportunities.

Richmond is shooting three percent of its 120 shots so far. Their defense has not helped the team either, allowing 12 goals in eight games.

The Spiders' first A-10 game is against Fordham on Friday before coming home for three straight home games against La Salle, St. Bonaventure and Duquesne.

George Washington (5-2-0)

As far as George Washington is concerned, its record does not necessarily reflect its play.

Regardless of their winning record, the Colonials relied mostly on defense to win games. They are the only winning team to score as many goals as they have allowed (7), while no player has more than four points.

Although the team has struggled offensively, it is the defense that has kept GW competitive in most games, thanks to the help of redshirt junior goalkeeper Arnie Kern. She has recorded 40 saves for the Colonials.

While they have had success thus far in the non-conference, these results are similar to last year when the Colonials went 7-3 in non-conference play before having a woeful 2-7 conference record.

Saint Joseph's (2-6-0)

Six of Saint Joseph's first eight games were on the road. The Hawks have lost all six of those games and four of those were shutouts. Their latest struggles include a five game losing streak where they were outscored, 3-17.

Saint Joseph's has struggled offensively putting up five goals all season.

If the Hawks are to succeed in conference, they will rely on their goalie, sophomore Megan Bastianelli, who has 68 saves on the season.

In 2006, their conference record (4-5) picked up after a disappointing non-conference season, but still did not finish over .500.

The Hawks begin their conference schedule against UMass at home on Friday.

Duquesne (3-3-0)

A 0-2 road record suggests that Duquesne will be in for a little bit of trouble when they go into conference play Sunday.

The Dukes start off their conference schedule with a bit of a rude welcoming, playing three of their first four games on the road against Massachusetts (Sunday), George Washington (Friday) and Richmond (Sept. 7).

The latest problem for Duquesne is its foul trouble. It has been whistled for 68 fouls, 18 more than its opponents.

Temple (4-2-2)

After a 1-8 conference record in 2006, Temple is putting its conference hopes on two juniors, midfielder Jenna Rankin and forward Wendy Halina.

The Owls have been shut out in half of their non-conference games but twice have defended well enough to settle for a tie.

Rankin and Halina both have put up eight points on three goals and two assists. The team's first game will be against Dayton on Friday.

St. Bonaventure (3-4-1)

In the case of St. Bonaventure, any improvement is good, even if the team still struggles to win. The Bonnies improved their non-conference record from last year's 1-7-1 record by two wins.

The schedule tests a young St. Bonaventure team that consists of eight freshmen right away with three straight-away games from Sunday until Oct. 7, when they play former A-10 champion Saint Louis, Richmond and George Washington.

The Bonnies are having trouble this season making shots. Freshmen forwards Courtney Bosse and Anna Cunningham, in particular, have been struggling as they have a combined five goals on 44 shots.

Adam Miller can be reached at ajmill@student.umass.edu.

Senior forward Liane Schoenstein and the Fordham Rams own a 3-3-1 record heading into conference play. The team opens its A-10 season on Friday against Richmond.

Leading the A-10 in nearly every offensive category, senior forward Kristin Hextall helped LaSalle to a 5-3 record in non-conference play.

THE FINE ARTS CENTER
LET'S GO GLOBE HOPPING!
CENTER SERIES 07-08 SEASON

Kassys: Kommer (Grief)
Thursday, September 27 and Friday, September 28, 7:30 pm, Bowker Auditorium
How can something be deeply, profoundly sad yet hilarious at the same time? Somehow Dutch theatre company Kassys has created a performance which is just that in this sly and surreal work, combining film and live performance in equal measure. Post-performance Talk-Back with the cast immediately following both performances.

Junior Pope Frazier Advocate

Noche Flamenca & Soledad Barrio
Wednesday, October 3, 7:30 pm, Concert Hall
Experience the fire and passion of this moving and profound art form. The noble, elegant mysteries of flamenco dance, song and music offer a thrilling ride for audiences of all ages.
Funded in part by the National Dance Project of the New England Foundation for the Arts. Pre-performance Talk Back with Artistic Director Martin Santangelo at 6:30pm.

GLOBAL GOURMET ~ Indulge your taste buds with a Spanish-inspired dinner prior to the show at the University Club. All for the prix fixe of $25. For reservations call the box office at 545-2511.

Flamenco, a film by Carlos Saura
Saura's tribute to the beauty and diversity of Spain's national dance.
Sunday, September 30, 5pm, Herter Hall, Free

Bank of America EL PLANETA

Jose Limón Dance Company
Friday, October 12, 8pm, Concert Hall
Hailed as "one of the world's great dance companies," the Jose Limón Dance Company is the keeper of one of the truly great American artistic legacies of the 20th century. The Village Voice writes, "For drama, virtuosity, and grace, there's no finer company."
This performance is made possible by the National Endowment for the Arts American Masterpiece: Dance initiative, administered by the New England Foundation for the Arts.

GLOBAL GOURMET ~ For this special pre-show dinner at the University Club we travel to Mexico for inspiration. All for the prix fixe of $25. For reservations call the box office at 545-2511.

NEA AMERICAN MASTERPIECES
Bank of America EL PLANETA WFCR 88.5

UMass Amherst FINE ARTS CENTER
For tickets call or go online to www.fineartscenter.com!

Attention First-Year Students:
TIME'S ALMOST UP!
Have you completed MyStudentBody? It's easy, interesting ... and required for all first-year students. To avoid a registration hold, you must take and pass the course no later than Monday, October 1st. For instructions, go to:
www.umass.edu/uhs/cadap/msb/
Center for Alcohol and other Drug Abuse Prevention

FOUR Seasons
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS
OPEN EVERY DAY UNTIL 11PM!

Beer

Budweiser & Bud Light 24 pk btl	$16.99*
Busch & Busch Light 30 pk cans	$13.99*
Keystone Light 30 pk cans	$12.99*
Bass Ale 12 pk btl	$11.99*
Magic Hat 12 pk btl	$11.99*
Pacifico 12 pk btl	$11.99*
Sierra Nevada Pale Ale 12 pk btl	$11.99*
Miller Chill 12 pk btl	$10.99*
Killians Irish Red 12 pk btl	$9.99*
Narragansett 20 pk btl	$8.99*
Landshark Lager 6 pk btl	$6.69*
Saranac Pomegranate Wheat 6 pk btl	$4.99*

*all beer prices plus deposit

WINE SALE 10% OFF 6 BOTTLES* OF WINE EVERYDAY!! MIX & MATCH
Regular priced 750 ml bottles of imported wines

Liquor

Hennessey Cognac VS 750 ml	$28.99
Bombay Sapphire Gin 1.0 liter	$26.99
Grey Goose Vodka 750 ml	$26.99
Tanqueray Gin 1.0 liter	$25.99
Sailor Jerry Rum 1.75 liter	$22.99
Crown Royal Canadian Whiskey 750 ml	$22.99

Jameson Irish Whiskey 750 ml	$21.99
Jim Beam Black Bourbon 750 ml	$19.99
Jose Cuervo Flavors 750 ml	$18.99
Stolichnaya Vodka 80° 750 ml	$18.99
Jagermeister 750 ml	$16.99
Sobieski Polish Vodka 1.75 liter	$16.99
Denaka Vodka 1.75 liter	$14.99
Ron Rico Vanilla Rum 1.75 liter	$11.99
Myer's Platinum Rum 750 ml	$8.99
Early Times Bourbon 750 ml	$8.99

PROMOS
Thursday Sept 13th
Narragansett Tasting 6-8 p.m.
Friday Sept 14th
Landshark Lager 5-7 p.m.
& BacardiMojito

FOUR SEASONS 584-8174
Sun. 9/16 - 9/24
333 Russell St., Rte. 9, Hadley, MA
584-8174 • Mon.-Sat. 9AM-11PM • Sun. Noon-11PM

UNION ENTERTAINMENT GROUP PRESENTS
JOSH BLUE
SEASON 4 WINNER OF "LAST COMIC STANDING"
FRI. OCT. 5 • 8 PM
DOORS OPEN 7:00 PM
CALVIN THEATER AND RESTAURANT
10 KING ST. • NORTHAMPTON, MA
TO PURCHASE TICKETS OR FOR MORE INFO VISIT OUR WEBSITE OR CALL:
WWW.IHEG.COM or 413-586-8686

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

		2				5
	9	1	5
			1	8				7
					5	4		6
3	6						9	8
4		8	6
9				6	1
					3	2	7
	3					9

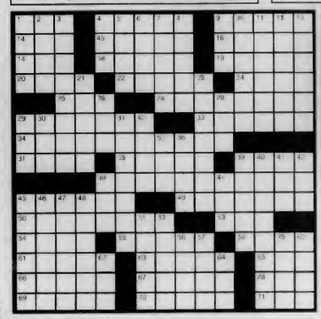
Quote of the Day

"Opportunity is missed by most people because it is dressed in overalls and looks like work."

-Thomas A. Edison

Ecology By Jen Fill

Last Ditch Effort By John Kroes



Labrat By Richard Martelly

ACROSS
1 Perp's captor
4 Galoshes
9 Tex-Mex order
14 A. Godfrey's instrument
15 Part of WASP
18 Puccini work
17 Yow, it's cold!
18 Action site
19 Performs an electrician's job
20 Umpire's signal
22 Catch a whiff of 24 Morays and congers
25 Braggart's excess
27 Traveler's tote
29 New enlistee
33 Staggered
34 Crossed
37 H.S. jr.'s exam
38 Designer Ashley
39 Temperate
43 Niagara's outflow
45 Easily attached accessory
49 Say again
50 Datebook
53 Bo Derek's number
54 Spheres
55 Headliners
58 Sort through
61 Create text
63 Appearances
65 Muhammad ___
66 Solitary one
67 Sound component
68 ___ compos mentis
69 Cursed
70 Toboggans
71 007 6.g

DOWN
1 Wrigley team
2 Gumbo ingredient
3 Track bet
4 Be prepared: grp.
5 Rowboat requirement
6 Yoked pair
7 Tennille and Braxton
8 Military muddle
9 Pull behind
10 For each one
11 Breakfast food
12 Threat ender
13 Mouthed off
21 Well-plumed bird
23 Biting insect
26 " Town"
28 Tycoon Turner
29 Rough tear
30 USNA grad
31 Aleutians or Grenadines
32 Shipbuilding wood
35 Dramatic signal
36 "Star Trek: TNG" character
39 Stable females
40 Teheran populace
41 Sot's name
42 John's last name?
43 Chantey of "The Wolf Man"
44 Hano holiday
45 Nasty looks
46 Convinced
47 Mony Dick, maybe?
48 Annoy
51 Book of maps
52 Duly or Walsh
56 Took the bus
57 Low wooden platform
59 Dud
60 Minuscule
62 Before, in poetry
64 Distress signal

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

GRADUATE LOUNGE
Not Just For Grads
Open To All 21 + Serving Beer & Wine
CAMPUS CENTER CONCOURSE
UNION BILLIARDS
Pool, Games & More
Open To All Ages
Great For Functions
DOWNSTAIRS STUDENT UNION
BOTH OPEN MON-FRI 11-9
CALL 545-2045 FOR INFO

Submit your comics!
collegianecomics@yahoo.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Ladies, the "cuteness" of those kicks is not worth Band-Aids, blisters and pain.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Keep your tongue in your mouth when you walk around campus, you inhebrated toad.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Trust the legume. It is a protein, a carbohydrate and your friend.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Thursday means nothing without Grey's Anatomy. We miss you, McDreamy.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
You are a pole vaulter bounding over high hurdles and wearing short shorts.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Attempt to fly using a party pizza box and a hand-held fan. Wear a helmet.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Hey, good looking, didn't I see you and your loindoth in the movie 300 last night?

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
A man wandering around planting seeds? Johnny Appleseed, you're creepy!

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Give something back to the community by returning the street sign you stole.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Going back to your ex over and over again is justifiable because its basically recycling.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Take it easy tonight; your superpowers will be needed tommorow.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Milk does a body good but nobody wants a silly white moustache.

Chicago Pizzaria
Free Delivery!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS - WRAPS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY SIZE PIZZA NOW AVAILABLE!
Now Hiring
Counter/Cashiers and Drivers
HOURS
Sun-Wed: 3pm-2am
Thurs-Sat: 3pm-3am
Order For DELIVERY or PICK-UP
(413) 549-6073
150 Fearing Street
Next to Patterson Dorm
Amherst, MA 01002

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Activities

Montreal weekend from $99.00. Complete, motel, transportation and more. Montreal express.net 781-979-9001. Lowest Prices on campus.

Apartment for Rent

4 Bedroom Townhouse, Amherst, AC, on bus route. $1799/month. All utilities included. Contact: caseofme@gmail.com

Employment

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520. Ext. 162

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Employment

Work at home part-time flagging inappropriate videos on blabbermash.com. Contact us through site.

Business Student
For data entry and answering phones. Must have car 413-210-5295

CAFE HELP PART-TIME nights and weekends must be fast, accurate, efficient and friendly. Apply in person at the woodstar cafe. 60 Masonic St. Northampton.

Recreation Leader - After School Program. The Town of Amherst seeks Recreation Leaders for its Prime Time After School Program operated by the Leisure Services and Supplemental Education Department (LSSE). Camp counseling, other experiences working with school age children, and/or related course-work in Elementary Education preferred. $8.60 to $9.03 hr; 5-15 hrs per week. Applications available from Human Resources Dept., 4 Boltwood Walk, Amherst or LSSE, 70 Boltwood Walk, Amherst or call S. Lecuivre @ 259-3191. Equal Employment Opportunity/ Affermative Action Employer.

Salons & Spas

Heated stone massage with shiatsu!
www.shearblissamherst.com 413-253-2322

HOLISTIC SALON AND SPA Awesome upscale 7 point haircuts for male and female. www.shearblissAmherst.com 413-253-2322

Services

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org.

Concerned About Your Eating? Do you eat too little? Eat too much? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH. providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling & rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential. Affordable. Safe. 413-548-9992 27 Pray Street, Amherst www.tapestryhealth.org

Travel

"#1 Spring Break Website! 4 & 7 night trips. Low prices guaranteed. Group discounts for 8+. Book 20 people, get 3 free trips! Campus reps needed. www.StudentCity.com or 800-293-1445

Work From Your Dorm Need additional money? full/pr supported by an 8 trillion dollar industry - please visit www.WantYourOwn.biz or www.8Trillion.com - all information is inside the web site and do view extra tab on the booking engine 413 695 5973 Leighton Allenby

Spring Break 2008 Sell Trips, Earn Cash and Go Free. Call for group discounts. Best Deals. Guaranteed! Info/Reservations 800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

Wanted

EGG DONORS NEEDED

Wanted

$15,000 (PLUS ALL EXPENSES) We are seeking women who are attractive, under the age of 29, SAT 1300+ (math+verbal), physically fit and maintaining a healthy lifestyle. If you have a desire to help an infertile family and would like more information please contact us. Email darlene@aperfectmatch.com www.aperfectmatch.com 1-800-264-8828

EGG DONORS WANTED. Help make a couple's dream of becoming parents come true by becoming an egg donor. Very generous compensation and expenses paid. Must be a non-smoking female between the ages of 21 and 32. For more information, please visit our website at www.robertnicholsesq.com or contact Julie at 781-551-0600.

SEP 27 2007

SEP 28 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Battle of the Commonwealth

Coen seeks validation against Eagles

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

He's a Heisman Trophy candidate – the quarterback for a Boston College football team on the verge of cracking the Top 10, and what some people are calling a future first-round draft pick in the National Football League.

Matt Ryan?

Well, yes, but in high school, Liam Coen wanted that to be his future. Playing football for his father, Tim, at La Salle Academy in Rhode Island, the Newport native had set his goals on playing quarterback for the Eagles.

"When I was in high school [BC] was where I wanted to go," Coen said on the team's Media Day when its schedule was brought up. "It didn't work out that way, but I'm in a great position now."

Coen got as far as training camp before the coaches passed on him. Now, he's writing his own story with the Massachusetts football team.

"[BC] was a spot I was looking at, and they were looking at me for a while," Coen said. "But I ended up coming here, and that was a great thing for me. It's good for me to be able to go back there and play them."

Coen's decision to come to UMass has certainly worked out for him. In 2005, Coen spelled a struggling Tim Day behind center in a 17-14 loss to Colgate, and has been the Minutemen's leading man ever since.

Since that time, Coen has begun rewriting the UMass record books. He entered the season third all-time in passing yards and has since passed Dave Palazzi for second with 6,005 yards, and has one more season to play after the 2007 campaign.

Coen has moved into the No.

See COEN on page 6

Premier QBs share mutual respect on field

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

By the time his career is over, Liam Coen will literally own almost every Massachusetts passing record. He has a Division I-AA national championship appearance to his credit, and will likely be known as the best quarterback in school history.

But in the eyes of NFL scouts and general college football fanatics, he won't even be the best quarterback on the field this Saturday in Chestnut Hill. That honor belongs to Boston College signal-caller Matt Ryan.

"He's probably the best around right now," Coen said.

Tops in the nation may be a bit of a stretch, but he's certainly close to it if you listen to ESPN NFL Draft expert Mel Kiper, Jr. Kiper rates just two senior quarterbacks ahead of Ryan – Louisville's Brian Brohm and Kentucky's Andre' Woodson – and believes that BC's field general is better than the more well-known John David Booty of Southern California.

UMass coach Don Brown can see why Kiper thinks so highly of him.

"He makes every throw," Brown said. "He can throw the short ball; he can throw the vertical game. He drives every ball with confidence. He's a complete guy and he's going to be a first round draft pick."

Ryan is an imposing presence on the gridiron, with both his size (6-foot-5, 218-pounds) and terrific skills. He considers himself a classic pocket passer, but has the ability to beat you in other ways – rushing for 10 touchdowns in his career with the Eagles.

But where Ryan really beats you is with his aerial attack, throwing 35 touchdown passes in his career. He's enjoyed a big start to the 2007 season – throwing 10 touchdowns in just four games, while completing 112-of-181 passes (61.9 percent) for 1,341 yards.

"I just try to stay in the pocket and try to get the ball out to guys around

See QUARTERBACKS on page 6

True test awaits Minutemen as undefeated rivals square off

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

For the first time since 2004, the two biggest college football teams in Massachusetts will square off Saturday, as the Massachusetts football team challenges Boston College at Alumni Stadium in Chestnut Hill.

UMass (4-0, 2-0 Colonial Athletic Association) enters the game riding its best start since 1986. The Minutemen downed Patriot Leaguers Holy Cross and Colgate before routing CAA rivals Towson and Maine.

The Minutemen – ranked No. 2 in the Football Championship Subdivision – struggled out of the gate against the Crusaders and Raiders, but have since cleaned up their game just in time for their biggest challenge of the season. Following the contest with BC (4-0, 3-0 Atlantic Coast Conference), the Minutemen hold their bye week the following Saturday before returning to CAA action for the remainder of the regular season.

UMass coach Don Brown expressed how pleased he was with his team's performance after the win at Maine – the closest thing to a complete victory the Minutemen have had this year. Unlike the wins over Holy Cross, Colgate and Towson, there were no holes in the Minutemen's game Saturday. They jumped ahead (very) early and kept the Black Bears down, as Brown had expected.

See FOOTBALL on page 6

UMass and BC's long and storied history ... page 6

Maroon and White take down Huskies

By Adam Miller
Collegian Correspondent

A 90-degree heat wave was the difference for the Massachusetts tennis team yesterday as it outlasted Connecticut, 4-3.

The No. 1 singles' match featured a rematch between UMass senior Masha Pozar and UConn sophomore Kelley LoRusso, who lost to Pozar in three sets, 6-4, 4-6, 6-0.

Last season, Pozar easily beat LoRusso, 6-2, 6-0. But according to UMass coach Judy Dixon, LoRusso was better prepared this time around and challenged many of Pozar's shots.

"[She] comes out this year and is firing away," Dixon said.

The match went for an hour and 50 minutes, as Pozar and LoRusso were at a dead lock going into the third set. Before Pozar stepped back onto the court, Dixon gave some advice that helped her give the Minutewomen the edge.

Throughout the first two sets,

See TENNIS on page 7

Junior Masha Pozar outlasted her opponent, winning the first singles match in three sets. Pozar also won her match at number one doubles.

UM slides past Brown

Penalty corners lift Sowry and Co. to victory

By Justin McGrail
Collegian Staff

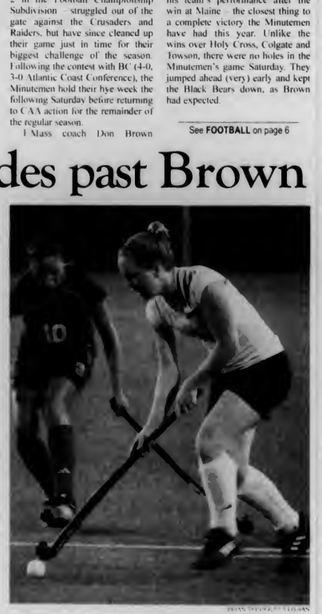
Under a full moon at Garber Field, the Massachusetts field hockey team (5-5) left with a 2-1 victory over Brown (0-8) on Wednesday, thanks to forward Lauren Gillespie's game-winning goal off a perfectly executed penalty corner.

This was Gillespie's second goal of the season and both goals came in back-to-back games. The junior, who was last year's team leader in goals, is starting to be the scorer of old. She attributed her slow start to lower back problems that began in the spring, but felt that she is slowly trying to get back into the flow of the game.

Gillespie described the goal as a double slip, meaning that when the ball gets put in play, two players fake the shot and a third actually shoots the ball. This particular play was designed for Jaime Bourazeris.

She rocketed a shot at Brown goalkeeper Lauren Kessler and Gillespie was there to put the deflection into the back of the cage. When asked about the play, she said that the play was designed for her to be on the weak side after the ball is shot.

The team will start conference play on Sunday when it heads to Albany to take on the Great Danes.



UMass opened up the scoring when Katie Kelly brought the ball into the circle and left it for Erin Parker, who dribbled through traffic and shot it into the top right corner. It was Parker's second goal of the year and Kelly's first assist of her career. The Minutewomen carried that lead into halftime.

UMass	2
Brown	1

Brown came out with an aggressive attack in the second half. The Bears were able to draw a penalty corner and they did not let it go to waste. Jackie Connard passed the ball to the top of the circle where it was stopped by Sara Eaton and Victoria Sacco shot a laser past the diving UMass goalkeeper, sophomore Sarah Williams, for the game-tying goal.

Perhaps, the full moon attributed to the strange happenings on the field. First, only a minute into the second half, Katelyn Orlando had a clean breakaway on goal, but Kessler came out of the net and barreled into Orlando. Almost immedi-

See FIELD HOCKEY on page 7

Junior forward Erin Parker fights for position in last night's 2-1 victory over Brown. Parker scored the Minutewomen's first goal.

Credit no big deal for Hogan

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

It can be a frustrating feeling thinking you've scored a goal, then having the accomplishment taken away from you. That very situation occurred during the Massachusetts men's soccer team's match against Northeastern on Saturday.

Sophomore forward Bryan Hogan originally received credit for the Minutemen's second goal. Neither the officials nor the scorer could determine which UMass player touched the ball last before it hit the back of the net.

UMass Soccer

It would have been Hogan's second score of the game and would have given him sole possession of first place on the team's scoring list. Instead, the goal was credited to Mike DeSantis.

Even with being on a team where goals have been few and far between, Hogan easily dismissed the idea that he was unfairly stripped of the credit.

"I tried to give it to my teammate, but they gave it to me," Hogan said after Saturday's game with a laugh. "I didn't score it, so that's what it was supposed to be. I was trying to tell the referee."

Even with the single goal, Hogan is tied for first with redshirt junior Doug Rappaport with two goals and four total points.

See SOCCER on page 7

MINUTEWOMEN KICK OFF A-10 ACTION | PAGE 10

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SHOWERS : HI: 72 LO: 50 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 2007

Students react to Dems. debate

Lack of interest for politics at UM

By Lisa DeBenedictis & Shruti Sehgal
Collegian Staff

The debate between the Democratic presidential candidates at Dartmouth College failed to make an impression on many University of Massachusetts students.

John Edwards, Barack Obama, Hillary Rodham Clinton, Mike Gravel, Joseph Biden, Christopher Dodd, Bill Richardson and Dennis Kucinich gathered at Dartmouth on Wednesday to give voters a preview of their stances on various topics.

The candidates debated subjects including the war in Iraq, healthcare and immigration.

Despite discussion of numerous hot-button topics, current events and political issues, the majority of UMass students opted out of watching the event.

"Not to be cynical, but if people cared, they would have watched, and most people just don't," said UMass student Jake Styczynski.

Students attributed their lack of interest to a variety of different reasons, including academic priorities, work schedules, and social activities.

"I just don't have a TV in my room" said Lauren Graant.

Yet, other students reached a conclusion that the college generation is unconcerned with politics.

"We don't care," asserted Butterfield Hall Resident Assistant Jack Harry. "We as a younger

See REACTIONS on page 2

College students campaign at the New Hampshire debate for the Democratic, presidential hopefuls, hosted by Dartmouth College on Wednesday.

DC in media spotlight

By Will McGrinness
Collegian Staff

Senator Joe Biden finished his stump speech Wednesday night at the Democratic candidates debate, took Dartmouth College student Franziska Hertel to the side, and told her, "Today, we made the first step in ending this god damned war."

She asked if he'd say the same thing. He said he'd say this now, but [candidates] always have a reason not to follow through," Hertel said.

Dartmouth students and interested locals were present to watch the event, but most were more interested in the candidates' honest answers rather than the questions asked.

Candidate and former senator John Edwards asked the audience why they would trust politicians, a notion echoed by Dennis Kucinich who called many candidates' response "second-hand smoke."

Regardless of students' feelings on government, they emerged in droves and prepared for a night immersed in national spotlight.

"I think everyone's really excited. I feel bad that I haven't picked

See DARTMOUTH on page 2

Nanotech launch builds community

By Hannah Nelson
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts is drawing national attention due to pioneering efforts in nanotechnology.

UMass's Center for Hierarchical Manufacturing (CHM) and the National Science Foundation (NSF) joined forces to bring a sense of community to those involved in nanomanufacturing. The CHM hosts the community's open access network, a Nanoscale Science and Engineering Center.

"Launching and facilitating the National Nanomanufacturing Network [NNN] is a vitally important component of our research center," said James Watkins, director of the CHM. "The network will provide an efficient way for academic research centers, industry and government to cooperate, advance nanomanufacturing research and development and help build a strong community of practice."

Researchers will use the network as an easy form of communication among others involved in nanotechnology.

An additional part of the NNN, the InterNano clearinghouse, plans to launch this November. It will be a library of nanotechnology information, listing everything from events and workshops to a research archive.

"The innovative developments emerging from U.S. nanotechnology research centers represent an immensely valuable national resource – one that is well poised to ignite a new wave of nanomanufacturing vitality in our country," said NNN Director Mark Tuominen.

Nanotechnology, an interdisciplinary science, which links preliminary concepts into actual products could potentially impact any field from health sciences to energy conversion.

Other schools have alliance centers involved in the network, including Northeastern University, the University of Illinois, and the University of California at Berkeley.

"The NNN will provide the necessary catalyst [for technologi-

See NANO on page 2

Students research nanotechnology at UMass, a field currently being explored by university researchers.

Casino proposed in W. Mass.

By Ben Williams
Collegian Staff

Most University of Massachusetts students support Governor Deval Patrick's recent plan to institute casino gambling to Massachusetts.

Last week, Patrick revealed his proposal for three casinos, one of which is slated for Western Mass. According to the Boston Globe, Patrick expects $900 million revenues, in upfront fees, and $800 million yearly after that.

These numbers take into account the costs of treating chronic gamblers, increasing police enforcement, and creating a regulatory branch of the government. The governor wants to spend the added revenue on rebuilding roads and bridges as well as tax relief.

However, many UMass students are excited about the part of Patrick's proposal suggesting a casino be built in nearby Palmer, or even closer in Holyoke or Chicopee.

"Building casinos in Massachusetts would be a great idea for UMass poker players," says Betti Burdick, head of unisexpoker.com.

UMass senior Darby Tassett, agreed.

"Students should have a choice to go to a casino – people on campus are already doing the same kind of thing, and people who are going to gamble are going to gamble if there's a casino or not."

Most students think building a casino in the area wouldn't really have a dramatic affect on the campus.

"I don't envision hundreds of UMassers dropping out to play poker at a local casino, though it might hurt attendance in a few morning classes," Burdick said.

Junior Glen Gallagher is also in favor of the proposal. He thinks it would be a good source of revenue for the state, and pointed out that casinos have worked well for Connecticut so far, which hosts Mohegan Sun and Foxwoods casino.

Not everyone is excited for a casino in Western Massachusetts.

Junior Christine Boss, thinks it's too easy as "let's promote gambling and then we'll make lots of money."

"That money has to come from somewhere," she said, and she was concerned about gambling preying on people who are vulnerable, like many college students.

Dean of Students, Jo-Anne Vanin, shares Boss' concerns.

"Students have already shown vulnerability," she said.

But Vanin said with the proposal so far in the future, it's hard to predict the impact of a near-by casino.

Yet she, "can envision there being concerns."

Vanin said those concerns will direct the University's actions, and mentioned University Health Services provides counseling for gambling addiction.

Gambling could become a common student activity with Gov. Patrick's plan to build a casino in Western Massachusetts.

The governor's [illegible] opposed in the legislature.

House speaker Salvatore DiMasi expressed opposition.

The house remains skeptical, he said.

The Massachusetts family [illegible] gambling calls [illegible] economically dangerous [illegible] growth.

Journalism dept. hosts guest lecture trio

Three prominent members of the media will talk to students about their profession over pizza on October 1.

The three panel members are Executive Editor of ESPN.com Patrick Stiegman, Chet Rhodes, who is the assistant managing editor of news video for Washingtonpost.com, and Emily Sweeney, a reporter for the Boston Globe.

These three have been selected specifically for their involvement with multimedia reporting, which Journalism program lecturer Steve Fox, calls "convergence."

Fox says each panelist will do a short, 5-10 minute presentation, but ideally the event will be, "an interactive discussion," and "students should come armed with questions."

The panel is part of the Journalism program's renewed interest in multi-media, since, according to Fox, the field of journalism is moving in that direction.

He says students will be able to hear about a typical day in the 24-hour news cycle, as well as different multi-media approaches.

"You can hear about it in class, but to hear it from professionals is [illegible] he said. According to Fox, non-[illegible] majors are also encouraged to attend.

"Convergence is happening everywhere, not just to those practicing [illegible] to those consuming it. ABC and ESPN are [illegible] Chet Rhodes [illegible] at 6 o'clock [illegible] The event is free and open to the public. It kicks off at 5:15 p.m. with pizza at Memorial Hall. The speakers will begin at 5 p.m.

Journalists (left to right) Patrick Stiegman, Emily Sweeney, and Chet Rhodes will head a panel discussion in Memorial Hall on Monday.

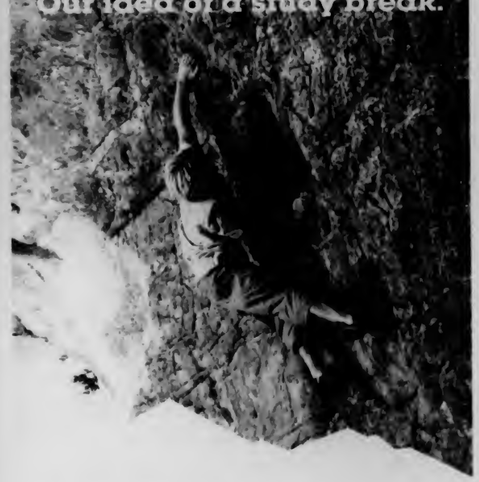
Ben Williams

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 19
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nick Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Kate Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Ester
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
COPIES EDITOR Adam Scaglin
EDITORIAL EDITOR Sean Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Stonecak
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ryan McAskill
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Teresa Reilly
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Katie Obuzo
ASSISTANT NEWS Will McGuinness
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Michael King
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenzaike
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Team Trash

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR YEAR-SEPT. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BECAME KNOWN AS ALMA LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGIAN SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1919 AND THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED CONTINUALLY SINCE 1892, THE COLLEGIAN WAS REINCORPORATED SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND TO PLACE AN ADVERTISEMENT, CALL BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today



NIGHT EDITOR
Jeremy Rice

COPY EDITOR
Amber Vaillancourt

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1809 and snap a photo, then send it to news@dailycollegian.com

Get your daily news before you get to your day...
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

College Students
Get 15% OFF full-price items.
Must show valid college ID. Restrictions apply. Visit store for details.
Hadley
Mountain Farms Mall
351 East Russell St.
EASTERN MOUNTAIN SPORTS

Students comment on Democrats

DARTMOUTH from page 1

someone [to vote for] yet because I can't go out and cheer for them," said graduate student Allison Henrich. "It's exciting because you don't often see massive news media vehicles."

Henrich compared the atmosphere to the first day of classes, students with anticipation for something unknown, but sure to be remembered.

College students throughout New England came to participate either as spectators or to work on a campaign.

Sen. Biden said the night was an interesting one since they were "on the pulse of the nation."

Three New England College freshmen were holding up signs and attempting to stir up interest for Biden. While none had a particular interest in voting for the candidate, all thought it to be an interesting experience to be on the campus for the night.

Freshman Joe Dorian jumped out of the Biden van and expressed his interest in supporting Mitt Romney, while sign holder Garrett Marshall commented on liking Sen. Hillary Clinton. Marshall cited her experience in the White House and her stance on foreign policy as the major motivating factors in his decision.

"This is a once in a lifetime opportunity that most don't get," Marshall said, "I wanted to come see what they had to say, see how people reacted, and to see what people our age think."

The group admitted that their interest in politics was shared by a "caring majority." While nationwide, many might cast an apathetic glance toward the debate, the students refused to be brought down by it.

They said it's precisely moments like Wednesday night that could inspire a student to commit his or her life to public service.

Conflicting reports were issued regarding the number of student volunteers working the event. Two volunteers estimated the number to be near 300 while sophomore, comparative literature major Alex Lambrow thought it to be near 150.

Regardless of the number, he said, "I'm surprised by the amount of political activism on the campus tonight. I'm fairly certain the student [body] is more active than any other schools that have held a debate so far."

He declined to comment on who his favorite candidate was going into the debate, saying their answers will decide his choice later in the night.

Henrich addressed the interesting atmosphere since the majority of the campus seemed to be liberal-leaning. She added that everyone has his or her favorite, and it adds to the excitement.

Christian Ginez and Christian Steuart, both of Dartmouth's Republican Club agreed saying the campus was more liberal than conservative. They said they were passing out literature to inform students about the Republican party, not featured that evening.

Both said if they had to vote for a Democrat, New Mexico's Governor Bill Richardson would be their choice since he is the most fiscally responsible. But no one could not decide on their favorite Republican.

Likewise, Henrich would not choose between her two favorites, Edwards and Illinois Sen. Barak Obama. However, by the end of the debate, she chose Obama, saying, "He's just so inspiring."

The majority of candidates addressed the Dartmouth crowd following the nationally televised portion of the night. Each had a varied degree of success and Obama's spirited stump speech elicited the crowd's most spirited reaction.

Obama urged the students that a single voice could change the dynamic of a room, and they should get "fired up" for a new era in the White House. He invited them to come together and "change the world with him."

This final challenge resulted in an ebullient and deafening applause, but perhaps it was the louder and more certain voices of a fervent population that caused it rather than the voice of a majority's coming to a consensus.

Dartmouth student Tim Altares said he wasn't swayed by any one candidate, and classmate Abigail McCann agreed, "I was an Obama fan but no one impressed me today," she said.

Robert Meyers, also a Dartmouth student added that Obama like other candidates didn't seem to have a good night.

"Hillary Clinton tonight surprised me a lot. When asked a question, she would totally skirt the issue; and for me, I don't really want to get behind somebody who won't tell it straight."

"Everyone has their own agenda. You can't trust them completely," Altores said. "You have to take the information available to you and try to make an informed decision from that, and that why I vote, that's why [everyone] should."

Will McGuinness can be reached at wmcguinn@gmail.com

JOAN DISNEY/COLLEGIAN

Sen. Barack Obama and Sen. John Edwards converse during the Democratic Presidential Candidates Debate at Dartmouth College on Wednesday.

New network to advance research cal advancement] by assisting nanomanufacturing stakeholders through networking, collaboration, education and information exchange," said Tuominen.

NANO from page 1

Big name federal agencies want a cut from the ground floor as well.

The Department of Defense, the Department of Energy, and the National Institutes of Health desire access to the network.

"This network will be in national service, exploring the most important research and education directions at the national level, promoting transformative ideas for applying nanoscale science and engineering, and making long-term connections between researchers, educators, industry, government laboratories, professional societies, NGOs and other stakeholders," said Mihail Roco, senior advisor for nanotechnology at the NSF.

For more information, the NNN's website is www.nanomanufacturing.org. The CHM's website is www.umass.edu/chm.

Hannah Nelson can be reached at hnelson a student.umass.edu

Breast cancer stamp returns

BY HOLLY SEABURY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The United States Postal Service will be promoting breast cancer research through stamp sales for the ninth year.

National Breast Cancer Awareness Month begins October 1. Carissa Surprise, officer-in-charge of the Amherst Post Office, will be joining other offices in Massachusetts to promote the sale of Breast Cancer Research (BCR) stamps.

"This unique semi-postal stamp has a dual purpose," said Surprise. "Not only does it represent the first class postage rate in effect at the time of purchase, but the cost over and above this rate goes directly into breast cancer research."

By law, 70 percent of the net amount raised is given to the National Institutes of Health and 30 percent is given to the Medical Research Program at the Department of Defense.

"Customers buying sheets of BCR stamps at $11 will be given the opportunity to sign a 'Reach for a Cure' card that will be displayed in the Post Office showing their support to help fund and find a cure for the killer disease," said Surprise.

According to statistics, about 185,000 women and 1,400 men are diagnosed with breast cancer each year, and nearly 46,000 of those will die from the disease.

The BCR stamp was first issued in July 1998, and since, $53 million has been raised through sales.

Holly Seabury can be reached at hseabury a student umass edu

The breast cancer research stamp appears for the ninth year.

College voters indifferent

REACTIONS from page 1

generation believe that it doesn't affect us. We let those in power make decisions for us."

A lack of interest for the debate could also mean less concern for the election.

"A lot of students here aren't even registered to vote, because it doesn't matter to them," said student Chris Houlihan.

"Younger people are not as involved today and I don't know why, but it will continue to be this way unless we change it."

Many of the students who did not watch the televised debate were disappointed they missed it.

"I would have liked to watch it, but I had to work late last night," said Matthew Briggs.

Still others were entirely unaware of Wednesday's broadcast.

"I honestly didn't know it was even on," chained student Mary Lyons. "But maybe it is too early on in the game to hold the debate now and get a substantial amount of viewers."

However, some students did watch the debate.

"I watched the debate because I am a Democrat and I would like to have a basis for voting for each candidate," said Houlihan.

Among those who watched, some suggested when election time gets closer students will show more interest.

"There is not enough hype yet," said student Deborah Cruskin.

She continued saying the debate was unfortunately more of a spectacle for entertainment purposes rather than a purposeful discussion to resolve the current concerns.

Other students agreed.

"The moderator [Tim Russert] focused on a few candidates, rather than everyone. His performance was overall poorly done. At one point, he even started to question Mike Gravel's former bankruptcy. That had nothing to do with the election," said Kirsten Hymes.

However, some were impressed with the way Russert handled his position.

"A moderator needs to be able to push buttons, and he did that well," said political science major John Taylor. "Everyone was dancing around the issues, especially Hillary Clinton, but she's just known for that."

When asked if the debate led to any potential advancement, those who watched were largely undecided.

"I don't know who is going to win at the end. But John Edwards and Hillary Clinton overall dominated the debate," said Cruskin. Taylor agreed.

"It's too hard to say at this point," said Taylor. "I think in order to be successful, Obama needs to separate himself from Hillary. He did try, but he needs to do a better job. He failed to do that last night."

Lisa DeBenedictis can be reached at ldebened a student umass edu

Shruti Sehgal can be reached at svehgal a student. umass. edu

Attention First-Year Students:
TIME'S ALMOST UP!
Have you completed MyStudentBody? It's easy, interesting ... and required for all first-year students. To avoid a registration hold, you must take and pass the course no later than Monday, October 1st. For instructions, go to:
www.umass.edu/uhs/cadap/msb/
Center for Alcohol and other Drug Abuse Prevention

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
EDITORIAL OPINION
FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 2007
"It were best that we not all think alike; it is difference of opinion that makes horseraces." —Mark Twain
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Stop poisoning my toys

Hannah Nelson

It all started out with the big pet food scare earlier this year. Honestly, how does rat poison end up in dog kibble? Aren't there supposed to be people in charge of that sort of thing? But it would turn out that was only the beginning of the consumer's recall woes.

More on that in a minute, but first it's story time again. When I was a little girl, I had this Raggedy Ann doll. Her yarn hair was a bit frayed and mouth a bit faded, but I was attached. So it was only natural that I would bring her along on a traumatic visit to the doctor's office. But in my childhood fear of those visits, the doll was left behind in the waiting room. It wasn't until I was back at home that I noticed her absence. I never got her back. Oh, the office found her, but only after a plethora of other children had found her first and she had given them a bit a cheering up too. So with the fear of germs and such, my mother wouldn't hear of her return.

Even today as an 18 year-old college student I still feel I can sympathize with the children across the country who are having toys pulled from their play bins when their backs are turned. The reason being of course that it is better to endure the loss of Dora than it is to suffer the ill health effects.

Those include, but are not limited to, choking on a loose magnet or contracting lead poisoning. The most prominent reason is the level of lead. After testing, it was shown that levels in recalled items were 180 times over the "accepted standard". It makes me nervous to think that there are such things as acceptable levels in the first place.

And good luck to those little tikes who do happen to keep their paws on one of those lead-contaminated toys. President Bush is already planning to veto the children's health care bill the minute it lands on his desk. How's that for a double-negative.

First, half of the options in the J.C. Penney's catalog get chucked off the list to Santa. Then the 'rents get stuck with some nasty doctor's bills if one of the 164 products (and counting) slip by. It chalks up to somewhere around 21 million Chinese-made toys. But if it makes you feel better, the CEO of Mattel didn't even know what kind of tests are being used to figure out what exactly is going into that Matchbox car either.

What I would really like is someone to explain to me the reasoning behind how lead ended up in lunchboxes. Did someone along the way not understand that actual food was going to be put in the containers, and then later possibly consumed by a school kid at lunch?

These are products that have carried stickers proclaiming themselves as lead free. And as it turns out, vinyl has been recognized for quite a while as having a high likelihood for lead content. So much for those baby bibs.

After testing, it was shown that levels in recalled items were 180 times over the 'accepted standard'.

Then there's the crib issues. The Simplicity baby cribs in question have been for the past two years a known safety hazard with two reported deaths by suffocation and 55 reports of malfunctions spanning that timeline. So why then are the cribs just now being recognized as such a threat? How many of these cribs have been sold over such a time frame?

Over one million, actually, which means over one million children have slept in the potentially deathly contraptions. The Consumer Product Safety Commission has stated that to let a child spend one more night in the cribs is extremely hazardous. And currently there is a newer version of the crib being sold that has caused one death so far, but that model is still on the market. It puts an ugly twist on 'buyers beware'.

A lot of the recall buzz has been around the approaching holiday season. And that's when you know that stores are cringing. What effect will this have in their best-selling season? Something tells that those big box chains will be alright. Though I wish the same could be said of the consumers.

Call me a bleeding heart, and maybe I've read "The Velveteen Rabbit" once too many. But gosh darn it, kids get awfully sentimental with their favorite playthings. And Mattel might as well be the boogeyman under the bed, because that's who will really get the blame for Polly Pocket's mysterious disappearance.

Hannah Nelson is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at hnelson a student.umass.edu.

SOME QUESTION WHETHER THE RECALL WAS QUICK ENOUGH, SINCE MANY CHILDREN PLAYING WITH THE TOY BEGAN ACTING STRANGELY.

We're bad, but they're worse

Matt Hoffman

One of the reasons I enjoy living in the Amherst area is because many of its inhabitants are socially conscious individuals. Many of us are activists who wish to improve the situation of human rights around the world – an admirable goal. I hope that more students will feel the burden of those who are oppressed around the world – and act.

However, much of the activism that occurs in our neck of the woods and in the West in general, deals with problems at home that are not as severe as human rights abuses that occur in other parts of the world. The human rights establishments led by organizations such as Amnesty International, spend an inordinate amount of time criticizing Western nations while ignoring or minimizing condemnation of non-Western nations.

Case in point: A large amount of attention is paid to Israel. It seems that every time Israel moves a tank three feet to the left, they are criticized. From the amount of coverage Israel receives, one would think that Israel is a country the size of Texas. The truth is that Israel is a tiny country – smaller than Massachusetts.

Israel makes up only 0.5 percent of the Middle East. That's right, 99.5 percent of the Middle East constitutes Muslim or Muslim majority countries, and 0.5 percent is made up of the only Jewish self-determining nation in the world.

Yet, the number of condemnations Israel receives versus their Muslim neighbors is not nearly proportional. Not to mention that Israel is forced to defend itself from Islamists and Arabs that seek to destroy any non-Muslim independent entity in the region.

The pro-Western society of Lebanon is also under fire – literally – from Arabs who expel Christians and murder liberal politicians. For example, the Web site of the Islamist Hamas group that currently controls Gaza claims, "We will knock on the doors of Heaven with the skulls of Jews." Calculated, unwarranted Islamist murder versus imperfect Western self-defense: which situation do you think deserves more attention?

Charles Jacobs, an activist who went to Sudan to witness the redemption of 2,000 African slaves, and received an award from Corretta Scott King for his work, suggests that Western nations, having recognized their past wrongs, are in a state of hyper-self-criticism.

They don't want any Western group to abuse a non-Western people ever again. The cause is commendable, but ironically, the result of this hyper self-criticism is more oppression.

Others lose when we don't shed light on the conditions of others.

While dozens of front page New York Times articles deal with America's, Israel's and Europe's wrongs, cases of those oppressed by non-Westerners is played down. Where is the criticism of Egypt – where women's clitorises are painfully ripped off on a regular basis? Or of the Egyptian government's treatment of Dr. Ahmed Mansour, a Sheikh who advocates for a more tolerant form of Islam?

I once drove Dr. Mansour to a TV interview in the Boston area, during which he told me how he was kicked out of Egypt's foremost university, and then imprisoned simply for his views. Where is the criticism of the brazen suicide attacks by Shiites against Iraqi Sunnis?

And why is it that the president of Iran can get away with claiming, "There are no homosexuals in Iran," without a torrent of rights groups reminding the dictator that his perception might stem from the fact that gays people in Iran hide their true identities in order to save themselves from Iran's horrible anti-gay policies?

Western nations are by no means perfect. Yet, by so many activists attempting to perfect their "home turf," they are abandoning those who live in places where free speech is non-existent. Not only does this situation lead us Westerners to a skewed perception of the world – one where we seem to commit more wrongs than anyone else. Not just that. Others lose when we don't shed light on the conditions of others.

The real losers are the Christians in Mauritania who are enslaved by Arab masters – without condemnation. The real losers are women in Saudi Arabia who can't leave their home without male accompaniment. The real losers are peaceful Syrian Muslims – who, when they say they want their country to establish peace with Israel, are locked up in jail, never to be seen again. While we criticize ourselves until we're blue in the face, maybe we should start helping those who don't have a voice.

The accusations against Western nations are sometimes so aggressive that we forget that there are good things about our societies. Ask one of the thousands of gay Arabs in Jerusalem why he fled to Israel. Their answer will be: I was living in a society where policemen pretend to be gay to lure and then arrest and torture you. Oppressed non-Westerners seem to get it, why don't we?

Matt Hoffman is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mjhoffma at student.umass.edu.

What's so great about hookahs anyways?

Devon Courtney

People express themselves once they get to college in a plethora of different ways. Some people dress whacky, some people start drinking unhealthily, some even become responsible and study more. Over the past year or so, I've noticed a lot more students buying and smoking tobacco out of hookahs.

For those of you who have never been asked to hang out and smoke hookah, or who aren't descended from the people of Mesopotamia, I will give a definition of what a hookah is. A hookah, as far as I understand it, is an ornate device made up of metal and glass pieces, a spiny part, and several hoses that serve various functions. It is used to inhale flavored tobacco, which gets filtered through water for some odd reason that nobody understands.

When you inhale smoke from a hookah several things happen. You will notice a change in posture, you will usually find yourself leaning back with your arms spread and one knee up, while half-squinting your eyes in a relaxed manner. Another result of hookah smoking is that you will babble uncontrollably about personal philosophies, and you'll notice that hummus and tortilla chips are the best tasting food in the universe.

Despite these informative facts about what a hookah is, I've noticed that many people are using them communally without really knowing anything about them. It seems that on any nice, sunny day I'll pass through a minefield of hookah-smoking groups on my way to class.

My concern isn't so much that some people in these groups have questionable hygiene, nor is it that there's always one guy in the group playing terrible music on a guitar. My concern stems from the fact that every college student these days seems to have a hookah, or knows somebody who does.

This leads me to my point of confusion: Why does nearly everyone have a hookah? Is this a trend that I once again missed the bus on? Why is it that friends of mine who don't even smoke often suggest that we go chill and smoke some hookah? I have a sneaking suspicion that after the countries of the Middle East cornered the market on gasoline and crude oil, their next idea was to snatch up a monopoly on the college student's Saturday afternoon.

Maybe this is all part of a whole deviant college identity subculture.

Maybe this is all part of a whole deviant college identity subculture. Maybe smoking hookah is right up there with playing hacky sack, neglecting to wear shoes, listening to Sublime, partaking in Ultimate Frisbee matches, avoiding Wal-Mart, petitioning with MASSPIRG to rescue sunbeams, buying Boondock Saints posters and ordering pizza.

Maybe it's not, perhaps it's a way for college students who are just finding their identities to be unique. In that way, maybe it's like plaid shorts. One thing that concerns me (just like with plaid shorts) is the health risks.

A health report discussed on the Al-Jazeera news site reported that hookah smokers are inhaling nicotine, tar, and trace amounts of carbon monoxide, just like in cigarettes. A study in Egypt even linked hookah-smoking couples with infertility problems. I suppose that's not necessarily a bad thing, though. If you're smoking hookah with your future wife or husband, why would you want little kids running around tripping on your hookah hoses, knocking hot embers over onto the rug and burning your house down?

It seems that most students today are willing to take part in a trend about which little is known, and throw the health risks right out the car window. Another health risk I've noticed about hookah smoking is the coal itself. Not only will you have to worry about lung cancer and infertility, but there's also the risk of someone knocking the burning coal out of the top dish. There's always that one vigilant freshman who volunteers to grab it with his fingers and throw it back on top. That person almost always burns his fingers and learns another college lesson the hard way.

That leaves me to wonder: Is the hookah an ancient tradition that is transplanting itself in American college culture? After more health studies are done, will hookahs be condemned in the same way cigarettes have? Is this trend here to stay? Or, I simply have to ask, will hookahs and everything they stand for go up in smoke?

Devon Courtney is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dcourtne a student.umass.edu.

Protest politely

Ed Cutting

American law and culture is largely based on the concept of precedent. Students are allowed to hold rallies at noon on the steps of the Student Union because other groups of students before them were able to do so. Students on this campus are permitted to use the campus grounds for purposes of symbolic speech because other groups of students before them were permitted to use the campus for similar purposes. The issue is not the content of the speech, but the time, place and manner of the speech and the right to equal access of a public forum.

Likewise, the right of any group to be free from mob violence exists only in the larger context that all groups enjoy such a right. Students who wish to arrange a display of colored cloth on sticks in remembrance of the Holocaust have the same right to expect that others won't disrupt their display for that the university will punish those who do) as students who arrange a display of colored cloth on sticks in remembrance of the Sept. 11 atrocities.

When MASSPIRG places logs on the lawn to advocate conservation it has every right to expect that someone else won't re-arrange them as a campfire; when the Pride Alliance puts up a rainbow display of balloons, it equally has every right to expect that someone else won't re-arrange it into a red, white and blue balloon display.

All student groups have an equal right to expect that those who may disagree with their messages will leave their displays alone and that the university will punish miscreants. The concept of precedent exists here; students groups have the right to expect that they will be protected from hooliganism in a manner similar to other groups, with different viewpoints, were in the past.

Vandalism to a display of colored fabric on sticks thus becomes quite relevant because there is precedent as to what happened the last time. On April 24, 2004, a similar display in essentially the same locale was vandalized, flags were re-arranged and removed, and the two freshmen who did it were expelled. Vice Chancellor Gargano emphatically stated that such things would not be tolerated on this campus.

It is thus incumbent on Gargano to be a man of his word and to treat the students who did something on September 11, 2007 exactly the same way that he treated the students who did the exact same thing on April 24, 2004.

It doesn't matter if the flags in question were construction survey flags arranged in a display to demonstrate the number and various categories of individuals murdered by the National Socialists during the atrocity known as the Holocaust or if the flags in question were U.S. flags arranged in a display to demonstrate the number of those murdered by terrorists on Sept 11.

In issues of free speech, there is no requirement that the opinions expressed be correct or even rational.

In both cases, a group of students reserved the space for their symbolic speech display and had every right to expect that others would leave it alone.

The fact that the Republican t-hib display was vandalized with apparent impunity is thus a threat to all who may wish to have displays on campus in the future. If the University fails to uphold its own policies and precedents here, if the university doesn't punish the left leaning students who did this deed, then I Mass will run into some constitutional issues should it attempt to punish right leaning students who do a similar thing to the display of another group.

How do you tell one group of young people to leave others alone unless you can also tell them that others will equally leave them alone.

In issues of free speech, there is no requirement that the opinions expressed be correct or even rational. None of us remember Dolcress Ventopia, who amongst other things invented her own religion. This is a free country and one of the freedoms we enjoy is the expectation that we shall enjoy the same rights of free expression as others and that our speech won't be shouted down by those who may disagree with us.

Academic freedom is no about my right to say what I believe but the collective right of everyone else to do likewise. An attack on one thus becomes an attack on all the intended message of the victimized group is irrelevant in the larger context of that which happened to them can now happen. You have to thus essential for all of those who value free speech to condemn what happened not because of the content of the speech but because it was speech.

Thus much as it is incumbent on Gargano to be a man of his word and to sanction the perpetrators in this incident in the manner he did in 2004, it is equally incumbent upon those who disagree with the Republican club's message to defend the t-HIB's right to say unpopular things, lest all unpopular things become banned. Who amongst us doesn't hold at least one unpopular view?

And for what it is worth, those flags were American made. Purchased from the Sentry Uniform Company in Chicopee, they were not only made by an American company but also met the Department Of Defense and Commonwealth specifications for veterans grave decoration purposes. They were not made in China as some allege.

Ed Cutting is a UMass graduate student. He can be reached at ed.cutting a yahoo.com

SEP 28 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 2007 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Suits take over NoHo

Okkervil River leaves little to the imagination

BY ALLIE ROTH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Okkervil River pranced onto the stage in the Pearl Street ballroom Wednesday night wearing the classiest of suits. In all its formal-wearing glory, it delivered an 18-song set filled with constant energy.

Before the band's entrance, Damien Jurado opened and played 10 songs. With his raspy voice and folk guitar riffs, he sounded a lot like Bruce Springsteen from the "Nebraska" era. It went well to supplement Okkervil River's style of folk-inspired rock music.

During the headliner's performance, vocalist and guitarist Will Sheff grabbed the mic at several points as he walked around stage. Drummer Travis Nelson often held up one of his drum sticks as if to point to his fellow band mates and the audience. Jonathan Meiburg wore his accordion well.

Bass player Patrick Pestorius, Seth Warren on keyboard, Scott Bracket on the trumpet and Brian Cassidy on the mandolin constantly reminded fans what makes Okkervil River such a notable act: the ability to merge all of those elements into one fluid unique sound.

Suits may seem like an odd choice of attire for a rock band that moves around a lot. But the immediate mood set by the band made the suit jackets, ties, and suspenders seem appropriate, as they opened the show with "A King and Queen." This mellow song with trumpet solos from 2005's "Black Sheep Dog" could easily be part of a classical music orchestra, a place where suits are commonplace.

Points of the set were filled with a back-and-forth between older and newer songs. They played "Our Life is Not a Movie or Maybe," the first single off their new album, "The Stage Names," between "Red," from 2002's "Don't Fall in Love with Everyone You See," and "Real Life," a song off of 2005's "Black Sheep".

But in general, they stuck to playing a lot of the new stuff from "The Stage Names," like "Unless it Kicks," "A Girl in Port," and "A Hand to Take Hold of the Scene."

They also picked many songs from "Black Sheep Dog," like "The Last Thoughts," "Black," "No Key, No Plan," and "A Stone." They dove into some older songs with "It Ends with a Fall" and "Real Life."

Much like a marathon, each song came one after another, with only a few breaks. One funny break came when Sheff had problems setting the capo to the right place on the guitar to play "Plus Ones." The problem was quickly solved by Brian Cassidy who, according to Sheff, can fix anything. Gracious for the job Cassidy did setting up the capo, Sheff asked the audience to forget about the timeout as he began to strum the riff for "Plus Ones."

The show ended in a great way with "Westfall," an upbeat song that begins with notes from a mandolin off of "Don't Fall in Love with Everyone You See". Sheff crooned as he sang "When I was younger, handsomer and stronger. I felt like I could do anything."

The band left the stage for only a few minutes and came back as the crowd clapped wildly. They played a four-song encore set that included a stripped down acoustic version of "A Stone," with only Sheff and Cassidy on stage, followed by "O'Dana" (originally by the 1970s American pop band Big Star) and "John Allyn Smith Sails."

Throughout the show, Okkervil River maintained class and preserved their suits neatly. At times they sounded like an orchestra while still being a rock band. The songs all flowed well into one another, and the band members never stopped smiling and neither did the audience, who foot-tapped and danced the night away.

Allie Roth can be reached at aroth@student.umass.edu

Okkervil River mixed old songs with new at the Pearl Street Ballroom Wednesday night. Looking classy in suits, the group had an energy-filled 18-song set.

Video games come to life

Acclaimed play 'Helmet' to run for one performance only

BY MARCY BRADMAN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Douglas Maxwell's play "Helmet" blurs the line between virtual and theatrical art. He has found a way to bring together the theater audience and the people who spend their days sitting in front of their computer killing monsters.

This Sunday, September 30, at 2 p.m. Maryann Lombardi, a member of the University of Massachusetts Theater department, will be presenting the one-act play "Helmet" in the Curtain theater. The production was first performed this summer in New York for the International Fringe Festival. It will be following a workshop run by Lombardi and the cast of two actors.

Helmet is a teenage boy who is obsessed with computer games and has found a hero in a man named Sal who owns Helmet's favorite video game store. Sal, however, does not return Helmet's fond feelings.

Sal, in fact, hates all kids who throw their lives away on video games and blames them for his failure with his father's store. He tries to get Helmet to change, as he tries to cope with his failure as a businessman, son, and husband. The intensity of the game they play rises with each new level that the characters enter.

Lombardi and her actors, Troy David Mercier, a recent UMass graduate (Helmet) and Michael Lopez (Sal), have created much more than an entertaining piece about a charming videogame junkie and his bond with the man he idolizes.

Using the physicality of characters in some of Helmet's beloved video games, they have created a language of movement that adds an entirely new and exciting level to the playing field. Avid video game players might notice actual moves and dances from games such as "Tomb Raider", "God of War" and "Crash Bandicoot."

The original music is based on songs from actual video games and fits perfectly into the performance. The setting is perfectly matched with the dialogue, lights, sound, and movement.

The audience watches as Helmet and Sal lose or gain lives depending on how they are affected by their situations and each other.

Unlike some plays, where the characters only wound each other emotionally with remarks, they also physically represent the wounds by attacking each other. The two characters retrace their steps and movements by making new decisions each time in order to get to the end of the level successfully.

Watching the actors repeat the same order of movements and words continuously until it does not result in their losing a life, the audience cannot help but root for the characters and hope with them that they will finally move on without making a mistake.

There is something incredibly intriguing about these moments in the play when the game allows the characters to fix their mistakes by re-doing entire conversations. Wouldn't it be wonderful if real life could offer the same possibility?

The playwright, Douglass Maxwell, is from Scotland. Therefore, the original production was written with Scottish dialect in mind. Lombardi had to go through the play and change the wording so it was not confined to a Scottish setting.

Lombardi also ran into another problem with the play's video game references, since it was written 10 yeas ago.

Since the time when it was first published, there have been many advances in the video game industry. Lombardi, who is not an avid gamer, was not sure how to update her script.

She found the answer in her own addiction to Starbucks. More specifically, she found her answer in two Starbucks workers named Ross and Sully who are in fact addicted to video games. The two men were able to give her proper updates for the gaming language, while keeping the script sounding "cool."

"Helmet" was very well received this summer when it participated in New York's International Fringe Festival. Julie Congress from NyTheatre.com said "Director Maryann Lombardi has done a brilliant job bringing this text to life. "Helmet" is performed in the style of a video game and she has clearly defined the rules for this world."

Beth Levendis from Time Out NY exclaimed "4 STARS."

The Festival is an annual event where more than 200 different theater companies come from all over the world to present their plays. The range of performances included straight drama, dance, puppetry, and musicals and the companies ranged from high school students to professionals. Performances ran from August 10-26, with several shows each day.

Marcy Bradman can be reached at mbradma@student.umass.edu

A video game-themed "Helmet" takes moves from popular games like "Tekken" to choreograph its fight scenes.

For an online exclusive article please go to the Arts & Living page at www.dailycollegian.

Famous jazz artist drums out life story

BY JESSICA SACCO
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

It was a busy night at the Bezanson Recital Hall as students, adults, and other loyal fans made their way into the Fine Arts Center to view the performance of percussionist Warren Smith.

Smith entered the stage full of energy and enthusiasm, happy to be able to do what he loves best – perform. He used a broad range of instruments to entertain the audience, including the marimba (a large drum), the timpani (also known as kettle-drums), and various gongs from China, Korea, and Switzerland.

It was apparent during the show that each piece he played shed light on a different side of Smith's life. A song entitled "Flowers" was played on the timpani and was inspired by the beautiful flowers he had seen in California while waiting for the birth of his granddaughter.

"An Open Letter to People" included a letter written by Smith, speaking of the injustices in the world and mistreatment of human beings, accompanied by his use of the various drums on stage.

Music has always been a part of Smith's life. Both his parents were musicians, so his childhood was filled with different musical aspects.

"It was like being born in the circus," says Smith.

At the age of six, Smith began playing the drums and he has been going strong ever since. Throughout his career, which began at age 14 when he started working in several family bands, Smith has continuously contributed to the jazz community.

After playing in Captain Walter H. Dyett's concert and marching band in the 1950s, Smith went to New York City in 1957, where he completed his Masters of Music at the Manhattan School of Music in 1958. From there he worked regularly with Johnny Richards' Big Band from 1960-1972. The rest of his career was filled with Broadway performances, CD recordings, guest appearances and more.

Smith has toured with Barbara Streisand all over the United States, worked on the ABC New York staff orchestra, and did live television performances with Aretha Franklin.

Out of every musical triumph Smith has accomplished over his 73 years, he was proud to say that his greatest achievement in life has nothing to do with his profession. He believes his best success in life came from having and raising his five daughters.

In the future, Smith hopes to continue performing for as long as possible. "As long as I have enough strength to perform, I'll keep performing," he says.

Jessica Sacco can be reached at jsacco@student.umass.edu

Bezanson welcomed renowned jazz musician Warren Smith. He entertained with a variety of percussion instruments.

Defense carrying UM

DEFENSE from page 8

This year, senior Kaelyn Caldwell and junior Melissa Toulouse have stepped up to help keep the Minutewomen's defense airtight.

"[Toulouse] is in the middle of the field and so she has to have the best vision and the best communication," Rudy said. "[Caldwell] is so darn consistent. She never gets beat one-on-one. She doesn't give the ball up very much, doesn't take chances with it and occasionally gets forward."

Such solid protection is invaluable to Walker.

"We come into the game with the mindset of if we don't let up a goal we can't lose," she said. "You just know [the defense is] going to do everything that they possibly, physically can to stop a shot and to protect me and it's shown. We have a little bond and it's just awesome that everyone plays for each other and nobody takes the blame if something happens."

Walker and Rudy were quick to mention, however, that the two freshmen on defense – Kelsey Anderson and Alyssa Visconti – have been contributing as much as anyone.

"[They] are very solid," Rudy said. "They give us speed and they give us possession and they give us a little bit of grit."

Walker admits that she initially thought having two inexperienced players in the defensive mix might not bode well for the Minutewomen, but that they have done nothing but impress since their collegiate debut.

The two have started every game this season.

But, possibly the most important components of a soccer team's defense is the player between the goal posts.

Walker has notched 46 saves and three shutouts so far, marks that rank her third in the A-10.

Rudy says Walker gives the team security in the back, and is a catalyst for the team's success.

"You can have great defense, but at some point, there are balls that get through," Rudy said. "It's great having someone like that."

And backup goalie Lauren Luckey has been almost perfect, allowing one goal in the 60 minutes she has seen thus far.

Rudy says that his defense plays as one unit, and not as a bunch of individuals. And he knows this kind of unity will have to continue, and maybe even strengthen, as UMass faces its tough A-10 rivals for the rest of the schedule.

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu

Senior captain Britt Canfield has helped the Minutewomen get all the offense its needed this season, with three goals and six assists. The defense, led by goalkeeper Kristin Walker, has taken care of the rest.

A-10 action set to begin

W. SOCCER from page 8

Rudy said about adjusting to the turf. "It can change your game. Your timing of your runs is different.

"We trained up on Garber Field for about 45 minutes, that's all I could put us on there because the wear and tear physically is a lot and there are a lot of injury issues."

During training they had one player, Christina Nunes, roll her ankle with no one around her. They had to monitor the senior midfielder as the surface places more pressure and strain on the knees. Nunes is still recovering from a sprained MCL, and she says she's not yet at 100 percent.

"I'm a little ambivalent about playing her on artificial turf, but she seems ready to go and we're going to build up her time as she goes and she keeps making progress," Rudy said.

The team has averaged nine goals at home, senior forward Britt Canfield leads the team with 12 points (three goals, six assists) and sophomore Sydney Stoll is the top goal-scorer with four. Rudy would like to see the team convert more goals, especially on the road where the Minutewomen average one goal per contest.

"I think we're still ways away with our finishing focus," Rudy said. "We're getting there more now, but I'd like the finishing end to be more accurate. I'd like to reduce the amount of unforced turnovers."

The Minutewomen lead the all-time series 8-2. The Hawks won in 2004 and 2005, both 1-0 victories at Rudd Field. Hawks freshman midfielder Carly Salter leads the attack with five points this season (two goals, one assist).

Rudy is concerned about the travel situation for the team, as they have to drive to Philadelphia and play at 6 p.m. and then drive back that night, which takes over five hours. The game time for Sunday is noon.

"I'm not real comfortable with that, but it is what it is and that's the way the league is set up," Rudy said.

This weekend presents challenges on and off the field that the team cannot control and Rudy is anxious to see how they react.

"We'll find out who we are," he said. "Is this 5-0-1 [record] for real; or [is it] just a pipe dream?"

Steve Gaines can be reached at sgaines@student.umass.edu

UMass hosts BU at Rudd

M. SOCCER from page 8

Terriers were in the same position as the Minutemen two days later. Like UMass, BU cut the lead in half but didn't come any closer.

Junior Petur Sigurdsson leads the Terriers with three goals and is tied for the lead in points with fellow junior Neil Hlavaty with seven. However, the BU offense is certainly not a two-man operation; eight players have scored goals and eight players recorded assists compared to five and five for the Minutemen.

"It's always something to be aware of," Koch said of BU's offensive depth. "If there's one guy who's kind of the goal king, then you shut him down, you shut the whole team down.

"We have to be aware of everyone. On any given day, anyone can score. So, it's not a huge factor, but it's certainly something we need to keep in the back of our mind."

Non-conference common opponents aside, the Terriers defeated two Atlantic 10 teams already, including preseason favorite and defending A-10 Champion Rhode Island in their most recent action. They also defeated Fordham, 4-0, in the opening game of the 2007 Brown Invitational, the same weekend they lost to Santa Clara.

Like Northeastern, BU holds a size advantage over the Minutemen; but, unlike the Huskies, it also possesses players who can match the speed of UMass's outside backs and wings.

Koch feels that the Terriers are UMass's best in-state rival. The all-time series stands at 18-13-5 in favor of his Minutemen, with BU winning two of the last three.

Last season, the Minutemen and Terriers battled to a 1-1 draw in Boston.

Hogan scored his first-career goal against BU last season on a cross from teammate Greg Grillo. The score came in the 77th minute, but UMass failed to hold the late lead. BU tied the score 61 seconds later when Sigurdsson lined a shot past UMass goalkeeper Zack Simmons.

Simmons stands one shutout short of the all-time school record of 16 after blanking the Huskies last Saturday. The red-shirt junior didn't begin the season as sharply as he did last season, but played well against the Huskies. He made two early saves on great chances for NU forwards. Northeastern dominated the early parts of the contest, but the game's momentum completely changed following his saves.

Against the Terriers, Koch will have his full compliment of players for the first time all season. Junior midfielder Tony Bassett missed the last three games with an upper leg injury. Bassett told Koch he felt good prior to last weekend's match-up with Northeastern, but Koch decided to hold him out for one more week.

In his absence, freshman Ben Arikian stepped in and contributed offensively for the Minutemen; he assisted on Hogan's goal last weekend with a header into the box.

Senior defender Trevor Singer is also returning from an ankle injury. He made his season debut against Northeastern, coming on as a substitute for Cirillo in the 73rd minute. His presence adds depth and experience to an already talented UMass backfield.

Joe Melom can be reached at jmelom@student.umass.edu

Home-grown talent riddles roster

RECRUITING from page 8

and others one-third."

This season, the team's roster consists of six Massachusetts natives, or only about one-fourth of the squad.

The next-highest represented state is Pennsylvania, with five athletes. In fact, Koch has enjoyed recruiting success in the state, as four of the players are either freshmen or sophomores.

Assistant coach Jon Davey, who hails from Grimsby, England, attended college at Lock Haven in Pennsylvania. In his third year with the program, evidently Davey's connection with the state has helped the Minutemen establish a recruiting presence in the area.

Koch appreciates the value of having international players on his team, but recruiting overseers is beyond the scope of his coaching staff, even with an English assistant. The only circumstance where a foreign player could attain exposure to the team is if he initiates the contact with Koch.

"For us to have a foreign student, there has to be a little luck," Koch said. "They'll contact us and we'll follow up with them."

In many cases, young, international soccer talent is attracted by the opportunity to play for a free education at an American university. If a school doesn't have the resources to cover a student's complete educational cost, then it is typically less competitive for these players.

"To bring in a foreign student to UMass, they usually need a full ride," Koch said. "We're trying to find the best players we can, but we need to make sure they can afford it. With foreign athletes, there's not too many who can."

Boston University, the Minutemen's opponent this weekend, sports several players from the exotic locales of Guam, Jamaica and Ghana. In fact, the team's leading scorer both this year and last season, junior forward Petur Sigurdsson, hails from Hafnarfjordur, Iceland.

However, a roster of foreign players is not a phenomenon limited to this region. Several teams in the Atlantic 10 tout international athletes. For example, Charlotte has five players from the British Isles, while Richmond sports two athletes from Trinidad and Tobago as well as another from Ghana. Mexico.

Freshman midfielder Ben Arikian has played in all seven games this season for UMass, starting in six of those games. He's recorded one assist for the 3-4-0 Minutemen.

ELEMENTS HOT • TUB • SPA
673 Main Street
Amherst, MA
Reservations ~
413-256-TUBS
Outdoor & Indoor
Hot Tubs, Steam
Infrared Saunas
Individual & Couples
Massage, Reiki
20% OFF w/Student ID Sun-Thurs
ElementsHotTubSpa.com for Info & COUPONS!

UGG australia
Get 'em NOW!
classic tall, classic short, slippers and more!
chestnut chocolate black sand
ZANNA
women's clothing, shoes and accessories
downtown Amherst

Former Amherst Drop Zone
227 Russell Street (Route 9), Hadley, MA
Everything Must Go!!
Complete Liquidation
$5,000,000.00 Inventory
30 - 50% OFF
Something For Everyone
• Army-Navy Surplus • Pea Coats • Leather Jackets • Boots & Work Clothes • Lg Inventory T-Shirts • Sweatshirts
• Camping & Hunting Equipment • Flags • Blankets • Knives • Huge Paintball Department
GREAT DORM SUPPLIES!!!
National Brands Include: Timberland, CAT, Carhartt, Doc Marten, Woolrich, Sorel, Harley Davidson, Buck, Swiss Army, Corcoran, Magnum, Chippewa, Nexgen, Leather King, Tom Lama, Etc.
All Sales Final
Sale Under The Management Of
CRG Auction
Hours Of Operation
Mon. -Sat. 10am - 7pm | Sun. 12pm - 6pm
Sale Ends November 26
www.crgauction.com • (800) 300-6852

Just like it was drawn up

Sowry and Co. take advantage of penalty corner opportunities

BY JUSTIN MCGRAIL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts field hockey team improved its record to 5-5 with a 2-1 win over Brown on Wednesday at Garber Field. The team's recent success can be attributed to its effectiveness in converting penalty corner opportunities.

The Minutewomen had six penalty corners against Brown (10-8) and all of them came in the second half.

UMass used a variety of different designed plays when it took its penalty corners. One play is called a double slip. For this, the ball gets put into play and two players take a shot before a third puts the ball on net. A variation of that play is a single slip, where only one player fakes before the ball is shot. A simple corner play is when the ball gets passed into play, stopped by a player at the top of the circle and directly shot at the goalkeeper. There are also variations on how the ball is shot.

On the game-winning goal against Brown, junior Lauren Gillespie was positioned on the far post and deflected a shot from freshman Jamie Bourazeris past Bears goalie Lauren Kessler. After the game, Gillespie explained that the play was designed for her to be on the weak side and deflect the shot into the goal. That was the final corner of the game for the Minutewomen.

The second half started with four consecutive penalty corners for UMass, a very rare occurrence in field hockey.

"We did set a very high standard of winning penalty corners so earning that many was really good," UMass coach Justine Sowry said.

The first attempt was a double slip designed for Cher King. Erin Parker fired the ball to Kara Murphy, who stopped the ball for King and she blasted a shot at Kessler who made the save. Then Mary Shea was there and attempted to score off the rebound and was denied. A third try by Shea was also stopped by Kessler and UMass got another chance to score.

UMass tried a different approach on its second endeavor. It ran a single slip drawn up for Jamie Bourazeris. Parker passed it to Murphy again who stopped it for Bourazeris who fired a shot wide and UMass drew another penalty corner.

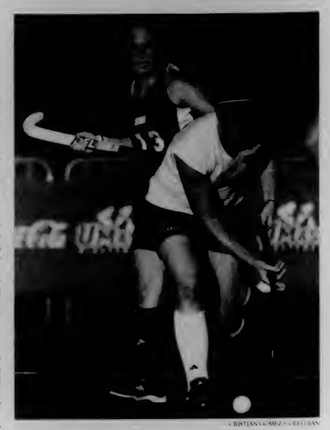
For the third try, the Minutewomen went back to King. Parker put the ball in play, Murphy stopped and set-up King again who had her shot blocked before it reached the goalie. UMass drew its fourth and final penalty corner.

With the same crew on the field of the first three, the Maroon and White tried one last time to find the back of the cage. Parker centered the ball for Murphy who could not get a handle on the ball and the play was whistled dead.

Through execution and perseverance, UMass drew four penalty corner attempts in a span of 3 minutes, 12 seconds. Its fifth came in the 57th minute. The play was designed for King again but was whistled dead because of a high shot.

The Minutewomen used a lot of different looks on their six penalty corners but they also used a lot of different personnel and still got the job done.

"We didn't have our best combinations on during those penalty corners, but I think to be able to score a goal with our second string out there was impressive," Sowry commented in a post-game interview.



There have been games when the Maroon and White had numerous penalty corner attempts but were unable to capitalize. One game in particular is the 2-1 win over Siena on Sept. 16. UMass had 12 attempts but did not score on any of them, rather relying on other aspects of its offense. Recently it has found a way to turn those chances into points.

Justin McGrail can be reached at jwmcgrai@student.umass.edu

CHRISTIAN GOMEZ/COLLEGIAN

Senior captain back Erin O'Brien leads the Minutewomen in minutes played this season with 527. She has yet to record a point this season, but has provided a big lift for their defense. UMass is 5-5 in 2007.

CHRISTIAN GOMEZ/COLLEGIAN

Senior midfielder Kara Murphy has played in all 10 games for the Minutewomen. She registered her only assist this season against Siena.

Stern test for UM

FIELD HOCKEY from page 8

great boost from junior forward Lauren Gillespie. Last year she was the team's leading scorer with 13 goals, but due to lower back problems, she only had one goal in the first eight games. She has come on strong lately with two goals in the last two games. UMass coach Justine Sowry praised her for her recent efforts.

"She is gaining a lot of confidence," Sowry said. "She hasn't had a stick in her hand for 10 months as she was nursing a back injury. With that being said, she's gaining a lot of confidence over the ball and she's finding the back of the net, which is exactly what we need from her."

Another major boost for the offense has been the emerging performance of freshman forward Katie Kelly. Kelly started the season coming off the bench for the first eight games, but she was elevated to a starting position due to her strong effort.

"It just got to the point where you couldn't deny her a starting position, her energy off the bench, her work rate, she forces an unbelievable amount of turnovers," Sowry said. "She puts the opponents under a lot of pressure because she attacks the circle with an extreme amount of energy and unpredictability."

The true strength of the team is the backline. Led by team captain Erin O'Brien, Kristina DoRosario, and newcomer freshman Jamie Bourazeris, the defense possesses a great deal of speed, talent and leadership.

O'Brien was singled out by Sowry as being the team's leader.

"I think that she is one of our most consistent players every single day, her leadership in the backfield and her heart and commitment to the team and the game plan is some of her best work," Sowry said. "We need her to be at her best and she's really provided it this year."

Sowry will depend on O'Brien and the defense to stifle a powerful Great Dane offense that averages 2.61 goals per game, led by Nicole Savage and Michelle Simpson who have each scored seven goals this season.

The team has not yet determined a starting goaltender after 10 games. Sowry rotates between senior Becky Letourneau and sophomore Sarah Williams about every other game. She is reluctant to reveal who will start each game, as she wants both of them to be prepared to start. Currently, Williams has the better record at 4-1, but Letourneau has faced the tougher opposition this season.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu

UMass runners DeRosa, Regnier ready for invitational

BY MIKE GILLMEISTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After a week off, the Massachusetts cross country teams are primed and ready to participate in the Paul Short Invitational today in Bethlehem, Pa. With 91 teams participating, including 21 nationally-ranked teams from Divisions I, II and III, the Paul Short is one of the most prestigious cross country events in the country.

The Minutemen will need to fill a void with younger runners, as they will be without their top finisher last year at the Invitational, Nils Fischer. The men's team is in good spirits however, coming off of a decisive victory in its last meet. The Maroon and White beat out Colgate, Connecticut, Maine and Vermont in its only home meet of the season.

UMass junior captain Jesse Regnier will help lead the team into the meet by himself, as senior co-captain Ryan Durkin is still out with mononucleosis. Aiding Regnier will be sophomore Andy McCann. In his last race, McCann led all Minutemen as he finished fifth overall at the Dartmouth Invitational, just ahead of Regnier.

McCann believes that the team needs to make a statement this year and prove that it is one of the elite programs in the country.

"This is really going to be our first chance to run against a lot of proven teams and I feel like we're kind of coming out of the lime light," McCann said. "Not many teams are looking for us to [do well] there, but we can really turn a few heads there if we put it all together."

The Minutemen will get to prove themselves not only against in-conference rivals Duquesne and La Salle, but also against nationally-ranked Division I teams. Such ranked teams include No. 4 Iona, No. 26 Syracuse and No. 27 Princeton.

Atlantic 10 Co-Rookie of the Week, Jeff Hill, could also prove to be a factor for UMass. In his first collegiate race, Hill finished in second place in UMass's last meet, leading all Minutemen.

UMass men's coach Ken O'Brien noted that his runners worked on getting off of the starting line quicker as well as what he calls "strength intervals" to better the quality of the middle of the race for his runners.

O'Brien put the emphasis on the middle of the race because the team is coming into the middle of the season and the meets will start to move at a quicker pace. The New England Championships are just a week away and two weeks after that comes the A-10 Championships. The men's race will start at 2 p.m.

"For the first couple of meets we had very low-key goals," O'Brien said. "Now when you go to a meet like this where, in the varsity race that we'll be in, there are 42 schools. We had a bye week last week that allowed us to get in two good weeks of preparation."

The Minutewomen have a different outlook than that of the men's team about today's race.

The women's team returns only one runner who placed highly in their last race at the Paul Short Invitational, senior Christina DeRosa. She finished first on the team and 75th overall in 2005.

The freshmen on the team have been making strides all season. Lauren Stocker has placed fourth in both meets in which she has participated. Stocker should figure into the top of the pack in terms of the team.

Although a track star by nature, Gina Perno has been coming along nicely and in a workout this past week, went side by side with Stocker so look for this freshman duo to impress today.

UMass women's cross country coach Julie LaFreniere mentioned that the freshman are getting used to the idea of pushing themselves further and further in order to better themselves.

"They need to work on being able to work hard when they're tired," LaFreniere said. "I think that's a new concept to a lot of them. They think that they need more rest."

Another newcomer that has been using that philosophy is redshirt freshman Shiyi Zan. In each of her first two career races, Zan has placed second on the female behind the experienced DeRosa. The Ottawa native shows no signs of letting up that position in the pack, either.

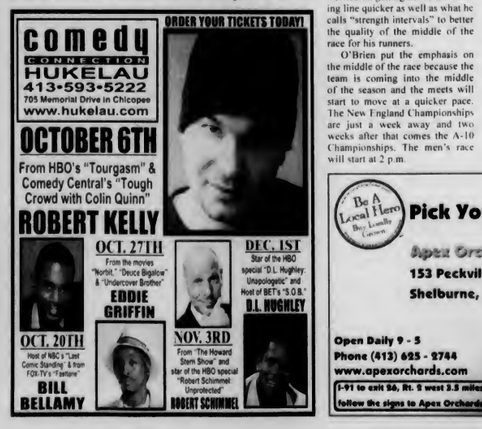
The cross country course at Lehigh is certainly a telling test for the Minutewomen because the course is an extra 1,000 meters longer than the home course they're used to. However, LaFreniere says that most of her more experienced runners don't even notice the extra distance.

One of those experienced runners may not be able to compete in the race. Senior co-captain Amber Sayer has been battling a cold and if she is not feeling up to par then she will not race today.

If the team is down two captains, DeRosa will be the only captain left. Even with those possible losses, DeRosa feels as though the youth and depth of the squad will be able to fill in that gap.

"I'm really excited to see what our team can do," DeRosa said. "The majority of our team is underclassmen and freshmen. They're just going in with an open mind. Each week they're improving as we work together."

The women's race will start at 2:50 p.m.



After the Paul Short Invitational, both teams head to the New England Championships in Boston.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

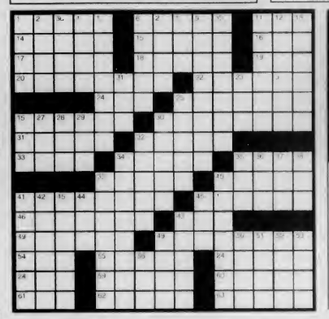
CHRISTIAN GOMEZ/COLLEGIAN

Senior Christina DeRosa leads a young group of runners into Bethlehem, Pa., today for the Paul Short Invitational.

amherst cinema
FRI 9/28-THU 10/4
IN THE VALLEY OF ELAH
OPENS FRI 9/28
2:00 4:30 7:00 9:30
OPENS FRI 9/28 Baby-friendly show! 10/2 2:30
2 DAYS IN PARIS
2:30 5:15 7:20
PEDRO COSTA SERIES
Mon. 10/1 @ 5pm - Down To Earth
Tue. 10/2 @ 5pm - The Blood
Wed. 10/3 @ 5pm In Vanda's Room
Thu. 10/4 @ 5pm Colossal Youth
DEATH AT A FUNERAL
Fri-Tue, Thu: 3:00 7:50
Wed: 3:00 8:20
Paprika 9:20
once
Fri-Sun: 5:00 9:40
Mon, Tue, Thu: 9:40
28 AMITY ST. DOWNTOWN AMHERST
413-253-2547
www.AmherstCinema.org

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

	9
6		7	4	1
			9		6		4
5			1	9	2	3
	2						7
		8	7	5	3			4
	1		5		4
				6	1	9		2
							8



Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

ACROSS
1 Taxicabs
6 Sun-dried brick
11 Outback bird
14 Dazzling display
15 Big name in copiers
16 Carpet texture
17 Contest site
18 Freeze over
19 Actor Curry
20 Serre side
22 Masquerade mask
24 Blockhead
25 Points of origin
26 Frantic cry
30 Most like a crying baby
31 Yuks
32 Hidden supply
33 Harrow's rival
34 Reserves in advance
35 Disgusting
39 Stood sock-skill
40 Part of ROK
41 Lawfulness
45 Iraq neighbor
46 Genesis
47 Slow-witted
48 Went by dugout
49 Narcissus kin
54 Invite
55 Manner of fiction
57 Not justified
58 Support piece
59 Reverse of a single
60 Dress up
61 Theater sign letters
62 Egads!
63 Vacant flat sign

DOWN
1 Start to mend
2 Square measure
3 Staff sign
4 Philosopher Immanuel
5 Horse hotels
6 Cutting down
7 Oinup or poop
8 Raw mineral
9 Private sitting rooms of women
10 Set forth
11 Tempt
12 Natalie of the Dixie Chicks
13 Highest
21 Razor-billed diving bird
23 X-ray cousin
25 Tremble
26 ___ Loves You
27 Hornburg or fedora
28 Greek letter
29 Novelist McEwan
30 Feeling dizzy
32 Owl sounds
34 Italian Adriatic port
35 Dash
36 "Silver" author Levin
37 Hawaiian garland
38 Have dinner
39 Passes quickly
40 Smallest citrus fruit
41 Townies
42 Pencil-ender
43 Ornamental Chinese tree
44 Gone by 45 Extended family
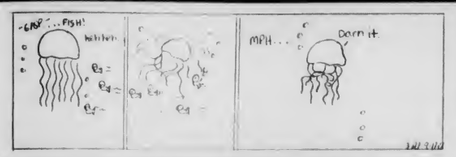
47 Apothecary units
49 Green shade
50 Take apart
51 Bray of rock
52 Enticement
53 Transported
56 Kind of service or gloss

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

GRADUATE LOUNGE
Not Just For Grads
Open To All 21 +
Serving Beer & Wine
CAMPUS CENTER CONCOURSE
UNION BILLIARDS
Pool, Games & More
Open To All Ages
Great For Functions
DOWNSTAIRS STUDENT UNION
BOTH OPEN MON-FRI 11-9
CALL 545-2045 FOR INFO



Submit your comics!
collegiancomics@yahoo.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Put the money on the table and get your mack on, break it down, split it up, and get your math on."
– Sean Combs/Puff Daddy/P. Diddy/Diddy

ECOLOGY BY JEN FILL

PAUL BY BILLY O'KEEFE

LABRAT BY RICHARD MARTELLY

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Get the guy handing out Bibles and the ladies handing out condoms to be a team.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
The comic in the bottom left corner of this page represents your plans for tonight.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
You are the closest thing to heaven that most people will ever see.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Tone down a smidge; you're so intense that your friends need safety goggles.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Your breath is the primary reason why every organism around you is in a coma.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
You can be noisy and intrusive; basically you're Iago the parrot from Aladdin.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Never settle for being just another drop in the bucket. Jump out and make a splash.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Buy a pair of reading glasses so people think you're sophisticated and literate.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Only a true hero can stay out late enough that Friday and Saturday merge as one.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Dream of a world where we don't even need to milk cows, we simply cheese them.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
It's never to early to start thinking of names for your chilren. I reccommend Beaulla.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Your current situation is best served by a glass of chocolate milk and grilled cheese.

LA PIAZZA PIZZA
BEST FOOD IN AMHERST
GRAND OPENING
30 BOLTWOOD WALK
AMHERST MA
HOURS OF OPERATION
SUN - THU 4 PM - 2 AM
FRI - SAT 4 PM - 3 AM
FAST FREE DELIVERY OR PICK-UP
CALL (413)253-6444
PIZZA CALZONES SUBS
SALADS WINGS ENTREES
AND MORE
Check Our Menu On Line
WWW.LAPIAZZARISTORANTE.US
TO GO MENU

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ACTIVITIES

Montreal weekend from $99.00. Complete, motel, transportation and more. Montreal express.net 781-979-9001. Lowest Prices on campus.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Free! Ride to Church & back in Dwight Chapel Van. Be at Haigis Mall @10:00 a.m. or Converse Hall @ 10:20 a.m. Sundays. www.dwightchapel.org See you there!

APARTMENT FOR RENT

4 Bedroom Townhouse, Amherst, AC, on bus route. $1799/month. All utilities included. Contact: caseofme@gmail.com

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520. Ext. 162

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Work at home part-time flagging inappropriate videos on blabbermash.com Contact us through site:

Business Student For data entry and answering phones. Must have car 413-210-5295

CAFE HELP PART-TIME nights and weekends must be fast, accurate, efficient and friendly. Apply in person at the woodstar cafe. 60 Masonic St. Northampton.

SALONS & SPAS

Heated stone massage with shiatsu! www.shearblissamherst.com 413-253-2322

HOLISTIC SALON AND SPA Natural smooth body sugaring (wax). www.shearblissAmherst.com 413-253-2322

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

SERVICES

Concerned About Your Eating? Do you eat too little? Eat too much? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic. 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling & rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992 27 Pray Street, Amherst www.tapestryhealth.org

TRAVEL

"#1 Spring Break Website! 4 & 7 night trips Low prices guaranteed Group discounts for 8+ Book 20 people, get 3 free trips! Campus reps needed. www.StudentCity.com or 800-293-1445

Spring Break 2008 Sell Trips, Earn Cash and Go Free. Call for group discounts. Best Deals Guaranteed! Info/Reservations 800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

WANTED

EGG DONORS NEEDED $15,000 (PLUS ALL EXPENSES). We are seeking women who are attractive, under the age of 29, SAT 1300+ (math+verbal), physically fit and maintaining a healthy lifestyle. If you have a desire to help an infertile family and would like more information please contact us. Email darlene@aperfectmatch.com www.aperfectmatch.com 1-800-264-8828

Please Recycle
Thank You

28 2007

OCT

1

2

0

0

7

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Now it counts

Minutewomen take perfect record into conference play

By Steve Games
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's soccer team begins its quest to bring the program back to respectability this weekend as Atlantic 10 play gets underway.

The Minutewomen ended the non-conference portion of their schedule unbeaten at 5-0-1. Today they are in Philadelphia to take on Saint Joseph's and return home to face Duquesne (3-3-0) on Sunday.

The Minutewomen have won their last four games, while Saint Joseph's has dropped its last five. The Hawks (2-6-1) have played well at home on their artificial turf, where they are 2-0. UMass looks at conference play as a new season and understands that each game means something.

"Right now our record is 0-0 and there has been a bunch of talk about undefeated this and that," UMass coach Jim Rudy said. "I don't think we really look at it as being undefeated; we look at it as we've come through that portion and we've done pretty good and we're happy with it.

"Hopefully we're prepared to go into our conference portion," he added. "If we can get a win, let's get a win, let's go for three points and if we can get three that's great, and if we can't get three then let's get one."

To receive at least one point the teams must tie at the end of double overtime. The Minutewomen will have to overcome an extra obstacle to receive points in the standings. The Astro Turf gives the team trouble because the players are used to playing on grass. Last year they beat the Hawks on the turf, 2-0, but were forced to take long-range shots.

"That's going to be our big issue, is playing on that stuff, because it's just so different, it's different than Field Turf," Rudy said. "They're undefeated at home. They're 2-0 at home and 0-6 on the road."

Rudd Field has natural grass, which is easier on the knees and joints.

"We're hoping that the skill work we did, that was really emphasized last spring, winter and again this fall will pay off,"

See W. SOCCER on page 5

Senior captain Jenny Rochrig and the Minutewomen enter conference play this weekend for a pair of games against Atlantic 10 rivals. UMass will play Saint Joseph's on the road Friday, and Duquesne at home Sunday.

Senior goalkeeper Kristin Walker has started all six games this season for the undefeated Minutewomen. She has a 4-0-1 record in 2007, with 40 saves and only two goals allowed.

'D' dominant for UM

Walker, freshmen defenders keying wins for Rudy and Co.

By Dominic Poli
Collegian Staff

One of the crucial factors in any team's success is the performance of its defense. All of the hustle and goal-scoring in the world means little if the 'D' doesn't help keep digits off opponents' scoreboards.

The Massachusetts women's soccer team boasts one of the top defenses in the Atlantic 10 Conference, hovering in the top three in four defensive categories. UMass, led by redshirt senior Kristin Walker in net, has allowed three goals in six games, with a goals-against average of 0.48 – both conference bests.

The lone Vermont tally in Sunday's 3-1 win over the Catamounts was the first goal from the field given up by UMass this season. All other goals have been scored off corner kicks or as the result of a wild, foot-flying battle in front of the net.

The solid play of this defense comes as a relief to UMass coach Jim Rudy, who in the preseason was afraid the absence of an injured Tina Rodriquez would have dire consequences.

"The defense has been rounding into shape well. That was the big question without I-Rod there," said Rudy. "It's as solid a defense as we've had in years. Last year, we were pretty solid and the year before that, not too bad. But I think it is a work in progress."

When Rodriguez, now a senior, tore her ACL against La Salle on Oct. 1 of last season, Rudy became nervous that his defense – which he says is the base from which an offensive attack jumps – would crumble. But then-junior Christina Nunes and freshman Sydney Stoll picked up the slack in the backfield.

See DEFENSE on page 5

Terriers bring bark to Rudd

Minutemen welcome BU in non-conference matchup

By Joe Meloni
Collegian Staff

Coming off a decisive 2-0 win against Northeastern last Saturday, the Massachusetts men's soccer team welcomes Boston University to Rudd Field tomorrow.

Against Northeastern, the Minutemen (3-4-0) consistently pressured the Husky defense and broke through early in the second half with a Bryan Hogan header. Minutes later a scrum in front of the net produced a Mike DeSantis tally.

With the two-goal lead, UMass played strong defense but also did a great job of turning failed NU attacks into scoring opportunities. Junior Prince Ofosu had two chances late and although he didn't convert either time, holding possession drained precious seconds off the clock.

This forced the Huskies to move the ball frantically up the field which led to several quick turnovers in the UMass defensive third.

The Terriers (4-3-0) took on the Huskies on Sept. 3 and fared as well as the Minutemen, winning, 3-0.

The win over Northeastern came directly after a loss to No. 21 Boston College. In fact, all three of the Terrier losses came to teams currently in the SSC AA adidas Top 25. BU dropped a 3-0 decision to No. 5 Santa Clara on Sept. 9 in Providence, R.I., and 2-1 to No. 10 Harvard on Sept. 14.

"[BU has] played some good teams," UMass coach Sam Koch said. "It's going to be an interesting game; there's no question about it. It's a big game for us as we need to make sure that we continue to improve from last game."

Against the Crimson, an own-goal in the third minute forced the Terriers to play from behind throughout the whole game. When Harvard doubled its advantage in the 47th minute, the

See M. SOCCER on page 5

Prince Ofosu and the Minutemen welcome Boston University to Rudd Field Saturday for a non-conference matchup.

Tough test awaits UMass at Albany

By Scott Feldman
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts field hockey team travels to Albany, N.Y., this weekend for a matchup with No. 17 Albany on Sunday.

The Minutewomen (5-5) have a great deal of talent, but have suffered from consistency issues recently. Last Wednesday they struggled to beat Brown, 2-1, which was winless coming into the game.

But Saturday they came close to pulling off a huge upset on the road against No. 4 Connecticut, before allowing a game-winning goal with one minute, 18 seconds left in regulation. UMass fell, 3-2, despite twice holding the lead.

The Maroon and White have a .500 record, but they are showing signs of improvement – especially on the offensive end. For a team that scored a total of nine goals in their first seven games – and that has been shutout three times during that span – scoring two goals in each of the last three games they've played in is a great sign that the offense is starting to gel.

Cher King leads the team in goals and is undeniably the leader of the offense. She's only seen limited action in the last couple of games due to an undisclosed injury. Whether she will be at full-strength for the game against Albany is unknown.

In her absence, the Minutewomen have received a

See FIELD HOCKEY on page 6

Erin Parker has two goals and two assists this season in 10 games. She has started every game in 2007 after suffering an injury last year.

Local bunch playing on Koch's roster

Team heavily represented by players from the Northeast

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

A quick look down the roster of nearly any collegiate team in New England and one thing will stand out – the large number of international players. A glance at the roster of the Massachusetts men's soccer team, however, and you'll notice players from Union, N.J., and New Holland, Penn.

"Some people think that Stoneham, Mass., is a foreign place," joked UMass coach Sam Koch.

Though the Minutemen boast five players from the West Coast, the majority of the squad's athletes hail from the Northeast. When you consider that Northeastern has players from Egypt, Ireland, Germany, Iceland, Norway and Australia, it makes Scottsdale seem like Springfield.

Since soccer is played in almost every country on the planet, unlike some other sports of the Division I level, many associate international talent with success on the field.

But then again, the Minutemen's 2-0 victory over the Huskies is evidence enough that a cosmopolitan roster does not guarantee a winning squad.

"We're trying to find the best players to fill out our squad," Koch said. "So if it's a local player or not, that's not the issue as far as trying to find the best players."

The Maroon and White has only one local player in its ranks – freshman Mario Terrentino of East Longmeadow. Even though Western Mass. and the rest of the state isn't exactly a hot bed of soccer talent, Koch acknowledges the responsibility to have a Bay State presence on the squad.

"We certainly want to have local guys play," Koch said. "I want a roster full of Massachusetts players. We're the state school, so we'll do everything we can to have a full Massachusetts roster. Right now, we're far from it. But I think you'll see that it fluctuates some years we're two-thirds,

See RECRUITING on page 5

MINUTEMEN DEFEAT BU | PAGE 12

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN
NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

PARTLY CLOUDY : HI: 76 LO: 49 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM MONDAY, OCTOBER 1, 2007

Two stabbed outside Student Union

By Will McGuinness
Collegian Staff

Two people were stabbed in the early hours of Sunday morning, and police are now searching for leads and a suspect.

At approximately 1:57 a.m., seven UMPD officers responded to a call in the Student Union area.

Police reports indicate a crowd dispersed immediately upon the arrival of squad cars, leaving freshman Johnny Evans, 19, of Durham, N.C., bleeding from a stab wound in the left buttocks on the northeast steps of the W.E.B. Du Bois Library.

According to Ed Blaguszewski, UMass director of news and information, several hundred students left the Student Union following a dance at 2 a.m.

During the crowd's departure, two fights broke out – one on the building's steps, the other in close proximity to the library.

Police are searching for the weapon used. According to Blaguszewski, it was probably a knife.

Blaguszewski had no information regarding which group was hosting the event.

Evans, a fullback on the UMass football team, sustained other minor cuts and was transported to Baystate Medical Center in Springfield, MA, where police say he is in fair condition.

The other victim is reported to have sustained a wound to the arm. He did not cooperate with police and refused medical attention. There is no word as to whether the second victim is a UMass student.

UMPD Deputy Chief of Police Patrick Archbald said the department is actively fielding leads involving the case and working toward finding a suspect.

Blaguszewski sent out an e-mail at 10:30 a.m. to all undergraduates and university personnel describing the incident.

He said there was no need to alert students sooner because the police had concluded the incident was isolated and did not pose an immediate danger to others on campus.

Instead, the e-mail was sent because he thought "it wise to make the students aware."

He added it was important to provide notification of similar events on a timetable proportionate to a situation's severity.

He stressed that despite the events of Sunday morning, students and staff should resume their usual activities.

Police urge anyone who has information about this incident to contact the Detective Bureau, the non-emergency line at 413-545-2121, or the tips line at 413-577-8477.

Further information will be shared with the campus community as developments occur.

Will McGuinness can be reached at wmcguinn@gmail.com

Outside the Student Union building early Sunday morning, UMPD found two people with stab wounds.

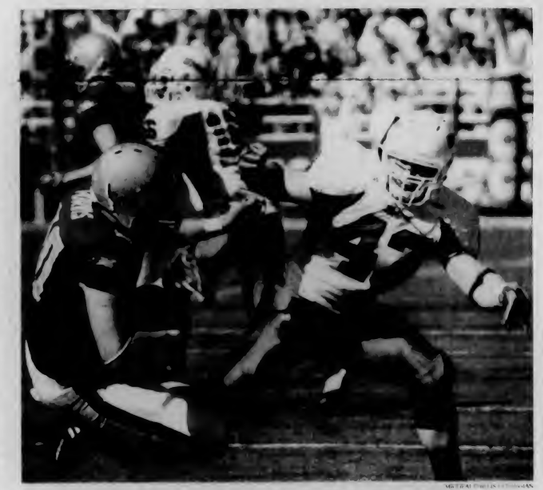
Amherst board criticized

By Frank Vitale
Collegian Staff

In a complaint filed Sept. 20 to the State Ethics Commission, Amherst political critic Larry Kelley questioned the interests of two members of the Amherst Select Board in a vote made on Sept. 17, calling for the vote to be voided.

The Sept. 17 vote was to waive effluent water charges for the University of Massachusetts, saving the university $37,000 a year, with the town forfeiting $2 00,000 over the next five years. It passed 3-2.

Kelley's complaint and an amendment he made to it five days later) accuses Selectmen Robert Kusner and Alisa Brewer of having a conflict of interest on this particular vote, due to their association with the University.



Kusner is a professor in the Mathematics and Statistics department at UMass while Brewer's husband Steven is a professor in the Biology department.

Kelley claimed that Kusner's "decisive vote significantly benefited his employer."

Both Kusner and Brewer failed to fill out disclosure forms explaining why no conflict of interests existed by the time of the vote. However, they did file the paperwork a week

See COMPLAINT on page 3

Agony of defeat

Falling short at Chestnut Hill, red shirt senior linebacker Jason Hatchell and the Minutemen could not overcome their own mistakes in BC's 24-14 victory. Hatchell registered a team-high nine tackles in the game (see story on page 12).

Students to help Katrina victims rebuild

By Megan McPhilmy
Collegian Correspondent

Nearly two years after Katrina devastated New Orleans, the city still lies in disrepair.

During spring break 2008, the University of Massachusetts plans to lend a helping hand.

UMass senior Amanda Baldi has developed an alternative spring break program, UMass Spring Recess: Gulf Coast 2008, which any student can apply to their major.

Baldi has noticed interest for the program, even though it's in the early stages.

"I've seen a lot of interest already," she said. "I think people are interested in community service but they don't know how to involve it in their own lives. I think that people can do something within their own knowledge base – they can do something to help others."

UMass has a number of spring break programs on campus both curricular and non-curricular.

The curricular ones are run by different departments. The anthropology and history departments have one, but UMass Spring Recess: Gulf Coast 2008 will count as a one-credit, graded independent study.

Inspired by previous trips through Habitat for Humanity, Baldi hopes to take her community service project to a new level.

"The purpose is to discover the power of our own education," said Baldi.

The group will head south to help rebuild, but will also engage in a variety of projects related to New Orleans while still in Amherst.

Students will research a problem area in regard to their particular field of study in an attempt to apply their education to the real world.

Meghan Mello, a sophomore Hotel and Tourism Management major, wishes to research the process of rebuilding a major tourism hub.

See BREAK on page 3

Frat builds wheelchair ramp

By Nick Bush
Collegian Staff

For some frat brothers, community service is near the bottom of their priority list, right behind returning all the empty beer cans to the recycling center.

However, Pi Kappa Phi at the University of Massachusetts has been striving to be more than the typical perception of a fraternity.

This past Saturday, the fraternity built a ramp at a South Pleasant Street home for a local Amherst resident restricted to a wheelchair.

"Pi Kappa Phi is trying to redefine 'fraternity,'" said member Phil Benevides. "All of our members have decided to make Pi Kappa alcohol-free. We have other focuses that we feel are more important than partying, such as helping people."

The locals appreciate the help the fraternity brothers provided.

"I'm delighted that these boys could come to help," said Eleanor, 82, who received the ramp free of charge.

A local artist and long time Amherst resident, she no longer needs assistance entering and exiting her home.

The ramp is just one of many acts of community service that Pi Kappa Phi has taken part in through its

See FRATERNITY on page 3

Eleanor (far right) and members of Pi Kappa Phi (left to right) Kegan Fielding, Phil Benevides and Matt Sloan admire the Amherst resident's new wheelchair ramp.

Research funding increases for 2007

By Caitlin Quinn
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts received $131 million in research funding for the 2007 fiscal year, which was an increase of 13 percent, marking the largest percentage increase in over a decade.

"This terrific news comes as no surprise since the national reputation of UMass Amherst researchers is well-known," said interim Chancellor Thomas Cole Jr.

The amount of funding universities receive is based on a number of factors.

"Ultimately it's the quality of the faculty," said Paul Kostecki, vice provost for research.

Kostecki also said the increase in funding UMass received is "based on good science and the quality of the proposals."

Credibility in UMass' academic departments also helps it compete for funding.

"We are well-renowned in areas such as polymer science and computer science," said Kostecki. "We also have one of the top linguistic departments in the country."

Charlene M. Seymour, UMass provost and senior vice chancellor for academic affairs, also attributes the success in research awards to the UMass faculty.

"The outstanding new faculty we've been able to attract via the Amherst 250 Plan, and the strong effort of the campus staff, including the facilities planning group that supports the physical needs of the research community, contribute considerably to this milestone," Seymour said in a press release.

The Amherst 250 Plan, put in place in June 2005, focused on adding new faculty positions in order to make the overall number equivalent in strength to the number of full-time

See FUNDING on page 3

Isenberg School of Management's
Chase Career Center
Presents

ISENBERG
SOM
CAREER DAY
2007

All Students Are Cordially Invited to Attend!!
Date: Tuesday, October 2, 2007
Place: Mullins Center
Time: Begins at 12:00 Noon Ends at 5:00 PM

ARENA FLOOR:
Abercrombie & Fitch
Acosta Sales and Marketing
Aggregate Industries
Aldi, Inc.
Alexander, Aronson, Finning & Co., P.C.
Ameriprise Financial
Avery Dennison
Babson Capital Management
Boston Beer Company
Brown & Brown Inc.
C&S Wholesale Grocers, Inc.
Cambridge Associates, LLC
Comm. of MA Division of Banks
Consolidated Graphics
Constellation Commodities Group
CVS/Pharmacy
Deloitte & Touche
DiCicco, Gulman & Company LLP
Edelstein & Company LLP (public accounting)
EMC Corporation
Enterprise Rent-A-Car
Ercolini & Company LLP
Ernst & Young
Eze Castle Software LLC, A BNY ConvergEx Group Company
Fastenal Company
Federated Insurance
Feeley & Driscoll, P.C.
Frito-Lay, Inc
GlaxoSmithKline Pharmaceuticals
Gorton's
Grant Thornton LLP
Gray, Gray & Gray, LLP
Hanover Insurance Group
Hertz
Huron Consulting Group
Internal Revenue Service
John Hancock Financial Network-Boston Partners
Kohl's Department Stores
KPMG, LLP
Landa & Altsher, P.C.
Liberty Mutual
Lightolier
Lowe's Companies, Inc.
Macy's
Medical Information Technology, Inc. (MEDITECH)
Meyers Brothers Kalicka, P.C.
Millward Brown
Moriarty & Primack, P.C.
Morris & Morris, P.C.
Needel, Welch & Stone, PC
NEPC
Northwestern Mutual Financial Network
Novogradac & Company LLP
O'Connor & Drew, P.C.
PeoplesBank
Pepsi Bottling Group
Protiviti
Pyxis Mobile, Inc.
RadioWaves, Inc.
Raytheon Company
RSM McGladrey/McGladrey & Pullen
Samet & Company PC
SS&C Technologies, Inc.
State Street Corporation
Target Stores
TechTarget
Teradyne
The Sherwin Williams Company
Travelers
UHY Advisors N.E., LLC
United Technologies Corp.
Vistaprint
Vitale Caturano & Company, PC
Walgreens
Walter & Shuffain, PC
Wells Fargo Financial
Wolf & Company, P.C.
Wolseley's North American Division

CONCOURSE LEVEL:
Babies R Us/Toys R Us
Bank of New York Mellon
Black & Decker
Blinds To Go
Comcast Spotlight
Fidelity Investments
First Investors Corp.
John Hancock (Corporate)
Levine, Katz, Nannis & Solomon
New England Financial Group, LLC
PricewaterhouseCoopers
Ryder Systems, Inc
TJX Companies, Inc.
Touchstone Crystal
Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A., Inc.

For your convenience there will be a van leaving Hagis Mall to the Mullins Center every 20 minutes from 11:45am to 5:00pm

Some helpful hints: (1) Bring a supply of resumes with you to leave with company representatives you meet; (2) Dress appropriately. This means tie and jacket for men, dress or blouse, skirt, or pansuit for women. (3) Speak with corporate representatives of interest to you and ask for a business card, if available.

OCT 1 2007

Critic condems Sept. vote

COMPLAINT from page 1

later, and Brewer made a spoken disclosure after making the motion.

Kelley accused the board of trying to cover its tracks in his blog, onlyintherepublicofamherst.blogspot.com.

"And if the Select board is not trying to cover its tracks and rewrite history," wrote Kelley, "then why did Ms. Brewer and Mr. Kusner sneak into the Town Clerk's office two days ago to file the disclosure form they should have filed on the seventeenth? I use the word sneak because if they thought there was nothing wrong with that then why not call a press conference for the occasion?"

On her own blog at alisaforamherst.blogspot.com, Brewer waves off Kelley's charges, remaining confidant the vote will stand.

"The vote Mr. Kelley didn't like will not be overturned because the Ethics Commission will find that UMass faculty (or faculty wife, in my case) does not have a financial interest in the outcome of the vote," wrote Brewer.

Brewer also cited part of Massachusetts General Law 268A:19, the set of rules governing conflict of interests for municipal employees.

According to the law, a municipal employee who participates in his work while having knowledge that his actions would financially benefit himself, an immediate family member or partner, his employer or any person with whom he is negotiating for possible future employment faces a fine of up to three thousand dollars and/or two years jail time.

However, section (b)(3) states that it shall not be a violation "if the particular matter involves a determination of general policy and the interest of the municipal employee or members of his immediate family is shared with a substantial segment of the population of the municipality."

Kelley himself has been very vocal in his opposition to this vote, commenting on it on his blog.

Frank Vitale can be reached at fvitale@student.umass.edu

UM receives $131 million

FUNDING from page 1

students.

The plan was prompted by a loss in faculty before 2005 at UMass and other top American research universities posing a stronger competitive threat.

According to the Office of Grants and Contracts Administration, 70 percent of research funding comes from the federal government. The awards come from many different departments and foundations within the federal government.

$33 million, one of the largest awards from any one department, came from the National Science Foundation (NSF) in 2007, an increase of about $2 million from 2006.

A substantial amount of this federal funding also comes from the Department of Defense, whose contribution this year was about $9 million, nearly double the previous years.

The Department of Defense gave research money to 67 universities in 2007. They give funding to university studies that combine "areas of DoD relevance" and "more than one traditional science and engineering discipline," according to their press release.

There was also a $7.2 million increase in research awards from the Commonwealth of Massachusetts during the past year. It reached about $15 million for 2007.

The biggest contributors within the Commonwealth of Massachusetts were departments such as The Massachusetts Department of Business and Technology and The Massachusetts Department of Conservation and Recreation.

Private sector funding also showed positive growth, at $34 million, up from about $25.5 million in 2006. So did industry-sponsored research, totaling about $12.5 million up from about $11 million in 2006.

"The campus's steady growth in industry-sponsored research reflects our commitment to engaging our industry partners in research that helps them stay competitive and supports the economic growth of the state," said Kosecki.

Caitlin Quinn can be reached at cquinn@student.umass.edu

Amherst woman receives chair ramp

FRATERNITY from page 1

national philanthropic organization Push America.

Founded in 1977 by Pi Kappa brothers Durward Owen and Thomas Sayre, Push America works year round to raise awareness and funding for those with disabilities.

With the help of the Stavros Center for Independent Living, Pi Kappa Phi has been able to get in touch with many people with disabilities that could benefit from their philanthropy.

The fraternity has built three ramps in the Amherst area for people with disabilities thus far. All of them have been part of Push America's AccessABILITY project, which aims to make everyday life easier for those stricken to wheelchairs.

"We are happy to come to Eleanor's house and make it more accessible for her," said Pi Kappa Phi brother Matt Schoenberg, who is also the community service and Push America executive for the fraternity.

"We take a lot of pride in serving people with disabilities, and do what we can to raise money and awareness," he said.

Chartered in 2006, Pi Kappa Phi is one of the newest fraternities on campus with 38 active brothers and 12 alumni at U Mass. Pi Kappa Phi has the country's northernmost chapter of Push America, traditionally a southern fraternity.

Push America hosts a number of events each year to promote their causes, most notably the Journey of Hope, a bike ride across the United States.

"Last year we were proud to have two of our brothers participate in the Journey of Hope," said Schoenberg. "One of them even took part in riding, which is obviously a big accomplishment."

Pi Kappa Phi and Push America have put together a number of events in the past year in addition to their work with AccessABILITY, including a number of 5k runs to raise awareness and funds.

One race last year raised over $16,000, all of which will go toward charitable causes, such as their work this weekend.

The fraternity has 128 active chapters nationwide, and 11 associate chapters.

Originating in South Carolina, Pi Kappa Phi has 97,000 initiated brothers, and is currently the fastest growing national fraternity. Its main goal is the development of strong leadership ability within its brothers through charity work.

Nick Bush can be reached at nbush@student.umass.edu

Students to help in New Orleans

Students from UMass will be joining the efforts of students like these from the University of Richmond to help rebuild after Katrina.

BREAK from page 1

Jamie Bergstein, a public health major, intends to research the effects of the hurricane on the health and health education of the population.

The idea behind Spring Recess 2008 is to demonstrate that everyone has their purpose in a community and that "a city is not simply made of buildings."

In previous years, Baldi has taken similar trips with the Habitat for Humanity group with the Five-College consortium.

She said the major issue with the trips in the past has been lack of organization, and so this trip will be solely for UMass students.

The group plans to hold numerous fundraisers for the trip and is looking for professors to sponsor the participating students.

Megan McPhillemy can be reached at mmcphille@student.umass.edu

Pi Kappa Phi brother Matt Sloan (left) and Eleanor (right) examine a newly built wheelchair ramp at her South Pleasant street home.

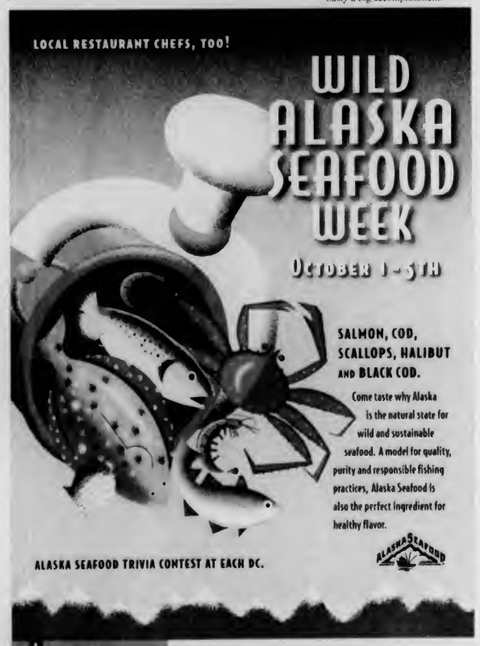
The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVIII
issue 20

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Nicholas Belanger
Managing Editor Katie Huston
Business Manager Dan Exter
Production Manager Chris Martin
Night Supervisor Meghan Murphy
Advertising Manager Alex Bender
Arts & Living Editor Tim McCall
Comics Editor Adam Seagen
Editorial Editor Sean Sullivan
News Editor Derrick Perkins
Sports Editor Jeremy Rice
Asst. Business Manager Eric Szymczak
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Stephanie McPherson
Asst. Arts & Living Rean McAskill
Asst. Arts & Living Teresa Reilly
Asst. Editorial James Mathews
Asst. Editorial Melissa Garber
Assistant News Kate Olesin
Assistant News Will McGuinness
Assistant News Holly Seabury
Assistant Sports Michael King
Assistant Sports Joe Mylod
Assistant Sports Eli Rosenzweike
Web Editor James Hale
Photo Editor Toan Trinh

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic semesters. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Two-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been incorporated since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today



NIGHT EDITOR
Nick Belanger

COPY EDITOR
Greg McCarthy

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1809 and snap a photo, then send it to news@dailycollegian.com

LOCAL RESTAURANT CHEFS, TOO!

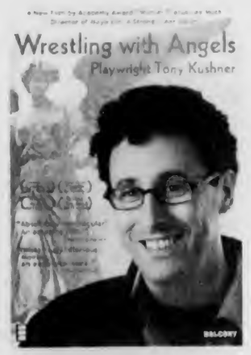
WILD ALASKA SEAFOOD WEEK
OCTOBER 1 - 5TH

SALMON, COD, SCALLOPS, HALIBUT AND BLACK COD.

Come taste why Alaska is the natural state for wild and sustainable seafood. A model for quality, purity and responsible fishing practices, Alaska Seafood is also the perfect ingredient for healthy flavor.

ALASKA SEAFOOD TRIVIA CONTEST AT EACH DC.

RANDY RICE, Seafood Technical Director for the Alaska Seafood Marketing Institute, will speak on seafood sustainability and nutrition.
THURSDAY, OCTOBER 4TH AT 7PM
IN THE BERKSHIRE ROOM



www.umass.edu/diningservices

DINING SERVICES

Seafood WATCH

Tony Kushner won a Pulitzer Prize for Angels in America and an Oscar nomination for his screenplay to Munich

This film provides a fascinating look at Kushner's dramatic work, which explores a wide range of social and political issues including McCarthyism and AIDS, Afghanistan and Middle East politics, race relations, the Holocaust, and what it means to be an outsider.

Film: "Wrestling With Angels"
Tuesday, October 2nd at 7:00 pm
School of Management, Room 137
Umass Amherst

Kushner will also be speaking on-campus next week. Don't miss it!
More information at www.umass.edu/jewish
FREE and open to the public

UMASS AMHERST
Presented by the Office of Jewish Affairs, Student Union and Theater Department
Cosponsored by the Center for Student Development and Student Affairs & Campus Life. More information at (413) 545-[illegible] www.umass.edu/jewish

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, OCTOBER 1, 2007

"It were best that we not all think alike; it is difference of opinion that makes horseraces." – Mark Twain

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Jena incident hints at a bigger picture

If one were to judge the political diversity of a university based on the pamphlets and posters that plaster the walls and telephone poles around campus, the University of Massachusetts would appear to be not only diverse, but active. With activities and lectures being hosted by everyone from the Radical Student Union to MassPIRG to the Republican Club, it seems that lots of UMass students have an awful lot to say on a large number of issues. One issue that seems to have flown under the radar of our many activists, however, is the many contemporary examples of institutionalized discrimination, particularly recently, on the basis of race.

Katy Bruck

One such incident that has received a certain amount of attention is the circumstances surrounding the Jena Six. For those who don't know, the logistics of this incident, last year in the predominantly white town of Jena, Louisiana, an African American student sat under a tree that was deemed unofficially an exclusively "white" gathering place. A day later, three nooses were found hanging from that tree. The white students found guilty of hanging the nooses were given a slap on the wrist and suspended from school for three days. The ensuing back-and-forth of brawls and confrontations eventually resulted in the beating of one of the white students involved, Justin Barker.

Thousands of protesters took to the streets in Jena, Louisiana last week.

Barker was treated for his injuries, which proved far less than fatal, and meanwhile the six students credited with his assault were brought up on charges of attempted murder and conspiracy.

So far, only Mychal Bell, who was 16 at the time, has faced conviction, which (some say as a result of all the attention Jena has been experiencing since the incident) was overturned by an appeals court on the basis that Bell should never have been charged as an adult. He is still in jail while prosecutors decide whether to bring new charges against him, and the fate of the other five boys is still up in the air.

It's important to note that the current administration holds a murky position on the progress of civil rights legislation.

Bell's mother says that once everything is cleared up, she's moving her family out of Jena. My question is, where will they go? A story coming out of the same region that's received a little less attention provides some perspective on just how pervasive institutionalized racism still is in the Southern parts of our country. The Tuscaloosa, Alabama school system, which is 72% African American, recently responded to the complaints by white parents of "overcrowding" by completely re-zoning the entire school district. This effectively shunted all but a handful of minority students out of higher performing schools (namely Northridge High, in a wealthy, predominantly white neighborhood), and into under-funded, racially homogenous schools. The two major reasons for the re-zoning, from the school board's point of view, were to utilize already existing buildings "in the best possible way," and more notably, to draw parents of white students now attending private schools back into the public school system by reducing the black majority at Northridge.

Many of the parents of minority students in Tuscaloosa are citing the No Child Left Behind Act as the basis of what they claim to be the illegal actions of the Tuscaloosa school board. One of the provisions within the act is that, if a school fails to meet the standards of achievement established by the NCLB act for two consecutive years, students have the choice to be bussed to better schools in their district, while the federal government picks up the tab. So, Tuscaloosa parents are claiming that moving students from good schools to sub-standard schools is illegal, and violates the basic constructs of the NCLB Act.

It is yet to be seen if the NCLB act will be successful in over-ruling the Tuscaloosa re-zoning, but considering the lack of support and attention the issue has received so far, it's more likely that the situation won't be resolved any time in the foreseeable future.

No single person or administration can be blamed entirely for this inattentiveness to issues of civil rights. But it's important to note that the current administration holds a murky position on the progress of civil rights legislation. Since 2001, President Bush's preferred tactic has been to delay voting on such proposals so as to render them virtually useless toward their intended purposes. In 2002, the Help America Vote Act, intended to streamline and reform our voting system, was signed into law 11 months behind schedule, essentially allowing many voters in inaccessible or low-priority districts to remain disenfranchised. President Bush himself also staunchly opposes expanding hate crime legislation to include crimes committed on the basis of sexual orientation, stating that "all violent crimes are crimes of hate," refusing to recognize the historical and contemporary examples of crimes that have occurred as a result of social prejudices. On Sept. 27, the House and Senate signed off on a defense authorization bill, into which they tucked an extension of federal hate crime protection, which Bush promised to veto should it be presented to him as a stand-alone bill.

Perhaps President Bush feels the need to delay and oppose such proposals because he simply doesn't consider them a priority. But with elections rapidly and publicly approaching, the lack of emphasis on most domestic policies, civil rights included, is going to come to the forefront.

Katy Bruck is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at kbruck@student.umass.edu.

High 'Time' for service

Time Magazine's September 10 edition featured a rather independent-looking woman flexing her muscles with the heading "The Case for National Service." Millions of Americans want to help their community, their country, their world, here's a plan to put those ideals in action." Indeed, Time's coverage of such an important issue at a time of such infinite national complexity and uncertainty is not only needed in theory, but should be seriously considered for its potential practical applications.

Brad DeFlumeri

Essentially what they are asking for, among other things – they lay out a ten-point plan for civilian national service – is the formation of a government-endorsed and initiated Institution of National Service that would grant college degrees in a similar fashion to our prestigious military academies at West Point (Army), Annapolis (Navy), and Colorado Springs (Air Force). Further, Time intelligently calls on the next president, Democrat or Republican, to elevate the Corporation for National Service – created in 1993 to manage Americorps, Senior Corps, and Learn and Serve America – to a Cabinet-level office. In this way, they argue, the Federal Government could be a compelling factor in encouraging volunteerism and public service-mindedness among our best and brightest high school graduates. In the process, it could train and equip an entire generation of young Americans with the mindset and skills needed to export American goodwill and humanitarianism abroad.

Despite the widespread perception that establishing additional government departments for any reason is a liberal notion, I could not be more whole-heartedly in agreement with Time's thesis that we need to harness the collective talents, energy, public-mindedness and patriotism of our current generation and utilize these assets in an effective way. Doing so can inspire our future leaders to laudable achievements while simultaneously helping our great nation restore some of its lost credibility and respect around the globe.

Our next president would do well to heed the call for volunteers who can take America's most cherished notions abroad.

Take this rather incisive observation from Time, for example. "Polls show that while confidence in our democracy and our government is near an all-time low, volunteerism and civic participation since the '70s are near all-time highs. Political scientists are perplexed about this. If confidence is so low, why would people bother volunteering? The explanation is pretty simple: People, especially young people, think the government and the public sphere are broken, but they feel they can personally make a difference through community service."

This is the case, as one can sense this from even looking around this campus and observing how many people genuinely care about the health of the country but vehemently oppose the actions of the government. So, our next president would undoubtedly do well to heed Time's calls for the concerted mobilization and training of bright young volunteers; volunteers who can take some of America's most cherished notions of democracy, sanctity of life and respect for liberty abroad.

To my utter chagrin, the Democratic presidential candidates have been much more positive and vocal on this issue than the Republican candidates. Chris Dodd (D-CT) has made national service his signature campaign issue and advocates the creation of a U.S. Public Service Academy that would offer subsidized higher education in exchange for five years of public service. In one way or another, all of the Democratic candidates support making national service a big-ticket agenda item for the federal government. However, this issue should not and can not be broken down on simple liberal – conservative lines. And to that effect, one prominent conservative senator recently said: "National Service is an issue that has been largely identified with the Democratic party and the left of the political spectrum ... That is unfortunate, because, duty, honor and country are values that transcend ideology ... National service is a crucial means of making our patriotism real to the benefit of both ourselves and our country."

John McCain, Republican presidential candidate and senator from Arizona is the man responsible for this infinitely enlightening and perceptive quote. His keen understanding of the importance of this issue may be a result of his time in Vietnam in the Navy, or it may be attributed to his time on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. In any event, he clearly appreciates the paramount importance of asking our young men and women to help the country and themselves in ways other than joining the military.

Ours is a politically conscious generation and the most well-educated, well-informed, technologically proficient generation in our country's history. If the global leadership of the Bush Administration has been such a disappointment to so many 18-30 year olds, then we need to act – in a way that can allow the rest of the world to see another side of America. Indeed, if a Democrat getting elected president is going to be the catalyst for the government financially emphasizing national service, then that may be a concession that I am willing to make.

Our government does so many things poorly, inefficiently, incompetently and wastes our hard-earned tax dollars in the process. Yet, at the same time, so many bright young high school and college student have an interest in the public sphere and an appreciation for the ideals that lie as the foundation of American greatness and sustainability. As a result, the ability or inability of our next President to leverage these sentiments of public interest and turn them into products from which our generation and the United States as a whole can derive a substantial benefit will go a long way toward ensuring how the rest of the world perceives us. And, to be sure, our generation's ability to get involved with reshaping America's global image will go a long way toward determining how we view ourselves too.

Brad DeFlumeri is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bdeflume@student.umass.edu

DAILY COLLEGIAN READER POLL

How safe do you feel on campus?

Entirely | Somewhat | Not at All

Cast your vote online at www.dailycollegian.com!

Cruel and unusual justice in Florida

This week I ask you to take a moment to close your eyes and envision the following situation. You are sitting at home, alone, when an overweight, middle-aged man with two first names, a pasty complexion, unruly facial hair and eyes set close to each other bursts in your front door wielding a knife and demands that you give yourself up to him. He leaves you beaten and alone.

Tom Sitzer

Bobby James Allen pleaded guilty this month to several cases of rape and sexual battery between 1998 and 1999. He is the heinous character I have asked you to visualize. Now, wouldn't it be wonderful if you could return the favor? It would seem fair to take away his manhood in reparation for what he viciously tore away from you, would it not? It would be most satisfying to remove from this animal the very essence of his evil, neuter the seeds of his destructive desires. Castrate the rotten criminal, no?

As a stipulation of his plea bargain agreement, Bobby James reduces his life sentence to only 25 years in prison by conceding to castration. Yep, they are going to cut off Allen's testicles, as well as 75 years of his sentence. Judge Michael Overstreet considers Allen a dangerous sexual predator, and charges him with ten years probation upon his release, when they will permanently attach a GPS tracking device to him.

Have we not developed as a society? Are we not barbarically sentencing a man to cruel and unusual punishment?

This infuriates me. Have we not developed as a society? Are we not barbarically sentencing a man to cruel and unusual punishment? I don't care if he concedes to castration, along with the side effects associated with it – he will surely grow breasts, develop erection problems, lose sexual prowess (part of the plan, of course), risk osteoporosis, and suffer hot flashes and hormonal frustrations. Overstreet stressed to Allen that these effects could, and most likely would, occur. So sure, it makes sense, but castrations, in my mind, are associated with slave cruelty and Jewish concentration camp torture. This cannot be the right way of dealing with a problem.

It brings me a small glint of satisfaction in my mind to consider that Allen, known as the "Ninja Rapist," is losing his manhood, and it obviously satisfies the victims, who were asked their opinion by Judge Overstreet before he made his decision. Yet it is simply inhumane, and I feel like we have penitentiaries and institutions that can and do punish and rehabilitate better than this solution of physical mutilation. I think, frankly, that Allen has found an escape. He is clearly a sick, twisted beast. He should have to serve every last minute of his life in prison, with or without testicles. I believe that this is a violation of human rights, and that Judge Overstreet is irresponsible in delivering the first castration sentence in Florida history. Allen shouldn't even have the option of choosing to plea for castration as a plea bargain. I cannot begin to postulate his motives behind the option; if the rumors are true, then no matter what, prison should be a living hell for a man of his description. The fact of the matter is that he will be out on the streets again, and even more psychologically mutated and unpredictable than before.

Why not pump him full of drugs to keep him sedated for the rest of his life? Why not just kill him? Why not throw him to a pit of wild, sexually frustrated lions? All of these options are about as creative, and clearly as unacceptable, as castration.

In defense of the 2,000 dollar procedure, which the state will foot the bill for, both Judge Overstreet and Prosecutor Larry Basford concur that the side effects will serve the necessary purpose of sterilizing Allen as a future member of society.

I cannot personally allow myself to think that justice has been served. Our institutions have a priority to process and rehabilitate criminals. By returning to medieval solutions to deal with offenders, we only regress as a nation. I like the fact that this man can no longer reproduce. I like that he will lose his sexual prowess. But it disheartens me to think that Judge Overstreet castrates men as a punishment. It is cruel and unusual. Creative, but surely not as sophisticated or progressive as proper institutionalization would be.

Thomas Sitzer is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at tomsitzer@gmail.com.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Editor@dailycollegian.com

STUDENTS TO LOBBY FOR AFFORDABLE TEXTBOOKS

Dear Editor,

The article "Textbook theft rises at UMass" by Eden Univer presents an issue that is affecting colleges around the nation; textbooks are no longer affordable, therefore theft of books and academic materials is on the rise. Students at the University of Massachusetts, as well as institutions across the country, spend an average of $900 on textbooks each year. From March 2005 to 2006, the costs of college textbooks rose six percent, according to the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics. They went up another eight percent this past year.

There are ways to relieve this burden for students. Textbooks would be less expensive if books were no longer bundled and shrink-wrapped. Often times there are extra materials added, like CDs or workbooks, that are of no use to students and simply increase the cost of the package. It would also be helpful if new editions were only issued when necessary. Students would be able to reuse books or sell used materials back to the Textbook Annex for a decent price, at the end of each semester.

As representatives of Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group, my co-campaigner, Bliss Requa-Trautz, and I invite any interested students, professors and faculty members to join us on Tuesday October 2, at the State House in Boston. We will lobby to show our support for the Affordable Textbooks bill, at the Higher Education Committee hearing. Our voices should be heard, and we can all do our part.

Best Regards,
Lauren Pardi

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, OCTOBER 1, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

HBO's 'Wounded Knee' ignites controversy

Stories altered to fit plotlines

By S.P. Sullivan
Collegian Staff

The Emmy-award winning HBO film "Bury My Heart at Wounded Knee," released this past summer, has received much praise for its portrayal of the effects of Western expansion on Native American peoples. Released this past May, the film is a fictionalized adaptation of the acclaimed book of same name by Dee Brown.

Brown's book, released in 1970, is a history of Native Americans in the late nineteenth century – a time during which throngs of white Americans were moving westward, and tensions between settlers and natives were high.

The book "Bury My Heart at Wounded Knee" presents a chapter-by-chapter account of the effects of American expansion on native peoples – from the Apache and Dine of the Southwest to the Sioux in the Black Hills. It provides factual evidence, first-person narratives and written accounts and was given much praise for its reference-laden description of events that went long-undiscussed in American history.

Along with Vine Deloria's "Custer Died for Your Sins: an Indian Manifesto" and Leslie Marmon Silko's "Ceremony," "Bury My Heart at Wounded Knee" instantly became required reading for anyone interested in American Indian studies.

The film however, being a fictionalized adaptation, has raised more than a few eyebrows among natives and purveyors of Native American studies. While the book is an expansive history of the purported genocide of indigenous peoples, HBO's adaptation focuses primarily on the Sioux, introducing characters not mentioned in Brown's account and altering historical events to better fit the plot.

And although Hollywood adaptations of historical events are rarely left unskewed, what makes Bury My Heart's distortion all the more contentious is the opinion of an overwhelming majority of historians and native peoples that the history we're taught in school is equally inaccurate. So while Mel Gibson's romanticizing of William Wallace in the 1995 film "Braveheart" can be written off as "movie-magic" because the actual account is relatively well-known, the same can't be said for this Emmy-award winning film.

Many Native Americans, however, didn't have high hopes for Hollywood to begin with, as it doesn't have the best track record in the portrayal of indigenous peoples.

"Expecting it to capture the intricacies of what is arguably one of the best books in its genre is probably wishful thinking at best," said Sandra Haley, a Native American graduate student of the University of Massachusetts history department.

HBO's "Bury My Heart at Wounded Knee" is a far cry from the manner in which Native Americans have been portrayed in popular culture – from the whooping savages of Clint Eastwood westerns to Italian-American actor Iron Eyes Cody shedding a single tear in environmentalist commercials. In many respects, the film humanized a culture that has long been presented in two conflicting lights – either as backward and savage or naive and innocent. Shown as a beleaguered people – with virtues and vices – the film did its best to present Native Americans as people, very much like the white settlers who pushed them ever westward on the most fundamental levels.

Daniel Giat, who wrote the film's screenplay, said he had tried especially to humanize Sitting Bull, the Lakota chief and holy man, presenting him as somewhat vain and boastful, though wholeheartedly dedicated to his people. Critics say the film went too far, though, and several prominent native figures left an early screening of the film in protest.

"I walked out. Relatives of Sitting Bull won't be happy," said Joseph Brings Plenty, Lakota, chairman of the Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe, in an interview with Indian Country Today. "They portrayed him as a cruel man; he was a holy man, he took care of the people."

But defenders of the film's use of artistic license maintain that presenting characters like Sitting Bull as flawed human beings, rather than elevating them to near sainthood, makes them all the more human, thereby making the story all the more realistic. Also, instances presented in the film such as Sitting Bull's exchange of money for photographs and autographs – as well as his participation in Buffalo Bill Cody's Wild West Show – are based in truth, and don't take away from the fact that he was a leader very much dedicated to his people and their cause.

The film also employs artistic license heavily with the introduc-

See HEART on page 6

The Emmy-winning HBO film "Bury My Heart at Wounded Knee" changes historical details in order to be more viewer friendly. These changes have been met with criticism.

Cosby reflects on long career

Renowned comedian Bill Cosby reminisced about his career, commented on modern television, and discussed dysfunctional families.

By Robert Philpot
McClatchy Newspapers

When the phone rings, you don't expect the voice at the other end to say, "Hi, it's Bill Cosby." Sure, an interview with the comedian had been in the works. But it hadn't been nailed down yet, and even if it had, stars of much lesser caliber inevitably don't dial the phone themselves.

But here's Cosby, calling from home, more ready to chat than the underprepared reporter he's calling, talking for 55 minutes with occasional interruptions to receive reports from his wife that this year's Primetime Emmy Awards had the lowest ratings since 1990 a statistic that Cosby relays with some glee. The former star of an iconic sitcom, as well as several other series (the last ended in 2000), says he's given up on TV because of its emphasis on puerile subject matter and put-down humor.

But Cosby, 70, still has a lot to say about it and a lot of other topics, especially the family life that fuels his observational stand-up act as he says, he has 44 years of marriage to work from, as well as children who are now in their 40s and have children of their own. Here are some of his other observations on the world today, edited for space.

On how his old material still works for him:

"Nine-year-old kid comes to see me, along with his mother and father. I had given permission for them to come backstage. He's a black kid.

Father says that (the kid) loves Bill Cosby and that he's done my routines. The kid comes back and he started to do 'The Playground' (a 1966 routine in which Cosby details how he and his friends played on a glass-strewn vacant lot unhurt till someone put in monkey bars)

"Now, don't forget I am listening to a kid do my routine word for word.

The parents are smiling, (but) I've gone into another space. The kid is talking, and he's doing Bill Cosby with his inflections. But I've drifted into listening to, and admiring, my writing. The kid's performing, and I'm saying to myself, 'This is really wonderful writing.'"

On the universality of his humor:

"I've had guys living (near) cow pastures with friends playing football and identifying with (my) street football. Because they had to run around cow droppings, so you'd lead the guy defending you right into a big pile of that stuff and then cut around it. Because he's not going through it. And guys have told me about those things.

"It's very, very interesting, the connection. Now that I'm doing the observations of 44 years of marriage and I can cut into 40-year-old children, it's just a simple situation of talking about your kids and they've graduated from college and you're talking about your experience. I mean, people start to chuckle right away. You don't even have to have a punch line when you say some of them."

On how shows about families have all but disappeared from network TV:

"By the time you look at a show with your two-three kids, and you're female and you're a cocktail waitress or you're working as somebody's associate or assistant, and you're driving home and day care is taking half your salary, I don't think you're too interested in 'Hi, Mom, hi, Dad' (types of shows).

"But you see, that was the thing that was very interesting with the Huxtables. I remember people would say to me, while the show was No. 1 and kicking everybody out of the way, somebody white would come up to me and say, 'I have a black friend who says he doesn't know any people like this.' And I would look at them, and I would say, 'Tell your friend to get out more often.' Meaning they've got to be in some kind of position and place where they really don't see it. It's not the fault of the Huxtables that you live below the poverty line.

But I do accept people in that area having a problem wanting to identify with it if your father

See COSBY on page 6

Media Education Foundation presents anti-war documentary

News reports in question

By Alexa McMahon
Collegian Correspondent

On Friday, Sept. 28, The Academy of Music in Northampton filled its eight hundred seats with anxious viewers for the local premiere of, "War Made Easy," by Loretta Alper and Jeremy Earp. The documentary investigates the last fifty years of war media coverage in the United States.

The Media Education Foundation located in Northampton produced the Sean Penn-narrated documentary, based on Norman Solomon's book "War Made Easy," published in 2005. Solomon is a widely published columnist on politics and media. He is also founder and executive director of the Institute of Public Accuracy. He began to write the book in response to living in a wartime state, he said.

In the current condition of Iraq, Solomon became aware of the government's use of the media to promote war efforts. He wanted to decode politics and media messages, so people would have a better understanding of messages being sent by the media.

Director and writer of "War Made Easy," Loretta Alper recognized the "wealth of material to work with in converting it from a book to a film." But the challenge was finding the footage to support Solomon's claims. The staff for the film had to go through many archives to find the right supportive clips, which they were successful in finding.

Solomon's analysis and Sean Penn's narrative are mixed with hundreds of clips, from World War II to the War in Iraq. With these images Solomon evaluates Democratic and Republican presidential administrations' approaches to promoting support for war efforts. From Vietnam to Iraq, he found that they follow the same media processes and propaganda messages to stir up public support.

"[Presidential administrations have] used our emotions and repetition to make war seem okay," Solomon said. Clips from presidential speeches, Fox news, CNN and MSNBC make his points more powerful to the viewer and tie the documentary together.

Solomon examines the media's role in portraying the war. He discusses a new form of journalism, what he called "imbedding." Journalists are placed directly on the battlefield with U.S. forces. Five hundred journalists had to go through a new form of "boot camp" to join the troops. Solomon points out that this new structure pushes further away from independent journalism, causing the media to be unable to represent all perspectives on the war. The only information being given is from the mouth of U.S. officials.

During the Iraq War, networks have discouraged on-air anti-war content. Solomon uses the example of Jonathan Landay, a strong anti-war supporter who was cancelled three weeks before the Iraq War began – even though he had one of the most highly rated shows on MSNBC. The media has structured itself to only obtain facts and opinions from the government, leaving out essential information and not obtaining the whole story.

Solomon and Alper are aware that it may be difficult for the documentary to be embraced by the mainstream. "Partnering with political groups will help their

See EASY on page 6

Government and media are questioned in "War Made Easy," based on the book by Norman Solomon. The documentary investigates the methods used to garner support for the Iraq War.

OCT 1 2007

Portrayal of Native Americans angers viewers

Based on a book by Dee Brown, "Wounded Knee" sheds light on the treatment of Native Americans in the late nineteenth century. While the book has been praised, the controversial movie has fallen under criticism due to altered historical details.

HEART from page 5

tion of Charles Eastman (Ohiyesa in his native Sioux), a physician and reformer. Eastman was a prominent figure in the late-nineteenth century, but did not play an important role in the book version of Bury My Heart. The HBO adaptation, however, made Eastman the main protagonist, including a largely fictionalized internal struggle for the "assimilated" Eastman, whose film representation (played to much acclaim by Saulteaux actor Adam Beach) feared he had abandoned his people by receiving a western education.

Many have found the use of the character Eastman to be an attempt on the part of HBO to provide a sort of buffer between the Native American characters and a largely white audience. Critics, however, have deemed this unnecessary, even offensive, citing acclaimed mini-series "Roots" as rebuttal to the assumption that a white audience needs a "whiter" character to relate.

"The implied message is that white folks won't be able to relate to Native people as human beings if Hollywood doesn't take the time to construct a 'civilized savage' for them. It's offensive to everyone involved – both Natives and non-Natives," said Haley.

In some respects, the film adaptation also perpetuated some of the problems with the original text. Haley finds that the movie, much like the book, failed to give native women a voice.

"Some have critiqued the book as reflecting the tendency of historical narratives to be largely male, and the film carries this problem forward," she said.

Despite its historical inaccuracies, screenwriter Giat insists that Bury My Heart is not merely an account of a relatively unknown massacre in American history, but a testament to the perseverance of the Sioux.

"This shouldn't be the story of a massacre," he said in an interview with HBO. "This should not be the story of the end of a people. This should be the story of survival, because the Sioux did not cease to exist at Wounded Knee. Hundreds of people, innocent people, were killed there. But that society exists. And the poverty is terrible, certainly, on the reservation, but these people are struggling to survive, and they are succeeding in a very, very important way."

Giat's assertion reflects the overarching sentiment of Native American activists and indigenous peoples, which is rooted in the concept of "survivance." Survivance is a term generally employed by Native Americans to describe not only the individual survival of its people in the face of adversity, but also the perseverance of a people as a whole.

The film met much acclaim for addressing a dark stain on the history of the United States, and although it has fallen under heavy scrutiny in the wake of its five Emmys, "Bury My Heart at Wounded Knee" succeeded in reopening the discourse. Perceptions of the film might vary, but all can agree that it brought attention back to the treatment of Native Americans by the United States government and western expansionists.

"It is probably best that it spur further reading and thinking than to be regarded as a fully factual account," said Haley.

S.P. Sullivan can be reached at spsullivan@student.umass.edu

Cosby comments on American society has abandoned you. Looking at the Huxtables would probably open a flank for you mentally, making you very sad."

COSBY from page 5

On dysfunctional families:

"The dysfunctional family isn't the single-parent family. It's the Huxtable family. (Kids are supposed to get in trouble) at some point.

... You can't get any stronger than God. If you read the Bible, you can't get any more powerful, any more independent than God. Second in line would be the devil. Can't be any more independent. Goes around doing his work. Both powerful figures have problems. So God creates human beings, and the two that God made with God's own hands didn't listen to him. So where's the functional family? You've got a single parent God. Children, one simple thing not to do, and they did it."

On "Come on People: On the Path From Victims to Victors," his new book co-written with Alvin F. Poussaint:

"This book is really and truly about the choices that have already been made and what is out there for people to either accept things that will put them in new positions to fight, to gain, to move and to be or the examples that are set that show, yes, there's many things against us, but the individual who decides to get up and stimulate and make a 'move.' You're in a cocoon, and when it opens, what comes out, a moth or a butterfly?

"One of the greatest examples, flat-out emotionally, I have seen is incarcerated men and women in separate institutions receiving their GEDs ... We're talking about this time in life when people (have their) hats on backward and clothes down the crack in the behind, and some of the exposures of the breasts and the skirts up high ... and I'm sure this is where (these inmates) came from, and I'm sure this is the way they were talking, and they're coming around, they're turning that corner (to receive their GEDs), their chests are bursting, they look like Clydesdales, man. The women came around, and they looked like, not runway models, but every last one of them had an assured look.

"Now, this is very important, because so many incarcerated people come out of the joint, and they have no place to go but back to the neighborhood, and they wind up in the joint again. And these people are talking about when they get out, they're going to community college; they've got their goals already set, and the recidivism is going to be very, very low on these people. And I believe it."

Overcoming obstacles is the major theme in Cosby's new book entitled "Come on People: On the Path from Victims to Victors."

MOVING ON?
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Save 10% off your truck or cargo van rental
Coupon must be presented at time of deposit and reservation
Coupon applies to Potter's vehicles only
Round Trip Rentals to and from Boston and New York
One Way Rentals
Hand Trucks & Furniture Pads Available for Rent
Boxes & Moving Accessories Available for Sale
The Economical Way To Move
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.pottersauto.com

CORRECTION

In Friday's Daily Collegian, the story "Suits take over Noho" had the following errors:

- The 2005 album is called Black Sheep Boy.
- The song referred to as "Real Life" is actually titled "For Real."
- The track on the new album is called "Unless It's Kicks," not "Unless It Kicks."
- The Big Star song is "O, Dana" not "O'Dana."
- The song referred to as "The Latest Toughs" is actually titled "The Last Thoughts."

War documentary studies media conflict effort," Alper said of the distribution of the documentary.

EASY from page 5

They have a strong connection with the Progressive Democrats of America and are co-sponsored by groups such as Free Press, National Priorities Project, Northampton Committee to Stop the War in Iraq and many more. Their local support has spread nationally, with recognition from the Montreal World Film Festival and praise in reviews of the film from the San Francisco Chronicle to Common Sense Magazine.

The premiere on Saturday showed the documentary's strong Northampton roots. The ticket sale line snaked down the sidewalk in front of the Academy of Music. Most of the "War Made Easy" staff was sitting in the audience. Solomon and Alper also were in attendance.

After the film, there was a half-hour question and answer session. The audience asked many questions about the future of the film and large media power in society.

Solomon has clarified "the clouded information given by the government," a goal he set for himself when he started writing the book. He makes the viewer question how they have been manipulated by the media and the government to believe, as Solomon pointed out, 'false' stories from Vietnam to now.

The documentary is well put together and gets to the point both in its imagery and narrative. One of the quotes by Sidney Schanberg from the film, "We Americans are the ultimate innocents. We forever want to believe that this time the government is telling the truth," shows that Solomon wants people to look more critically at what is given as the truth, so better decisions can be made in the future.

"War Made Easy" will be shown again at the Northampton Independent Film Festival in November.

Alexa McMahon can be reached at mcmahon@student.umass.edu

The Sean Penn narrated documentary looks at how public support is stirred up using clips from World War II to the Iraq War.

The Third Annual Journalism Program Lecture Series on Broadcast and the Media presents...
The New New Journalism:
Challenges and Opportunities in Multimedia Reporting
Monday, October 1, 2007
7-8:30 p.m.
6:15 Free Pizza
Memorial Hall, UMass Amherst
Featuring:
Patrick Stiegman
Executive Editor and
V.P. ESPN.com
Chet Rhodes
Assistant Managing Editor, News Video
Washingtonpost.com
Emily Sweeney
Reporter
The Boston Globe
Moderated by Journalism prof Steve Fox
This lecture series is funded by David '79 and Terna Kantor.

Attention First-Year Students:
The deadline to pass MyStudentBody is TODAY
To avoid a registration hold, you must take and pass the course by the end of the day.
For instructions, go to:
www.umass.edu/uhs/cadap/msb/
Center for Alcohol and other Drug Abuse Prevention

Pride and Respect for UMass Amherst: Why it is Important

Both the fall semester and the final weeks of the Major League Baseball season are in full swing and it is an exciting time for all fans. As we approach the playoffs, we want to wish you and your favorite team the best of luck.

Enjoy the playoff games in your own rooms, with friends or on the big screen in the Blue Wall. When you celebrate your team victories, do so wisely and responsibly. And accept the losses with equal levelness.

The past few years, we have seen destructive student action associated with athletic events. While we personally do not understand this concept of violence and rioting as an expression of celebration, nonetheless it is a phenomenon we are currently witnessing nationally on college campuses and in major cities. Here, on our campus, these riots are usually related to the Boston Red Sox and the New England Patriots.

Student behavior reflects upon the entire campus and, as a result, influences the entire reputation of the University. When students engage in such destructive behavior, the public no longer sees our renown faculty, our cutting edge research or the majority of students who are truly interested in their academic careers.

All of the elements that make the University of Massachusetts Amherst a place of academic prestige are overshadowed by this destructive behavior:

- The reputation of the University is compromised, and by extension, the value of a student's degree is also lessened. A student's investment of intellectual discipline, time and financial resources is compromised.
- In addition to the academic compromise, University students are not regarded for their personal development or leadership skills. In seeking career or graduate school, a UMass Amherst student may be held in less regard than the graduate of another university.
- Our elected officials look upon the campus with concern and state funding for the campus may be jeopardized.
- Talented faculty and deans may be less likely to consider the University as a place of employment.

Collectively we can make a difference, and collectively we can instill pride in and respect for the University of Massachusetts Amherst.

Sincerely,

Charlena Seymour
Provost and
Senior Vice Chancellor
for Academic Affairs

Michael Gargano
Vice Chancellor
Student Affairs and Campus Life

OCT 1 2007

Coen reinjures knee

FOOTBALL from page 12

to the UMass 49.

Ryan took advantage of the situation, driving the Eagles 49 yards, capped by a one-yard score by running back Andre Callender. UMass gave the Eagles two free first downs with a defensive holding infraction and a pass interference call that put the ball on the UMass two-yard line.

In the second quarter, the story did not change. BC drove the ball 96 yards, scoring on a nine-yard pass from Ryan to wide receiver Justin Jarvis, who beat his defender on a crossing pattern, and cut through two blockers downfield to reach the end zone. The half ended with BC holding a convincing 17-0 lead.

The third quarter belonged to the Minutemen, but the fourth was a stalemate – leaving the Maroon and White wondering where it lost its footing.

"We put ourselves in a huge hole, [but] we came out in the second half with renewed resolve, which I knew I'd get," Brown said.

The opening possession of the second half stalled, but the Minutemen established an early edge in field position. After Coen's pass to Jeremy Horne fell two yards short of a first down, Arnold placed a 51-yard punt on the BC three-yard line.

The UMass defense held the Eagles to two yards of offense, and got the ball back at the BC 41 following a 38-yard punt by Johnny Ayers.

One play later, Coen made a statement that the Minutemen were not handing over the game. UMass employed its height advantage at wide receiver when Coen dropped a perfect pass over the head of BC cornerback Taji Morris (five-foot-nine) and into the hands of Rasheed Rancher (six-foot-five), who caught it at the three and strolled into the end zone.

"We had good field position, so we took a shot," Coen said. "Sheed beat the corner. He flat beat him. That was something we did plan on. We wanted to take a couple shots."

The momentum appeared to have shifted dramatically on the following BC series. Linebackers Josh Jennings and Charles Walker jarred BC tight end Ryan Purvis and forced an apparent fumble, recovered by Jason Hatchell on the BC 28-yard line. After the official's review, however, the play was ruled an incomplete pass.

UMass forced a punt, but got the ball on its own 23-yard line, 49 yards downfield. After the teams traded punts, the Minutemen continued to pressure the Eagles. Another Coen-to-Rancher exchange brought the ball into BC territory. Coen then hit Jeremy Horne on a wide receiver screen.

Horne broke one tackle, then followed some excellent downfield blocking all the way to the end zone, closing the gap to 17-14.

That would be the closest glimpse at victory the Minutemen would get.

The Eagles responded as one would expect the 12th-ranked team in the nation to, with another score before the third frame closed out. Ryan led his offense on one more grinding drive, going 65 yards in 10 plays, icing the game by setting up a four-yard Callender rush.

Coen was knocked out of the game early in the fourth quarter, once again injuring his left knee while going down in the backfield. Backup Scott Woodward did his best impression of Coen, completing five of 11 passes for 57 yards.

A final miscue – a third-down drop of a sure first down pass by Rancher – finished off the Minutemen.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu.

Offsides call in third nullifies game-changing interception

THIRD QUARTER from page 12

real action began on their fourth-and-11 play. Arnold punted on his own 22-yard line and a penalty was called during the play. The officials discussed the play for several minutes, talking the matter over with both head coaches. The end result was a defensive holding call, resulting in no play and a fourth-and-one for the Minutemen.

UMass coach Don Brown was very animated on the sidelines, presumably wondering if the holding penalty should have resulted in an automatic first down.

"I'm not going to sit here and debate on every penalty," Brown said at the postgame press conference. "Whether it was right, wrong, indifferent, obviously there's some there that I question."

The Minutemen were forced to punt for a second time, but received the ball back after the Eagles went three-and-out. Coen struck quickly again, engineering a three-play, 62-yard drive which resulted in his second touchdown pass of the afternoon.

The recipient of the 35-yard score was wideout Jeremy Horne, who caught the screen pass a few yards from the line of scrimmage and scampered the rest of the way virtually untouched.

The score was now 17-14, and it was UMass that looked like the better team in the third quarter.

"We came out in the second half with renewed resolve, which I knew I'd get," Brown said.

That resolve turned into a 15-yard penalty after the Minutemen got a little too exuberant following the touchdown. The penalty was assessed on the kickoff, forcing UMass to kick the ball off on its own 15.

"The one that angered me was the unsportsmanlike after the touchdown," Brown said. "Now you're putting yourself in a tougher situation on the ensuing kickoff."

BC kick returner Brandon Rohinson received the kick on his own 15, returning it to the 35. The Eagles slowly drove down the field, looking for the dagger.

UMass thought it thwarted the drive when BC transfer cornerback Reshaude Goodwin intercepted Ryan near the end zone. But the Minutemen were whistled for offsides on the play, one of 17 penalties called on UMass.

"It's amazing that we had 17 penalties and actually had a chance late in the third quarter," Brown said.

The offsides penalty loomed large as the Eagles pounded the ball into the end zone for a 24-14 lead on a 4-yard run by tailback Andre Callender. Ryan came up big on the drive, completing 5-of-7 passes for 38 yards passing and also rushing for 14 yards.

That touchdown essentially put away the game for the Eagles, but it was the 17 penalties, coupled with the bad breaks on the overturned fumble and punt fiasco that doomed the Minutemen in their comeback attempt.

If not for those circumstances, the final 15 minutes of football might have surprised the whole country.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY | MASS MEDIA RELATIONS AND ZOTTI PHOTOGRAPHY/COLLEGIAN

Mike (left) and Mark DeSantis, provide heady play in all three parts of the field as mainstays for the Minutemen.

Brothers add dynamic to Minutemen

Mike and Mark DeSantis excel with versatile and smart play

By Joe Meloni
Collegian Staff

Junior Mike DeSantis scored the Massachusetts men's soccer team's second goal in its 2-0 win over Northeastern on Sept. 22. The Minutemen won their second consecutive game on Saturday, defeating Boston University 1-0. DeSantis didn't score in the win over the Terriers, neither did his brother Mark, – a sophomore for the Minutemen – but the brothers DeSantis certainly impacted the game.

Playing well in the offensive zone is obviously important, but it's difficult to consistently create scoring chances if a team can't win balls in the midfield and quickly outlet them to the forwards.

The defensive play of the pair against the Terriers made it nearly impossible for BU to manufacture quality scoring chances. Mike DeSantis starts in the UMass midfield and understands his role a defensive stopper in the center.

"I know I'm not going to score or take a lot of shots, but I just have to do all the dirty work back on defense," he said. "But I also have to start the offense which kind of goes unnoticed; I accept that. I like winning balls, I like defense and whenever I get a chance to go up, I will. But I like my position right now, we're doing pretty well with me [at center midfield]."

In UMass's last three games against Harvard, Northeastern and BU – its opposition held a considerable size advantage, but a heady player like the elder DeSantis knows proper technique can generally offset any actual size advantage. Situations like goal and free kicks from deep within his team's defensive zone demand that the Minutemen excel at winning 50-50 balls. Otherwise, opponents can easily transition the ball back into their offensive third.

After the kick taker sends the ball toward the midfield, the elbows come out. Players harry and shuffle for positioning, but no matter how well one judges the flight of the ball, it all comes down to instinct. The more often you've been in these circumstances, the better you become at assessing the situation.

"The main thing is positioning. It doesn't really matter how much bigger they are when you have position," Mike DeSantis said. "They'll just try to knock you over and you'll get the foul. They really don't intimidate me at all – size doesn't really matter."

The DeSantis brothers understand these situations remarkably well. Late in Saturday's win over BU, the Terriers had a series of free kicks in UMass's offensive zone. Within a three-minute span, Mark DeSantis headed two free kicks out of the UMass penalty area and stole a pass off a throw-in before immediately sending an outlet pass that led to a UMass break.

"I was really happy for [Mark]. He played a lot of defense and helped us out in the back when we didn't need a goal," said Mike DeSantis of his younger brother. "He played really well today; he worked well up top and helped a lot in the back at the end [of the game]."

UMass coach Sam Koch praised Mark as one of the team's most-gifted headers of the ball after Saturday's win. On defense, his abilities are even more apparent because a defensive header is not about accuracy. It's much more about getting to the ball at the right time and clearing it out to the wing or away from the penalty area in general.

Against Northeastern, Mark's prowess for the header led directly to the game-winning goal. A free kick sent the ball into the UMass offensive third where Mark took on a taller NU defender. He timed his leap well and managed to nod the ball into the wing where freshman Ben Arikian collected it. Arikian crossed the ball to sophomore Bryan Hogan, who headed it into the Husky net.

"I just try to work hard for my teammates," Mark said. "That's our team motto, work for your teammates and work for your coaches. If you do that, good things will happen.

"The last two weeks [Koch] dropped me back to center midfield with Mike [DeSantis] and Ben Arikian. It's been my job basically to work my butt off to win balls, to win headers, to win corner kicks, kick balls to the flanks and just do the little things we need to do to win the game. It's not pretty, but it gets the job done."

Other players as young as Mark may have been overly aggressive to offset the size differential. But Mark waited, got to the ball at the perfect moment and won it.

The patience Mark displayed allowed him similar opportunities against the Terriers. After UMass took the lead, BU upped its intensity in hopes of forcing some chances. The DeSantis brothers excelled against the Terriers – not only did they gain possession of loose balls, they also drew free kicks and corners in other situations.

Joe Meloni can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu

Bassett returns for UMass

MEN'S SOCCER from page 12

effort keeping the ball alive and had a decent shot on goal," Amick said. "It just came back at me – I just happened to get a foot on it and put it away."

Koch's emphasis on taking advantage of second-chance opportunities was evident from the Minutemen's first goal.

"One thing we talked about this week was framing the goal," he said. "Shoot, and make sure that everyone is getting in good positions around the goal for any type of rebound."

But Amick's energetic goal also underscores the importance of not wasting close-range chances.

"I've been taught that in front of the net, you always have to put your whole body on the line to put it in the back of the net," Amick said. "You might take one in the face or get kicked hard in the process, but you just want to knock it into the back of the net, no questions asked."

The goal instilled a palpable sense of urgency among the BU players, who consequently increased their aggressiveness and the pace of play.

"I was pleased by the way we handled their pressure in the second half," Koch said. "When we got the goal, we continued to put them under pressure. They're pretty aggressive, but when you go down a goal, you have to pick it up. I thought we handled it pretty well."

The Minutemen registered five shots on net after tallying their first goal, while limiting BU to one.

"We played a little bit more defensively once we scored, which we always end up doing, but we try not to," junior midfielder Mike DeSantis said. "Sometimes you have to do it to hold on to the win."

Game Notes

The match saw the return of midfielder Tony Bassett to the UM lineup. The junior entered play toward the end of the first half before coming out with eight minutes left in the second. Bassett missed three games due to an upper-leg injury ... The Maroon and White suffered another injury midway through the second half. Cook briefly left the game before exiting for a good seven minutes later ... BU's leading scorer, Sigurdsson, saw limited action in the contest. He only played about half of the game, entering the pitch at the midpoint of each half.

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu

Butterfly
Chinese & Japanese Restaurant
WWW.BUTTERFLYHADLEY.COM
GRAND OPENING!
蝴 蝶
Presented by the former owner of Panda Garden in Northampton
In the old location of All Fired Up
Vegetarian Menu Available
Enjoy drinks at the full bar!
Free Delivery Hadley (Min. $15.00) Out of Town (Min. $20.00)
(413) 585-8989
Mon. – Thurs.: 11:30am – 10:00pm | Fri. & Sat.: 11:30am – 11:00pm
Sunday: 12:00noon – 10:00pm
48 Russell St (Rt. 9) Hadley, MA 01035

Student Alumni Association — Campus to Career — Alumni Association
~ OCTOBER CALENDAR ~
Etiquette Dinner
Tuesday, October 2, 5:30 p.m. - Cape Cod Lounge, Student Union
Learn proper meal etiquette and how to navigate a formal dinner place setting, as Carol McGuiggan, an etiquette professional, answers all your questions.
$8.00 per person
REGISTER TODAY: SPACE IS LIMITED - EVENT SELLS OUT FAST!
Register online at UMassAlumni.com/students
Position Yourself for Career Success
Wednesday, October 3 • 5:30 p.m.
Memorial Hall
Lauren Checchi '02, Services Manager at Ultimate Staffing Services, will explore a variety of topics that are key to pursuing a career path; including internships, volunteer work, flexibility, strategic planning and networking.
Ultimate Money Skills
Tuesday, October 30 • 5:30 p.m.
Memorial Hall
Come find out more on the appropriate use of credit, designing your own budget, taking control of student loan debt, and how to protect yourself against the fast growing crime - identity theft.
In partnership with Bank of America and Monster.com
Bank of America MONSTER
FREE PIZZA & REFRESHMENTS
For more information contact Kate Robert, Assistant Director for Student and Alumni Programs at 545-3586 or krobert@admin.umass.edu

Offensive struggles continue

Scoreless second half prevents UMass from obtaining victory

By Mike Connors
Collegian Staff

For the second weekend in a row, the Massachusetts field hockey team was able to put a scare into a ranked opponent. But similarly to last week, it came up short in the end.

Albany (9-3) defeated UMass, 3-1, at Alumni Turf Field Sunday afternoon behind two Nicole Savage first-half goals.

UMass begins conference play this weekend when it hosts West Chester and La Salle.

The Minutewomen (5-6) struck first when Cher King netted her sixth goal of the season four minutes into the game. After beating a defender off a deflected pass, she used the reverse stick to put the ball past seldom-used Albany goalkeeper Christine Hoffman.

UMass coach Justine Sowry was pleased that the offense came out and attacked in the beginning of the game, something she says they haven't been doing in other games.

"The first half was probably our most productive," she said. "The momentum was certainly going our way, and then in the second half it started to dry up. We started to lose the ball more in the midfield. We were unable to create the opportunities in the attacking zone."

It didn't take long for the No. 17 Great Danes to respond. Savage, who has 10 goals in only 12 games this season, beat UMass goalkeeper Becky Letourneau to knot the game at one. The response came just over two minutes after King's goal.

"I thought we let in a soft goal as a defensive unit on that first one," Sowry said. "We knew what to expect, but we didn't defend against it."

UMass	1
Albany	3

Savage was not done – she converted what proved to be the game-winner in the 20th minute. Teammate Alysia Hough tipped the ball to Savage during a rush in front of the net.

Michelle Simpson would add an insurance goal with just over 10 minutes remaining in the opening half. The senior midfielder's goal was her ninth of the season, which is good for second behind Savage.

Had the Minutewomen been able to pull out a victory, it would have been Albany's first home loss of the season. Their current home record stands at a perfect 5-0.

Sowry attributed much of the opponent's first half success to the Great Danes' five international players on the field.

"There was some confusion defensively for us in the first half," she said. "But we figured it out as the game went on. The five internationals were spread throughout the field, so their vision and skill in execution is just at a higher level. They see spaces and they hit open passes."

The second half provided less action than the first and no goals were scored. Albany inserted the more-often used Ashley Ross at goalkeeper for the final 35 minutes.

Despite the defeat, Sowry saw positive aspects of the game. She credited King, Mary Shea and Makaela Potts with strong play.

"She is a very smart player who controls the tempo and pace of the game," Sowry said of Potts.

Shea, who has started every game this year, actively peppered the Great Dane goalkeepers from her midfield position. Her three shots on goal constituted more than half of the team's total of five.

Though Letourneau allowed three goals, Sowry thought her overall performance was solid.

"She had a couple of fantastic one-on-one saves," she said. "She needs to continue on working to be a leader with her communication and organization."

Letourneau made six saves in the game.

With all-important conference play looming this weekend, Sowry believes the team needs to work on some things, as well as continue to build upon its success in certain areas.

Linking all three lines is something she has been stressing through the last three games. She also is urging her team to be "proactive rather than reactive."

Sowry also thinks that success will come when her team begins "getting back to being confident and organized, which goes hand in hand with controlling the game."

Although the Minutewomen were out-shot 9-5 in this game, they held a 6-5 penalty corner advantage.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu

UM gets first win in conference play ball came loose in Duquesne territory. Morrin and UMass sophomores Sydney Stoll and Meghan Gould raced to the ball. Gould was able to tap it by Morrin and Stoll knocked in an empty-net goal, tying the game at 1-1. It was Stoll's team-leading sixth goal of the season. The assist was Gould's first career point.

WOMEN'S SOCCER from page 12

Duquesne went up 2-1 going into halftime after sophomore Shiana Geisler fired one by Walker.

UMass tied it up again in the 29th minute of the second half. After a Duquesne foul, Roehrig lined up for a free kick. The ball launched toward a set of UMass and Duquesne players. Patry out-jumped both teammates and opponents alike and headed the ball into the back of the net.

After the missed connection by Canfield, Rasmussen's goal put the Dukes on top for good.

With the loss, the Minutewomen – who had given up three goals all season – doubled their 2007 total. It was the first time they had let up three goals in a game since October of last year.

"Overall, I think we did a good job. We fought to the end, we hustled to every ball," said Roehrig. "In the second half we played 100 percent better. I think. We were the first to balls, we did what we had to do."

"We worked hard," she continued. "We just need to keep practicing."

On Friday, Stoll, Canfield and sophomore Cristina Adams pocketed goals in UMass's victory.

UMass drew first blood when Stoll took a ball from Canfield on the right flank and shot one past Saint Joseph's goalkeeper, Megan Bastianelli, from about six yards out. The assist went to Canfield.

The score advanced to 2-0 in the 25th minute when Canfield and Stoll switched roles.

The senior uncorked a shot that managed to bounce through a number of players wearing both color jerseys and found the net. With four goals and seven assists, Canfield is the team leader in points (15). Stoll was credited with the assist.

The Minutewomen made it a scoring trifecta in the 86th minute, when Adams deposited her first goal of the season.

On an extended give and go, Adams made a perfectly placed pass to Stoll, who ran it down at the end line. Stoll then shoveled it back to a hustling Adams, who fired it behind Bastianelli for the third goal of the game.

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu

Maroon and White squads compete at weekend invitational

By Melissa Turtinen
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts cross country teams competed in the prestigious Paul Short Invitational on Friday afternoon. Neither team met the expectations they had going into the meet.

The Minutemen finished 11th out of 41 teams and the Minutewomen took 36th place out of 48 teams.

The Paul Short Invitational, hosted by Lehigh, had many teams participating including Division I, II and III schools from all around the country.

The Minutemen finished 11th with help from freshman Jeff Hill who was the first Minuteman to cross the finish line at 25 minutes, 22 seconds to take 52nd place out of 268 runners. Sophomore Daniel Barry was just one second behind Hill finishing in 54th place.

"We didn't have a bad day, but I'm disappointed we didn't have a better day," said men's coach Ken O'Brien.

The Minutemen's top five runners finished with sophomore Jonathan Pierce at 66th place, junior Jesse Regnier taking 78th and sophomore Andrew McCann at 98th.

"We had a performance where all five of our top runners finished within 29 seconds of each other. In some respects that sounds really good, but it's not a great accomplishment. No one had a bad day. We didn't have enough people venture out and have a great day. We ran conservative," said O'Brien.

O'Brien believes that the team is physically prepared for meets, but mentally not everyone has the confidence needed to compete against better teams.

Christina DeRosa, who finished 21st out of 217 individuals with a time of 21 minutes, 17 seconds, led the Minutewomen. UMass coach Julie LaFreniere thought that DeRosa did well throughout the entire race.

"[DeRosa] stepped up to the next level of competition, she was very confident, and felt very well prepared," LaFreniere said.

"I think for DeRosa the race went very, very well. But for the rest of the team I think they fell quite a bit short of what they are capable of running. We are all very disappointed with the rest of the performances. I don't think they did a lot well. They ran below their level, they ran subpar."

Redshirt freshman Shiyi Zan crossed the finish line second for the Minutewomen with a time of 23:02, she placed 147th.

"Shiyi went out a tad too fast, she was quite excited. It caught up to her," said LaFreniere.

Finishing out the rest of the top five were freshman Lauren Stocker (149th), freshman Kristin Darling (284th) and junior Beth Harlow (290th).

A large problem for the Minutewomen was not having senior Amber Sayer, who was ill and did not participate in the meet.

"We don't have the strength and depth to not have all of our athletes," said LaFreniere. "I knew without Amber it wasn't going to be a pretty picture. When the rest of the team fell apart behind Christina I knew it was going to be worse than I imagined."

The Minutewomen are compiled of mostly freshmen and this is hurting their performances.

"If I had more upperclassman these freshman wouldn't have so much pressure," said LaFreniere. Usually upperclassmen are in scoring position and this gives the freshman time to develop. In the case of this team, there are very few upperclassmen and it leaves the freshman to be in that scoring position. "It's a hard situation for them to be in."

Not only did the youth hurt the Minutewomen, but this course was 1,000 meters longer than what they are use to running. According to LaFreniere, this is the first time that many of the freshman have ran 6,000 meters.

"It's a combination of a longer course, lack of confidence and lack of experience," said LaFreniere. "They all survived the race and I think they'll pull it together for next week. When you are disappointed you make it up in the next race. I think they all know they are better than what they did. I think that this was a good experience. They all have good attitudes and are willing to do what they need to do to get better," said LaFreniere.

The next event for the Minutemen and women will be on Saturday when they head to Boston to compete in the New England Championships.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtine@student.umass.edu

Take the road to success.
Join the team that's #25 on FORTUNE® magazine's "100 Best Companies to Work For"!
Here's a workplace where you can really go places! Ernst & Young jumped up to #25 on FORTUNE® magazine's "100 Best Companies to Work For" from #67 last year – ranked higher than any other professional services firm. At Ernst & Young, our people are our edge, so we create an environment that promotes your growth and success. See for yourself why we've made the list for the 9th year in a row. This way to a great career!
Visit us at ey.com/us/careers for more information or visit the EY page on facebook.com
FORTUNE 100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR 2007 #25 on the list.
Audit • Tax • Transaction Advisory Services
ERNST & YOUNG
Quality In Everything We Do
© 2007 Ernst & Young LLP

OCT 1 2007

D I T O !
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

	3				8	4
9				2				7
4		2	9				6
	4		1
	5		6		7		9
					2		8
	8				4	1		3
3				7				2
		1	3				4

Quote of the Day

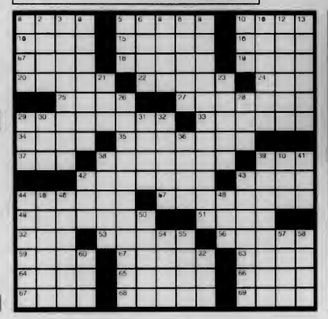
"Sometimes dreams are wiser than waking."
-Black Elk

Ecology By Jen Fell

Brothers Watt By William Wilson

The Quigmans By Buddy Hickerson

More feared than any cowboy, Catboy's lethal weapon was his ability to rub people the wrong way.



ACROSS
1 Queens ballpark
5 Bad raptor
10 Piercing tools
14 Tediously protracted
15 Plains people
16 Certain tide
17 Texas crock
18 Point of view
19 Actress Moore
20 Gives off
22 Stop, look and look?
24 French wine
25 Persian ruler
27 Iceberg rival
29 Precipitator
33 Luxurious country house
34 Vgoda and Lincoln
35 Wading birds
37 Wicked
38 Supporting fans
39 Little one
42 In the best shape
43 Urban center
44 Peter of "My Favorite Year"
47 Rod and Payne
49 Rabbit colonies
51 Have the nerve
52 Pot top
53 Sand hills
56 Roasting rods
59 Fencing sword
61 Fizzy drinks
63 Smallest Great Lake by volume
64 Blue shade
65 Ford from Tennessee
66 Verbal subtlety
67 Cocoon fiber
68 Old hat
69 Ginger cookie

DOWN
1 ___ gin fizz
2 Celeste or Ian
3 Joined up
4 Christie and others
5 Double curve
6 Feels unwell
7 Billy or nanny
8 LEM word
9 Gregarious and outgoing
10 Up-coming connector
11 Destructive beetle
12 Thin layer
13 Urichs's defense
21 Actor Mineo
23 U.A.E. rulers
26 Sides of right triangles
28 Molinaro and Michaels
29 Taxi
30 Lawyers' grp.
31 Corn opening
32 Schlep
36 Part three of a three-piece suit
38 Inued
39 Tool in a trunk
40 Mel of the Giants
41 Herndon and Cobb
42 In favor of
43 Floor coverings
44 Little hooters
45 Taiwan's capital
46 Tough trial
48 Circa existed
50 Audible expression of contempt
54 "Giant" and "So Big" writer Ferber
55 Spanker or spinnaker
57 Singer Turner
58 Ouze
60 Caribou cousin
62 Told you so!

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Fifty-seven Down: Singer Turner

Submit your comics!
collegiancomics@yahoo.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Take strides against chafing with more form fitting underwear.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Straight up, line dancing is a sin.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Under no circumstances should you ever ingest pancakes. Flapjacks only please.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
There's no past or future, there is only now and that thing dangling from your nose.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Blow kisses to a crowd looks regal, blowing kisses to an empty field looks crazy.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Instead of participating in class, draw pictures of sea animals all over your nametag.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You are a Marky Mark calzone filled with good vibrations and sweet sensations.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
October has arrived, and you still haven't done any schoolwork.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
It is not nice to sing the song "Walk it out" to a person hobbling on crutches.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Don't eat too much mercury because it may contain high levels of tuna.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
This will be a great month for you if you eat 6 whole sticks of butter right now. GO!

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Your attention span is shorter than Freddie Prinze Jr's career.

LA PIAZZA PIZZA
GRAND OPENING
30 BOLTWOOD WALK
AMHERST MA
HOURS OF OPERATION
SUN - THU 4 PM - 2 AM
FRI - SAT 4 PM - 3 AM
FAST FREE DELIVERY OR PICK-UP
CALL (413)253-6444
PIZZA CALZONES SUBS
SALADS WINGS ENTREES
AND MORE
Check Our Menu On Line
WWW.LAPIAZZARISTORANTE.US
Click on our "TO GO MENU"

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Activities

Montreal weekend from $99.00. Complete, motel, transportation and more. Montreal express.net 781-979-9001. Lowest Prices on campus.

Employment

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520. Ext. 162

Business Student For data entry and answering phones. Must have car. 413-210-5295

Employment

CAFE HELP PART-TIME nights and weekends must be fast, accurate, efficient and friendly. Apply in person at the woodstar cafe. 60 Masonic St. Northampton.

Drivers wanted. Must be able to work 20 to 30hrs a week. Nights and weekends. Apply at DP Dough, downtown Amherst.

PART TIME POSITION TOWN OF AMHERST DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS. The Amherst Transfer Station is looking for one or more people to work in the office Tuesday, Thursday and Saturdays 8:00AM to 2:30PM. This position includes computer work, cash/check sales and dealing with people. If interested please fill out applications at the Department of Public Works, 586 South Pleasent Street, Amherst, MA 01002. Amherst is an EEO/AA employer and encourages women and minorities to apply.

Employment

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Employment

Salons & Spas

HOLISTIC SALON AND SPA. Beautiful Organic Haircolor! Foils, Hi, Low, Party, Etc. www.shearblissAmherst.com 413-253-2322

Services

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org.

Services

Concerned About Your Eating? Do you eat too little? Eat too much? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

GET TESTED - Know your status before spring break. FREE HIV RAPID TESTING OCTOBER 3rd. UMass Campus Center 9am – 3pm. Questions: Call Bob at 413-747-5144 www.tapestryhealth.org

SUBMIT CLASSIFIEDS AT WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Travel

"#1 Spring Break Website! 4 & 7 night trips. Low prices guaranteed. Group discounts for 8+. Book 20 people, get 3 free trips! Campus reps needed. www.StudentCity.com or 800-293-1445

Spring Break 2008 Sell Trips, Earn Cash and Go Free. Call for group discounts. Best Deals Guaranteed! Info/Reservations. 800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com.

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

► Amy's no ugly betty."

pwc.tv/ch2
The Firm now playing on Channel 2.

*connectedthinking

© 2007 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP, a Delaware limited liability partnership, or, as the context requires, the PricewaterhouseCoopers global network or other member firms of the network, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. "connectedthinking" is a trademark of PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. Advertising may be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

OCT 1 2007

OCT 2 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, OCTOBER 1, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Undone by penalties

Victory eludes UM, betrayed by mistakes

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

CHESTNUT HILL – A week after the Massachusetts football team seemed to have everything figured out, the game became very confusing again. The Minutemen fell to the No. 11/12 Boston College Eagles, 24-14, in front of 44,111 fans.

Quarterback Liam Coen (12-of-24, 151 yards, two touchdowns) re-aggravated his knee injury early in the fourth quarter, forcing him out of the game. But the Minutemen (4-1, 2-0 Colonial Athletic Association) effectively limited their chances with another penalty-ridden performance – returning to the miscues they got away with earlier in the season.

BC quarterback Matt Ryan (24-of-42, 204 yards, one touchdown) led the Eagles (5-0, 3-0 Atlantic Coast Conference) to an early lead, and did enough the rest of the way to keep UMass in the rearview mirror.

UMass	14
BC	24

"We just didn't execute as well as we needed to in the first half," UMass coach Don Brown said. "Our effort and energy throughout the entire day was absolutely tremendous, but you're not going to beat the No. 12 team in the nation with 17 penalties."

Those 17 penalties cost the Minutemen 114 yards in a game in which they closed the gap to a field goal late in the third quarter. However, false starts, pass interference calls and holding penalties stagnated several UMass drives and prevented the Minutemen from taking control of the game when they had the chance.

BC struck first with a field goal on its second possession and capitalized early on UMass mistakes. Following the Eagles' first three points, the Minutemen went three-and-out on a possession that resulted in 12 yards of offense.

An illegal block negated an eight-yard burst by running back Matt Lawrence, and a false start on the next snap put the Minutemen in a first-and-23 hole that they did not climb out of. Backed up into his own end zone, punter Brett Arnold gave BC the longest field he could, punting

See FOOTBALL on page 8

MICHAEL THEIS/COLLEGIAN

Despite leaving the game early in the fourth quarter after reagreavating a left knee injury, red shirt junior quarterback Liam Coen threw for 151 yards and two touchdowns. The team's two third quarter scores brought UMass to within three points before BC pulled away late in that period.

Red-shirt junior defensive back Michael Meggett attempts to tackle wide receiver Rich Gunnell in Saturday's 24-14 loss to the Eagles. Meggett and the UMass defense held BC quarterback Matt Ryan to 204 yards in the air.

Wild third quarter

Minutemen score twice after halftime, let game slip away

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

CHESTNUT HILL – The first 30 minutes of football between Massachusetts and Boston College went as many expected it would on Saturday at Alumni Stadium.

But after the teams exited their locker rooms following halftime with the Eagles leading 17-0, the next 15 minutes or so surprised and confused many in attendance – including the officiating crew.

Struggling in the field-position game in the first half, the Minutemen quickly turned the tables on the Eagles and used it to their advantage. After UMass punter Brett Arnold booted a 53-yard punt that was downed at the BC 3-yard line, the Minuteman defense forced a three-and-out. BC's punt by Johnny Ayers went for a net 37 yards, giving UMass the ball in Eagles territory.

It didn't take long for UMass quarterback Liam Coen to capitalize on the short field. Just eight seconds and 41 yards later, the Minutemen had their first score of the game on a touchdown strike to Rasheed Rancher, cutting the deficit to 17-7.

"We had the good field position so we took that shot up-top," Coen said of his touchdown pass to Rancher. "Rasheed beat the corner, just flat beat him. That was something that we did plan on doing."

On the ensuing Eagles drive, the Minutemen appeared to receive even better field position when BC tight end Ryan Purvis fumbled the ball after being hit by Josh Jennings and Charles Walker. The ball ended up in the arms of linebacker Jason Hatchell, as the UMass sideline erupted into a frenzy.

But the celebration turned out to be premature, as the officials reviewed the play and overturned the call on the field – ruling it an incomplete pass. It was the first and only time this season that UMass will play in a game that uses instant replay.

"The momentum on our sideline was pretty high," Coen said of his team after the fumble. "When they had the challenge reversed, we [still] had all the confidence in the world that we were going to score. We really felt that that game was ours."

After UMass cornerback Courtney Robinson made a nice play to deflect Matt Ryan's third-down pass, the Minutemen got the ball back anyway – but at their own 23, and not at BC's.

Coen was sacked and almost intercepted on the following drive, but the

See THIRD QUARTER on page 8

Amick scores game-winner in second

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

Though it was only his second collegiate goal, you wouldn't know it by the way freshman Stuart Amick authoritatively kicked the ball into the back of the net. The midfielder's second half goal was all that the Massachusetts men's soccer team needed to defeat Boston University on Saturday afternoon, 1-0.

Amick scored the game's only goal on a rebound off of a shot from senior defender Kenny Cook. Meanwhile, the Terriers (4-4-0) struggled to penetrate the strong defensive play of UMass (4-4-0) – especially that of center backs Cook and Chris Brown.

UMass	1
BU	0

Yet red shirt junior goalkeeper Zack Simmons' five saves were enough to earn his 16th collegiate shutout. He is now tied with Bryan O'Quinn for the career shutout record at UMass.

The Maroon and White take on Montreal in exhibition play on Wednesday before wrapping up their non-conference schedule this weekend at Hartford.

BU had trouble establishing itself in the offensive zone during the first half, electing to take several long shots that made for easy saves, instead of pressuring the UMass defense.

"I was pleased by the way we played in the first half," UMass coach Sam Koch said. "They controlled the ball a lot more than we did. We were able to make sure they didn't have anything dangerous."

Though the Terriers again struggled to put shots on net, Simmons stifled one of their best opportunities early in the second half.

After a controversial call over which team knocked the ball out in the UMass defensive zone, BU nearly scored off the ensuing corner kick. Simmons made the initial save off a ball from Petur Sigurdsson, who secured the corner and launched it into the goalkeeper's chest. The UMass defense cleared the rebound, maintaining the scoreless match.

In the 54th minute, Amick finally struck for the Minutemen.

Cook fielded a UM free kick near the left side of the box. BU goalkeeper Hrafn Davidsson saved the defender's shot, but the Terriers failed to clear the ball from danger. Amick simply took full advantage of his position in front of the net and powerfully launched the rebound toward the right side of the goal from close range.

"Kenny Cook made a great

See MEN'S SOCCER on page 8

Freshman forward Stuart Amick moves up field in the Minutemen's 1-0 victory over BU on Saturday. The second half goal was the second of his collegiate career.

UMass drops first match of '07 season

By Dominick Poli
Collegian Staff

A missed opportunity in the 79th minute proved costly for the Massachusetts women's soccer team, as it lost its first match of the season yesterday to Duquesne, 3-2.

The loss to the Dukes (4-4-0, 1-1-0 Atlantic 10) came after UMass (6-1-1, 1-1-0 A-10) kept its undefeated record going on Friday when it beat Saint Joseph's (2-7-0, 0-1-0 A-10) in its Atlantic 10 opener, 3-0.

With about 12 minutes remaining in Sunday's game and the score tied 2-2, senior Jenny Roehrig sent a ball to sophomore Sydney Stoll around midfield. Stoll flew down the right side of the field, where she entered the goalie box and teased Duquesne goalkeeper Gabby Morrin, with the ball at her feet.

After a couple of light dribbles, Stoll crossed it over to senior Britt Canfield to finish it off. Canfield, however, failed to connect well enough with the pass, as the ball rolled harmlessly by the left post.

Less than two minutes later, the Dukes made the blown chance hurt.

In the 81st minute, senior Audra Matthews lined up to take a corner kick. The ensuing boot bounced around in front of the net and was almost scooped up by UMass goalkeeper Kristin Walker. But the ball was punched past her reach by senior Faye Rasmussen.

The Maroon and White tried desperately to send it to overtime, but ten minutes of uneventful play introduced the team to its first defeat of the season.

"We had to pull [Vanessa] Patry deeper into midfield and that can take away from the attack, like we've seen before," UMass coach Jim Rudy said. "It's too bad. I was hoping we could get in [to the road trip] 2-0 [in the A-10]."

UMass	2
Duquesne	3
UMass	3
St. Joe's	0

The game was a soccer tug of war from beginning to end.

Duquesne looked like it might register a tally within the game's first six minutes, when Rasmussen unleashed a shot that went wide right. Her teammates would redeem the senior a couple of minutes later – off of a corner kick by Matthews – when sophomore Christine Murawski popped one in during a scuffle for the ball near the net.

The Minutewomen answered back less than 10 minutes later. When the

See WOMEN'S SOCCER on page 9

BYE WEEK GIVES BANGED-UP QB REST | PAGE 8

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

MOSTLY SUNNY : HI: 72 LO: 54 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY, OCTOBER 2, 2007

Protesters rally in Amherst

Students react to editorial

Danielle Kahn
Collegian Staff

A controversial editorial in a college newspaper appeared after a forum at the University of Florida that featured Senator John Kerry in which a student was shocked with a Taser gun.

The title of the article, published in Colorado State University's Rocky Mountain Collegian, contained just four words typed in bold, but these four words sparked a debate on freedom of speech. The editorial was called "Tase this," followed by an expletive aimed towards President George W. Bush.

The backlash to this title was enormous. The Republican Club on campus started a petition to have the Editor-in-Chief of the paper, J. David McSwane, resign from his position. There will also be meetings held this week by a school supervisory board to decide whether or not he will be fired. Mr. McSwane will be called to a formal hearing this Thursday.

Some people do not believe this merits his dismissal, arguing that he was just exercising his freedom of speech.

"Vulgarity is an attention getter. If they think that people don't know or care about what they're writing about, it's a good way to get people to pay attention," said University of Massachusetts freshman Sam Smith. "But I don't think they're making a big deal out of nothing, if I supported Bush I'd be upset about this too."

Another student, Sadie Parachinni, a Legal Studies major, believes that vulgarity can be necessary, "If it's an editorial, they want to write to their audience. They want their audience to be able to relate to it. So it's ok to swear, but it all depends on who you're writing to."

Danielle Kahn can be reached at dkahn@student.umass.edu

Campus groups support Jena 6

By Stella Cernak
Collegian Staff

Music blared, bongos were being played, and signs were held as hundreds of University of Massachusetts students and faculty marched yesterday as part of a national walkout in support of the "Jena 6."

The Jena 6 is a group of six black students at Jena High School in Louisiana who were charged by local district attorney Reed Walters with attempted murder after beating a white student last winter. The student, who sustained minor injuries, allegedly provoked the group with racial slurs.

The incident followed months of rising racial tensions within the town of Jena, which began in September when two black students sat under a tree that was a spot often occupied by white students. The following day, several disgruntled white students hung nooses from the tree to express their resentment toward the black students.

After the incident, many black students considered the punishment too lenient. The student-protests were silenced by Walters, however, who stated that he could "take their lives away with a stroke of his pen."

Over a year later, the first of the students to go on trial, Mychal

Speakers at the protest held outside the Student Union on campus included Director Afro-American Studies Professor John Bracey and Student Trustee Ruth Thompson.

See PROTEST on page 3

Journalism lecture held on campus

By Ben Williams

The three media experts who spoke at Memorial Hall on campus last night all had one thing to say – and more for a lot more you in your news

Boston Globe reporter Emily Sweeney spoke at the lecture held in Memorial Hall last night. Other speakers included [illegible] editor of ESPN.com, Patrick Stiegman and the assisting managing editor of Washingtonpost.com, Chet Rhodes.

Three cars collide near Southwest

An accident occurred yesterday afternoon on University Drive in Amherst. Around 3:45 p.m., in close proximity to the Southwest Horseshoe at the University of Massachusetts, two sedans and a coupe collided.

Sounds of screeching tires and loud, metallic bangs brought dozens of onlookers to the scene of the three-car accident.

A passenger in one of the sedans, a woman in her 70s, was taken from the scene by ambulance, complaining of chest pain.

The University of Massachusetts Police Department is currently investigating the cause of the accident.

-David Humphreys

Isenberg School of Management's
Chase Career Center
Presents
ISENBERG
SOM
CAREER DAY
2007

All Students Are Cordially Invited to Attend!!
Date: Tuesday, October 2, 2007
Place: Mullins Center
Time: Begins at 12:00 Noon Ends at 5:00 PM

ARENA FLOOR:
Abercrombie & Fitch
Acosta Sales and Marketing
Aggregate Industries
Aldi, Inc.
Alexander, Aronson, Finning & Co., P.C.
Ameriprise Financial
Avery Dennison
Babson Capital Management
Boston Beer Company
Brown & Brown Inc.
C&S Wholesale Grocers, Inc.
Cambridge Associates, LLC
Comm. of MA Division of Banks
Consolidated Graphics
Constellation Commodities Group
CVS/Pharmacy
Deloitte & Touche
DiCicco, Gulman & Company LLP
Edelstein & Company LLP (public accounting)
EMC Corporation
Enterprise Rent-A-Car
Ercolini & Company LLP
Ernst & Young
Eze Castle Software LLC, A BNY ConvergEx Group Company
Fastenal Company
Federated Insurance
Feeley & Driscoll, P.C.
Frito-Lay, Inc
GlaxoSmithKline Pharmaceuticals
Gorton's
Grant Thornton LLP
Gray, Gray & Gray, LLP
Hanover Insurance Group
Hertz
Huron Consulting Group
Internal Revenue Service
John Hancock Financial Network-Boston Partners
Kohl's Department Stores
KPMG, LLP
Landa & Altsher, P.C.
Liberty Mutual
Lightolier
Lowe's Companies, Inc.
Macy's
Medical Information Technology, Inc. (MEDITECH)
Meyers Brothers Kalicka, P.C.
Millward Brown
Moriarty & Primack, P.C.
Morris & Morris, P.C.
Needel, Welch & Stone, PC
NEPC
Northwestern Mutual Financial Network
Novogradac & Company LLP
O'Connor & Drew, P.C.
PeoplesBank
Pepsi Bottling Group
Protiviti
Pyxis Mobile, Inc.
RadioWaves, Inc.
Raytheon Company
RSM McGladrey/McGladrey & Pullen
Samet & Company PC
SS&C Technologies, Inc.
State Street Corporation
Target Stores
TechTarget
Teradyne
The Sherwin Williams Company
Travelers
UHY Advisors N.E., LLC
United Technologies Corp.
Vistaprint
Vitale Caturano & Company, PC
Walgreens
Walter & Shuffain, PC
Wells Fargo Financial
Wolf & Company, P.C.
Wolseley's North American Division

CONCOURSE LEVEL:
Babies R Us/Toys R Us
Bank of New York Mellon
Black & Decker
Blinds To Go
Comcast Spotlight
Fidelity Investments
First Investors Corp.
John Hancock (Corporate)
Levine, Katz, Nannis & Solomon
New England Financial Group, LLC
PricewaterhouseCoopers
Ryder Systems, Inc
TJX Companies, Inc.
Touchstone Crystal
Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A., Inc.

For your convenience there will be a van leaving Hagis Mall to the Mullins Center every 20 minutes from 11:45am to 5:00pm

Some helpful hints: (1) Bring a supply of resumes with you to leave with company representatives you meet; (2) Dress appropriately. This means tie and jacket for men, dress or blouse, skirt, or pansuit for women. (3) Speak with corporate representatives of interest to you and ask for a business card, if available.

OCT 2 2007

Iraq death toll drops by 50 percent

By Steven R. Hurst
Associated Press

The number of American troops and Iraqi civilians killed in the war fell in September to levels not seen in more than a year. The U.S. military said the lower count was at least partly a result of new strategies and 30,000 additional U.S. forces deployed this year.

Although it is difficult to draw conclusions from a single month's tally, the figures could suggest U.S.-led forces are making headway against extremist factions and disrupting their ability to strike back.

The U.S. military toll for September was 64, the lowest since July 2006, according to figures compiled by The Associated Press from death announcements by the American command and Pentagon.

More dramatic, however, was the decline in Iraqi civilian, police and military deaths. The figure was 988 in September — 50 percent lower than the previous month and the lowest tally since June 2006, when 847 Iraqis died.

The Iraqi death count is considered a minimum based on AP reporting. The actual number is likely higher, as many killings go unreported.

Nevertheless, the heartening numbers emerged just three weeks after U.S. Ambassador Ryan Crocker and commander Gen. David Petraeus argued before a divided Congress that more time was needed for Iraq to begin seeing results from President Bush's dispatch of an additional 30,000 forces to pacify Baghdad and surrounding regions.

On Monday they issued an unusual joint statement to the Iraqi people that credited them for the decline in violence.

"We must maintain the momentum that together we have achieved. We are confident that you and your fellow citizens will continue to display determination, that Iraqi security forces will remain vigilant and that additional Iraqis will join our combined effort," they said.

Their message opened with greetings to the Iraqi people during the holy month of Ramadan, when Muslims focus on their spiritual lives and fast from dawn to dusk.

"Please know that we remain absolutely committed to this effort. ... Much work lies ahead of us. Despite the challenges, we can, together, achieve success," the two men wrote in the statement signed and dated by each.

Of particular note, the message referred to anti-American cleric Muqtada al-Sadr by his honorific, Sayyid Muqtada. Sayyid is a title designating a religious figure as a direct descendant of the Prophet Muhammad.

"We also sincerely hope that the cease-fire declared by the Sayyid Muqtada will continue to be observed and be further extended to all members of Jaysh al-Mahdi (Arabic for Mahdi Army)," Crocker and Petraeus wrote.

After a violent confrontation between the Mahdi Army and guards at a religious shrine in the holy city of Karbala in August, al-Sadr said he was standing down his fighters for six months to reorganize.

Col. Steven Boylan, spokesman for Petraeus, said there was "no silver bullet or one thing" responsible for the declining death tolls. But he credited increased U.S. troop strength, saying that had allowed American forces to step up operations against al-Qaida in Iraq and other insurgent and militia fighters.

Anthony H. Cordesman, former director of intelligence assessment at the Pentagon and analyst with the private Center for Strategic and International Studies in Washington, said the decline in violent deaths was a positive trend that does seem to be related to the increase in U.S. forces. But he said it was too early to know if it will last.

"We tend to focus too much on killing rather than wounded, on extreme acts of violence rather than patterns of displacement or ethnic cleansing," He said that when looking at overall stability in Iraq, killings are only one measure.

"This is, I think one of the great difficulties. It's a very complex pattern of fighting and people look for simple statistical bottom lines rather the overall pattern," he said.

"You know you've won when you've won, not when you get the first set of positive indicators," he said.

In Washington, Senator Joseph Biden issued a statement clarifying what he said were misconceptions about a nonbinding Senate resolution that passed last week under his cosponsorship.

The resolution calls on the Bush administration to encourage the Iraqi government and parliament to adhere to the country's constitution, which lays out a plan for a loose confederation of regions under a limited central government, leaving the bulk of power with the regions.

"Since then, some political leaders in Iraq have misunderstood the amendment. Instead of working to clear up any misunderstandings about the Senate amendment, the U.S. embassy in Baghdad issued a statement that dangerously mischaracterizes it," said Biden.

He said the amendment, co-sponsored by Republican Senator Sam Brownback, "does not call for the partition of Iraq. To the contrary, it calls for keeping Iraq together by bringing to life the federal system enshrined in its constitution.

Protesters rally on campus and in town to support Jena 6 and the Student Government Association, who promoted the walkout around campus and on Facebook, the national movement was brought to UMass.

PROTEST from page 1

Judging by the hundreds of diverse faces and expressive posters held outside the Student Union yesterday, many UMass students got the message. Signs held by students promoted equality and denounced racism.

One sign read, "We are all equal," while another read, "One voice may not change the world, but it can inspire the voices that will." Other messages were firmer, such as one poster which displayed pictures of nooses accompanied with the words, "This is not a joke!" Most of the event's organizers also wore T-shirts with a firm message: a picture of two men being hanged and the question, "Just a prank?"

"It feels like the second coming of the Civil Rights Movement," said student Brandon Rainville, holding a plastic water cooler jug he used as a makeshift noisemaker during the march.

African American Studies Professor John Bracey also paralleled the event to the Civil Rights Movement of the 1960's.

"These are the same issues as 40 years ago," he stated. Bracey made reference to Rosa Parks and how one particular situation can promote change and be the "straw that breaks the camel's back."

A petition to Walters over the judicial treatment of the six students circulated throughout the crowd as the group listened to several speakers. The first of these speakers was senior Danny Soto.

"People complain and say, 'how come every time something happens to a black person they say it's a race issue?' It is a race issue. There were nooses hanged."

He did add, however, that he was pleased by seeing a lot more support from white students than he expected and stated that "justice has no color."

Mohamed Vandi, member of the Black Student Union, agreed.

"We are going to make a statement," he said. "We are against racism and for justice and equality. It's not a black or white thing. It's a right or wrong thing. We all live together in this society."

Student Trustee Ruth Thompson stepped up in front of the crowd to give the history of the Jena case and to offer some words of encouragement.

"Let's all walk through this town and be loud and noisy as hell!" She exclaimed, accompanied by chants from the crowd.

The chants, alternated between Bracey's, "I'm fired up! Can't take no more!," "No Justice! No peace!" and "Hey! Hey! Ho! Ho! Racism has got to go!" as the group marched from the Student Union steps to Amherst Center holding up both lanes of traffic much to the amusement of those passing by. One truck driver patiently waited for the crowd to pass and exchanged a peace sign with several of the marchers.

Bracey said that what it comes down to is that "things are not indivisible. We need to look at every human we see and try to see ourselves in that person. Any injustice done to anybody is an injustice done to you!"

Stella Cernak can be reached at ccernak@student.umass.edu.

Student protesters hold signs including "Justice," "We are all equal,"and "This is not a joke!"

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVIII
Issue 21

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Nicholas Belanger
Managing Editor Katie Huston
Business Manager Dan Exter
Production Manager Chris Martin
Night Supervisor Meghan Murphy
Advertising Manager Alex Bender
Arts & Living Editor Tim McCall
Copy Editor Adam Scagin
Editorial Editor Sean Sullivan
News Editor Derrick Perkins
Sports Editor Jeremy Rice
Asst. Business Manager Eric Szymczak
Assistant Operations Linda Wollack
Asst. Arts & Living Stephanie McPherson
Asst. Arts & Living Ross McAskill
Asst. Arts & Living Teresa Reilly
Asst. Editorial James Mathews
Asst. Editorial Melissa Garber
Assistant News Kate Olesin
Assistant News Will McGuinness
Assistant News Holly Seabury
Assistant Sports Michael King
Assistant Sports Joe Meloni
Assistant Sports Eli Rosenzweike
Web Editor James Hale
Photo Editor Toan Trinh

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic year. The Collegian is independent of the University in its financial and editorial affairs. Founded in 1890 and known as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1918 and the Daily Collegian in 1956. Published Daily since 1967. The Collegian has been published since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 A.M. and 3:30 P.M.

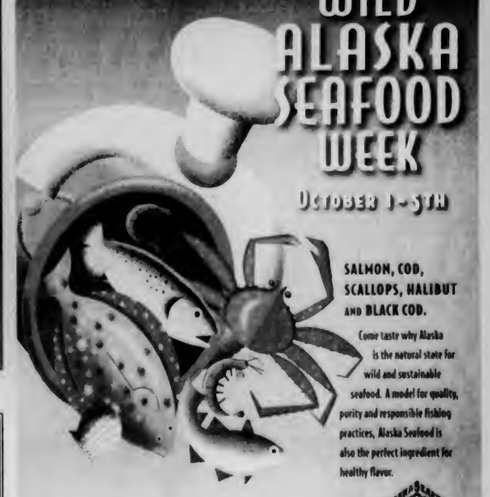
Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Will McGuinness

COPY EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

Write for News!
news@dailycollegian.com



UMass Republicans host Conservative Intellectual Phyllis Schlafly

Topic:
Feminism vs Conservatism: The Great Debate
Wednesday, October 3rd at 7 PM in Bowker Auditorium

LA PIAZZA PIZZA
GRAND OPENING
FAST FREE DELIVERY OR PICK-UP
CALL (413)253-6444
PIZZA CALZONES SUBS
SALADS WINGS ENTREES
AND MORE
30 BOLTWOOD WALK
AMHERST , MA
HOURS OF OPERATION:
SUN. 4 PM - 1 AM
MON - THU : 4 PM - 2 AM
FRI - SAT : 4 PM - 3 AM
Check Our Menu On Line
WWW.LAPIAZZARISTORANTE.US
Click on our "TO GO MENU"
Delivery drivers wanted!
Call after 4 PM, everyday

LOCAL RESTAURANT CHEFS, TOO!
WILD ALASKA SEAFOOD WEEK
October 1 - 5th

SALMON, COD, SCALLOPS, HALIBUT AND BLACK COD.
Come taste why Alaska is the natural state for wild and sustainable seafood. A model for quality, purity and responsible fishing practices, Alaska Seafood is also the perfect ingredient for healthy flavor.
ALASKA SEAFOOD TRIVIA CONTEST AT EACH DC.

RANDY RICE, Seafood Technical Director for the Alaska Seafood Marketing Institute, will speak on seafood sustainability and nutrition.
THURSDAY, OCTOBER 4TH AT 7PM
IN THE BERKSHIRE ROOM
www.umass.edu/diningservices

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 2, 2007

"It were best that we not all think alike, it is difference of opinion that makes horseraces." - Mark Twain

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Past lessons

John Gruenenfelder

The new Ken Burns documentary, "The War," is now in its second week on PBS stations. The series itself is quite apolitical, but when watching, it is hard not to draw comparisons with certain other conflicts occurring now. Some comparisons are positive, some negative, and some serve to show the constant elements of war regardless of what period it occurs in.

One of the biggest disparities is presented with the title of the first part of "The War." It is called a "necessary war," taken from a quote by one of the interviewed soldiers. This is a particularly apt phrase, considering the isolationist attitudes of the United States at large during that time. Today, though, our actions seem quite far from necessary.

I feel most people believe the actions taken in Afghanistan certainly fell into the category of a "necessary war" even if the situation has been botched since then. The same cannot be said about our misadventures in Iraq. Regardless of how the administration tries to portray it, this was the very model of an elective war. More people are realizing this each day, but, alas, we cannot un-invade Iraq.

When the Allies liberated France and Italy they were greeted like true heroes. The entire image was present with cheering citizens, hugs and kisses for soldiers and flowers handed out with smiles. Was this the source of the delirious misconceptions about our arrival in Iraq? It didn't occur in Korea or Vietnam and only occurred in small isolated places in Iraq. It seems such a large leap to transplant that abstract idea onto such a different part of the world and with a culture and circumstances so different from those in Europe.

On the home front there has been little or no sacrifice to help in the war effort unless you happen to be in a military family, or unless you count a call to shop as a personal sacrifice. During a conflict, soldiers tend not to be the most vocal critics, but this hands-off approach from the rest of the population does build some resentment.

The leadership, both military and civilian, often times appears to be lacking in good judgment.

Ignoring the staggering debt our country is accumulating, there has been no sacrifice in the form of taxes, bonds, rationing or restrictions on travel. Of course, the present war is but a small fraction of the size of that great conflict, but without some reminder, it can too easily become out of sight and out of mind. It's something that's happening to other people, other families. If there is no sacrifice but in the abstract, what incentive is there to support the effort or demand that it end?

This battle is so much smaller, but for the people that are in the middle of the fighting, it is no doubt large enough. Having talked with soldiers, I can say that the dangers are just as real, though I suppose the nearly 4,000 dead are a more profound testament to that. The dangers faced now are similar in many ways too: snipers, mines and mortars. The dangers are also different, with random bombs taking the place of enemy artillery fire.

As with any war, the people fighting it on our behalf are only human, and can make terrible human mistakes. We abhor, or at least we should abhor, these atrocities, realizing that gruesome as they are, they are also sadly inevitable.

Looking back on history, we pride ourselves as being a country and a people who are better than that – people who can treat the enemy with dignity even when they show us none. And I think that history's example largely supports this view. There is none of the wholesale slaughter of the Nazis and none of the fearsome brutality of the Japanese.

But there are crimes and there are mistakes. This rosy view of the past makes us, perhaps, a little too eager to believe the official account of a few bad apples ruining a place such as Abu Ghraib. The reality is that the chosen patsies had IQs low enough that they should not have been in the service to begin with.

One of the ideas made clear by the documentary is that the soldiers had profound respect for their enemies, the sort of respect one should have for somebody who is trying to kill you. The soldiers today have a similar respect for the insurgents trying to blow them up; it makes sure you do not underestimate your foe.

The leadership, both military and civilian, oftentimes appears to be lacking in good judgment. Over the past four years, they have misread the tide of the war and the capabilities of the insurgents. There are countless lessons to be learned from past conflicts: when to fight, when not to fight, and when to reassess the situation. Supporters of the war, and our leaders in particular, would do well to step back, observe and learn. War is not reinvented each time a bullet is fired.

John Gruenenfelder is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jgruenen@student.umass.edu

OCT 2 2007

Free speech or morality?

Greg Collins

Last Tuesday's speech given by Iranian president Mahmoud Ahmadinejad to Columbia University students and faculty generated a predictable derision from the American public, particularly regarding his views on homosexuals and the Holocaust.

But the fact that Columbia University and its president Lee Bollinger hosted the speech is no laughing matter. These remarks exposed the utterly horrifying views of an utterly horrifying regime which dishonors the Islamic community. The school's acceptance of Ahmadinejad reflected more poorly on the complete ignorance and selfishness of Columbia University than Ahmadinejad's speech did on Iran.

Specifically, Bollinger's justification to welcome the Iranian president in the name of free speech was shamelessly hypocritical and deeply insensitive to those who suffer or have suffered under his regime.

In reaction to the resistance surrounding Ahmadinejad's visit, Bollinger stressed the importance of fostering a marketplace of ideas on college campuses. Even people who did not agree with Iran's foreign policy ambitions, such as the development of nuclear weapons to target Israel, accepted this reasoning.

However noble these ideals are, do not be fooled by sanctimonious academics like Bollinger. If he were genuinely committed to promoting a marketplace of ideas, he would have supported to reinstitute ROTC on campus, which has been banned at Columbia since 1969.

There is no other example which more clearly shows the artificial manifestations of Bollinger's references to free speech. The messages ROTC espouses – such as college students' physical and emotional sacrifices to their country – would have resonated within a student body and faculty largely disconnected from direct realities of war and peace.

But the fact that Bollinger stifled the opportunity to harbor this message at Columbia reveals how free speech is important as long as universities encourage speech that they like and discourage that which they don't.

Similarly, one wonders whether the family members of imprisoned homosexuals, dissidents and academics in Iran believe that Bollinger's talk of freedom was sincere. These people will never get to utilize the free speech rights of which Bollingger spoke.

Regarding this debate, it is neither a university's nor an academic's place to start conversation.

Yet it is more than hypocrisy that reflects poorly on Bollinger and Columbia University. On a broader level, their actions illustrate why there are still people and institutions selfish enough to put their personal satisfactions over the common good of America and the world.

Right now, the most pressing components of the common good for humanity is eradicating the global terror threat and ending the Arab-Israeli conflict. The Bush Administration has crafted a careful position of engagement with Iran by emphasizing that the UN Security Council must assume a lead role in combating its threat.

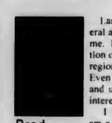
Preparation to confront unpredictable leaders, like Ahmadinejad and his boss Ayatollah Khamenei, and to outline contingency plans if sanctions and diplomacy fail, is an extremely delicate situation. It necessitates nuanced strategies such as deciding whether to engage in direct talks with them, and if so, what to say to them.

Regarding this debate, it is neither a university's nor an academic's place to start conversation. They have neither resources nor a complete understanding of counterterrorism measures or diplomatic protocol to do so in a constructive manner.

Assuming that it is a university's responsibility to provide such a platform exhibits how some people prefer enhancing the prestige of themselves or their schools over promoting the common good.

The common good requires that Americans must not allow an enemy of humanity to propagate his views. It commands that we not dishonor our fellow brothers and sisters, whether they are homosexual, heterosexual, Jewish or Muslim, by providing an opportunity for evil to justify prosecuting certain people because of their association with these arbitrarily imposed labels. It dictates that in order to defeat evil, humanity must unite against it by refusing to legitimize the substance of its warped thinking.

Yet narcissism, not a concern for the common good, is systemic in universities, particularly Ivy League institutions hoping to enhance their prestige. Harvard University invited former Iranian president Mohammed Khatami to speak last fall, and Yale University admitted a former Taliban member in 2005. A powerful Columbia academic said that the school would invite Hitler to speak, as long as the university would be able to challenge him. President Bush even remarked that Ahmadinejad's invitation "speaks volumes about the greatness, really, of America."



Most significant is not the acceptance of these enemies, but that the respective justification for doing so by each university is frighteningly similar. After controversy escalated concerning the former Taliban member's admission, for instance, the university explained, "We hope that his courses help him understand the broader context for the conflicts around the world."

Yale's thinking exemplifies why America remains uncommitted to defeat evil. The issue is not about free speech. It is about a purpose that Americans, and all human beings, should strive to live up to which supersedes any notions of being exposed to a marketplace of ideas.

Greg Collins is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu.

More cursing, less violence

Brad Leibowitz

Language interests me. The general application as a whole interests me. More specifically, the evolution of language throughout various regions of the world interests me. Even more acutely, the evolution and use of "street talk" or "slang" interests me.

I say this for a few reasons. I am a New Yorker living outside of Boston. I have a few friends who are currently in Australia. Finally, due to my travels, I have made a lot of friends all throughout the world, all of which, by their choice of phrases and terminology, never cease to amaze me.

The debate is still raging to determine if language stems from biology or an evolutionary need to express and communicate with one another. No matter the stem, this much is true – we stick to our languages and defend them fiercely.

As a New Yorker living in Sox territory, when I came to school four years ago, the first thing I learned is that there is no such thing as a "liquor store" anywhere in New England. "Packy" is the term up here. Simple and straight to the point (admittedly, I try not to say it).

Another thing I have noticed as a small yet obvious difference between our regional dialects is how we use foul language.

It could be due to the environment of the city or the fast-paced motion with which it thrives, but citizens of New York City are fond of the word, "fk" and all of its derivations. Conversely, again, maybe due to the environment of Boston and New England, I find that most "patriots" are fond of the word "sh*t."

When something unfortunate happens, most New Yorkers opt to say "mother(fker." Most New Englanders settle for the easier, yet less limited in its tone, "sh*t."

Did you know that in Australia they call a bag of wine, a "goon?" Neither did I.

Above all, the aspect of language which interests me most is censorship.

Above all, the aspect of language that interests me most is censorship and what is deemed as "foul, crude, bad and generally offensive" language. Lewis Black talks about this. In a skit, he roughly says the following: Imagine a man who works the same job for 30 years. In those years, he has built up a nice size pension, accumulated a decent size 401(k), saved enough money for his kids' education, and has just enough money to live out his retirement in comfort.

Then, one day, because either the company is downsizing, outsourcing or generally doing badly, he gets fired. The man loses everything. 30 years of saving down the drain. He loses everything and has to live out the rest of his life where he began it when he was 21.

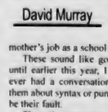
Do you suppose that man goes home, sits on his couch and says "Oh sassafras sassfras poppycock?"

No. That man goes home and uses as much foul language as he can to prevent himself from killing his ex-boss and coworkers.

I do not believe anymore that there is any such thing as foul language. We are adults and these are the words we have chosen to express anger, frustration, sorrow and pain, so we don't go ahead and kill our neighbor's dog which never stops barking.

Lewis Black commentary aside, I do agree with him. Yet, I also find that when it comes to "foul language," it all depends upon the circumstance which it is said in.

Say for example two newscasters are reporting the nightly news as they always do. It's 6:30 p.m., you just got home from work and are preparing dinner for your family. As your kids sit down at the table, out of nowhere, for no reason, one of the newscasters just blurts out "mother(fker!" In this circumstance, you would have the right to be upset with the programming.



However, say the same situation is unfolding. Work, dinner, kids at the table, news is on. Yet this time, as the news is taking place, a lighting fixture falls from the ceiling of the television studio, killing one of the newscasters. In reaction to this, the other newscaster says, "fk" to express surprise and general disbelief.

Due to the situation, the newscaster is legitimized in saying what he or she said. As a viewer, you wouldn't react against the curse word, you might actually be thinking or saying the same thing.

So you see, language is interesting like that. It has its small niches and holes. It maintains its cultural differences and a certain level of censorship. Censorship to protect the eyes and ears of the viewer, fk that.

Brad Leibowitz is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bleibowi@student.umass.edu

Proudly defending proper grammar

David Murray

I don't really know where it came from, but I've always been a staunch defender of correct grammar. It seems to bother a lot of people, so I used to blame it on my father's job as a newspaper copy editor, or on my mother's job as a school principal.

These sound like good excuses, but until earlier this year, I don't think I'd ever had a conversation with either of them about syntax or punctuation. It can't be their fault.

The only reasonable conclusion I've come to is that I was born a jerk. But I can't change this. I've tried, but there is nothing I can do; I will always care about grammar. So, really, you guys have got to help me out. I'm miserable. I'm not even talking about the standard mistakes guys like me will complain about. Things like confusing "your" and "you're" really are sad, but they happen so often as to be desensitizing. What really bothers me are other, less pervasive things.

First: never ever say, "hence why." It seems like I can't even last a day without hearing someone say, "I tripped over a dead squirrel, hence why I have this scrape." "Hence" means "for this reason."

Think about this example: "The Black Parade is a brilliant album; for this reason why My Chemical Romance is a fantastic band." If anyone said this, they would sound like an idiot, and not just because of their terrible taste in music.

Once, I heard Celine Dion use the word "ironical" in a television commercial. I thought she was simply unfamiliar with English; she was, after all, raised to speak French. But I've since heard several native speakers use this word, and it's awful.

I've tried, but there is nothing I can do. I will always care about grammar.

There is no reason ever to say "ironical." We already have a word that means the same thing. It's "ironic." With people adding syllables onto words like this indiscriminately, we're going to end up with a word like "ironicality," and that would be tragical.

A couple weeks ago, I was doing a reading on poetic language, and I came across the longest sentence I had ever read. Now, I don't really have a problem with run-on sentences. In fact, I actually love them. Really. But when a sentence lasts for three fourths of a page and contains phrases like "directionality toward the object" and "spectral dispersion of the ray word," a line must be drawn.

I drew such a line, several times all over my copy of the text. The professor was not amused, but a scholar of the English language should realize such meaningless jargon as the masturbatory stroking of the author's ego. I mean, what does an "autotelic word" have to do with light refraction? What did I even just say?

Perhaps the one thing that bothers me more than anything else in the world is the use of the word "random" to mean "unexpected." When someone read my previous column, an attack on sandal wearers, they told me it was "so random." It was like the person was telling me that it could have been written just by picking words out of a hat. I was furious; I put a lot of time and thought into that article.

When a stranger comes up to you and asks you what kind of car you drive, he's not being "random." He has caught you off guard, perhaps, with a question you did not expect. But that is not random. He didn't flip a coin or roll a die to determine what to ask you. So next time you show me a YouTube.com video of a Japanese game show depicting a man getting his nose hairs plucked in a library, call it "absurd," or "weird," but don't call it "so random."

With so much of my time spent stewing over the way people speak, I should have realized that moving to Massachusetts was a terrible decision. Back in New York, my days were spent correcting grammar mistakes, and instructing people that "no" is a monosyllabic word. I just can't let things like that go.

So why would I come to a state where people don't even pronounce the letter "r?" It's because I'm an imbecile. But now that I'm here, I have to make the best of it. So, I will only say, hopefully with palpable force and sincerity, that, in the English language, there is no such thing as a silent "r." Please take note.

Some people think I'm unreasonable when it comes to speech. This is not true. I'm willing to let some things go, like calling water fountains "bubblers," even though they don't bubble. But how can you not be embarrassed when English is your native language, and you don't even speak it?

Please, remember that there are rules for the way we communicate, and they were not meant to be broken.

David Murray is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dsmurray@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 2, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Young rocker releases album

Bryce Avary is the one-man band of The Rocket Summer

By Michelle Abbasciano
Collegian Correspondent

Bryce Avary, the vocalist and musician behind The Rocket Summer, is literally a one-man show. He writes all of the music and lyrics for his songs, performs the vocals on all the tracks, along with the drums, piano, guitars, bass, percussion, organ, harmonica, and the synthesizers, and co-produced the record.

His new CD, "Do You Feel," which came out on July 17, 2007, is a big step for the band, musically and career-wise. Although "Do You Feel" is Avary's first major label release (on Island Records) it is his third full-length record. The young musician has been writing and performing since he was 14 and released his first self-titled EP when he was 16.

The Rocket Summer has become insanely popular among young girls all across the country over the past couple years. The band's past records have been equally as upbeat and well put together as their most recent, but "Do You Feel" is clearly their best yet and shows the progression of Avary.

It is also obvious that he cares a lot about his music and takes every aspect of it seriously. He says that this new CDs theme involves trying to overcome the cliché about musicians living the rockstar lifestyle. His positive attitude reflects strongly in his music. Hope and looking forward is also a big part of Avary's views and he makes sure that his fans know that through his music.

Every song on this CD is extremely catchy and appealing, but the two that stand out the most are the opening track, "Break It Out," and the band's first single off the CD, "So Much Love." Both are upbeat and have a genuine pop feel to them. In addition to being likable because of their positive beats and creative instrumental arrangements, the majority of the tracks are also radio friendly and easy to sing along to.

Probably one of the most literal and straightforward songs on the CD that depicts Avary wearing his heart on his sleeve is "A Song Is Not A Business Plan." Although it is still upbeat and pop-sounding, this song is a bit more controversial. With lyrics such as "This is me, saying words I actually mean, I won't compromise this thing just to make it," the song deals with Avary's views on the music business and the downsides to being a musician.

The CD is also laced with piano and horn sections, which give the songs interesting, original beats, especially in "So Much Love." Although Avary's voice is slightly high-pitched and almost reminiscent of a younger Michael Jackson at first listen, the songs on "Do You Feel" are uplifting and catchy, with powerful choruses and ultra-pop beats.

Although this CD obviously fits best into the "pop" category, it still gives an interesting spin on the sound of its genre. Most of the tracks sound somewhat similar, but each song tends to tell a story, keeping listeners on their toes by mixing upbeat, fast-paced tracks with slower, piano-laced songs.

It is clear that this young artist will only improve with age as he continues to develop his skills as a lyricist, musician and vocalist. All in all, "Do You Feel" is a great CD, easy to listen to, and is possibly the most energetic and upbeat album you'll hear all year.

Michelle Abbasciano can be reached at mabbasci@student.umass.edu

The Rocket Summer maintains an upbeat sound on his new album that should please his primarily female fan base.

THE ROCKET SUMMER

"DO YOU FEEL"

ISLAND RECORDS

3.5/5

Ingram Hill fails to impress fans

"Cold In California", Ingram Hill's new album, has a similar feel to prior releases by the band.

By Teresa Reilly

Ingram Hill released their third album in August 2006 entitled "Cold in California." Fans of the band won't be surprised by any new title or an elaborate new sound. Every song on the new album sounds like the songs on their previous albums: Indie's Picture Show and Until Now.

It is surprising that such a young band could have already lost creative connection. Ingram Hill was formed in 2000 after friends Jamie Moore (vocals), Phil Bedard (lead guitar), Alex Sorgen (bass), Jay Sherman (vocals) and Matt Chamberlain (drums) left the Tufts University band Pacific Street. Bedard and Moore, who co-founded the band, have been behind all of the albums, and have included Matthew Murphy (keyboard) and Tim Mooney (drums) in the band's lineup since 2003. Chamberlain left the band before releasing their second album, Make a Home, and Mooney left before releasing their third album, Indie's Picture Show. Adult Contemporary, with a mellow acoustic sound, is the band's genre. Ingram Hill performs similar to Dispatch, Guster and Jason Mraz. Their music is mellow, with a soft rock sound, and is usually sung by Moore.

The most recent album, "Cold in California," is the band's first release on Hollywood Records. While the album is not bad, it is not memorable. Moore's voice is the only thing that keeps the album from being boring. The rest of the band's sound is mediocre at best. The songs on the album are all relatively the same, with a similar beat and tempo throughout the entire album.

It is hard to decipher the difference between the supposed ballads and upbeat songs. Every song on the album seems to start mellowing. The only difference that can be heard is on the title track, "Cold in California." The song is more upbeat and ends the album on a very high note.

I read singer Jamie Moore's recent almost every song on the album with a little help. Millions Make Noise is the only track that I can't find a connection to the rest of the record. Songs about missing love and Memphis ring throughout the entire album.

It is hard to decipher the difference between the supposed ballads and upbeat songs. Every song on the album seems to start mellowing. The only difference that can be heard is on the title track, "Cold in California." The song is more upbeat and ends the album on a very high note.

I read singer Jamie Moore's recent almost every song on the album with a little help. Millions Make Noise is the only track that I can't find a connection to the rest of the record. Songs about missing love and Memphis ring throughout the entire album.

It is hard to decipher the difference between the supposed ballads and upbeat songs. Every song on the album seems to start mellowing. The only difference that can be heard is on the title track, "Cold in California." The song is more upbeat and ends the album on a very high note.

I read singer Jamie Moore's recent almost every song on the album with a little help. Millions Make Noise is the only track that I can't find a connection to the rest of the record. Songs about missing love and Memphis ring throughout the entire album.

INGRAM HILL

"COLD IN CALIFORNIA"

HOLLYWOOD RECORDS

2/5

MTV's "Band in a Bubble" to promote new release at the Webster Theater

By Skye McIntyre
Collegian Correspondent

Cartel fans and music lovers alike are sure to flock to the Webster Theater in Hartford this Thursday night, as the band plans to hit the main stage there in a stop on their current tour to promote their recently-released, self-titled album.

Though you may not recognize the name immediately, that will soon change. Chances are you've heard their music at some point in the past year, whether you've realized it or not. Their songs have been featured on the "John Tucker Must Die," "Van Wilder 2: The Rise of Taj," and "Madden NFL 2007" soundtracks, as well as used in television ads for coverage of March Madness by ESPN this past spring.

Perhaps their best exposure, however, was through their appearance on MTV's short series "Band In a Bubble," four episodes on the network featuring footage of Cartel living, working and existing in a 2,000 square foot steel and fiberglass construction on New York City's Pier 54 for 20 consecutive days last May and June. MTV partnered with the band's label, Epic, and Dr. Pepper to produce the show, which culminated in a performance by Cartel for MTV viewers as well as those gathered on the pier.

If the four half-hour episodes that aired based around the band's attempts to write, record, and produce their new album didn't satisfy viewers, those curious enough were able to log onto MTV's Web site and observe the band 24 hours a day.

The publicity stunt was a success, judging by the attention the band received from various publications including Rolling Stone, who gave the new material positive reviews and said they were "unlike every other emo band."

Made up of five friends who grew up in the same town just outside Atlanta, Ga., the group has been playing together since 2000, aside from the replacement of bassist Ryan Roberts in June 2006 with friend and current member Jeff Lett. Vocalist and guitarist Will Pugh, guitarist Joseph Pepper and Nic Hudson and drummer Kevin Sander round out Cartel's lineup. He fact that the guys range from age 23-26 undoubtedly adds to their appeal, and allows listeners to relate to their lyrics.

Thanks to their strong songwriting skills, power-pop punk rock sounds, and years of playing any local venue that allowed them to grace their stage, Cartel released a 12-track album entitled "Chroma" in 2005 under the Militia Record. Living "Chroma" was then re-released in the summer of 2006 after the band signed with Epic Records.

On the band's official website, CartelRocks.com, Pugh reflects on the last record and how he feels the band's maturity has evolved to produce their latest album.

"It dealt with things like moving out and leaving old friends behind," Pugh said. "It definitely captured a certain period in my life, but the new album covers a lot more territory. We've toured the country and experienced and seen a lot more things. We've had to prioritize what's really important to us in life, especially through our relationships outside of the band. A lot of different things about being a young adult come into play on this record."

A quick listen to the four songs available for purchase on the band's Myspace page only scratches the surface of what makes Cartel such a great band. Songs like "Friends" and "Over 21" showcase plays of new track "Love Is" "The Fortunate Women" and "Homesick."

Making the jump from Alternative Press Magazine's 2005 list of "Bands You Need to Know" to headlining a national tour in just two years is impressive by any standards, yet after you listen to Cartel and the great is in the pudding. When Pugh thinks about where the band's been and the direction it is now moving, he's surprised.

"It's the same feeling parents have when their kid graduates high school and graduates college," he says. "It's like wow, this idea that we put down a few years ago has grown to come to fruition. We couldn't be more proud of what we've accomplished while at the same time looking toward the future."

Fans look forward to a blend of old and new on Cartel's current tour, which is hitting cities up and down the East Coast in addition to stops in Missouri, Texas, Tennessee, Tennessee and Toronto. The tour also kicked off last week with performances in a Florida performance in mid-November.

Catch them this Thursday at the Webster Theater in Hartford at 6 p.m. Tickets are still currently available.

Skye McIntyre can be reached at smcintyre@collegian.com

Cartel was a part of a short, four episode series on MTV called "Band In a Bubble" in which the musicians were locked inside a 2,000 square-foot room for 20 days.

"Album Review" from the band's second album, "Jimmy Eat the World," with Billboard's Adult Contemporary Hits list.

COLONIAL ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION STANDINGS

– NORTH DIVISION –

TEAM	CAA RECORD	OVERALL RECORD	PA	PF
Hofstra	1-0	4-0	130	82
Massachusetts	2-0	4-1	163	91
Northeastern	0-2	1-3	66	118
Maine	0-2	1-3	45	114
Rhode Island	0-2	1-4	112	158

– SOUTH DIVISION –

TEAM	CAA RECORD	OVERALL RECORD	PA	PF
Delaware	3-0	5-0	197	68
James Madison	2-0	4-1	180	95
Richmond	2-0	3-1	156	107
William & Mary	1-1	3-2	172	172
Villanova	1-1	3-2	109	117
Towson	0-3	2-3	90	121

Kicking game big in UM loss

FOOTBALL from page 8

the 10 became a terrible kick that carried into the end zone.

The first UMass possession went nowhere, and Arnold was forced to punt from his own end zone. He unleashed a 44-yard kick that put BC on the UMass 49, which was better than it could have been, though BC scored a touchdown on the ensuing possession.

Then on the next possession, punting with the line of scrimmage on the 50-yard line, Arnold sent a booming kick into BC territory that looked like it would drop in before the goal line, but sailed through the wind and landed in the end zone for a touchback and a net of 30 yards on the kick.

Two other punts came off Arnold's foot poorly but resulted in great field position for the Minutemen.

On the next UMass possession, Coen led the Minutemen to the BC 36-yard line, but when the drive stalled, Arnold was called upon. He shanked the kick to the left, but it rolled out of bounds at the BC four-yard line. Coincidentally, Ryan led BC 96 yards the other way for their second touchdown of the game.

Arnold's best kick came during the Minutemen's comeback charge in the third quarter.

From the UMass 46, Arnold launched a 51-yard kick that was downed at the BC three. The Minutemen stifled the BC offense and got the ball back on the Eagles' 41-yard line. Coen hit Rasheed Rancher for a 41-yard bomb on the first offensive play to get UMass on the board.

BIG DAY FOR FORMER EAGLE

Boston College transfer Reshaude Goodwin had an exciting day against his former team. Brown called the cornerback's number on the first kickoff return opportunity UMass had.

Junior Courtney Robinson caught the ball and as he ran right, he handed off to Goodwin, who raced back to the left for 12 yards. It seemed that Brown was giving Goodwin a chance to shine against his former school.

However, Goodwin got a bigger chance later in the game. Late in the third quarter, with the score 17-14 in favor of BC, Goodwin picked off a pass from BC quarterback Matt Ryan on the goal line, which would have been a monumental shift of momentum if not for an offside call against the Minutemen that negated the play.

Thinking he learned from the last throw, Ryan went after Goodwin again on the next play, which Goodwin got a hand on again. He didn't intercept the ball but knocked it away as UMass attempted to make a final defensive stand to stay in the game.

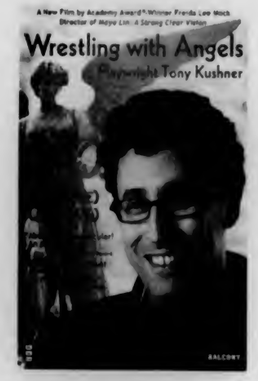
More penalties pushed the ball to the six-yard line, and BC scored anyway, but Goodwin had at least a few chances to prove himself with his new team.

SLOW GOING FOR LAWRENCE

Running back Matt Lawrence and the rest of the UMass running game struggled against a staunch Eagles run defense, which gave up 76 rushing yards to Lawrence and Tony Nelson.

Lawrence's 64 yards on the ground (a 3.2 yard average) is his lowest single-game total this season and was the second time he failed to reach the century mark in 2007. His longest rush on the day went for nine yards.

"Whenever you play a solid, well-coached unit, you get your opportunities, and they come and go fast," Lawrence said after the loss. "The daylight was there, it might have just been a matter of me not picking the right holes."



Lawrence now has 608 yards rushing this season on 102 carries, a 5.7-yard average. His average-per-carry was well above six before Saturday's game.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu.

Tony Kushner won a Pulitzer Prize for Angels in America and an Oscar nomination for his screenplay to Munich

This film provides a fascinating look at Kushner's dramatic work, which explores a wide range of social and political issues including McCarthyism and AIDS, Afghanistan and Middle East politics, race relations, the Holocaust, and what it means to be an outsider.

A New Film by Academy Award®-Winner Freida Lee Mock
Director of Maya Lin: A Strong Clear Vision

Film: "Wrestling With Angels"
Tuesday, October 2nd at 7:00pm
School of Management, Room 137
UMass Amherst

Kushner will also be speaking on campus next week. Don't miss it!
More information at www.umass.edu/jewish

FREE and open to the public

UMASS AMHERST | Presented by the Office of Jewish Affairs, Stonewall Center, and Theater Department. Cosponsored by the Center for Student Development and Student Affairs & Campus Life. More information at 413-545-9642 or www.umass.edu/jewish

Richmond defeats Wildcats, moves up 10 spots in FCS poll

CAA FOOTBALL from page 8

off return yards set the record for the most ever by a Richmond player. He also fumbled a punt at his own eight-yard line that set up a UNH touchdown.

Roger's 85-yard kickoff return for a touchdown to begin the second half gave the Spiders a 34-24 lead. He also returned a second quarter kick 84 yards to set up a Richmond touchdown.

One bright spot for the Wildcats came from quarterback Ricky Santos. The senior rushed for three touchdowns and threw for one more. His 319 passing yards for the game moved him into eighth place all-time on the FCS passing yards list.

"Ricky Santos is a great football player and a great competitor," Richmond coach Dave Clawson said. "Up seven points with a couple minutes left in the fourth quarter with him on the field isn't one of the greatest feelings in the world. I was really proud of how our defense stepped up in the fourth quarter and made some plays."

CAA owns polls

Nearly a quarter of the teams in the newest FCS Coaches' Poll are members of the CAA.

Massachusetts still sits the highest of CAA teams, although it dropped one spot to No. 3 following its 24-14 loss to Boston College. The Eagles are ranked No. 7 in the Division I Associated Press Poll.

James Madison remained at No. 9 after its victory over Villanova.

Delaware's 42-7 victory over Monmouth, coupled with the New Hampshire loss, moved the Blue Hens up a spot to No. 11, while the Wildcats dropped three spots to No. 14.

With its victory over UNH, Richmond made the biggest leap in the CAA.

The Spiders came in at the final spot in the rankings last week, but jumped 10 spots to No. 15 with their win in the latest poll.

Hofstra just escaped with a 33-28 victory over Stony Brook this week, but the win enabled the Pride to jump up two spots to No. 12.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu

Cornerback Reshaude Goodwin saw his first serious action of the season against Boston College on Saturday. The redshirt freshman transferred to UMass from BC just before the start of the 2007 season.

Tumicz leads URI over Maine

A-10 SOCCER from page 8

Ezra Cassell and Temple goalkeeper Tony Pratico each had three saves in the game, the Owl defense was the key in the game, only allowing seven shots to Temple's 10.

The shutout was the second of the year for Pratico, giving him seven for his career.

With the victory, Temple improves to 3-4-1 overall and 1-0 in Philadelphia Soccer. Seven play entering their match with Atlantic 10 opponent La Salle on Saturday. Philadelphia remains winless with a record of 0-7-1.

RHODY ENDS SLIDE IN BIG WAY

For 2-6-0 Rhode Island, a blowout win is just what the doctor ordered.

Senior Lukasz Tumicz led the way for Rhode Island, scoring two goals and adding an assist in freshman Greg Balicki's first career goal as the Rams blew away Maine, 4-1.

This was URI's first victory since Sept. 3. The Rams were scoreless prior to that win for nearly 362 minutes of play.

Tumicz also had five of the Rams' 23 shots, including three of their seven shots on goal. In all, Rhode Island outshot the Black Bears, 23-7.

The Rams had been scoreless since Sept. 9, in a 3-1 loss to Indiana. Their last win came at the expense of Providence, a 2-0 win.

URI failed to meet expectations so far after being ranked No. 22 in the Soccer America preseason polls. Its offense could be blamed for many of the Rams' struggles – getting shut out in four of their six losses. St. Bonaventure added to its first two-game win streak of the year, beating Niagara, 2-1, on Friday. The streak comes at a great time for the Bonnies, as they enter A-10 play next week against No. 15 Saint Louis. The Billikens also have momentum entering their match with the Bonnies, however, as they won their third straight match Saturday against Central Florida, 3-0. The Billikens drew 5,758 fans for their homecoming game – the second largest crowd in Robert R. Hermann Stadium history.

Sam Ehrlich can be reached at sehrlich@student.umass.edu

OKEMO MOUNTAIN RESORT

JOB FAIR

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 13
10:00 A.M. - 3:00 P.M.
OKEMO BASE LODGE

We invite UMASS AMHERST students to stop by our job fair, fill out an application and find out more about the following job opportunities

Many positions are available during vacations, holidays, peruses and weekends. Hours are flexible in many areas and we offer paid internships!

Okemo Mountain Resort has recently been rated by SKI magazine as one of the top ten resorts in the East and one of the best in North America for grooming and terrain parks.

WORK, SKI AND RIDE!!!!!!

Accounting/Administration Staff
Assistant Day Care Manager
Banquet Staff
Bell Staff
Bussers
Cashiers
Child Care Teachers/Providers
Cooks
Dishwashers
Equipment Mechanics
Front Desk Receptionists
Groomers
Grounds Crew
Group Sales Coordinators
Guest Services Staff
Housekeepers
Instructors
Ski & Snowboard
Nordic Center
Internships
Jackson Gore Inn
Bell/Valet Staff/Ski Check
Front Desk Receptionists
Housekeepers
Reservationists
Jackson Gore Real Estate
Promotions Agent
Kitchen Managers
Lift Operators
Maintenance Staff
Marketing Assistant
Mechanic/Mechanic's Helper
Night Custodians
Nurses
On Hill Skier Services Staff
Parking Attendants
Patrollers
Pool Attendants
Racing/Coaches/Secretary
Timekeepers
Recreation Center Attendants
Rental & Repair Manager
Rental & Repair Shop Staff
Reservationists
Restaurant Managers
Assistant Managers
Supervisors
Retail Staff
Sales Agents
Sales Manager
Shuttle Bus Drivers
Snowmakers
Terrain Park & Pipe Attendants
Ticket Sellers
Transport/Snowmobile Staff
Vehicle Maintenance Staff
Wait Staff & Bartenders
AND MORE!

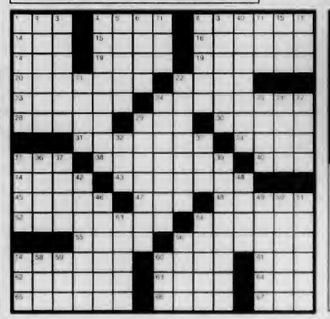
BENEFITS: Free Skiing/Riding & Snowshoeing, Employee Discounted Daycare, Referral Bonus Program, Free Skiing/Riding Lessons, Competitive Wages w/ Overtime, Food, Retail & Rental Equipment Discounts, Training & Employee Recognition, Reciprocal Skiing/Riding Privileges at Mount Sunapee, NH and Crested Butte Mountain Resort, CO And More

OKEMOPPORTUNITIES.COM
HOT JOBS AT A COOL RESORT

TO APPLY STOP BY THE JOB FAIR OR COMPLETE AND SUBMIT AN APPLICATION TO:
Okemo Mountain Resort – Human Resources
77 Okemo Ridge Road, Ludlow, VT 05149
Fax: (802) 228-4558 E-Mail: jobs@okemo.com
Phone: (802) 228-1963 Web: www.okemo.com
Okemo Mountain is an Equal Opportunity Employer.

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

		1			6			9
				7		4		1
	8	4			5	2
8							2
	4		8		3		9
	9							3
		8	3			7	1
1		5		8
4			2			3



Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Numbers pro
4 Collides on purpose
8 No gain, no loss outcomes
14 Do-over tennis service
15 Leave out
16 Mysterious
17 Sym.'s opposite
18 With competence
19 Chin whiskers
20 Lathe axis
22 Gloomy
23 Roof of the mouth
24 Relieves money
28 Rooter's stone
29 Coalition get, briefly
30 Weird
31 Accompanies
34 Zoom
35 Galahad's title
38 Outer garment
40 Guided
41 Scent
43 Punctures
45 Distant in manner
47 Skinny twins?
48 Llama land
52 Plant trees after a clear-cut
54 Bring up
55 Julep garnish
56 Argue over trivial matters
57 Jog one's memory
60 Enormous
61 Tavern
62 Retaliate on another's behalf
63 Is not well
64 Cup rim
65 Labeled
66 Editor's mark
67 Pitcher's stat

DOWN
1 Holds in a tight embrace
2 Friendly writer
3 Belligerent Hun
4 New car model's debut
5 Saunter
6 Odometer unit
7 Porker's pad
8 Prairie schooner
9 Stir to action
10 More frightening
11 Fedora or pompe
12 Wind dir.
13 Understand
21 Archibald or Thurmond
22 Those who owe
24 One hundredth part
25 Spoken
26 Amiable
27 Banned competitor
29 Most dull-witted
32 Flatfoot
33 Pouch
35 Fly high
36 Loiking
37 Housetop
39 Most weepy
42 Lodging
44 Holly toity one
46 Border of the green
49 Tinker
50 Cream-filled pastry
51 Mount Everest guide
53 Finished
54 Taps horn
56 Give up
57 Stool pigeon
58 A Gabor
59 Ryan of films
60 Possesses

Submit your comics!
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"I find that the harder I work, the more luck I seem to have."

-Thomas Jefferson

ECOLOGY By Jen Fill

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Josh Shalek

THE QUIGMANS By Buddy Hickerson

"I can't believe how cruel I've been to you people. In all the hubbub, I must have outsourced my soul to India."

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Come up with a list of ways to cleverly disguise a celebratory riot as a tea party.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Use Skype to make an international prank phone call to a farmer in Yemen.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Somewhere between dogs and deer, there exists the omnipotent goat. BLEET, BLEET!

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Annoy students in your classes by making frequent and repetative gerbil noises.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
How on earth can regular corn be expected to compete with candy corn?

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Get a shovel, and start excavating under the library in search of mummified mast-

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Savor the flavor of the university flesh parade.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
An unnatural response to an unnatural situation is completely natural.

libra Sept 23-Oct. 22
It's time to upgrade your relationship with your psuedo-bf because he's so dreamy.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
It is a pure idea to toss an egg salad sandwhich in your backpack and forget about it.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Seal + a positively or negatively charged atom = sea lion.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Your laugh is more like a cackle than a happy chuckle, and it frightens people.

Hold me, thrill me, kiss me, kill me
but most all...
draw comics!

collegiancomics@yahoo.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ACTIVITIES

Montreal weekend from $99.00. Complete, motel, transportation and more. Montreal express.net 781-979-9001. Lowest Prices on campus.

AUTO FOR SALE

Volvo GLE Sedan 1988 106000. $2100 5% Umass Discount. Tom: 256-6401.

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext. 162

EMPLOYMENT

Business Student For data entry and answering phones. Must have car. 413-210-5295

CAFE HELP PART-TIME nights and weekends must be fast, accurate, efficient and friendly. Apply in person at the woodstar cafe. 60 Masonic St. Northampton.

Drivers wanted. Must be able to work 20 to 30hrs a week. Nights and weekends. Apply at DP Dough, downtown Amherst.

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

ROOM FOR RENT

Large furnished room in downtown Amherst for female grad student/professional. Includes utilities and WiFi. Great family! $600/month. Available immediately. Call Alex. 413-896-7641.

SALONS & SPAS

HOLISTIC SALON AND SPA. Heated stone massage with shiatsk! www.shearblissamherst.com 413-253-2322.

SUBMIT YOUR CLASSIFIED ADS AT www.dailycollegian.com OR CALL 545-3500

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906. 1-800-550-4900 24 - hour hotline Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

Concerned About Your Eating? Do you eat too little? Eat too much? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic. 577-5101.

SERVICES

GET TESTED - Know your status before spring break FREE HIV RAPID TESTING OCTOBER 3rd UMass Campus Center 9am – 3pm Questions Call Bob at 413-747-5144 www.tapestryhealth.org

TRAVEL

"#1 Spring Break Website! 4 & 7 night trips. Low prices guaranteed. Group discounts for 8+ Book 20 people, get 3 free trips! Campus reps needed. www.StudentCity.com or 800-293-1445

OCT 2 2007

COLONIAL ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION STANDINGS

– NORTH DIVISION –

TEAM	CAA RECORD	OVERALL RECORD	PA	PF
Hofstra	1-0	4-0	130	82
Massachusetts	2-0	4-1	163	91
Northeastern	0-2	1-3	66	118
Maine	0-2	1-3	45	114
Rhode Island	0-2	1-4	112	158

– SOUTH DIVISION –

TEAM	CAA RECORD	OVERALL RECORD	PA	PF
Delaware	3-0	5-0	197	68
James Madison	2-0	4-1	180	95
Richmond	2-0	3-1	156	107
William & Mary	1-1	3-2	172	172
Villanova	1-1	3-2	109	117
Towson	0-3	2-3	90	121

Kicking game big in UM loss

FOOTBALL from page 8

the 10 became a terrible kick that carried into the end zone.

The first UMass possession went nowhere, and Arnold was forced to punt from his own end zone. He unleashed a 44-yard kick that put BC on the UMass 49, which was better than it could have been, though BC scored a touchdown on the ensuing possession.

Then on the next possession, punting with the line of scrimmage on the 50-yard line, Arnold sent a booming kick into BC territory that looked like it would drop in before the goal line, but sailed through the wind and landed in the end zone for a touchback and a net of 30 yards on the kick.

Two other punts came off Arnold's foot poorly but resulted in great field position for the Minutemen.

On the next UMass possession, Coen led the Minutemen to the BC 36-yard line, but when the drive stalled, Arnold was called upon. He shanked the kick to the left, but it rolled out of bounds at the BC four-yard line. Coincidentally, Ryan led BC 96 yards the other way for their second touchdown of the game.

Arnold's best kick came during the Minutemen's comeback charge in the third quarter.

From the UMass 46, Arnold launched a 51-yard kick that was downed at the BC three. The Minutemen stifled the BC offense and got the ball back on the Eagles' 41-yard line. Coen hit Rasheed Rancher for a 41-yard bomb on the first offensive play to get UMass on the board.

BIG DAY FOR FORMER EAGLE

Boston College transfer Reshaude Goodwin had an exciting day against his former team. Brown called the cornerback's number on the first kickoff return opportunity UMass had.

Junior Courtney Robinson caught the ball and as he ran right, he handed off to Goodwin, who raced back to the left for 12 yards. It seemed that Brown was giving Goodwin a chance to shine against his former school.

However, Goodwin got a bigger chance later in the game. Late in the third quarter, with the score 17-14 in favor of BC, Goodwin picked off a pass from BC quarterback Matt Ryan on the goal line, which would have been a monumental shift of momentum if not for an offside call against the Minutemen that negated the play.

Thinking he learned from the last throw, Ryan went after Goodwin again on the next play, which Goodwin got a hand on again. He didn't intercept the ball but knocked it away as UMass attempted to make a final defensive stand to stay in the game.

More penalties pushed the ball to the six-yard line, and BC scored anyway, but Goodwin had at least a few chances to prove himself with his new team.

SLOW GOING FOR LAWRENCE

Running back Matt Lawrence and the rest of the UMass running game struggled against a staunch Eagles run defense, which gave up 76 rushing yards to Lawrence and Tony Nelson.

Lawrence's 64 yards on the ground (a 3.2 yard average) is his lowest single-game total this season and was the second time he failed to reach the century mark in 2007. His longest rush on the day went for nine yards.

"Whenever you play a solid, well-coached unit, you get your opportunities, and they come and go fast," Lawrence said after the loss. "The daylight was there, it might have just been a matter of me not picking the right holes."

Lawrence now has 608 yards rushing this season on 102 carries, a 5.7-yard average. His average-per-carry was well above six before Saturday's game.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu

Richmond defeats Wildcats, moves up 10 spots in FCS poll

CAA FOOTBALL from page 8

off return yards set the record for the most ever by a Richmond player. He also fumbled a punt at his own eight-yard line that set up a UNH touchdown.

Roger's 85-yard kickoff return for a touchdown to begin the second half gave the Spiders a 34-24 lead. He also returned a second quarter kick 84 yards to set up a Richmond touchdown.

One bright spot for the Wildcats came from quarterback Ricky Santos. The senior rushed for three touchdowns and threw for one more. His 319 passing yards for the game moved him into eighth place all-time on the FCS passing yards list.

"Ricky Santos is a great football player and a great competitor," Richmond coach Dave Clawson said. "Up seven points with a couple minutes left in the fourth quarter with him on the field isn't one of the greatest feelings in the world. I was really proud of how our defense stepped up in the fourth quarter and made some plays."

CAA owns polls

Nearly a quarter of the teams in the newest FCS Coaches' Poll are members of the CAA.

Massachusetts still sits the highest of CAA teams, although it dropped one spot to No. 3 following its 24-14 loss to Boston College. The Eagles are ranked No. 7 in the Division I Associated Press Poll.

James Madison remained at No. 9 after its victory over Villanova.

Delaware's 42-7 victory over Monmouth, coupled with the New Hampshire loss, moved the Blue Hens up a spot to No. 11, while the Wildcats dropped three spots to No. 14.

With its victory over UNH, Richmond made the biggest leap in the CAA.

The Spiders came in at the final spot in the rankings last week, but jumped 10 spots to No. 15 with their win in the latest poll.

Hofstra just escaped with a 33-28 victory over Stony Brook this week, but the win enabled the Pride to jump up two spots to No. 12.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu

Cornerback Reshaude Goodwin saw his first serious action of the season against Boston College on Saturday. The redshirt freshman transferred to UMass from BC just before the start of the 2007 season.

Tumicz leads URI over Maine

A-10 SOCCER from page 8

Ezra Cassell and Temple goalkeeper Tony Pratico each had three saves in the game, the Owl defense was the key in the game, only allowing seven shots to Temple's 10.

The shutout was the second of the year for Pratico, giving him seven for his career.

With the victory, Temple improves to 3-4-1 overall and 1-0 in Philadelphia Soccer Seven play, entering their match with Atlantic 10 opponent La Salle on Saturday. Philadelphia remains winless with a record of 0-7-1.

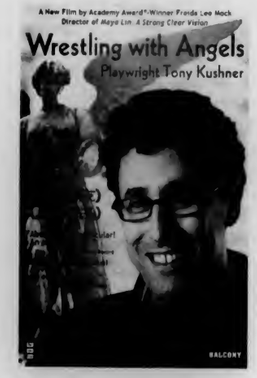
RHODY ENDS SLIDE IN BIG WAY

For 2-6-0 Rhode Island, a blowout win is just what the doctor ordered.

Senior Lukasz Tumicz led the way for Rhode Island, scoring two goals and adding an assist in freshman Greg Balicki's first career goal as the Rams blew away Maine, 4-1.

This was URI's first victory since Sept. 3. The Rams were scoreless prior to that win for nearly 362 minutes of play.

Tumicz also had five of the Rams' 23 shots, including three of their seven shots on goal. In all, Rhode Island outshot the Black Bears, 23-7.



The Rams had been scoreless since Sept. 9, in a 3-1 loss to Indiana. Their last win came at the expense of Providence, a 2-0 win.

URI failed to meet expectations so far after being ranked No. 22 in the Soccer America preseason polls. Its offense could be blamed for many of the Rams' struggles – getting shut out in four of their six losses … St. Bonaventure added to its first two-game win streak of the year, beating Niagra, 2-1, on Friday. The streak comes at a great time for the Bonnies, as they enter A-10 play next week against No. 15 Saint Louis. The Billikens also have momentum entering their match with the Bonnies, however, as they won their third straight match Saturday against Central Florida, 3-0. The Billikens drew 5,758 fans for their homecoming game – the second largest crowd in Robert R. Hermann Stadium history.

Sam Ehrlich can be reached at sehrlich@student.umass.edu

Tony Kushner won a Pulitzer Prize for Angels in America and an Oscar nomination for his screenplay to Munich

This film provides a fascinating look at Kushner's dramatic work, which explores a wide range of social and political issues including McCarthyism and AIDS, Afghanistan and Middle East politics, race relations, the Holocaust, and what it means to be an outsider.

Film: "Wrestling With Angels"
Tuesday, October 2nd at 7:00pm
School of Management, Room 137
UMass Amherst

Kushner will also be speaking on campus next week. Don't miss it!
More Information at www.umass.edu/jewish

FREE and open to the public

UMASS AMHERST | Presented by the Office of Jewish Affairs, Stonewall Center, and Theater Department. Cosponsored by the Center for Student Development and Student Affairs & Campus Life. More information at 413.545.9642 or www.umass.edu/jewish

OKEMO MOUNTAIN RESORT

JOB FAIR

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 13
10:00 A.M. - 3:00 P.M.
OKEMO BASE LODGE

We invite UMASS AMHERST students to stop by our job fair, fill out an application and find out more about the following job opportunities.

Many positions are available during vacations, holiday periods and weekends. Hours are flexible in many areas and we offer paid internships!

Okemo Mountain Resort has recently been rated by SKI magazine as one of the top ten resorts in the East, and one of the best in North America for grooming and terrain parks.

WORK, SKI AND RIDE!!!!!

Accounting/Administration Staff
Assistant Day Care Manager
Banquet Staff
Bell Staff
Bussers
Cashiers
Child Care Teachers/Providers
Cooks
Dishwashers
Equipment Mechanics
Front Desk Receptionists
Groomers
Grounds Crew
Group Sales Coordinators
Guest Services Staff
Housekeepers
Instructors
Ski & Snowboard
Nordic Center

Internships
Jackson Gore Inn
Bell/Valet Staff/Ski Check
Front Desk Receptionists
Housekeepers
Owner Services Assistant
Jackson Gore Real Estate
Promotions Agent
Kitchen Managers
Lift Operators
Maintenance Staff
Marketing Assistant
Mechanic/Mechanic's Helper
Night Custodians
Nurses
On Hill Skier Services Staff
Parking Attendants
Patrollers
Pool Attendants

Racing/Coaches/Secretary
Timekeepers
Recreation Center Attendants
Rental & Repair Manager
Rental & Repair Shop Staff
Reservationists
Restaurant Managers
Assistant Managers
Supervisors
Retail Staff
Sales Agents
Sales Manager
Shuttle Bus Drivers
Snowmakers
Terrain Park & Pipe Attendants
Ticket Sellers
Transport/Snowmobile Staff
Vehicle Maintenance Staff
Wait Staff & Bartenders
AND MORE!

BENEFITS: Free Skiing/Riding & Snowshoeing, Employee Discounted Daycare, Referral Bonus Program, Free Skiing/Riding Lessons, Competitive Wages w/ Overtime, Food, Retail & Rental Equipment Discounts, Training & Employee Recognition, Reciprocal Skiing/Riding Privileges at Mount Sunapee, NH and Crested Butte Mountain Resort, CO And More.

OKEMOPPORTUNITIES NOT JOBS AT A COOL RESORT

TO APPLY STOP BY THE JOB FAIR OR COMPLETE AND SUBMIT AN APPLICATION TO:
Okemo Mountain Resort – Human Resources
77 Okemo Ridge Road, Ludlow, VT 05149
Fax: (802) 228-4558 E-Mail: jobs@okemo.com
Phone: (802) 228-1963 Web: www.okemo.com
Okemo Mountain is an Equal Opportunity Employer.

Free Delivery to UMass Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

		1			6			9
				7		4		1
	8	4			5	2
8							2
	4		8		3		9
	9							3
		8	3			7	1
1		5		8
4			2			3

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

ACROSS
1 Numbers pro
4 Collides on purpose
8 No gain, no loss outcomes
14 Do-over tennis service
15 Leave out
16 Mysterious
17 Syn.'s opposite
18 Vein competence
19 Chin whiskers
20 Lathe axis
22 Gloomy
23 Roof of the mouth
24 Retrieves money
26 Roster's stone
29 Cotillion girl, briefly
30 Weird
31 Accompanies
34 Zoom
35 Galahad's title
38 Outer garment
40 Guided
41 Scent
43 Punctures
45 Distant in manner
47 Skinny twins?
48 Llama land
52 Plant trees after a clear-cut
54 Bring up
55 Julep garnish
56 Argue over trivial matters
57 Jog one's memory
60 Enormous
61 Tavern
62 Retaliate on another's behalf
63 Is not well
64 Cup rim
65 Labeled
66 Editor's mark
67 Pitcher's stat

DOWN
1 Holds in a tight embrace
2 Friendly writer
3 Belligerent Hun
4 New car model's debut
5 Saunter
6 Odometer unit
7 Porker's pad
8 Prairie schooner
9 Stir to action
10 More frightening
11 Fedora or pompe
12 Wend dir.
13 Understand
21 Architect or Thurmond
22 Those who owe
24 One hundredth part
25 Spoken
26 Amadeo
27 Ranked competitor
29 Mosa dull-witted
32 Flatfoot
33 Pooch
35 Fly high
36 Loathing
37 Housetop
39 Most weepy
42 Lodging
44 Holly jolly one
46 Border of the green
49 Tinker
50 Cream-filled pastry
51 Mount Everest guide
53 Finished
54 Taps horn
56 Give up
57 Stool pigeon
58 A Gabor
59 Ryan of films
60 Possesses

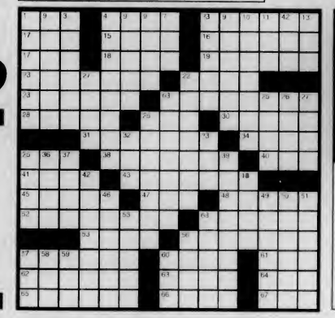
QUOTE OF THE DAY

"I find that the harder I work, the more luck I seem to have."

-Thomas Jefferson

ECOLOGY By Jen Fill

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Josh Shalek



THE QUIGMANS By Buddy Hickerson

"I can't believe how cruel I've been to you people. In all the hubbub, I must have outsourced my soul to India."

Submit your comics!
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Come up with a list of ways to cleverly disguise a celebratory riot as a tea party.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Use Skype to make an international prank phone call to a farmer in Yemen.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Somewhere between dogs and deer, there exists the omnipotent goat. BLEET, BLEET!

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Annoy students in your classes by making frequent and repetative gerbil noises.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
How on earth can regular corn be expected to compete with candy corn?

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Get a shovel, and start excavating under the library in search of mummified mast-

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Savor the flavor of the university flesh parade.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
An unnatural response to an unnatural situation is completely natural.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
It's time to upgrade your relationship with your psuedo-bf because he's so dreamy.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
It is a poor idea to toss an egg salad sandwhich in your backpack and forget about it.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Seal + a positively or negatively charged atom = sea lion.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Your laugh is more like a cackle than a happy chuckle, and it frightens people.

Hold me, thrill me, kiss me, kill me
but most all...
draw comics!

collegiancomics@yahoo.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ACTIVITIES

Montreal weekend from $99.00. Complete, motel, transportation and more. Montreal express.net 781-979-9001. Lowest Prices on campus.

AUTO FOR SALE

Volvo GLE Sedan 1988 106000. $2100 5% Umass Discount. Tom: 256-6401.

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext. 162

EMPLOYMENT

Business Student For data entry and answering phones. Must have car. 413-210-5295

CAFE HELP PART-TIME nights and weekends must be fast, accurate, efficient and friendly. Apply in person at the woodstar cafe. 60 Masonic St. Northampton.

Drivers wanted. Must be able to work 20 to 30hrs a week. Nights and weekends. Apply at DP Dough, downtown Amherst.

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

ROOM FOR RENT

Large furnished room in downtown Amherst for female grad student/professional. Includes utilities and WiFi. Great family! $600/month. Available immediately. Call Alex: 413-896-7641.

SALONS & SPAS

HOLISTIC SALON AND SPA. Heated stone massage with shiatsk!

www.shearblissamherst.com

413-253-2322.

SUBMIT YOUR CLASSIFIED ADS AT www.dailycollegian.com OR CALL 545-3500

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

Concerned About Your Eating? Do you eat too little? Eat too much? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic: 577-5101.

SERVICES

GET TESTED - Know your status before spring break. FREE HIV RAPID TESTING OCTOBER 3rd. UMass Campus Center 9am – 3pm. Questions: Call Bob at 413-747-5144 www.tapestryhealth.org

TRAVEL

*#1 Spring Break Website! 4 & 7 night trips. Low prices guaranteed. Group discounts for 8+. Book 20 people, get 3 free trips! Campus reps needed. www.StudentCity.com or 800-293-1445.

OCT 2 2007

OCT
3
2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 2, 2007

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Bye week means rest for injured Coen

Quarterback Scott Woodward comes in for injured starter Liam Coen (6) to the game in the fourth quarter with a knee injury, but Woodward played well in relief of the starter, going 5-of-11 with 57 yards in his limited action.

Woodward plays well despite UM loss to Boston College

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

The spirits of everyone wearing maroon and white sunk deeply, and they held their collective breath Saturday in Chestnut Hill. Just over a minute into the fourth quarter, the Massachusetts football team watched its leader hit the turf for the final time in the game.

Quarterback Liam Coen, who initially hurt his left knee on Sept. 15 against Towson, went down hard on the same knee against Boston College. He left the game, was replaced by Scott Woodward and did not return.

Woodward played well in relief, completing 5-of-11 passes for 57 yards.

"I've got to stay composed for the other guys," Woodward said. "It's a challenge, but when Liam went down, everyone turned to me. I've got to produce. I've got to make plays. We can't skip a beat on offense. I've just got to step up for Liam."

UMass Football

The Minutemen are focusing on their bye this week, which gives Coen an extra week to recover in hopes of returning to the field in time for the Oct. 13 meeting against Villanova.

"It's not the first time [Woodward] has had to come in," Brown said, recalling the win over Towson, in which Coen missed a series following the original knee injury. "He's had to do it before, and every time he's done it, he's responded well to the challenge."

After the game, Coen said the initial pain was worse than when he injured his knee, but as time passed, the pain and swelling subsided.

"It's nothing serious, just tweaked it again," Coen said. "If I didn't have a brace on, I don't know what would've happened. It was really bad for a while, but then it calmed down, which is a good sign that nothing else was any worse."

Kicking up and down

The kicking game saw its share of highs and lows in Chestnut Hill, as both placekicker Chris Koepplin and punter Brett Arnold struggled at times and excelled at others.

Koepplin was once again solid on kickoffs, giving BC zero free yards and sending a few kicks through the end zone.

However, with his team down by 10 in the fourth, the senior missed a field goal wide left from 46 yards out. The kick had plenty of distance, but slowly hooked toward the left and nearly bounced off the outside of the upright.

Arnold's day was even more inconsistent. He had several sub-par punts turn into great ones with a good roll, and another good one inside

See FOOTBALL on page 6

Cox leads William & Mary over Tigers

Two-interception game helps W & M past struggling TU

By Mike Connors
Collegian Staff

After completing his first 11 passes and finishing the game with 300 passing yards, James Madison quarterback Rodney Landers earned the Colonial Athletic Association Offensive Player of the Week.

CAA Football

The junior distributed the ball to nine different receivers, and threw two touchdown passes in a convincing 35-7 win over Villanova (2-3, 1-1 CAA). He completed 25-of-32 passes and can cover a pass deep or things like that," W & M coach Jimmye Laycock said. "I'm pleased with the way he's worked to improve his run support, and his tackling has improved a great deal. He's also improved his concentration level and his focus out there. He's also a very good leader on our defensive team."

William & Mary's Darryl [illegible] Player of the Week for his two interceptions [illegible]

Cox's 69-yard interception return on the next series put an abrupt end to a Towson 51-yard drive. It paved the way for a 25-yard Tribe offensive series that led to the game-winning touchdown.

Rhode Island downs Brown

The highest-scoring game that any CAA team has been involved in this year, URI outlasted in-state rival Brown, 49-42, in two overtimes. The 91 points marked the highest combined point total between the two teams in their lengthy rivalry.

The Bears' (1-2, 0-1 Ivy League) Colin Cloherty was tackled at the one-yard-line by the Rams' Adrian Owen in the second overtime, which allowed URI (1-4, 0-2 CAA) to escape with a victory. An astounding 1,122 yards of combined offense was amassed by the teams.

"I was proud of our football team," URI coach Tim Stowers said. "They never gave up, they persevered, and really, we just made one more play than Brown did. They're always exciting football games, but I think of the 92 times we've played them. This was probably the most exciting game there's ever been in the Brown-URI series."

Despite the loss, Brown's Paul Raymond caught six passes for 221 yards and a touchdown. His game was good enough to put him fourth on Brown's list for most receiving yards in a game.

The Bears also received four touchdowns from junior running back Jonathan Edwards, though he only gained 66 yards on 25 carries.

Richmond pulls upset

The upset in the CAA this week: No. 15 Richmond used strong running and special teams play to defeat New Hampshire 45-38 at home. The Spiders have scored at least 45 points in all three of their victories this season.

Senior co-captain Tim Hightower carried the load for the Spiders with 22 carries for 168 yards and three rushing touchdowns. He also caught seven passes for 41 yards, including a 5-yard touchdown reception in the second quarter.

Justin Rogers provided a spark on special teams for the Spiders. The redshirt freshman's 222 kick-

See CAA FOOTBALL on page 6

Woollard, GW roll over streaking ASU

By Sam Ehrlich
Collegian Correspondent

Charlotte defeated Appalachian State, 4-0, on Sept. 29, ending the Mountaineers' seven-game winning streak.

Sophomore goalkeeper David Martin collected four saves and senior Tom Woollard added two goals in a span of less than one minute for the 49ers.

A-10 Soccer

The shutout is the second straight for Martin and the 49ers. It is also the ninth of his career.

With the big win, the Charlotte offense broke out of a small slump that saw it shutout and held to one double-overtime goal in its previous two matches.

The Charlotte defense has not allowed a goal in its last 215 minutes. The 49ers have not allowed a goal since a 1-0 loss to UNC-Greensboro at home on Sept. 19.

Appalachian State (5-2-2) had not lost since falling in its home tournament to Western Illinois on August 31. It easily handled its last two matches, shutting out Radford, 3-0, on Sept. 22, and UNC-Greensboro, 4-0, on Sept. 26.

However, the tables were turned on Saturday for the Mountaineers, as the 49ers scored twice in each half and outshot the Mountaineers, 9-8.

Charlotte also received some help from the Appalachian State defense in an unusual way, as its third goal was scored off a Mountaineer defender.

Sophomore Adam Gross received a rebound at around 63 minutes into the game and blasted it back toward the goal. An ASU defender blocked the shot, but instead of deflecting it back toward the Charlotte side of the field, the ball found its way past goalkeeper Greg Walters for the score.

Bench helps Temple

Freshman Kenechukwu Nwanah came off the bench in the first half to score a goal and lead his Owls to a 2-0 victory against Philadelphia.

Nwanah also added an assist late in the game to seal the game for the Owls. The two points were the first of his career.

While Philadelphia goalkeeper

See A-10 SOCCER on page 6

Charlotte's Tom Woollard won Atlantic 10 Offensive Player of the Week with a two-goal game in the 49ers' win over Appalachian State.

COMEDIAN JOSH BLUE SPEAKS OUT | PAGE 4

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SHOWERS : HI: 79 LO: 59 | WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM | WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 3, 2007

Beacon Hill tackles textbook costs

By Nick Bush
Collegian Staff

On Tuesday, the state Joint Committee on Higher Education received testimony from college students, faculty and interest groups regarding a new bill that would lower textbook prices.

The bill, House Bill 1200, seems poised for success, with many leaders in the statehouse standing behind it.

"When we talk about affordable higher education, we tend to lose ourselves in discussions about escalating tuition and fees," said Representative Kevin J. Murphy of Lowell, House Chairman of the joint committee. "We also have to work to ensure that we're keeping textbooks affordable and that students are not charged by publishers for extra materials that they don't need."

The bill comes after the public interest group MASSPIRG released a report earlier this year critical of the textbook publishing industry's business practices, which include bundling additional materials like CD-ROMs or practice books with textbooks, raising the price. Many of these extra materials go unused by students and are ignored by professors.

"All I can think of is words like 'travesty,'" said professor Brent Beebe of the University of Massachusetts English Department. "I think professors in general need to be more aware of how much [textbooks] are costing their students."

A Government Accountability Office report last year found that over the past 20 years, college textbook prices have increased at twice the rate of inflation, and now account for nearly 26 percent of the cost of tuition and fees.

It is not uncommon for a single book to cost over $100. Old editions of textbooks typically sell for 45 percent less than their newer counterparts, but are not always available to cash-strapped students. Web sites such as campusbookswap.com and bestbookbuys.com offer students the opportunity to get better deals online, but may also include costly shipping fees.

Many state legislatures across the country have taken steps to combat excessive textbook prices. Connecticut now requires publishers to alert professors of textbook prices before orders are placed, giving them a better idea of what the cost will be for their students.

"Students today are investing so much in their education," said Bliss Requa-Trautz, campaign coordinator for the MASSPIRG Affordable Textbook Campaign at UMass Amherst. "We are hoping that the Committee will take action soon to pass this bill....[This] will stop textbook publishers from taking advantage of students, and make college that much more affordable."

Nick Bush can be reached at nbush@student.umass.edu.

MASSPIRG is supporting a move by Massachusetts lawmakers to pass a bill [illegible] the rising costs of college textbooks.

Science of biomass researched at UMass

Chemists search for cheap synthetic fuels

By Joshua Walovitch
Collegian Correspondent

An assistant professor at the University of Massachusetts hopes to convert biomass into liquid hydrocarbon fuels like gasoline and home heating oil.

George Huber of the chemical engineering department at UMass has been researching and studying fuels for nearly 10 years and is determined to convert cheap biomass raw materials into more valuable fuels and chemicals.

"Successful advances in the conversion of lignocellulosic biomass holds the key to supplying societies basic needs for sustainable production of liquid transportation fuels," Huber said.

Examples of lignocellulosic biomass include all types of trees, grasses, energy crops, and agricultural residues. Lignocellulose biomass is inexpensive and abundant in the U.S. The harvesting of lignocellulosic biomass does not compete with the production of food crops.

In order for biofuels to surface as a contending alternative to petroleum based fuels, the chemical engineering field must first develop cost-effective technologies to produce transportation fuels from the lignocellulosic biomass.

The current cost of lignocellulosic biomass is significantly cheaper than crude oil in the United States, ranging from $10 to $20 per barrel of green oil. The price tag is significantly lower than the current cost for crude oil, more than $80 per barrel.

A 2005 study conducted by the U.S. departments of energy and agriculture determined that 1.3 billion dry tons of biomass could be available for large-scale bioenergy and biorefining industries by the middle of the

Assistant professor George Huber is researching the conversion process of biomass to biofuels.

21st century, which has the energy content of 3.8 billion barrels of oil.

This amount of biomass has the energy content of almost more than half the amount of oil barrels consumed in the States in 2006.

Huber is currently working on the base science for the conversion of the lignocellulosic biomass. He is in what is called the "Benchtop Stage" a five-year period

See BIOFUEL on page 2

Used bookstores fading fast from internet competition

By Erin Usher
Collegian Staff

Flipping through the faded pages of gently worn books may be a thing of the past.

Used bookstores are facing hard times, according to a recent article on MSNBC.com, which included them on a list of the top 10 things that will not be around in 10 years.

The article reminisces that used bookstores were formerly a "place to find that beloved, out-of-print children's book you used to read 17 times a day until your little sister flushed it down the toilet."

Larry Pruner, of the used bookstore Valley Books in Amherst, has noticed the trend. "In the last 10 years a large number of bookstores have gone out of business, a trend that probably started around 2000," he said.

Now, these stores are being replaced by the high-speed cyber world of the Internet, according to the MSNBC.com article. Pruner agrees, describing it as "probably the single biggest factor" in this trend.

He explains the lack of "brick and mortar" or the physical location of used bookstores is one thing that many people have taken their businesses to the Internet because it "reduces their expenses and responsibility down to next to nothing."

Mark Wooten of Amherst Books agrees that the Web has taken over much of the used bookstore business, but he prefers the personal experience of going to a used bookstore himself.

"I've always liked going into used

An increase in online sales over the past decade has led some local bookstores to consider moving [illegible] of space.

bookstores to see things that [illegible] be new to me and to see things on the shelf that I wouldn't have known to look for online," said Wooten.

Wooten also thinks the [illegible] of shopping at a used bookstore will [illegible] to shopping for [illegible] online.

"It can be done, but it won't be the same experience," said Wooten, "and you're more likely to find [illegible] noticed in a used bookstore."

BOOKS

Search for new UM chancellor begins

By Holly Seabury
Collegian Staff

The position for permanent chancellor of the University of Massachusetts is still available and is not expected to be filled until next year.

The UMass Board of Trustees announced last week its plan for a 24-person search committee including alumni, trustees, faculty members and business leaders. The new permanent chancellor is expected to begin his or her term at the start of the Fall 2009 semester.

The committee will be conducting a formal search by hiring a professional search consultant within the next few weeks, according to Robert Connolly, a spokesman for Wilson.

"Hiring a professional is typical for UMass, as well as many other schools across the country," Connolly said. "Interviews for a consultant will take place very soon and we should be well on our way in this next step."

Wilson and the search committee met on the Amherst campus Wednesday for its first meeting to discuss the aspirations for the University.

"This is an exciting time for the University of Massachusetts – research expenditures, the endowment and enrollment and state leaders continue to support University initiatives," said Wilson. "Amherst is the flagship campus of a world-class, top-tier university and the next chancellor will be poised to lead the campus during a pivotal time for the campus, the University and the Commonwealth of Massachusetts."

In August, the UMass Board of Trustees and President Jack Wilson appointed Dr. Thomas W. Cole, Jr. as interim chancellor in Amherst to replace former chancellor John V. Lombardi.

Cole, who took office Sept. 1, said he would not be a candidate for the permanent chancellorship.

The committee is scheduled to meet again on October 22 to focus on its ideal characteristics of a chancellor candidate.

Holly Seabury can be reached at hseabury@student.umass.edu.

Dr. Thomas Cole has said that he is not being considered for the position of permanent chancellor.

Seche named as top diplomat in Yemen

By [illegible]

[illegible]

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 18

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3698 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Thuston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exner
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martini
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
COPIES EDITOR Adam Seigen
EDITORIAL EDITOR Sean Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins-Sports EDITOR Jeremy Rice
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Era Svoiczak
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. PRODUCTION MANAGER Katherine Shea
ASST. ADVERTISING MANAGER Marsea Wooten
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ryan McAskill
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Teresa Reilly
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Gerber
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Will McGuinness
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Michael Korg
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenswaike
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS FLEXIBLE SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING AS ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCENES IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN ARCHIVED SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL 545-3500 BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Katie Thuston

COPY EDITOR
Domenic Poli

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

Myanmar dictator ignores global calls for reform

By Denis D. Gray
Associated Press

The old soldier who leads Myanmar is called "the bulldog" for good reason.

Pro-democracy demonstrators by the thousands may be willing to sacrifice themselves in the streets but stand little chance of success unless they — or other forces — can oust a lowly, high school dropout with delusions of royal grandeur from his post of virtually absolute power.

Senior Gen. Than Shwe has shown no willingness to step down as head of the ruling junta, compromise with protesters, or listen to international calls for reform in Myanmar, also known as Burma.

After snubbing special U.N. envoy Ibrahim Gambari for three days, Than Shwe finally met him Tuesday. That came only after his foreign minister told the United Nations that change "cannot be imposed from outside."

"The very fate of Burma is linked to Than Shwe, whose manic, xenophobic and superstitious character bode ill for a country that needs to pull itself into the 21st century and into the international community of democratic nations," says the Irrawaddy, a Thailand-based news magazine that maintains a "Than Shwe Watch" column.

Although there is continuing speculation about rivalries within the top military ranks, Than Shwe (pronounced tawn shway) wields near-absolute control over one of the world's largest armies, a 400,000-strong force that turned its guns on university students, brutally beat Buddhist monks, and hauled thousands away to unknown incarceration sites.

The 74-year-old junta leader has remained publicly silent throughout the crisis, sequestering himself in his remote, bunker-like capital, filtering news from the demonstrations and the outside world through the narrow prism of more than a half-century of military service.

"As long as he is No. 1, things probably will not change. He is very, very stubborn, and he doesn't see the problem being with his council but with the demonstrators," says Donald M. Seekins, a Myanmar scholar at Japan's Meio University.

Satyrikus (pronounced SAY'-pee-daw), or "Royal City," is the new capital deep in the countryside that Than Shwe ordered built in a bizarre act laden with royal pretensions.

Numerous, but unconfirmed, stories have circulated about the portly, bemedaled Than Shwe acting like a king and his daughters ordering military officers to treat them as royalty. Diplomats say some members of his family and possibly even Than Shwe himself are also locked into corrupt dealings with rich businessmen, a common practice among the military elite.

It also is rumored that the very mention of Aung San Suu Kyi (pronounced ahng sahn soo chee), the detained opposition leader who has become an international icon for democracy, is said to throw him into spasms of anger.

One of the few glimpses into his life came last year when a video surfaced depicting the extravagant wedding of one of his daughters, further fueling deep-rooted hatred of the military among the population in one of the world's poorest countries.

The leaked video showed his daughter, Thandar Shwe, wearing a staggering collection of diamond encrusted jewelry and extravagant clothing as the normally grim-faced junta members sat on gold-trimmed chairs and enjoyed a five-tiered wedding cake and champagne.

The Irrawaddy said the wedding cost $300,000 and the bridal couple received wedding gifts worth $50 million.

Than Shwe's early years were hardly so glittering.

Born in the central part of the country during the days of British colonial rule, he did not finish high school and worked as a postal clerk before joining the army at 20.

It is not uncommon for ordinary people in Myanmar not to finish high school. But among its elite, many are highly educated, with university and postgraduate degrees.

The young officer served for a time in the army's psychological warfare department, and in 1962 helped Gen. Ne Win stage a coup against a democratic government that ushered in 45 years of continuous military control.

Rising through the ranks, he was posted to the country's frontier areas where the government has waged a brutal campaign against ethnic minority rebels — a campaign that continues to this day.

Along the way, he developed a reputation as an inward looking hard-liner, and later as an adept political manipulator who trusted few and tolerated no rivals. To insure loyalty of the officer corps, he ordered that the salaries of battalion commanders be raised tenfold.

In 1992, four years after the military gunned down thousands in a failed pro-democracy uprising, Than Shwe emerged as the chairman of the State Peace and Development Council, the country's 12-member ruling body.

When the council's intelligence chief, Gen. Khin Nyunt, began to accumulate considerable power, Than Shwe in 2004 had him placed under house arrest and imprisoned or purged hundreds of his followers.

Khin Nyunt, a relatively flexible, sophisticated man who had initiated a dialogue with Suu Kyi, was regarded by some as a hope for at least some change in Myanmar.

"I met Gen. Than Shwe three times and found that he is a strongman with a great deal of self-confidence," said Thailand's former army chief, Gen. Sonthi Boonyaratglin.

"He has a strong belief that he has been doing the best for his country, so I think it will be hard to change anything in Myanmar despite the pressure from all over."

Two exit scenarios are touted: that one of his rivals, possibly the junta's No. 2 man, Senior Gen. Maung Aye (pronounced mawng ayk), will overthrow him, or that nature will take its course. Than Shwe suffers from hypertension, diabetes and possibly intestinal cancer.

AP

General Than Shwe controls one of the world's largest militaries, a 400,000-strong army.

Biofuel research campus-wide

BIOFUEL from page 1

where the basic sciences are developed and refined.

Following the "Benchtop Stage" is the "Pilot Stage," where Huber's research will be taken to a larger scale. The final stage is the "Commercial Stage," where his research will be made public.

Huber's research uses heterogeneous (or solid) catalysts to convert biomass into fuels and chemicals. These are the same catalytic materials that are used for conversion of petroleum resources.

However, petroleum feedstocks are thermally stable and are converted in gas-phase processes. In contrast, biomass-derived feedstocks are typically unstable, making it difficult to convert them in the gas phase.

One area of biofuel research Huber is studying is liquid-phase catalysis, where biomass-derived species are converted into fuels and chemicals during the liquid phase. This liquid-phase processing requires the development of new catalytic materials, since most catalysts have been designed solely for the gas-phase conversion of petroleum-derived feedstocks.

UMass is a leader in renewable energy, Huber said. There are around 30 professors on campus currently involved in researching renewable energy. The work involves both undergraduate and graduate students, and renewable energy material is also being introduced into the curriculum in many classes across campus.

Biofuels is a multi-disciplinary field involving many different disciplines across the University, including chemical engineering, mechnical engineering, microbiology, chemistry, biochemistry and plant, soil and insect science.

Huber is currently working with a number of people on biofuel research through a recently formed multi-disciplinary institute at UMass., The Institute for Massachusetts Biofuels Research (IMBR). He hopes that his work in this area will continue to make UMass one of the nation's leading institutions in the area of renewable energy.

In June Huber chaired a national workshop on breaking the chemical and engineering barriers to lignocellulosic biofuels, and Thursday he will be presenting the results of this workshop at a congressional briefing.

Local booksellers attribute sales to presence of campuses

BOOKS from page 1

according to Pruner. He describes the benefits of these stores to be "the combination of saving people money and having things that are interesting and unusual."

Rob Bullis, a UMass sophomore, chooses to go to used bookstores because "they're way cheaper, plus you can get books that are harder to find."

Although there are many positive aspects to having the personal experience of shopping at a used bookstore, the Internet is a tempting device for shop owners.

Pruner's bookstore, Valley Books, has been in the same location in Amherst since 1975. He was also one of the first people to begin selling books on the Internet in 1997.

"I've been on the brink, the fence, about whether I should continue myself with a retail space," he says. "Forty to 70 percent of my gross retail sales are from the Internet, beginning seven years ago."

While many used bookstores are losing business at rapid rates, Amherst, home to several college campuses, has proven to be a prime location for such a store.

Wooten gets much of his business because his store is in a college town. He lists students buying textbooks, faculty members, community members and people visiting from out of town as his main customers. Much of his out-of-town business is also related to the colleges, he said, from parents in town to families visiting the different schools.

Pruner also finds that much of his business comes from the rest of the community. He thinks that most used bookstores would do best in either a city or a college town like Amherst.

"An incredibly high percentage would be located in or near a college," said Pruner. "I wouldn't be surprised if it was 50 percent."

Brian Weinburger, a UMass student, finds this to be true, saying there are "way more used bookstores here" than in his hometown.

Pruner attributes his own personal success to his store's location. "Absolutely [it is] because it is a college town I have been in business as long as I have and am still in business," he said.

Eden Unver can be reached at eunver@student.umass.edu.

Want to write for news?
E-mail us at
News@DailyCollegian.com

UMass Dining Supports and Promotes Sustainability On Campus!

SPECIAL EVENTS AT THE DINING COMMONS:
Wild Alaska Seafood Week
OCTOBER 1-5
Pioneer Harvest Breakfast
OCTOBER 8-12
UMass Apple Week (our orchard)
OCTOBER 15-19
Farmer's Market
Member of Seafood Watch & serve only sustainable seafood
Member of CISA
Fair Trade Coffee at retail and DCs
Green Cleaning at all DCs
90% of the food waste is composted
DINING SERVICES
ALASKA SEAFOOD
Seafood WATCH

LA PIAZZA PIZZA
GRAND OPENING
FAST FREE DELIVERY OR PICK-UP
CALL (413)253-6444
PIZZA CALZONES SUBS
SALADS WINGS ENTREES
AND MORE
30 BOLTWOOD WALK
AMHERST , MA
HOURS OF OPERATION:
SUN: 4 PM - 1 AM
MON - THU : 4 PM - 2 AM
FRI - SAT : 4 PM - 3 AM
Check Our Menu On Line
WWW.LAPIAZZARISTORANTE.US
Click on our "TO GO MENU"
Delivery drivers wanted!
Call after 4 PM, everyday

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
EDITORIAL OPINION
WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 3, 2007
"It were best that we net all think alike. it is difference of opinion that makes horseraces."
-Mark Twain
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Picking out the patriots

Dan Nicastro

How many stripes are on the American flag? What does the 4th of July mean? Who is the president of the United States today?

For the past 20 years, these questions have determined who is eligible for citizenship and who is not.

The patriotism test can make the confirmation process shorter, more efficient and much more effective.

On Oct. 1, 2008, the Department of Citizenship and Immigration Services plans to change the test from trivia-based to a more complicated conceptually based exam, meant to weed out potential citizens who aren't dedicated to the abstract ideals of America and, therefore, cannot be considered true "patriots."

As Alfonso Aguilar, head of the Office of Citizenship, pointed out in the October issue of Time Magazine, "If we don't strengthen our assimilation efforts, then 20 or 30 years down the road we may have a dysfunctional society." Aguilar brings up a good point. However, assimilation of immigrants is not the only problem facing this country. The last seven years have brought many accusations about disloyalty, and a lack of patriotism against many American citizens. Identifying with one's country is beneficial to the health and posterity of the nation, and because of this we should follow the example of the Department of Citizenship, in addition to an immigrant citizenship test, the federal government should administer a nationwide test to finally separate the good citizens from the bad.

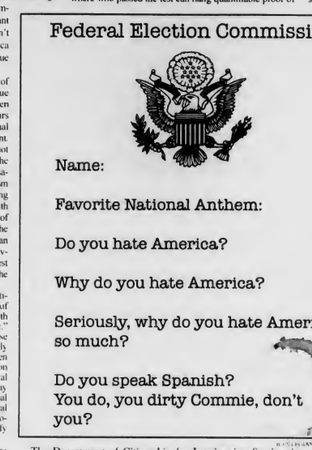
Since the war in Iraq began in 2003, citizens who have come out against the actions of the U.S. government have been branded with the ugly and damning label of "unpatriotic." It's hard to fight a claim like this because patriotism is a concept which has traditionally only been evaluated by each individual citizen — at least until now. Aside from participation in institutions such as the military, the federal government has never really possessed a way to evaluate the patriotism of an individual citizen in an unbiased and completely neutral way. But this test will finally be able to provide the answers in a way which will satisfy both sides of the political spectrum.

Take the example I listed above: are anti-war activists unpatriotic? Until now, the answer has depended on your political affiliation, leading to an answer which usually leads from statistical extrapolation of the person's involved. But now, determining the patriotism of a single person can be easily remedied through a 10-question test. The questions on this new nationwide test will rotate between trivia questions, such as "How many troops have died for your freedom?" and broader, more conceptual questions, such as "Explain why Congress and the Supreme Court are unnecessary branches of government."

Test takers need only answer six of these 10 questions correctly, making this an almost foolproof test for true patriots. After passing, the few anti-war activists everywhere who passed the test can hang quantifiable proof of their patriotism above their mantel for the entire world to see.

No one is too high up or important for this test — as nominees to cabinet positions, ambassadorships or judicial posts by the president will be subjected to the same exam as everyone else.

Usually, nominations made by the president are required to go through a series of lengthy and sometimes controversial congressional hearings in order to determine the worthiness and effectiveness of a candidate. Since "worthiness" and "effectiveness" are really just synonyms for "patriotism," we can infer that Congress is actually just making sure appointees are patriotic enough for their government-level positions.



The patriotism test can make the confirmation process shorter, more efficient and much more effective. Instead of Congress grilling Supreme Court nominees about their controversial and embarrassing comments on minorities, the opposite sex and their viewpoints on the Constitution, these future justices need only answer 10 questions, such as, "Is privacy really 'that' important?" or, "Imagine you were a fetus. Would you want to be 'terminated'?" If the nominee passes the test, a vacancy on the Court can be filled quickly and effectively, giving the Court more time to hear the very few cases which they select each term.

The only thing left to discuss is what to do with those unlucky few who fail this test. First, I should make clear that the United States has always been a country of amnesty, even to those who disagree with the government.

Therefore, we will allow those who hate this country so much to leave via the "Mexican Express" (or "Autobus a Mexico" for our many Spanish-speaking immigrants/non-patriots), a cargo transportation system which will be able to immediately transport non-patriots out of this country and into Mexico, where they can attempt to climb over the giant electric fence constructed on the Texas border to keep out those who are not wanted in America. Oh, and there will be proud, exam-passing snipers patrolling those walls so non-patriots should keep an eye out.

However, to show we are a country which believes in second chances, if non-patriots manage to get back into the country, we'll let you work under the tutelage of a true American patriot at an extremely reduced rate of pay. Because if learning the lessons of true patriotism through the lessons of practically free backbreaking labor isn't the American dream, I don't want to know what is.

Dan Nicastro is a flag-waving patriot and writes on Wednesdays. He can be reached at dnicastr@student.umass.edu

COLLEGIAN ILLUSTRATION

The Department of Citizenship for Immigration Services is revamping its citizenship test. This could spur changes in the application processes of other government institutions.

The humanity of Palestinians

Jeff Napolitano

There is a disturbing trend I find whenever I read a piece supporting Israel's policy toward Palestine. In almost every piece, be it a column or U.S. news story, the issue is always framed between the government of Israel and either Yasser Arafat or Palestinian terrorists. We are often informed about the quality of life of Israeli citizens and the damage done to Israel's civilian population, but we never hear much about the people of Palestine.

Why are the Palestinian people always left out of the conversation? Just as we see images of Israelis suffering on television, why do we not see the suffering of the Palestinian people? Why such a disparity in the portrayal of the situation?

This lack of attention toward the people of Palestine exists because exposing their suffering would shift the focus of the conflict away from the Israeli government and the Palestinian terrorists. While the debate is consistently and simplistically focused on these two parties — to the exclusion of anyone else — it is easy for observers (meaning the news-reading public) to identify the terrorists as more culpable. But as soon as you take an interest in the Palestinian people, the debate seems far less one-sided.

The fact that most Palestinians live on about $2 a day should weigh on one's mind. In her book, "Israel Palestine: How to End the War of 1948," Tanya Reinhart states that a great majority of the population has "inadequate access to food, shelter or health services."

This should force one to begin to consider Palestinians as fellow members of humanity. And perhaps the sight of the massive, 20-to-30-foot wall being constructed (with your tax dollars) in Palestinian "occupied territories" might give one pause in supporting Israel's policy of apartheid.

And that pause, the acknowledgement of the humanity of the Palestinians and the brutality of the Israeli occupation, has been noticed. An article in The Jewish Week states "Israeli Minister for Jerusalem and Diaspora Affairs Natan Sharansky, shaken by what he witnessed during a recent whirlwind tour of 13 U.S. colleges ... is worried that Israel is losing the political and ideological battle on campus."

The demographic examined wasn't simply the general population, but Jewish students; there is concern that these students "brought up by parents who are often reflexively pro-Israeli, are being repelled from also extending their support because of the harsh policies of the Israeli government.

The article continues with a disturbing statement: "The leaders acknowledge it would be wise to start making Israel's case with students in high school, and younger, implicitly suggesting that it may be too late to make Zionists out of college students."

Apparently, since the merits of Israel's policies fail to rationally persuade thinking young adults in the midst of higher education, it has been decided to target a more vulnerable, less intellectually developed group.

Failure to convince people of Israel's righteousness is becoming more and more prevalent. In 2003, the European Union released a poll that revealed that 59 percent of Europeans believe Israel and its policies are the greatest threat to world peace (even more so than the United States!).

Why not talk about the actions of the Palestinian people, who are far more significant?

Apparently the Bush administration's loudly touted fear of weapons of mass destruction reminded Europeans that Israel is currently the only country in the Middle East that possesses such weapons — most alarmingly, nuclear weapons.

Since we are constantly reminded of the actions of Palestinian terrorists, why not talk about the actions of the Palestinian people, who are far more significant? In that case, one should be aware of the International Solidarity Movement, a Palestinian-led group consisting of Palestinians and activists from all over the world. The I.S.M. recognizes international law, which allows for resistance of the violence of an occupying force, as well as utilizing the methods of nonviolent resistance to achieve its goals. It calls for international intervention to protect Palestinians and ensure that Israel complies with international law.

People of conscience have gone to Palestine to join the I.S.M., with the desire to bring a sense of solidarity to Palestinians and with the hope that Israeli brutality will lessen in the presence of foreign internationals.

One form of nonviolent resistance pursued by the I.S.M. is stopping Israeli destruction of Palestinian farms, orchards and houses by interposing oneself between Israeli bulldozers and their target. One such example was Rachel Corrie, a U.S. citizen from Washington who had the courage to stand with the Palestinian people. On March 16, 2003, Corrie stood in front of the house of a Palestinian doctor and his family, attempting to prevent an Israeli bulldozer from destroying the home. She was clad in a fluorescent orange jacket, in the middle of a clear day, using a megaphone to try to stop the destruction.

The driver of the bulldozer, an Israeli who apparently thought he was only running over a Palestinian, dumped dirt upon Rachel, and proceeded to kill her by running her over.

Rachel Corrie was not a terrorist. The Palestinians with whom she was staying and trying to protect were not terrorists. Virtually none of the Palestinian people are terrorists. It is time to stop framing the debate as one between desperate terrorists and the fourth-largest military power in the world. The Palestinians are our brothers and sisters in humanity, and it is time we recognize that they deserve to be free from foreign occupation.

Jeff Napolitano is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jnapolit@larc.umass.edu

The worst kind of fraud

Ben Duffy

Fraudulent army veteran Jesse MacBeth pleaded guilty in Seattle to charges that he misrepresented his military service. He has been sentenced to five months in prison for making false statements to the Department of Veterans Affairs.

MacBeth claimed to be a former Army Ranger who fought in Iraq and came home to grapple with post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD). An old news clipping from before his unmasking makes for amusing reading. Entitled "Soldier struggles with memories of Iraqi war," the story unquestioningly reprints MacBeth's lies.

"MacBeth, a ranger in the U.S. Army, returned to the states two and a half months ago after sustaining an injury in his back. He spent 14 months serving in the Middle East – first in Afghanistan then in Baghdad. ... According to MacBeth, his [negative] reaction to loud noise stems from the horrible experiences that he had while in Iraq. After returning to Ft. Benning in Georgia, he was officially diagnosed with post-traumatic stress disorder and received both medication and counseling to help him adjust to a non-combative environment. ... MacBeth was shot in the back by an M-16 rifle while in a tunnel."

Fake Army Ranger MacBeth commented, "All of the values like honor, pride and integrity don't mean anything in war," he said. "There's nothing honorable about killing kids. I did nothing heroic."

Translation: Army Rangers wantonly kill kids, and they leave things like honor and integrity behind when they step onto the battlefield.

In reality, MacBeth did serve in the Army. After his trial, U.S. Attorney Jeffery C. Sullivan said, "He was in the Army for 40 days before he was kicked out of boot camp for being unfit. He was never in Iraq."

I know basic training can be challenging because I went through it in 1999. In basic training, I faced physical hardship, stress, fatigue, and hunger like I had never experienced before in my comfortable civilian life. Nonetheless, most people make it through basic training. It is only the weakest personalities who fail. Jesse MacBeth is a basic training washout and a loser.

MacBeth's tall tales fooled those who wanted to be fooled. He told The Socialist Alternative everything that they wanted to hear in article entitled "The War the Media is not Reporting – an Iraqi Veteran Speaks Out." The Alternative asked MacBeth, "How did you become a Special Forces Ranger?"

MacBeth answered, "Basic training was easy for me. Growing up on the streets, I was used to running from cops. I was used to not eating for days. I got picked to go to Ranger School."

His answer was music to the ears of the left and their preconceived notions about poverty, crime and military service in America. MacBeth knew how to tell The Alternative in their own socialist language that he was just a poor minority kid "from the streets" who had to join the Army out of necessity, where he distinguished himself as model soldier because of his street-born toughness, went to Iraq to kill children, got PTSD, and eventually came home to "speak out" about what's "really" going on.

The Socialist Alternative went on to ask, "What was the assault on Fallujah like?" MacBeth answered, "Fallujah is where we slaughtered people in mosques. We provoked the people there. We would dig holes and leave mass graves of children, women, and old men. We were ordered to let people die on the street. We were told that the Geneva Convention means nothing to us in combat."

Most people make it through basic training. ... Jesse MacBeth is a basic training washout and a loser.

The real gem of the article came when The Alternative asked MacBeth, "What do you think is the role of the U.S. in Iraq?"

MacBeth responded, "The military is terrorists there. Soldiers thought we were going to fight terrorism, but we became the terrorists. We were told we were going to liberate the country and find weapons of mass destruction. The real aim is to have the U.S. own the country. The U.S. wants oil."

Fooling The Socialist Alternative was probably child's play. Judging from some of the vocabulary they used and the questions that they asked, it's pretty clear that no one at SA knows anything about the military. Fooling Iraq Veterans Against the War (IVAW) should have been a more difficult task, but MacBeth somehow managed to hoodwink them too.

Although IVAW has tried to distance itself from MacBeth, there is ample evidence that they were once aligned. There are pictures of MacBeth carrying an IVAW banner in an anti-war march. Jesse MacBeth was also on the roster to speak at an anti-war event in Oklahoma City. The roster clearly lists three members of IVAW, one of which is Jesse MacBeth.

Anyone who had been in the Army longer than a week should have been able to spot MacBeth as a counterfeit Ranger. Everything from his fake Ranger photos to his bogus war stories should have tipped them off. One look at his discharge papers would have revealed that he had done a poor job of doctoring them. There is absolutely no way that MacBeth could have fooled IVAW. They had to have known.

Jesse MacBeth is a disgusting human being and an appalling fraud. I hope he enjoys the next five months in jail.

Ben Duffy writes on Wednesdays. He can be reached at bduffy@student.umass.edu

DO YOU LIKE TO DRAW COMICS?
WE ARE LOOKING FOR YOU!
THE COLLEGIAN NEEDS
EDITORIAL COMIC ARTISTS
GET YOUR ARTWORK
PUBLISHED!
Send an e-mail to
editorial@dailycollegian.com

Noho to be Blue

Comedian, artist and athlete Josh Blue can do everything

BY RYAN MCASKILL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Josh Blue is one of the fastest rising stars in the world of stand-up comedy. He was the winner of the fourth season of NBC's "Last Comic Standing," has a comedy album "Josh Blue: Good Josh Bad Arm" and a DVD "7 More Days in the Tank" on shelves. He has had the kind of year that most comedians dream of — and he has cerebral palsy.

Blue was diagnosed at age one with the neurological disorder, which affects body movement and muscle coordination. Instead of letting it slow him down, he uses it as the basis for most of his material. He will be performing Friday Oct. 5, at 8 p.m. at the Calvin Theater in Northampton.

In a phone conversation Tuesday, Blue spoke about his comedy, his college experience, dealing with cerebral palsy, being on the Paralympics soccer team and being an artist.

RYAN MCASKILL: How did you get started with stand-up comedy?

JOSH BLUE: In college, I did an open mic night. It was funny because everyone was singing songs and doing love poems and I got up there and started jumping around and making a fool of myself and the audience liked it.

RM: What made you get up on stage?

JB: My friends always said I was funny and quick on my feet, and I'm sure there was some alcohol involved.

RM: How did "Last Comic Standing" come about?

JB: In comedy circles everyone knew about it and when and where the auditions were. My manager told me to do it. It was actually the second time I auditioned that I got it. I had auditioned before in Chicago.

RM: You auditioned twice during season four?

JB: No, that was season three. They really didn't give me the time of day and I only did 30 seconds of material. I didn't want to do the next auditions because I was so discouraged from the first time but my manager talked me into going.

RM: How do you describe your comedy style?

JB: Self-deprecating. My college friend called it "reverse teasing." It's like making fun of myself, but in reality I am making fun of you. I just tell stories from my life.

See BLUE on page 5

Josh Blue gained national fame after being voted best comic in the fourth season of "Last Comic Standing." He has since released one album and one DVD, with another CD in the works.

Not your average folk singer

Ex-software designer writes songs about digital lifestyle

BY BRAD GIGUERE
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Jonathan Coulton has the soulful voice of a folk singer, and with his long, wild brown hair and full beard he just might be mistaken for one. But unlike folk singers, his songs are rarely about war, famine and government scandal. Instead, he taps into the digital generation's countless subcultures to produce rock ballads about socially inept computer programmers, lovelorn supervillains or folk tributes to zombies and furniture stores.

Coulton's music career began in 2005 when he quit his job as a software programmer and started "Thing a Week." a project with a goal of producing one song every week for an entire year in an effort to prove to himself that he could make music his profession. Coulton referred to it as "a sort of forced-march approach to creativity." in an interview with The New York Times earlier this year. But the effort paid off and Coulton's "Thing a Week" produced four solid albums of music. Coupled with his three other albums and various singles, Coulton has over 80 songs in his repertoire, rivaling almost any 10-year music veteran.

Even with only a week of production time for each of Coulton's songs, they are remarkably well written. Their subject matter is often downright bizarre. Fan favorites like "Skullcrusher Mountain," a love ballad written from the perspective of a Dr. Evil-esque super villain to his kidnapped girlfriend, or "Code Monkey," a socially-challenged computer programmer's attempt to swoon the office secretary, are two examples of his often odd but comical style.

Coulton has created a successful career on his style, appealing to various niche demographics like sci-fi fans or computer geeks to build a huge Internet presence and fan base. The songs poke fun at the members of these fringe groups and make references to their culture and habits doing so from an insider perspective. The song "Re: Your Brains" lampoons both zombie movies and corporate bureaucracy with lyrical references to famous horror movies and obnoxious management double-speak.

Looking past his comedic work, Coulton penned a number of songs that are more of a serious fare, addressing real-life problems with depth and intelligence. The song "You Ruined Everything" comes from the conflicting feelings of regret and joy surrounding becoming a parent.

On his site, Coulton wrote about the inspiration of the song: "She [a friend] was describing the what-have-I-done feeling — I just got everything perfect in my life, and then I messed it all up by having a baby. I don't feel that way anymore, though the thought crossed my mind a few times in the beginning." Though Coulton lightens up eventually, comparing the transition to "becoming a vampire," he admits "it's complicated."

Jonathon Coulton released over 80 songs in the past two years. Each song is available to be streamed from his Web site, and some are for sale for just a dollar.

While Coulton's fans tend to prefer his funnier songs to the more serious ones, their dedication to him is nothing to joke about. There is fan-generated content on almost every section of his Web site, from "Visual Thing a Week," a collection of illustrations that accompany each "Thing a Week song," to user-created music videos and live footage of his concerts.

There is a link from his site to a YouTube video of a female fan choreographing a dance routine for the song "Code Monkey." This simple Webcam video recently celebrated 200,000 views, and in a recent blog post Coulton mentioned that he now sees the dance performed at his concerts. Another fan produced a music video borrowing footage of the popular online game "World of Warcraft" for "Code Monkey," which at last count had been viewed over 1.2 million times.

Another part of Coulton's internet success stems from how much of his music he gives away. You can stream every song on his Web site for free, and many of the songs are freely downloadable. You can also purchase any song that isn't free for a dollar and download them right from his site. Coulton releases his songs under the "Non-Commercial Creative Commons License," calling it on his Web site "the most powerful idea I've heard since they told me there was going to be a sequel to Star Wars."

The Creative Commons license allows anyone to mash up, remix, copy or share his music with others. "I give away music because I want to make music, and I can't make music unless I make money, and I won't make any money unless I get heard, and I won't get heard unless I give away music," he posts on his site. Coulton has appealed to a fan base that is dedicated, loyal, and willing to spread the word in creative ways.

Jonathan Coulton will be playing at the Iron Horse Music Hall Thursday, Oct. 4, at 7 p.m. with opening act Paul and Storm of Da Vinci's Notebook. Tickets are $17 and can be purchased at the Iron Horse box office.

Brad Giguere can be reached at bdgiguer@student.umass.edu

Fashion icon to retire in January '08

Reece Coppolino

This fall has become a bittersweet moment for the fashion industry worldwide. While it is a time to eagerly welcome the new designs for next spring, it has recently been marked as a time to reflect upon the works of a fashion great as well. On Sept. 4, the 75-year-old Italian fashion legend, Valentino Garavani, announced his retirement as head designer of the fashion house that bears his famous name.

The ever-inspiring and talented designer set his retirement date for January of 2008. Before his final farewell, he promises to present one last ready-to-wear collection in Paris this month and a haute couture collection in January. After celebrating 45 years in the industry, Valentino's retirement is seen as quite deserving.

Valentino was captivated by fashion ever since he was a very young boy in Voghera, dressing himself in cashmere sweaters and custom-made shoes. The public soon took note of his self-driven efforts to become a part of the fashion world and he was offered a scholarship to the Chambre Syndicale Couture School in Paris when he was 17 years old.

During the 1950s, Valentino had the opportunity of working hands-on in the house of Jean Desses, a leading Greek designer in the 1940s to the 1960s. Desses specialized in free-flowing evening gowns that were reminiscent of ancient Greek attire and embodied such sheer talent that they, without question, influenced the prospective designer.

In 1959, Valentino left Paris and retreated back to Italy to set up his own fashion house in Rome. He showcased his first collection in 1960, but it wasn't until 1962 that he experienced his big break during a show in Florence. Once the production ended, Valentino immediately received a slew of orders from admiring buyers and positive reviews from the press.

After Valentino's public display of boundless talent, his confidence grew and so did his clientele. As time progressed, he proved to be a true powerhouse in the fashion industry. Not only did he become the first designer to arrange contracts for the sale and production of his work in foreign markets, but he also became the first Italian designer to showcase a ready-to-wear collection for both men and women.

Valentino's signature scarlet red evening gowns personify glamour, beauty, and elegance. His conservative style has been admired by the likes of Elizabeth Taylor, Audrey Hepburn, Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis and numerous Oscar winners of today.

While the iconic designer resigned from his position, Valentino label still lives on. Permira, a European private equity fund, paid $1.06 billion to gain control over the Valentino house. It's suggested that the new ownership desired a more conventional and commercially aware designer to help the company grow.

In a matter of days, Permira appointed Alessandra Facchinetti, a former designer for Gucci, as the chief creative director for the Valentino fashion house. Facchinetti will be in control of the Valentino ready-to-wear and haute couture collections, as well as the Roma and RED collections.

"I am honored to be part of this new project. Mr. Valentino has always been a point of reference for me, an icon for his sense of style and elegance. My admiration and respect for

See FASHION on page 5

Valentino Garavani began working for the fashion industry in the 1950s. He has since created a world-renowned company of his own.

Arcade Fire opens up about road and songs

BY CHRIS RIEMENSCHNEIDER
STAFF WRITER

Five months after the Arcade Fire issued its second album, "Neon Bible," the dramatic Canadian ensemble has cemented itself as one of rock's most vital new bands, albeit a peculiar one.

The record is immediately stirring but hopelessly ambiguous. It's an oftentimes dark and apocalyptic masterpiece, full of pipe organ and strings and cryptic lyrics that mine everything from religious zealotry to America's lingering fearfulness to MTV tween-bopper fame.

Don't look for the band's enigmatic frontman, Win Butler, to explain it all, though. Both he and his wife and chief collaborator Regine Chassagne, remain elusive interview subjects.

Drummer Jeremy Gara, who often stands in for them on the phone, called from their hometown of Montreal last month to fill us in on what he could about his band.

ON THE TOUR SCHEDULE:

The Arcade Fire has never been a road hound, the kind of band that plays 300 dates a year. The five-year-old group is about midway through its tour cycle for "Neon Bible," which began this spring.

"We're kind of right at the point where we're starting to get a little weary of it," Gara said. "This next American tour is going to be fun, though, because it's to a lot of cities we haven't played on this trip yet. Just the size of the shows is kind of daunting now. The U.K. tour is going to be at least mentally something to overcome, because it's all in arenas, big venues, and not particularly nice venues."

ON "NEON BIBLE" SALES:

Commercial success caught up with the band's critical acclaim. The album sold 92,000 U.S. copies its first week and debuted at No. 2 in Billboard, a major feat for an indie release (it's on North Carolina based Merge Records). Both "Bible" and the band's 2004 CD, "Funeral," are nearing gold status in the U.S. (500,000 copies).

"The whole financing and selling of albums is a mystery to us. It was hard with this one. When 'Funeral' came out, they just pressed like 10,000 copies and that was it, at first. It was totally bizarre how much it wound up selling, because it never really exploded, but it never really died. It just consistently kept selling. With this one, there was a huge investment made on Merge's part to make sure there were like 200,000 copies right off the bat. But then we had to make sure we really marketed it so it did sell. So in that sense, we are happy or even just relieved that it has been selling."

ON TOURING WITH 10:

Officially a seven-member band, the Arcade Fire usually bulks up on tour. This outing features three extra players, including horn player Kelly Pratt of the band Beirut. The added members apparently don't make touring any more complicated.

"Even when we were just six people and Win was in school, it was hectic from the beginning for us trying to make everybody's schedules fit. Now, it's more fun, especially now that we have buses. The family is bigger. And there are more options of who you can hang out with. Inevitably, a few people are going to go out and have fun one night and a few are going to go to bed. There's enough to choose which you're going do."

ON THEIR PERSONALITIES:

With their dark lyrics and crescendoing music, the band members have been somewhat pigeonholed as ultra-serious, art-school-type dramatists.

"Some people have this idea

See ARCADE FIRE on page 5

Blue predicted his future fame

BLUE from page 4

RM: Who are your personal favorite comedians?

JB: Personal favorites? I like Chris Rock, Richard Pryor, Eddie Murphy, Ellen DeGeneres, Mitch Hedberg is probably my favorite. I also like guys like John Cleese from Monty Python and basically anyone one is trying something different. I'm also a fan of the artist [Salvador] Dali.

RM: Speaking of artists, you also sell paintings and sculptures. Were you always interested in art?

JB: I loved to draw as a kid and took some art classes in college. College is where I found my stride. If I don't do something creative during the day, I don't feel good that day, so I need to paint or draw or carve. I get the same feeling doing comedy.

RM: On top of all of this, you're also on the U.S. Paralympics soccer team?

JB: Yeah. I love to play soccer. I'll be going to Brazil in November for the world championship and a chance to qualify for [the Summer Olympics in] Beijing in '08.

RM: Where do you find the time to do all this?

JB: I have no idea.

RM: What was your teammates' reaction to you being on "Last Comic Standing"?

JB: They knew I was a comedian and I have done shows for them before at a couple soccer games. They were very supportive.

RM: You have mentioned college a couple of times. Do you have any advice for college students?

JB: Enjoy it. College is where you learn to live and interact with other people. Go to as many parties as you can.

RM: Obviously a lot of your act is about you having cerebral palsy. What has it been like to become a spokesperson for the disability?

JB: It's weird because if I don't talk about it people are like "does he know he has that?" I just love to make people laugh. It's really a cool feeling to know that I'm inspiring people. I get e-mails that say, "My brother has cerebral palsy and you inspired me." It really is a cool feeling.

RM: Did you know a few years ago that you were going to be a nationally-known comedian?

JB: Honestly, yes I did. I'm not a religious person, but I know the reason I was put on this planet. I know I have a gift and I love to use it. I knew even before I got on ["Last Comic Standing"] that I was going to be this big.

RM: Do you have any future projects?

JB: I just filmed my first movie role as a car rental guy. It's small, but you [have to] start somewhere. I also have a new album coming out but it's a music album. My friend has a band that does funny songs and I'm singing in the band. The songs are basically about a guy with cerebral palsy trying to make a music CD and jokes about him trying to sing.

Ryan McAskill can be reached at rmcaskil@student.umass.edu

JOSH BLUE

OCTOBER 5
8 P.M.
CALVIN THEATER
$25 AND $35

In addition to being a comedian, Josh Blue is also on the U.S.A. Men's Paralympic soccer team. In November he will travel with the team for a chance to qualify for the '08 Paralympics.

Simpson family inspires Arcade Fire tune

ARCADE FIRE from page 4

what we're like as people just because of the music. That's totally the wrong impression. Really, it is a big social group of friends. It's just constant jokes and messing around. It's pretty lighthearted. The intensity on stage is a whole different thing from the rest of the time we're together. It's not a negative bunch of people by any stretch of imagination."

ON THEIR TEXAN FRONTMAN:

Win Butler and his brother bandmate Will spent a lot of their youth as far away from Montreal as is seemingly possible in North America, deep in the heart of Texas.

"Lyrically, it definitely has some influence on the vocabulary. He's not a particularly super-religious guy. But the culture of religion in Texas is obviously very different than it is up here. (In Montreal) it's not so much part of a social fabric. In Texas, even if you aren't all that religious, it's still a big part of life."

ON JESSICA SIMPSON'S DAD:

Butler surprisingly revealed in a Rolling Stone article that one of "Bible's" standout tracks, "(Antichrist Television Bluest," was largely inspired by another Texan, Joe Simpson, father and manager of Jessica and Ashlee Simpson. Lyrics include, "Oh, my little bird in a cage I need you to get up for me, up on that stage And show the men that you're old for your age."

"It could be about other people, too, but it definitely applies to that family's dynamic. We haven't heard from their camp at all, which is great, because some people we've worked with have worked with them and said, 'You definitely don't want to cross them.'"

ON RETREADING "NO CARS GO":

Another of "Bible's" standout cuts, "No Cars Go," was actually featured on a little-heard EP the band released in 2003 but re-recorded. It's now being pushed to radio as a single.

"We started recording the album last November. We had a new studio space and all this new gear, so we just needed to start with something that was easy for us to play so we could get used to everything else. 'No Cars Go' had changed so much on tour from how we originally recorded it. The version on the EP is cool but it's a mess, and the version we had been touring with was way more of a straight-up rock song. So there was always talk of redoing it. And now that we had more of a budget, we wanted to record it with the string arrangements that Regine had always envisioned."

ON THE NEXT ALBUM:

"We've been banging around a couple parts, a few rhythmic ideas. But everybody has a bit of ADD, which is kind of a good thing. It's not going to be one type of record. A couple of the songs we're already playing with are totally different from each other. It'll definitely be all over the map. We've all played too much, and been in bands before this one, to stay with just one certain aesthetic, like, 'Oh, this has to sound indie-rock.' The Arcade Fire doesn't suffer from that at all. I'm happy to say."

The Arcade Fire is currently on tour promoting its sophomore album "Neon Bible." The band is calling Montreal its home, despite the fact that its frontman was raised in Texas.

Valentino to remain active in fashion

FASHION from page 4

him is endless," said the ambitious designer. "I will dedicate myself to this new project with great passion and enthusiasm, treasuring everything that has been done this far."

Valentino has fully accepted and supported his successor. "I realize the house that carries my name will go through some changes, but I wish to think that the team of designers of the various lines, some of whom have been working by my side of many years, will make me proud of Valentino's product," he proclaimed.

While his days as a designer have reached an end, the retiree still intends to continue as an active member in the fashion industry. He is looking toward creating and supporting fashion design institutions in the future. As long as Valentino has a place in this world, he will work to promote and conserve the art of fashion. With such experience and success, his input will be welcomed with open arms.

Reece Coppolino is a Collegian fashion columnist. She can be reached at rcoppolino@student.umass.edu

Valentino Garavani will be succeeded by Alessandra Facchinetti. Facchinetti is a former designer for Gucci.

Former Amherst Drop Zone
227 Russell Street (Route 9), Hadley, MA
Everything Must Go!!
Complete Liquidation
$5,000,000.00 Inventory
30 - 50% OFF
Something For Everyone
• Army-Navy Surplus
• Pea Coats
• Leather Jackets
• Boots & Work Clothes
• Lg Inventory T-Shirts
• Sweatshirts
• Camping & Hunting Equipment
• Flags
• Blankets
• Knives
• Huge Paintball Department
GREAT DOOR SURPRISES!
National Brands Include: Timberland, CAT, Carhartt, Doc Marten, Woolrich, Sorel, Harley Davidson, Buck, Swiss Army, Corcoran, Magnum, Chippewa, Nexgen, Leather King, Tony Lama, Etc.
All Sales Final
Sale Under The Management Of:
CRG Auction
Hours Of Operation
Mon. -Sat. 10am - 7pm | Sun. 12pm - 6pm
Sale Ends November 26
www.crgauction.com (800) 300-6852

They practically wrote the book on Couple & Family Therapy.
Who better to learn from?
The Master's Degree in Family Therapy (MFT)
Choose to learn from one of the best and most experienced family therapy facilities in our new two-year Master's in Family Therapy program. Council for Relationships – for 25 years a leader in the field – has joined with Thomas Jefferson University – one of Philadelphia's most respected healthcare institutions – to provide students with a diverse and stimulating learning environment. You'll learn from, and work closely with, experts in the field of couple, family and sex therapy. Be part of the excitement – and together let's write the next chapter!
Thomas Jefferson University | Jefferson College of Health Professions
COUNCIL for Relationships
For more information, Call 1-215-503-1044 or visit www.jefferson.edu/mft

UGG australia
Get 'em NOW!
classic tall, classic short, slippers and more!
chestnut chocolate black sand
ZANNA
women's clothing, shoes and accessories
downtown Amherst

Seven O's
EVERY WEDNESDAY
KARAOKE
* * * * * *
THURSDAY, 10/4/07
DIRTY HIT
SATURDAY, 10/6/07
COTTON WOOD
LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO HAVE A PRIVATE EVENT/PARTY?
CALL 413-530-6996
ROUTE 116 -330 AMHERST RD. SUNDERLAND, MA 01375 413-665-3766
3 PM TO 1 AM M-F 1 PM TO 1 AM SAT&SUN NEXT TO CLIFFSIDE APTS.

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

6	2	4	9	5
			2	4	7	9
		3		1
	9	5						3
1						7	2
				7		5
		6	5	2	9
				6	1	8	9	2

ACROSS
1 Bad writer
5 Saudi or Omani
9 "In the Clearing" poet
14 __ Ude, Russia
15 Central part
16 Rodeo rope
17 Diner's request
18 Arrive
19 Following
20 Encroaches
22 Tempos
24 Transferred, as property
25 Turkish leaders
26 Sell out
28 Make over
32 Chip dip
36 Make a boo-boo
37 Kitchen implement
38 Influence
39 Pot top
40 Face the day
41 Make amends
42 Holiday forerunner
43 Defensive-team sites
44 Bell sound
45 Exhausts
47 Exclamations of satisfaction
48 Hole-shaping tool
53 Magic home?
57 Pertinent
58 Performing
59 Zola novel
61 Queen Boleyn
62 "Divine Comedy" poet
63 Mid-cheese
64 Olympus honcho
65 Williams's expression
66 Puts in stitches
67 Fallon or McClurg

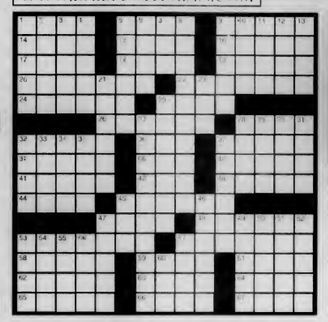
DOWN
1 Muggy
2 Without help
3 Fashion by cutting
4 Work dough
5 Yield
6 Alice Springs hoppers
7 Sea extension
8 Tavern
9 Wears at the edges
10 Schism
11 Profane utterance
12 Plead part
13 Venerian swallows
21 Formalized argument
23 Kind of lever or stack
25 Gets there
27 Rings up
28 __ ives
29 Roberts or Idle
30 Office station
31 Lode loads
32 Large quantity
33 Floor part
34 Wide-kicked shoe
35 Gangled
37 Quarterback at times
45 Downcast
46 Reverses
47 Mackerel
49 Backache
50 Looked like a dip
51 Boredom
52 Actress Witherspoon
53 Betting figures
54 Colorful mount
55 Kind of drive or up
56 Poker payment
57 Chew like a cat
60 I-line drink

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Touch not, lest ye be touched."
-Jason Lee as Brodie in "Mallrats"

ECOLOGY By Jen Fell



PAUL By Billy O'Keefe

LABRAT By Richard Mac

Submit your comics!
collegiancomics@yahoo.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Forget plastic surgery; blueberries are the only true fountain of youth.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
In a world full of very dim lightbulbs, you are a firefly on steroids.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
People like to laugh at "Dude-guys," but they're actually quite a cultural tragedy.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Do a better job hiding the fact that you own a blow-up doll of Billy Bob Thorton.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Allow yourself to be sucked into the vortex of YouTube entitled "related videos."

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Is it not obvious that if a sheep is capable of being a black sheep, it must have wool?

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Your Bluewall addiction is like a vampire sucking the life-force from your wallet.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
You will be a used car salesman and wear offensively tacky suits. It is your destiny.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Lock yourself in a candelit room and read romantic novels until your eyes fall out.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Drop 37 Mentos in your friend's soda and watch them yak their kidneys up.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
An ice cream sundae is like a Band-Aid for your soul.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Don't bother changing your Facebook picture. You haven't gotten more attractive.

Shear Bliss
Holistic Salon and Spa
Asian Ceramic Hair Strengthening Package
Call 413-253-2322
www.shearblissamherst.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ACTIVITIES

Montreal weekend from $99.00. Complete, motel, transportation and more. Montreal express.net 781-979-9001. Lowest Prices on campus.

AUTO FOR SALE

Volvo GLE Sedan 1988 106000. $2100 5% Umass Discount. Tom: 256-6401.

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext. 162

EMPLOYMENT

CAFE HELP PART-TIME nights and weekends must be fast, accurate, efficient and friendly. Apply in person at the woodstar cafe. 60 Masonic St. Northampton.

Drivers wanted. Must be able to work 20 to 30hrs a week. Nights and weekends. Apply at DP Dough, downtown Amherst.

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

ROOM FOR RENT

Large furnished room in downtown Amherst for female grad student/professional. Includes utilities and WiFi. Great family! $600/month. Available immediately. Call Alex: 413-896-7641.

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

SERVICES

Concerned About Your Eating? Do you eat too little? Eat too much? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic: 577-5101.

GET TESTED - Know your status before spring break. FREE HIV RAPID TESTING OCTOBER 3rd, UMass Campus Center 9am – 3pm. Questions: Call Bob at 413-747-5144 www.tapestryhealth.org

TRAVEL

#1 Spring Break Website! 4 & 7 night trips. Low prices guaranteed. Group discounts for 8+. Book 20 people, get 3 free trips! Campus reps needed. www.StudentCity.com or 800-293-1445.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace is the best way to get your classified messages out!
SUBMIT YOUR CLASSIFIED ADS AT WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM OR CALL
545-3500

Training intense for runners

CROSS COUNTRY from page 8

The other part of a cross country runner's weekly routine is the physical training. The teams are split up into groups based on their experience and distance. Generally, the more experienced runners tend to run the longest distance, followed by the intermediate runners, who are followed by the newer runners who have not yet gotten themselves acclimated to the rigors of collegiate running.

On Mondays, the teams usually do one of their longest runs at whatever pace is good for each individual runner. The teams usually run longer workouts on Tuesdays and Thursdays in order to maintain a schedule balanced between significant running and rest. Wednesdays are midweek rest days for the teams, which may include a few slow-paced miles at most.

Fridays are midlevel days in which the teams prepare for the next day's meet and also work out any kinks that may have interfered with their running throughout the week by running at a consistent pace.

Saturday is typically the day of a meet, and the runners usually warm up by running anywhere between two to three miles before a race and afterwards the runners do a cool down run to regulate the lactic acid that has built up in their leg muscles during the race. So actually, race day is usually the longest day of the week in terms of conditioning. The men usually end up running about 13 miles that day and the women run around 11 miles.

On Sunday, the runners typically have the day to themselves and generally use it to recover from the week's work.

After three meets, the freshmen have had a chance to get their feet wet in the world of collegiate cross country. Also, the runners who have accrued injuries in the offseason have gotten a opportunity to better themselves as much as they can in preparation for the latter portion of the season.

Now is the time of the season that the Maroon and White will turn up the tempo on its running levels with the postseason in sight.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu

A-10 slate no easy task

W. SOCCER from page 8

Rudy said.

St Louis, Charlotte and Dayton were picked as the top three finishers for 2007. UMass play those three teams on the road. The Minutewomen will travel to play Charlotte Friday, Oct. 26 and then travel to St. Louis to play an afternoon game Sunday, Oct. 28.

STILL MISSING RODRIGUEZ

At this time last season the Minutewomen were scrambling to solidify the defense without senior Tina Rodriguez.

"The main switch we had in the back was Tina Rodriguez, and it was major because she was in the center of the defense and she was a rock back there." UMass coach Jim Rudy said. "She played every game for two and half years, that really hit home with us not only tactically but emotionally."

It took the Minutewomen about three or four games before they adjusted to playing without her last year. This year however, they have played well without her on the field, using the entire offseason to get the defense in order. Despite allowing three goals in their last game, the Minutewomen have been dominant defending their opponents.

Rudy said Rodriguez is not back yet and is still unsure if she will return.

Senior forward Britt Canfield leads the team in scoring with 15 points (seven assists, four goals), with sophomore forward Sydney Stoll behind her with 14 points (six goals, two assists). In just her second year, Stoll has emerged as one of the top scorers. She had just three points all last season with one goal and one assist. Senior goalkeeper Kristin Walker has 44 saves on the season, putting her 26 saves behind Scurry for second all time on the career-saves list. Freshmen forward Kelsey Anderson has scored two goals in her first collegiate season, both of which are game-winning scores. Stoll leads the team with three game-winners.

Steve Gomes can be reached at sgomes@student.umass.edu.

Spiders back on track in conference game of the season in its A-10 opener Sunday after sophomore forward Jessie Knight netted the lone goal of the season to defeat La Salle, 1-0.

A-10 SOCCER from page 8

Knight received a pass from sophomore midfielder Jen Ruhe, dribbling to get past the keeper and scored in an empty net. It was the first goal of her collegiate career.

Junior goalkeeper Kate Hudson recorded her second straight shutout in a row and third of the season. Hudson finished the match with six saves.

Hudson's game-winning save stopped an attempt by La Salle's Ally Kinney, who fired a shot to the corner. Hudson dove to knock the ball out of bounds. The Spiders hosts St. Bonaventure Friday.

PLAYER OF THE WEEK

Charlotte senior midfielder Lindsey Ozimek is the Atlantic 10 Player of the Week after scoring three goals and adding two assists in two games this weekend. Ozimek helped the 49ers rout Duquesne, scoring two goals in the 5-0 win.

On Sunday, she scored the game-tying goal with under eight minutes remaining in regulation to tie the game 1-1 against Fordham. Ozimek is fourth in the A-10 with five assists and is also the all-time leader in career assists (35).

ROOKIE OF THE WEEK

Xavier freshman forward Carlyanne Wenzel recorded a goal and two assists this weekend to earn A-10 Rookie of the Week honors.

Wenzel broke a 1-1 tie against George Washington Friday to give Xavier the 2-1 win. Sunday she assisted on XU's first two goals in the win against Saint Joseph's, 5-0.

She currently leads the team with four goals and 10 points. Xavier is 2-1 in conference and 3-8 overall.

Adam Miller can be reached at ajmill@student.umass.edu

Garber happy home for Minutewomen

FIELD HOCKEY from page 8

The Minutewomen were only able to win one of their five A-10 home games last year, which was a factor in their missing the conference tournament.

UMass had more success on the road in conference play last season, defeating West Chester and La Salle in its only two road games of 2006. In 2007 non-conference play, the Minutewomen are 2-5 away from home.

UMASS LOOKS TO RETURN TO A-10 TOURNAMENT

The 2006 season was just the second time in the last 19 years the Minutewomen failed to qualify for the conference tournament. They had a chance at home on the last game of the season against Rhode Island, but lost, 1-0, behind 14 saves from Rams' goalkeeper M.J. Britt.

Similar to last year, the Minutewomen will play seven conference games. The only non-conference game remaining on the schedule is an Oct. 24 showdown with Dartmouth.

One upcoming game to circle on the schedule is an Oct. 12 matchup with Temple. The Owls recently had a five-game win streak snapped and hold the A-10's best non-conference record at 9-4. Senior Ali Lukey leads Temple with 21 points, including 8 goals and 37 shots on net.

Mike Connors can be reached at myconnor@student.umass.edu

Saint Louis, La Salle ready for league play

A-10 FIELD HOCKEY from page 8 of the season.

With six minutes left in the game, the Terps scored their final goal when sophomore Nicole Muracco secured the victory. Temple is now 9-4 and will host A-10 rival Richmond on Oct. 5.

BILLIKENS BLOW IT

Saint Louis appeared to have a victory against No. 11 Ohio on Sept. 29, but lost, 4-1. Senior forward Catherine Donovan scored her second goal of the season.

On Sept. 30, the Billikens lost to visiting Kent State, 3-2, in overtime. Sophomore forward Molly Boyne carried the offense for Saint Louis, who opens up its Atlantic 10 schedule with home games against Saint Joseph's Oct. 5 and Temple Oct. 7.

UP AND DOWN WEEKEND

La Salle split a pair of games over the weekend, losing 4-1 to Villanova Sept. 29. Sophomore forward Colleen Leehner had the Explorers' loan goal, her sixth of the season.

The team won a double-overtime game against Rider Sept. 30. Sophomore forward Kara Harpel had the game-winner for the Explorers, who moved to 7-5 and will travel to Rhode Island for their A-10 opener.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

Sophomore forward Jacquelyn Desjardins and the Minutewomen have one of the toughest conference schedules in the A-10 this season.

Join us for the
Dartmouth-Hitchcock "High Achiever" Nursing Student Weekend
November 2nd, 3rd and 4th, 2007
for those nurses who qualify - It's FREE !

At Dartmouth-Hitchcock Medical Center, we are proud of our history of recruiting the best nurses available. We constantly search for high achievers to ensure we maintain our leading edge. If you are looking for an extraordinary career with one of the most sophisticated medical centers in the country, please consider registering for our "High Achiever" weekend. You will learn a lot, have a great time and may walk away with an outstanding career opportunity.

Friday Evening
- Check in at the Residence Inn by Marriott, *Lebanon, NH
- Dinner at Margaritas

Saturday
- Breakfast at the Residence Inn by Marriott
- Welcoming Information delivered by a member of our Executive Staff
- Facility Tour guided by Karen A. Pushee RN, MA, Clinical Coordinator, Intermediate Special Care Unit
- Catered Lunch - Donna Brown, RN, Nurse Director of Medical Specialties will speak about growth opportunites within nursing at DHMC.
- Class with Brendan Hickey RN, BSN, CRNI, Clinical Coordinator IV Team INTRAVENOUS THERAPY What to know and what to do
- Walk around downtown historic Hanover, NH, home of Dartmouth College and check out the quaint shops and local sights. Feel free to spend your complimentary $100 Amex Gift Cheque on whatever you like!
- Dinner at Murphy's Restaurant
- Join us at the Canoe Club for an evening of entertainment.

Sunday
- Breakfast at the Residence Inn by Marriott where you will receive your parting gift from Dartmouth-Hitchcock Medical Center.

Register today at: www.highachieverweekend.com
DARTMOUTH-HITCHCOCK MEDICAL CENTER
Lebanon, NH

OCT 3 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 3, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Runners have tough routine

DeRosa and Co. focus on strict diet, training before meets

By Mike Gillemister
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts cross country teams may run only 25-minute races, but it is in these 25 minutes that a runner's body is pushed to its limit. To sustain such physical duress, one must prepare mentally and physically.

Each runner's body is different and because of this, they must prepare differently. Yet there is some continuity between individual training regimens. In particular, diet is very important to a runner. Every runner is different; some foods work for some people, while others may go a different route.

Senior captain Christina DeRosa has her own way of preparing for meets and it has absolutely played a role in DeRosa's collegiate career. She has been the first Minutewoman to cross the finish line in every race that she has participated in as a member of the Maroon and White.

"When you hit this level, you know what works for you," DeRosa said. "Before a meet we'll have a lot of chicken and bread. Making sure that you're hydrated is so important. But when you're at this level, people know how to shape their bodies."

Senior Christina DeRosa has been the top UM performer since she arrived as a freshman.

Sophomore Andy McCann believes that different types of athletes require different diets.

"I think that everyone understands the proper dieting," he said. "You don't need a ton of carbohydrates like an extreme long-distance athlete would, like say a cyclist. But you do need a good amount of carbs in your diet, mixed in with the right amount of protein. A lot of it is just eating smart."

Members of the men's and women's teams gather at least once a week and eat foods like chicken, vegetables and pasta.

See CROSS COUNTRY on page 7

UM's defensive lapse

First loss of season dealt by A-10 foe

By Steve Gaines
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's soccer team is coming off its first loss of the season. The Minutewomen (6-1-1, 1-1 Atlantic 10) dropped a 3-2 decision at home against Duquesne. It is their first loss since Oct. 27, 2006 when they lost a 1-0 game at Saint Louis.

The last time they let up three goals was last season against in the 11th game against Dayton, losing 3-1. Three goals is a tough deficit to overcome. The last time the Minutewomen did so was in 1997, when they let up three goals and still won. UMass defeated St. Joseph's, 5-3. That 1997 team went 17-5 overall and 11-0 in the A-10, winning the conference title and earning a spot in the NCAA Tournament. Harvard ended the dream season with a 2-0 loss.

Northeast Rankings

With the fast start in non-conference play and splitting the first two games in A-10 play, the Minutewomen are ranked eighth by Soccer Buzz Northeast Regional Rankings. They are also ranked eighth in the NSCAA/adidas Regional Rankings through Sept. 25. Rhode Island (7-2-1, 2-0 A-10) is ranked sixth in the Soccer Buzz rankings. The Minutewomen host Rhode Island next Tuesday. The Rams are one of the best teams they will face all season.

UM alum starts for Team USA

Former UMass goalkeeper Briana Scurry started for the U.S. National team in the semi-final of the Women's World Cup against Brazil. Unfortunately for Scurry, there was a lot of controversy and criticism thrown her way after Brazil won, 4-0.

After the game, goalkeeper Hope Solo – who had started all the previous games – lashed out after the game, telling reporters, "There's no doubt in my mind I would have made those saves. You have to live in the present. And you can't live by big names. You can't live in the past."

Scurry started for the 1999 World Cup team that won gold. Solo has since apologized for her comments toward Scurry, but she still questions the coach's decision.

"I hope everybody will come to know I have a deep respect for this team and for Briana," Solo said in a statement on her MySpace page.

At UMass, Scurry was an All-American and the Atlantic 10 Player of the Year in 1993. Scurry played 65 games for the Minutewomen, recorded 368 saves and 37 shutouts and allowed only 0.86 goals per game.

Senior Kaelyn Caldwell and the UMass defense had a rare off day against the Dukes, allowing three goals for the first time since 1997. They will look to recover this as conference play continues.

Playing the Best of the A-10

The Minutewomen will play the conference's top teams from last year. They will not play Temple or St. Bonaventure, who were both selected in the coach's poll to finish at the bottom of the A-10.

"We are playing the toughest schedule of all the A-10 teams,"

See W. SOCCER on page 7

King finds back of net again

By Mike Connors
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts field hockey team goes into this weekend one game below .500 after dropping a 3-1 game Sunday against Albany. However, the Minutewomen's (5-6) leading goal scorer, Cher King, got back on track after going five games without a goal.

"She narrowed her focus and was really strong on the ball," UMass coach Justine Sowry said. "Her first touch on the ball was very positive. When she's on, she can create so much for us. We need the people around her to be great support for her."

King put three shots on goal against Albany, after the previous game against Brown in which King struggled. The sophomore's goal was her sixth of the season and leaves her tied for fourth in the Atlantic 10.

The Minutewomen are back at home Friday against West Chester in both teams' A-10 opener. The Golden Rams' Sara Conrad has two hat tricks and is one spot ahead of King with seven goals.

Lauren Gillespie has recently provided the offensive support Sowry is looking for. The junior scored her first two goals of the season in the two games prior to Albany. The offense needs to continue to receive more contributions from multiple players in order to keep up with opponents.

"When we maintained our wit and support around the ball we looked good," Sowry said of the Albany game. "But at times, we didn't do that."

Goalies continue to alternate

While Sowry has decided to use two goalkeepers this season, she has been consistent in playing Becky Letourneau and Sarah Williams in alternating games. Should this pattern continue, each will have a chance to show off their skills in A-10 play this weekend.

Williams will get the first shot against West Chester Friday. She is 4-1 on the season, with a .800 save percentage. The Golden Rams are 3-7 in non-conference play, having lost their last six games.

Letourneau, who has faced the stiffer competition this season, will likely take on another challenge against La Salle Sunday. The Explorers 7-6 record stands as the third best in the A-10. Letourneau holds a 1-5 record, with a .656 save percentage.

Minutewomen happy to be home

UMass will look to build upon its 3-1 home record this weekend. The Minutewomen have three one-goal victories at Garber Field, and their only slip-up came against 14th-ranked Boston University on Sept. 12.

After struggling through a mild scoring drought, Cher King got back on track with a goal in the loss to Albany.

See FIELD HOCKEY on page 7

Billikens start fast on quest to repeat

By Adam Miller
Collegian Correspondent

Saint Louis is looking to repeat last year as it started Atlantic 10 conference play with a 2-0 start. The Billikens' last win was a 2-0 victory against St. Bonaventure Sunday.

Billikens sophomore midfielder Kelly Waeckerle scored the first goal at the 52:10 mark. She received the ball near the top of the box and took a shot for the far left post. It was her second goal of the year.

Midway through the first half, Saint Louis came close to connecting on one of four corner kicks. Billikens senior forward Cassi Winchell sent the ball into the box, and junior back Lauren Olson met the ball on a header, but it drifted right.

The second goal came from senior midfielder Mary Green, hitting from 30 yards with 10 minutes left.

Rhode Island undefeated

Freshman forward Jessica Babice scored the only goal of the match to defeat Temple, 1-0. Babice currently has four goals on 26 shots this season.

Her goal came in the fourth minute after taking a pass from sophomore defender Amanda Thomas. Rhode Island (7-2-0, 2-0-0) outshot the Owls, 21-3, but was penalized for offsides five times.

Rams redshirt freshman goalkeeper Jackie Fede got her third shutout victory in the last four games. Fede has four shutouts on the season, with 44 saves and a .800 save percentage.

Rhode Island's win against Temple was its fourth straight win.

Richmond starts on right foot

After a tough start to its season, Richmond's won just its second

See A-10 SOCCER on page 6

A-10 play looms as teams gear up

By David Brinch
Collegian Correspondent

Saint Joseph's won its fourth straight game against No. 9 American on Sept. 23. Freshman midfielder Jen Wrublesky won the game for the visiting Hawks with eight minutes, 46 seconds left in the extra frame.

Five days later, the team saw its winning streak snap when it lost to Rutgers. Junior forward Marisa Pizzi, the team's top returning scorer, had the Hawks' lone goal early in the game, while senior goalkeeper Rebecca Cunfer had nine saves in the losing effort.

The Hawks record fell to 5-5 and will open their Atlantic 10 season against Saint Louis on Oct. 5.

Web of losses

Richmond lost its ninth straight game on Sept. 30, falling to Princeton 5-1. The Spiders were in the fourth game of their six-game road trip and junior midfielder Alex Malatesta had the only goal on a penalty stroke, her third goal of the season.

Sophomore goalkeeper Jacki Raithel had a career-high 13 saves. The loss brings Richmond to 1-9, after winning six straight A-10 championships.

This season, the Spiders have had a tough schedule, playing No. 8 James Madison, No. 9 American, No. 13 Duke, No. 15 Virginia and No. 17 Delaware. The Spiders will open their A-10 season against Temple on Oct. 5.

Owls flying high

Temple extended its winning streak to five by defeating Rider 3-1 Sept. 25. Junior midfielder Jamie Adams had two goals in the win while sophomore forward Dannah Brehm secured the victory for the Owls.

The streak ended when No. 2 Maryland beat Temple 3-1 Sept. 30. Maryland junior forward Alexis Pappas scored the first goal of the game 21 minutes into the first half. The Terrapins secured again eight minutes later off a penalty corner by junior midfielder Susie Rowe.

Temple scored its only goal of the game off a 2-on-1 situation. Senior midfielder Alli Lokey found sophomore forward Kasey Ruth for her second goal

See A-10 FIELD HOCKEY on page 7

COLLEGIAN SPORTS ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Zack Simmons, goalie
Men's Soccer

With his shutout of Boston University Saturday, goalkeeper Zack Simmons tied the all-time UMass shutout record with 16. Simmons made five saves in the Minutemen's 1-0 victory.

It was redshirt junior's second consecutive shutout after allowing a goal in each of UMass's first six games. He shut out 10 opponents in 2006. It was also the second consecutive win for the Minutemen, who had lost three straight games prior to a win over Northeastern on Sept. 22.

Simmons passed Bryan O'Quinn, who played at UMass from 1998-2001 and played on UMass coach Sam Koch's last Atlantic 10 Championship team in 2001, the Minutemen take on Hartford this weekend in their final non-conference game of the season. Simmons blanked the Hawks Sept. 15 last season, making five saves in a 1-0 UMass win.

The five saves he made against the Terriers also moved him past O'Quinn for fifth all time on the career saves list. He now has 214 and should be among the top three in UMass history by the end of the season. The record is 272, held by Mark Hanks who played at UMass from 1974-76.

In 2006, Simmons was named to the Atlantic 10 All-Academic team and has maintained an exemplary academic record in his four years as a student in Amherst.

Runner-up

Forward Sydney Stoll scored two goals and recorded an assist as UMass kicked off A-10 play with a win over Saint Joseph's Friday and a loss to Duquesne Sunday. The score against Duquesne gave her a goal in three consecutive matches, but was the first loss of the season for the Minutewomen.

Stoll leads the Maroon and White this season and her 14 points are second to senior Britt Canfield's 15.

The sophomore has made significant strides this year in becoming a primary option on the offensive end of the field. Last year, Stoll recorded one goal and one assist as the team's top freshman. She was the only freshman on the team to play in every game, starting the final seven games of the season.

In her second year, she has come into her own as UMass attempts to return to the Atlantic 10 postseason. Stoll and the Minutewomen visit Dayton Friday.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

PARTLY CLOUDY : HI: 86 LO: 57 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, OCTOBER 4, 2007

KELLY HITS UP HUKELAU | PAGE 6

UMPD releases annual crime statistics

Report details campus crime

By Kate Olesin
Collegian Staff

Like any concentrated city with a population of over 35,000, emergencies and criminal activity do happen in Amherst – even in a setting geared toward higher education.

"Statistically, college campuses are a very safe place to be – compared to other cities and towns our size," said University of Massachusetts Police Department Director and Chief of Police Barbara O'Connor.

The police department at UMass has just released its annual security report for 2007, one that O'Connor said, "is completed in compliance with federal law."

"We put it out every year," said O'Connor. "I'm complying with the requirement … but our hopes are that people would read [the report] and learn from [its resources] and call us if they need our services."

The report combines various statements and statistics from UMPD related to yearly criminal statistics, emergency and non-emergency resources on campus, the alcohol policy and how university police respond to acts such as hazing and sexual assault.

"We want our students to be safe and well-rested and have a good study environment in our residence halls," said O'Connor.

Most students interviewed said they felt relatively safe on campus. But, with the recent stabbings outside the Student Union on Sunday, some of that security is waning.

"I would say where I live, in the Central area, I feel like an 8 out of 10 in terms of safety," said junior economics major Ankit Chandra. "I feel pretty safe and then you go to class and you hear about kids getting stabbed and you think, 'That could be me.' But you never see it."

The report combines criminal statistics from 2004-2006, which include numbers of liquor law arrests and referrals, sex offenses, drug violations, burglaries and murders. With data gathered from the office of the dean of students, Residence Life and University Health Services, the report covers all campus criminal occurrences.

The highest statistic is the number of liquor law violations, recorded through referrals by Residence Life staff.

The referral numbers are gathered through the office of the dean of students, but UMPD has noticed the decrease in liquor law violations recorded through arrests over the years.

However, UMPD has also noted an increase in drug-related violations and arrests.

"Arrests for alcohol are down, and drug offenses are up," O'Connor said. "I don't think it necessarily means that there is any significant resurgence of crimes … it's a result of increased enforcement around

See REPORT on page 5

Officials discuss off-campus fire safety

By Cara Grannemann
Collegian Staff

For off-campus students at the University of Massachusetts, living in an apartment may be their first experience at running a household. Once the refrigerator is stocked and clothes unpacked, the safety of off-campus housing is often overlooked.

"For the most part, I believe that most of the large apartment complexes are up to code," said Amherst housing inspector Tom Dion. "Unfortunately, I think that many of the single family and multi-family units are not up to code."

According to Massachusetts law, all homes should have working smoke detectors in proper areas of the house, carbon monoxide detectors, depending on what type of heating/cooking fuel is being used, and a garage's location and house numbers that are visible from the street.

Amherst fire chief Keith Hoyle said in a complex with more than 12 units, a full fire alarm system must be monitored 24 hours a day and have portable fire extinguishers.

"Some off-campus housing is fine. Some may not be if landlords do not keep safety systems operational," said Hoyle. "In some cases when landlords do keep the safety systems operational, tenants disable them due to 'nuisance issues.'

"Some of these 'nuisance issues' in the Amherst area have resulted in death.

"There have been several students killed in fires in Amherst since 1992 when smoke detectors were disabled by the students, and their fires occurred during early morning hours," said Hoyle.

Tampering with fire alarms is not

See FIRE on page 5

College costs cut by bill

By Lisa DiBenedictis and Shruti Sehgal
Collegian Staff

The Bush Administration passed on Sept. 27 the College Cost Reduction and Access Act, legislation promising a significant increase in federal aid to undergraduate college students.

The largest investment in higher education since the 1944 GI Bill, the Act cuts the interest rates of Federal Subsidized Stafford Loans in half, from 6.8 percent to 3.4 percent and raises the maximum student Pell Grant from $4,310 in 2007 to $5,400 in 2012. Effective in fall 2008, it applies to both incoming freshman as well as current undergraduate students.

For UMass students, 61 percent of whom graduate with student loans of over $14,000, and 20 percent of whom currently carry Pell Grants, the act will help mitigate financial duress.

"This new investment is long overdue. The cost of attending public college rose by almost 40 percent over the past five years during the Republican-led Congress, yet the maximum Pell Grant increased by only 8 percent during that time period," said Congressman John Olver, D-MA.

See ACT on page 5

THROUGH THE WIRE:

PRO-CHOICE GROUP DISPLAYS STRONG MESSAGE

This demonstration was displayed yesterday on the library lawn. The display featured statistics involving abortion. One read, "10.8 percent of women feel a child will disrupt their education or career."

UHS staff to speak at N.Y. conference

Health topics to be broached

By Hannah Nelson
Staff Writer

A regional college health conference has invited three of the staff members from University Health Services at the University of Massachusetts to be speakers at an annual event.

The conference is being held by the New England College Health Association (NYSCHA) and the New York State College Health Association (NECHA). NYSCHA holds an annual meeting every October and combines the meeting with NECHA every two years.

The meetings are for anyone who wishes to become more aware of college health services and issues. This includes students, who are encouraged to attend the event. It has been regular practice to invite UHS staff to speak at the event.

According to the NYSCHA Web site, "The NYSCHA NECHA Combined Annual Meeting is designed for anyone with an interest in college health – physicians, nurses, nurse practitioners, physician assistants, health educators, social workers, mental health professionals, administrators, clinical support staff and students."

The UMass staff speakers are Frederick H. Bloom, D.O., Pierre Rouzier, M.D. and Tom Schiff, M.D.

Bloom will be giving a discussion on "Red Eye and Selected Ocular Emergencies" with emphasis on diagnosis and treatment. He has been actively involved in the Five Colleges for more than 30 years.

Rouzier will be speaking on the "Common Problems of the Elbow, Wrist and Hand" as his position as physician at UHS entails the role of a sports medicine expert. He is an assistant professor at UMass as well as author of The Sports Medicine Patient Advisor.

Schiff's session will be with the issues of a number of male health issues ranging from

See UHS on page 7

SGA aims at University policy

On-campus living targeted

By Sarah Belanger
Collegian Correspondent

The Student Government Association at the University of Massachusetts held its second meeting of the semester last night in the Cape Cod lounge of the Student Union.

At the meeting, members covered SGA bylaws, swore in new members and set goals for the semester ahead.

"All cabinet members this year are new," said President Aaron Buford. "We hope that this will bring a new sense of energy to what we're trying to do here."

Speaker Carla Dominguez dedicated a few moments before the meeting to go over SGA rules and bylaws. In addition to the 140 pages of rules handed out to the members, Dominguez stressed the importance of professional conduct and dress.

Dominguez said that 34 out of the 38 members of the SGA had attended the meeting.

As far as goals for the year, she said she "would like to see a significant change in campus policies."

SGA president Aaron Buford and Speaker Carla Dominguez address the crowd gathered at the group's last meeting.

Both Buford and Dominguez are expecting great things from the newly appointed members, individuals who "are taking initiative upon themselves in learning their way around the Student Government Association so they can be better prepared," said Dominguez.

Area representatives have been working on asking students of the residential areas on campus what they can do to improve conditions. Many have interviewed students in their respective zones of representation.

Buford also discussed the Academic Honesty Board, a group of six SGA members working closely with the Dean of Students on academic policy issues. Buford said he was still looking for four additional members to add to the board that monitors cheating and plagiarism among other things.

"These students will be responsible for helping to reshape current policies and in addition making those policies in place more efficient," he said.

Junior Malcolm Chi approached the podium to discuss gaining support for the ALANA caucus, a group designed to represent and act as advocates for the African, Latino, Asian Pacific Islander and Native American students on campus.

The meeting came to a close shortly after the committees had been appointed.

Sarah Belanger can be reached at sbelange@student.umass.edu

The UMass Republican Club hosted Phyllis Schlafly in the Bowker Auditorium last night for her lecture entitled Feminism vs. Conservatism: The Great Debate.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 23

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3690 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
COMICS EDITOR Adam Seagon
EDITORIAL EDITOR Sean Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ryan McAskill
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Teresa Reilly
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Will McGuinness
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seaburn
ASSISTANT SPORTS Michael King
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Melenzi
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenwaike
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALLIE LIFE, BY MAN THE COLLEGE SEASON. IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN WAS BRIEFLY ASSOCIATED WITH JANUARY 1994 FOR NEWSPAPERS, RADIO AND INFORMATION, ALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Meghan Murphy

COPY EDITOR
Nichole Amaral

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

Fed. employees spend cash for class

$146m wasted on first class

BY HOPE YEN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Federal employees wasted at least $146 million over a one-year period on business — and first-class airline tickets, in some cases simply because they felt entitled to the perk, congressional investigators say.

A draft report by the Government Accountability Office, obtained Tuesday by The Associated Press, is the first to examine compliance with travel rules across the federal government following reports of extensive abuse of premium-class travel by Pentagon and State Department employees.

The review of travel spending by more than a dozen agencies from July 1, 2005, to June 30, 2006, found 67 percent of premium-class travel by executives or their employees, worth at least $146 million, was unauthorized or otherwise unjustified.

Among the worst offenders: the State Department, whose employees typically fly abroad on official business.

Many of the cases involved high-ranking senior officials or political appointees who claimed exceptions to federal travel rules by citing old medical records or questionable approval from a subordinate employee.

Investigators found that senior officials often flew business- or first-class because they felt entitled to the perk.

The higher airfare for traveling in one of the premium classes resulted in expenses often five to 10 times more than what was authorized under government travel rules.

"With the serious fiscal challenges facing the federal government, agencies must maximize their ability to manage and safeguard valuable taxpayers' dollars," investigators wrote, suggesting agencies recoup the extra cost from those who abuse travel policies.

Under federal rules, government employees generally must fly coach for both domestic and international travel unless the flight takes 14 hours or longer.

A few exceptions apply when the employee receives agency approval based on a medical condition, security concerns, lack of availability of coach seats or when required "because of agency mission."

Government investigators found that employees openly flouted the rules and agencies did little to check their abuses. Among the waste cited:

An Agriculture Department executive took 25 premium-class flights costing $163,000 and said the extra expense had been authorized by a subordinate. In 10 of those trips, the traveler claimed exceptional circumstances to justify the pricier travel to western Europe, even though agency policy forbids premium-class travel unless the flight time is longer than 14 hours.

Thirty-two State Department employees flew from Washington to Liberia in premium class over a six-month period. Five of those travelers did not have authorization for premium class; three had duplicate tickets and no evidence that the duplicates were refunded, and 17 were not properly justified, as their trips did not meet the 14-hour rule. These flights cost $293,000 and comparable coach-class tickets would have cost $124,000 – a difference of $169,000.

At the Pentagon, a political appointee took 15 premium-class flights and cited a medical condition as justification for the $105,000 in expenses. However, the only evidence of a medical condition was a note signed by a fellow Pentagon employee, not a physician, attesting to surgery from several years earlier. The Pentagon did not have a doctor's certification from the employee as required by agency policy.

Nine Justice Department employees charged the agency $35,000 for premium-class air tickets to Frankfurt, Germany, claiming the flight time was over 14 hours.

Investigators found the employees added a separate flight to their calculations to reach the 14-hour total, a practice not allowed under government travel rules. Also, two of the flights were not authorized.

The GAO, Congress' investigative and auditing arm, said it was referring all cases it found of improper and abusive travel to the respective agencies and inspector general's offices for possible administrative action and repayment of the difference between premium-class and coach-class travel.

The report comes as some lawmakers are pressing to strengthen government sunshine laws by requiring agency disclosure of business-class travel to Congress. Currently, business-class travel accounts for 96 percent of the premium travel claimed by federal employees.

"No one disputes the fact that government officials need to travel, as not all work can be done behind a desk." Nor should all premium-class travel be eliminated. But the rules are there for a reason and the federal government should enforce them," said Sen. Norm Coleman, R-Minn.

Photo flashes crowd

Tech glitch exposes porn

NORWALK, Ohio — A state legislator surprised a high school class when the computer he was using projected a photo of a nude woman during a lecture on how a bill becomes a law.

State Rep. Matthew Barrett was giving a civics lesson Tuesday when he inserted a data memory stick into the school computer and the projected image of a topless woman appeared instead of the graphics presentation he had downloaded.

Police interviewed Barrett and school officials and seized the data memory stick and the computer to determine where the image came from, a state highway patrol spokesman said.

Barrett said there were a few snickers from the approximately 20 students in the senior government class at Norwalk High School when the image appeared. He said he immediately pulled the memory stick out of the computer.

The legislator said he finished his lecture using printouts and then met with the school's principal and technology staff, who examined the stick.

He said the school's technology director determined the stick had a directory of nude images in addition to Barrett's presentation on civics lessons.

"I have no idea where these came from," the Democrat said.

Barrett said the data memory stick was a gift he received about three weeks ago from a legislative liaison from the state Library of Ohio.

Associated Press

Feline pens Pope Benedict's authorized biography for kids

BY PHILIP PULLELLA
ASSOCIATED PRESS

VATICAN CITY — Chico the cat describes the life of his "best friend," Pope Benedict, in an authorized biography for children released this week.

"Dear Children, here you will find a biography that is different to others because it is told by a cat and it is not every day a cat can consider the Holy Father his friend and sit down to write his life story," the Pope's personal secretary, Monsignor Georg Ganswein, says in the foreword.

"Chico and Joseph – A Cat Recounts the Life of Pope Benedict XVI" is narrated by Chico, who took up with the Pope in his native Germany when he was Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger.

The illustrated 44-page book is written by Italian author Jeanne Perego.

It is set mostly in Germany in the years before Benedict was elected in April 2005.

Chico is a real cat who belongs to a German couple in the German city of Pentling, where the Pope lived until he moved to Rome in 1981. The couple are caretakers of the house where Ratzinger had hoped to retire had he not been elected Pope.

Chico tells the story of the life of "my best friend" from his birth in Germany in 1927, through his days as a young man, priest, bishop and cardinal. It ends with his election as Pope on April 19, 2005.

It recounts the Nazi era in Germany when the Pope was a teenager, calling the war years "one of the most dramatic and shameful times in the history of man."

"At that time, Joseph was forced to do something which was absolutely against his will: join the army and leave for the war. We cats do not make war," Chico narrates.

Chico recounts how each time then Cardinal Ratzinger returned to Germany for a vacation, the cat would run into his house and sit on his lap as he played the piano.

One Christmas, when the future pope tried to put the cat out of the house "I misbehaved" and scratched him. "He forgave me right away but told me: 'Don't do it again.'"

In his foreword Ganswein tells the children: "Keep in mind that the cat is writing from his point of view. At the end of the day he is a cat, even if he is a cat who is a friend."

During the years when he was a cardinal in Rome, the future Pope befriended another cat he found on the street and kept him in his apartment until he was elected pope.

There have been conflicting reports about whether that cat moved into the Vatican with the Pope.

HPV lecture to be held today

Talk explores girls, vaccine

BY BROOKE SAUL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Today the University of Massachusetts welcomes discussion of the human papillomavirus, commonly referred to as HPV, and its new vaccine, Gardasil, as part of the Health Project of Health Education and the Everywoman's Center's panel.

The three panelists who will be speaking are Judy Norsigian, Sara Aierstuck and Amanda Collings Vann. Vann, who has been planning this event with Sandy Mandel, a representative of Everywoman's Center, said she hopes people will be able to get the answers they need.

Vann said she anticipates about 50 people to attend the event and added that several professors are offering extra credit for coming to it.

Norsigian, a guest panelist, is best known as the executive director of Our Bodies Ourselves and as a co-author of "Our Bodies, Ourselves," which was released in its eighth edition in May 2005. She also wrote the book "Our Bodies, Ourselves: Menopause," which was released in 2006.

Norsigian who is also known for her talks and writing on a wide range of women's health concerns, which include abortion and contraception, sexually transmitted infections, genetics and reproductive technologies, tobacco and women, women and health care reform and midwifery advocacy.

The well-known speaker has appeared on numerous national television and radio programs including Oprah, Donahue, the Today Show, Good Morning America and NBC Nightly News.

Norsigian has served on the Board of the National Women's Health Network for 14 years and is currently serving as a board member for the Public Responsibility in Medicine and Research.

She is also a member of the Steering Committee for the Committee on Women, Population and the Environment and is the founder and longtime board member of Community Works, which raises funds for Boston area social change organizations through payroll charitable giving deduction programs.

Norsigian has also won multiple awards and was named one of the 21 Leaders for the 21st Century in 2003 by Women's eNews.

"I am really proud to have her," said Vann.

Vann, who is a health educator at UMass Health Services, directs the Women's Health Project and the Not Ready for Bedtime Players and teaches the Peer Health Education Class.

Vann serves on the Five College Sexual Assault Prevention and Intervention Committee, the Five College AIDS Committee and the Clinical Coordination Committee. She also acts as an adjunct lecturer with the School of Public Health and Health Sciences. She has worked at UMass since 1991 and has a master's degree in community and university-based health education from Pennsylvania State University.

Panelists will address a range of issues, including what HPV is, how it is contracted and how it can be prevented. Topics will also include an in-depth analysis of the vaccine and what recipients can expect from it.

Sara Aierstuck, M.S.N., F.N.P., is a board-certified Family Nurse Practitioner with University Health Services at UMass. She received her master's in nursing at Yale University in 1988 and joined UHS in 1991.

Aierstuck is a member of the advisory board of the Advanced Practice Nurse Research Network, a childcare consultant for University Childcare and a member of the Massachusetts Coalition of Nurse Practitioners.

Aierstuck, who gives individual counseling, said it will be good to talk to a group and get information out there. She expects more students coming; however, parents of young girls will be in the audience as well.

The HPV vaccine was recently approved to be given to females aged 11-26. Some health practitioners and pharmaceutical companies have recommended that the vaccine be administrated to all 11-year-old girls, and discussion of the vaccination becoming a mandatory requirement for attendance at public schools has been broached.

The event will take place at 12 p.m. in the Campus Center room 905. This event is free, open to the public and wheelchair accessible. For more information on Everywoman's Center programs, call 413-545-0883. For more information on Health Education, call 413-577-5181.

Brooke Saul can be reached at bsaul a student.umass.edu

Study: Social networks like Facebook boost 'social capital,' self-esteem

BY MATTHEW DEGIROLAMO
TECH DAILY

MILFORD, Mass. — Whoever said friend requests can't buy happiness may be sorely mistaken. According to a new study from Michigan State University (MSU), general social networking Web site usage may lead to a boost in self-esteem and the ability to build relationships.

The study, conducted with 286 MSU undergraduates from various backgrounds and personalities, examined the connection between the use of social networking sites and the development of a person's "social capital" – the resources one gains through relationships with other people.

According to the study, social capital determines what people can do once they make new friends. For example, a student with a lot of social capital might be able to group a large amount of people together for a birthday party and a highly competitive job, or find the fastest way to Chinatown from an acquaintance living there.

The researchers involved have found that the Internet plays a large role in closing the gaps in social capital. Weak ties between people, due to distance or other factors, can be mended by using the tools the Internet provides.

They found that closing these gaps helps people to maintain their social capital, which has been linked to lower crime rates and better public well-being – though many other factors affect those statistics as well.

Cliff Lampe, an assistant professor of telecommunication studies at MSU and one of the researchers for the study, said that the study shows how students use Facebook.com as a tool as well as a toy.

"I would say, as a general statement, that the take-away from this article is that college students are using Facebook to maintain their relationships," Lampe said in an e-mail to the Daily. "Despite the media hype about Facebook, students seem to be savvy about how they use the site, and overall they are receiving real benefits from using Facebook."

One Tufts student agreed.

"It's a great feeling for people to check it every day and see that they have hundreds of friends and messages," senior Matt Cohen said. "As long as people don't go overboard with it, I'm all for it."

The study revealed interesting facts about relationships after students head to college. Even though a high percentage of participants listed their high school network in their profile, many of them reported that they do not use Facebook to communicate with their old classmates.

"The important thing is that they could contact their high school friends," Lampe said.

"While it's true that people are not using Facebook to maintain deep relationships with high school friends, they are using it to keep lightweight contact. This is different than how previous waves of college students have been able to maintain those relationships."

N.Y. conference to host UHS speakers

see UHS from page 1

violence to diversity, entitled "Healthy Guise? Some Realities of College Men's Health."

He draws from his experience as leader of the Student Health Advisory Board and member of the Social Justice Education program.

In addition to the speakers, there will be companies promoting products and amenities that are relevant to the themes of the event.

Also, adding a wider scope to the conference are several non-profit organizations that will be making various presentations.

This year the event will be held in New York from Oct. 10-12 at the Saratoga Hotel and Conference Center.

Saratoga Springs was the choice location for this year due to the travel convenience for both New England participants as well as the New Yorkers.

The event opens on a Wednesday at 11:45 p.m. with a luncheon and a keynote speaker and closes on Friday at 12:15 p.m.

Events will run from 11 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. on Wednesday and 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. on Thursday with several breaks in between speakers.

This is to encourage those in attendance to interact with the speakers.

There are a wide range of topics being discussed this year, covering everything from MySpace and studying abroad to the HPV vaccine and eating disorders.

Hannah Nelson can be reached at hnelson a student.umass.edu

Bike ride for Hillel House successful

Event to help fund projects

BY LUCAS CORREIA
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Hillel House's Ride to Provide charity event held last weekend received a great deal of support.

Chairman Betsy Bertuzzi said the turnout was "fantastic. It exceeded our expectations."

The ride brought a number of members of the Pioneer Valley's Jewish community together.

"Several dozen people have come out here to support Hillel," said Harold Berman, executive director of the Jewish Federation of Western Massachusetts. "That's a statement within itself."

The participants were happy to "have a good time and support a good cause," said David Berkman, president of the board of directors at the Lander Grinspoon Academy in Northampton.

Others, like Amherst College professor Catherine Epstein, came because "it just sounded really fun."

The money raised from this event will benefit the events in which Hillel students traditionally participate, such as Challah for a Dollah and Meals on Wheels.

The activity that will benefit most is the Alternative Spring Break program. As part of the program, students go to Louisiana to help rebuild the homes of the victims of Hurricane Katrina during their spring break.

The Ride to Provide has helped make this trip more affordable.

At the post-ride celebration, Rabbi Saul Perlmutter announced that the event had raised over $30,000. Chairman Bertuzzi summed up the program as a "win-win situation" in which Hillel will give back to the community, as well as the less fortunate, with the money acquired through the ride's success.

Lucas Correia can be reached at lcorrei a student.umass.edu

OCT 4 2007

OCT 4 2007

University of Massachusetts Amherst

Student Government Association
Pi Kappa Phi Fraternity
Kappa Alpha Psi Fraternity, Inc. Nu Tau Ch.
Sylvan Area Government
Inter-Fraternity Council
Panhellenic Council
Central Area Government
Association of Diversity in Sport
National Residence Hall Honorary
Southwest Area Government
University Programming Council
Theta Chi
Black Student Union
Orchard Hill Area Government

Dear UMass Students,

We would like to welcome every student back for another exciting year here at the University of Massachusetts. Much work and preparation has been invested over the summer to ensure that being on campus for the 07-08 school year will be enhanced by First Week Programming. Your student leaders have been working very closely with various administrators in order to create a more accommodating and cohesive campus community.

As the fall season approaches and we see increased intensity in both on-campus and professional athletic competition, it is extremely important that we are responsible for our actions and accountable to each other to be exemplary young adults. Our university has a rich history of demonstrating, protesting, and speaking out. Unfortunately there is also a negative history which has included senseless rioting. It is appropriate for us [the students] to participate in the energized culture that this university inherently possesses, but it would be unreasonable to demand respect and student autonomy without recognizing that there are also issues in the student community of which we must take ownership. Acknowledging and taking responsibility for past rioting gives us a framework to understand what can be done to subvert our actions, and more importantly, an opportunity for us to set a higher standard for student expectations

If we do not respond accordingly, our students' safety will become an issue and the integrity of UMass students will be compromised. We encourage everyone to begin having discussions about upcoming collegiate and professional sports and the manner in which we participate. We strongly urge every student to challenge the expectations that were here before us—that we do not come to UMass to riot before we graduate.

In Solidarity,
Your Student Leaders

Aaron Buford
SGA President

Kevin M. Libby
Pi Kappa Phi Fraternity

Ellen Handly
National Residence Hall Honorary

Andrew Moffett
Pi Kapp Phi Fraternity

Chris Faulkner
Southwest Area Government

Elizabeth Sweeney
Sylvan Area Government

TJ Hurrie
University Programming Council

Jason Rothwell
Theta Chi Inter-Fraternity Council

Christie Jennings
Panhellenic Council

Malcolm Gray
Black Student Union

Michael Megaro
Central Area Government

Tim Alden
Orchard Hill Area Government

Stephanie Buch
Panhellenic Council

Matthew Fox
Inter-Fraternity Council

Jacob Descheneaux
Inter-Fraternity Council
Pi Kappa Phi Fraternity

Kenneth "Kenji" G. Summers-Lewis
Assoc. of Diversity in Sport, Kappa Alpha Psi Fraternity, Inc. Nu Tau Chapter

Bush passes aid act

Higher ed. costs to drop

ACT from page 1

Olver, along with Senator Edward M. Kennedy, supported this act and pushed it along through Congress and the Senate.

"College educations are more expensive than ever, but also more necessary than ever," Olver added. "We need to do whatever we can to break down the financial barriers that prevent too many capable students from pursuing higher education."

The act also aims to ease the financial burdens of recent college graduates by restricting loan repayment to a maximum of 15 percent of their total income.

"Even if you are able to attend college, it is still so difficult to make ends meet for students who recently graduated and are out on the work force for the first time, completely bogged down with thousands of dollars in loans," said Olver's press representative, Sarah Burch.

The act additionally rewards aspiring public school teachers and other public servants, including military contributors, firefighters, nurses, prosecutors and early childhood educators.

Students pursuing teaching careers can receive as much as $4,000 in tuition assistance per year. Students who become public servants will receive complete loan forgiveness following 10 years of service.

"In Massachusetts alone, this legislature will save each student nearly $5,000 in interest and give the 77,000 students receiving the Pell Grant additional support," added Burch.

"I definitely do think it [the act] will help," said Crystal Baxley, an intern at student public interest group MASSPIRG. "It is a great step forward in making education at UMass and across the country more affordable and less daunting."

"Of course, it does not solve all the problems. There is still a $500 expense for textbooks every semester," she added. "But it is a good first step."

Baxley, along with MASSPIRG, is currently lobbying for higher education and textbook affordability.

"It is extremely important to Massachusetts and the rest of the country that this act was passed," said UMass student Ross Broughton Brady. "It's nice that George Bush is finally doing something nice for the students."

Lisa DeBenedictis can be reached at ldebened@student.umass.edu.

Shruti Sehgal can be reached at ssehgal@student.umass.edu.

Local officials respond to questions on fire prevention allowed in the dorms on campus at UMass, but many students practice it in order to smoke in their rooms.

FIRE from page 1

Off-campus resident and UMass student Fletcher Bell removed his fire alarm for a different reason.

"The batteries were dying and it was beeping, so I opened it up and took the battery out and the back-up battery out," said Bell.

Bell did note that there are fire detectors in both the upstairs and downstairs of his house, and also one in the basement.

Though Bell said he is trying to find 9-volt batteries that his smoke detector requires, it has been just "lying on the floor."

Another off-campus UMass student, Dan Grant, said that he and his roommates have not yet installed the main fire alarm in their Hadley home.

"We have five roommates, so one thinks the other is going to do it, who thinks the other is going to do it and so on," said Grant.

With owners and tenants not properly monitoring the fire safety in their homes, one can wonder how off-campus housing safety is being regulated.

"Housing in Amherst is inspected on a complaint-driven basis," said Dion. "If a tenant has concerns that their dwelling is not up to code, then they tell the owner or manager of the property. If the owner manager does not respond to their concerns in a timely manner, then they call us, and we inspect the property."

Dion said that those responsible for any violations found during an inspection must correct them within a certain time frame or may face legal action and fines.

According to Hoyle, the sale of a property also prompts an inspection.

"If a property owner sells his or her property, the fire department inspects it at the time of sale for smoke detector and carbon monoxide detector operation, per the state fire code," said Hoyle.

Currently, the Amherst Health Department is not running any safety awareness programs, but has met with fraternities and sororities in the past to discuss safety codes.

In a Massachusetts Daily Collegian article by Meghan Murphy and Dan O'Brien, fraternities Alpha Tau Gamma (ATG) and Sigma Alpha Mu were closed due to "several fire and safety violations."

"Sigma Alpha Mu was closed for violations, which included blocked doorways, covered smoke detectors, electrical problems and empty fire extinguishers," reported the article.

Alpha Tau Gamma reportedly has broken doors, illegal cooking and blocked exits.

In the article, former ATG member and then-treasurer James L. Mulcahy responded to the fraternity closing as "utterly ridiculous" and said that the violations were "peculiar and insignificant."

In 2002, the Five-College community and local fire departments combined efforts to host "Living with Fire: A Student Fire Safety Program," according to a Collegian article by Melissa Hammel. The event included the distribution of Frisbees that read "Smoke Detectors Got Batteries?" and "Cook Your Dinner, Not the Kitchen," and a mock burning was held.

"The mock burning is designed to show students the speed in which a dormitory can burn down and how effective sprinklers can be in controlling fires," reported the article.

The safety code of off-campus housing is not to be taken lightly.

"If a housing unit is not up to code, serious injury or death could result from a fire," said Hoyle.

Cara Grammemann can be reached at cgrammem@student.umass.edu

Broken elevator shaft strands 3,000 in South African mine

By Michelle Faul
Associated Press

CARLETONVILLE, South Africa — Some 3,000 gold miners were trapped a mile underground Wednesday when falling pipe damaged the elevator, but the company began rescuing workers through a smaller shaft and estimated it would take 10 hours to get them all out.

There were no injuries and there was no immediate danger to any of the workers in Harmony Gold Mining Co.'s Elandsrand Mine, company and union officials said.

Peter Bailey, health and safety chairman for the National Mineworkers Union, said the first 74 men reached the surface shortly after 1 a.m. Thursday. "They are all doing well," he said.

The miners were trapped at a level slightly more than a mile underground when a column of water pipes fell down an elevator shaft causing extensive damage to the steel framework and electrical cables. Miners had to be evacuated with a smaller cage in another shaft.

Sethuri Thibile, one of the first miners rescued, clutched a cold beef sandwich and a bottle of water he was given when he reached the surface.

"I was hungry, though we were all hungry," said Thibile, 32, an engineering assistant who had been underground since 5 a.m. Wednesday. He said there was no food or water in the mine.

"Most of the people are scared and we also have some women miners there underground," said Thibile.

After Thibile's group rescued, Harmony's acting chief executive Graham Briggs told The Associated Press that another 75 would be evacuated shortly, and after that they would be brought to the surface at intervals of every 25 to 30 minutes.

"It's going to take some time because we are doing it carefully," he said, adding the rescue could take 10 hours. "Nobody is injured, nobody is hurt, nothing like that at all."

Deon Boqwana, regional chairman for the union, said there was ventilation for the miners waiting below ground and officials were in contact with the men by a telephone line in the mine.

"They are still in good condition but are angry, hungry, frustrated and want to get out of there," Boqwana said.

He said the miners were a little over a mile below the surface in a mine that at some points is about a 1 1/2 miles deep. The mine is outside Carletonville, a town near Johannesburg.

Boqwana said the smaller cage being used to bring miners out can hold about 75 miners at a time. He said it normally takes three minutes to reach the surface but would be slower because rescuers were being careful. He said the evacuation would take about 10 hours.

Crime data published

Report issued by UMPD

REPORT from page 1

drug-related offenses."

O'Connor mentioned that all the armed robbery cases on campus have been drug-related and involved guns.

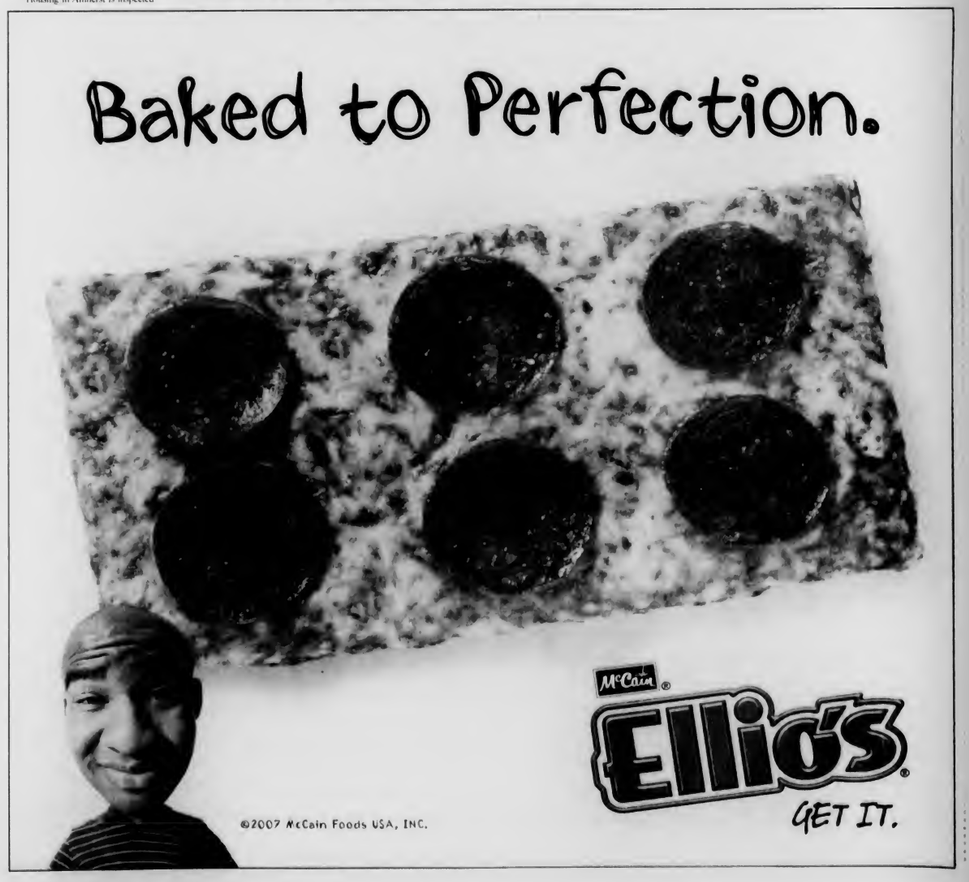
"Years ago we experienced some really serious crimes that were drug related," she said. "So we have dedicated more of our resources [toward drug-related issues]."

The 36-page report has phone numbers and provides students information to on-campus resources like myStudentBody, BASICS, and the Rape Aggression Defense (RAD) program.

Overall, UMPD is pleased about the declining statistics, although total absence of crime is its intended goal.

"If you look at our statistics over the last dozen years, we have seen a steady decline, and the last couple years they sort of leveled off," said O'Connor. "The complete absence of crime would be ideal. It's not likely, but we constantly strive toward that by educating the community," she added.

This "leveling off" can be seen through the higher statistics like liquor law violations and burglaries. In 2005, 100 reported burglaries occurred on campus, and in 2006 that number remained consistent at 102.



For alcohol referrals, which jumped from 836 in 2005 to 1,009 in 2006, those numbers are specifically targeted at underage drinking violations, said O'Connor.

"Those numbers are for a very specific violation of the alcohol laws," she said. "That doesn't include a student who is 21 and had [more than the allotted amount] of beer in their room ... it's very specific violations to underage drinking."

To view the University of Massachusetts Annual Security Report for 2007, visit www.umass.edu/umpd.

Kate Olesin can be reached at kolesin@student.umass.edu

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1809 and snap a photo with your cell phone, then send it to news@dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

"It were best that we not all think alike; it is difference of opinion that makes horseraces."
- Mark Twain

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 4, 2007 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Leave them parks alone

It seems nothing can happen in the state of Massachusetts without utter political confusion and debate. Although the engineering marvel that is the Big Dig has suffered years of criticism for costs that spiraled out of control, for delays and for crucial mistakes in ensuring the proper construction of the new highways, there is plenty to inspire pride. Let us take a step back and consider what has come out of this massive highway project.

Nick Milano

The Central Artery, that green hunk of metal, was designed to smoothly handle 75,000 cars, but was recently carrying more than 200,000. As Dave D'Alessandro wrote in a Boston Globe editorial, projections for the year 2010 figured Boston "would have stop-and-go traffic for 16 hours a day."

While some may say this would only affect the poor residents of Boston, consider the gas wasted by engines idling. Consider the productivity levels of many companies that would plummet because of an inability to get from one end of the city to the other. How does this make the city of Boston attractive to new companies and residents? Sure, treasured neighborhoods like South Boston and the North End are turning yuppie, but this is preferable to the alternative.

The 161 miles of new highway is only a piece of the miraculous construction project. Half those miles are now underground, out of sight, out of hearing range. In their place will be 300 acres of new park and space. A whole new Boston Harbor Island, Spectacle Island, was built with the dirt from the excavation. Forty new acres of park space was created along the Charles River.

This collection of parks in downtown Boston is called the Rose Fitzgerald Kennedy Greenway and remains one of the last projects left on the Big Dig's checklist. Sadly, this park, which has the potential to turn Boston into one of the most beautiful urban areas in the world, cannot escape the Big Dig's bad luck. In 2000 the state legislature ordered the Turnpike Authority to find a place for a memorial to the Armenian victims of Turkey's genocide. The Authority chose a plot on the Greenway only to face scrutiny for its decision.

If the committee accepts either of these proposals, it will only draw what should be a peaceful park system into international controversy.

The Greenway will help the city of Boston evolve from a largely metal and concrete urban jungle into a greener, more beautiful and more welcoming place of residence. It would surely be a mistake to overtly politicize the park spaces as the construction of the Armenian Memorial will accomplish.

There is no historical doubt that the Armenian peoples were subjected to genocide at the hands of the Turkish government during World War I. It was Adolf Hitler who asked the world, "Who, after all, speaks today of the annihilation of the Armenians?" as he was conducting his own purge of the German Jews. However, the Turkish government has continued to deny that genocide occurred and has called the allegations "historically and legally baseless," according to a Boston Globe article.

The disagreement between Armenian groups and the Turkish government has thus given the Greenway a black eye. The latest twist in the story, further emphasizing the need for the Greenway to keep out of the memorial business, is the proposal by a Turkish-American group to contribute its own park for the "Boston Peace and Heritage Park." In a letter to officials, the stated reasoning was that Turkish-Americans derive strength from leaving "behind the conflicts and animosities of the old world."

If the committee deciding what to build on the Greenway accepts either of these park proposals, it will only draw what should be a peaceful park system into the international controversy between the Turkish government and their past actions. Further, the construction of one memorial will inspire countless other groups to try and make their own mark on the Greenway. This has already been proven by the Turkish-American group's idea for another park. The Greenway must not turn into a collection of memorials, but should remain a pristine stretch of open green space in the midst of a concrete prison.

In the more than 20 years since the Big Dig was proposed, the project has been the punch line for far too many jokes and criticisms. The Rose Fitzgerald Kennedy Greenway has the promise of proving all the positive qualities of the Big Dig that too often go unnoticed. The decision-makers should work together to find a place in Boston for the Armenian Memorial. Boston has a penchant for beautiful memorials. What is more moving than the six glass columns on Congress Street memorializing the victims of the Holocaust? What about the memorial park on Washington Street in downtown Boston which displays the horrible suffering of the Irish famine on the one hand, but on the other demonstrates the hope and success the Irish discovered in Boston and the United States? Boston is large enough that there will be another, better location for the Armenian Memorial, but it must not be on the Greenway. The Big Dig has suffered quite enough controversy.

Nick Milano is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu

For the record:

Due to editorial oversight, a column printed in yesterday's Collegian by Jeff Napolitano titled "The humanity of Palestinians" bears striking resemblance to a column printed by this section on Nov. 11, 2003.

The Collegian encourages reader responses. Letters to the editor should be limited to 350 words and can be sent to editorial@dailycollegian.com

In Russia, it's a weird, weird race

Russian politics are a notoriously strange business, seeing as they are particularly fond of poisoning their adversaries. Their politically murderous peccadilloes made for some interesting Bond movies, and, what's more, an interesting globally schizophrenic worldview known as the Cold War. The Cold War may be over, but it seems like things are still very chilly.

C.A. Chase

On Sept. 12, Russian President Vladimir Putin dissolved the government as requested by Prime Minister Mikhail Fradkov, who said that the reason was to "give the President a 'free hand' to make decisions in the run-up to the parliamentary election." Next March, Russia will have its elections, and it seems that Putin will be in power for a third term, as Prime Minister. On Oct. 1, Putin announced that he would run first on the list for United Russia, and that he was seriously considering becoming the next Prime Minister of Russia, according to the Associated Press.

His main opponent is Gary Kasparov, the world chess champion, who is representing Drugaya Rossiya ("Other Russia") and is certain to lose. Kasparov, who was nicknamed "the Beast of Baku," was a beast at chess. He became the youngest ever World Chess Champion in 1985, and played for 20 years of glory as the pride and joy of the former Soviet Union.

Though he lives the good life in New York City with his third wife, he wants in on Eastern political intrigue. He wants to beat Putin not at the game of chess, but at the great (or not-so-great) game of politics. Kasparov has even given up certain victory for idealism: "We won't win now, but when the regime collapses, be aware that we are here."

Cravat-wearing Kasparov dueled IBM's Deep Blue computer, in 1996 and 1997. He won the first game, and lost the second. He won against the machine once – could he possibly win against the Russian political machine? Don't count on it – even Kasparov himself doesn't: "I can calculate the possibilities as a chess player and I have to be honest and say that our chances are not high. But I take this as a moral duty, and when you do something out of moral duty, then who cares?" As a chess player, Kasparov was brilliant at finding and exploiting his opponents' weaknesses, but that won't be enough to stop Putin.

Putin is no stranger to dirty tricks, as shown in his dealings with former Prosecutor General of Russia Yury Skuratov. In 2000, Putin sacked Skuratov for corruption. While still head of the FSB, Putin commented on a tape of Skuratov's illicit nocturnal activities that was shown on national television, saying that the FSB had evidence that the two naked young women Skuratov was cavorting with were paid for by persons being investigated for criminal offenses, thus rendering said cavorting totally corrupt. Skuratov, who never denied the authenticity of the tape, claimed that his dismissal was on political grounds, as Putin was part of the corrupt Yeltsin administration that Skuratov was investigating.

Kasparov dueled IBM's Deep Blue computer, in 1996 and 1997. He won against the machine once – could he possibly win against the Russian political machine?

Putin, a former KGB colonel, has solidified the economy (somewhat), and has paid off Russia's large foreign debt. He is also one of the wealthiest men in Russia, according to Kasparov, and that he is just serving as conduit for a corrupt trade system. But even if Putin is merely controlling a Post-Communist kleptocracy, the people of Russia don't seem to mind too much: Putin has an 81 percent approval rating, according to the Levada Center, but then again, the government has almost complete control of the media. Opposition to the government is almost non-existent, something that is painfully obvious when Putin's most serious opponent is a former chess champion.

In an interview with The Times, Kasparov lamented the dire state of Russian democracy. "We are not fighting to win elections in Russia, we are fighting to have elections. The word 'election' should be removed from our political vocabulary now. It is an appointment process."

According to The Times, "Mr Putin has also insisted on what he calls the 'verticality of power,' restoring Kremlin authority by abolishing elections for regional governors and turning them into presidential appointees."

So whatever claims Putin makes to a democratic Russia are flatly hollow, especially when the FSB has such a strong presence in the government: a December 2006 study showed that 78 percent of 1,000 high-ranking politicians and bureaucrats came from military backgrounds.

Aleksander Litvinenko, who was a former lieutenant-colonel in Russia's Federal Security Service (FSB, the successor of the KGB) and defected to the United Kingdom, was poisoned with polonium on the anniversary of his defection. Litvinenko, famous for accusing the government of attempted murder, was subsequently lired from the secret service, jailed and then defected. Litvinenko met with someone who had inside information about the murder of Anna Politkovskaya, and who gave him a list of FSB officers allegedly connected with the hit. Politkovskaya, an investigative journalist about to publish an article concerning torture in Chechnya, had been gunned down in an elevator.

This hasn't been the first time that Russian agents have murdered critics in bizarre ways. It all started in 1978, when Bulgarian dissident Georgi Markov was stabbed on Waterloo Bridge in London with a poisoned tipped umbrella and died of ricin poisoning. Who stabs people with umbrellas? Was it too difficult to wait in the dagger line?

Kasparov has his own take on Litvinenko, meaning he should stay away from glowing chess pieces: "All the theories about what happened to him have in common that it was initiated by some Kremlin forces. The danger is there and that is what Western leaders fail to recognize, that Putin is not in control even in the Kremlin itself." Given the recent history of Russian dissidents, and the monolithic presence of Putin in Russia's in-name-only democracy, it seems that this former grandmaster may not be around long enough to try to checkmate the machine. Kasparov should watch what he eats, and I don't mean that in the calorie-counting way.

C.A. Chase is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at cchase@student.umass.edu

Those who don't teach ought to learn

It seems like on every turn of campus there is somebody griping about something. Griping about a bad grade on a paper, griping about a professor, griping about how hideously ugly the Campus Center is, just griping. Maybe it's the weather. Sure, people are talking about how badly they want to wear their favorite college sweatshirt (typically exemplifying their first encounter with real rejection), but fall is actually going to be here soon, and then students will become as bitter as the weather. As you've just recently opened up the Editorial section of the Collegian, you know exactly what I'm talking about. Whatever the cause, people get lost in the gripe, and what it is they sought to change in the first place.

Tucker Merrick

Last Friday, I was fortunate enough to attend a general faculty meeting at UMass. At the time I wasn't feeling so fortunate, as it was rather late on Friday, and the meeting ran well into Tucker's nappy-nap. I was about to gripe, yet while sitting there, I suddenly realized that I had been granted the unique opportunity to see rationality in action on our very campus. In the ugly Campus Center, professors, librarians and other interested parties gathered to discuss the efforts of the faculty over the last several months and how to proceed now.

For those who don't know, in May our faculty, the Faculty Senate, the Massachusetts Society of Professors and concerned others gathered their forces to wage war against a perceived threat to UMass Amherst. Last spring, the Board of Trustees met secretly at a closed retreat to discuss a plan for "One University." This phrase soon became one spoken in hushed fear, where Chancellor Lombardi would be replaced with President Jack Wilson, and the UMass system would be completely integrated – taking away autonomy in the name of better stats on paper. Safe to say it was a bad idea – it did not factor in the interests of the people who actually work, attend, and live at UMass. Our faculty battled it out to make everybody realize that. Sure, Lombardi ended up being a casualty of war, but our teachers reigned victorious in the end.

Now it's the beginning – a new year – and reflecting upon the fight that has ensued and making amends, the UMass Amherst faculty is changing gear. Now that "One University" is dead, it is time to establish an effective relationship. Several times speakers on the floor of the meeting emphasized that the trustees were the "bosses," that they made the final decisions, and that by working with them there was a much better chance for substantial input for change. As Secretary of the Faculty Senate Dr. Ernest May put it, "Focus on being persuasive, and not on being confrontational for the sake of being confrontational."

Griping students on this campus could benefit from our teachers' example this past Friday.

Our professors, it seems, have much more to teach through their actions than lectures can give us. They are forming an arena in which to discuss opinions, not rant, bicker and aggravate. In a showing of good faith from the administration, Interim Chancellor Cole and two UMass trustees were present, acknowledging their fellow UMassers.

You can't just learn about a topic, you have to listen to what everyone is saying in order to understand the subject.

Griping students on this campus could benefit from our teachers' example this past Friday. When you lambast someone, completely dismissing and insulting them without so much as one ear to hear them out and respond rationally, then it's to your own detriment. Because oftentimes that person you refused to acknowledge is the one with final say. Why would they listen to your griping now that you've offended them?

A perfect example near and dear to our hearts is the Andrew Card incident of last year. There were huge protests, none of which the administration heeded. Did any representative for these dissenters – away from the intimacy of bad press – actually talk this issue out and find out why an overwhelming majority was being ignored? Now history has a chance to repeat itself as no closure was reached. Students were left feeling powerless, and the administration with a stiff upper-lip.

The Student Government Association actually refused to meet with Vice Chancellor Gargano on some sensitive campus issues last year. What does that do? OK, you don't agree with his position, well, find a way for him to at least here yours out. As the guy in charge of student affairs and campus life, I'm sure he's at least willing to listen.

Petty griping goes nowhere. Like the faculty, students need to accept the horrible yet undeniable truth that they're not the ones making the rules. They are not the bosses, not yet anyway. In the mean time, gain some respect for others, have them respect you, and make change the right way.

Tucker Merrick is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jmerrick a student umass.edu

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Editorial@DailyCollegian.com

ANTICIPATING ZEALOTRY

Dear Editor:

The arrival of ultra-conservative anti-feminist Phyllis Schlafly to UMass Amherst will cause an army of political and personal responses.

Schlafly has been one of the most vocal counter-feminism activists over the past 30 years. She established a "pro-family" group, the Eagle Forum, which mobilizes people across America to oppose gay marriage, abortion, female empowerment, and most notably, the federal Equal Rights Amendment (ERA), as well as several other states' ERAs.

Her impact upon the American political sphere has been insurmountable, and as many would say, detrimental. What is interesting to note, however, is that she very often places a distinction between "us" and "them," in reference to conservatives and feminists. In all actuality, her rhetoric is a complete paradox from her lifestyle, which epitomizes many ideals of feminism.

She completed her undergraduate degree from Radcliffe College and received her J.D. from Washington University Law School. In 1952, Schlafly ran for Congress on the Republican ticket and lost. In 1970, she ran for a seat on the House of Representatives and was unsuccessful yet again. She has written and contributed to dozens of books, has written a monthly newsletter, The Phyllis Schlafly Report, for the past 41 years, and writes a weekly column that runs in over 100 newspapers.

Her "Stop the ERA" campaign significantly contributed to the defeat of the Equal Rights Amendment, and she has been named one of the 100 most important women of the 20th century by Ladies' Home Journal. Is there any doubt of her success?

However, if it weren't for the work of feminist activism, how would she have been able to accomplish all of these things as a woman? She denounces feminists as those who want to "gender-neutralize society so that they can intimidate and control men."

Not quite, Mrs. Schlafly, and we sure do appreciate that you have exploited the progress women have made for over a century to allow you to say the outlandish things that you do. Through her propaganda lies an undeniable hypocrisy. Spend 10 minutes on her Web site and you will see what I mean. Phyllis Schlafly does not speak for all women, and therefore, those who disagree with her message need to ensure that her anti-feminist rhetoric is not taken lightly.

Sarah Morgan
UMass student

IN HOOKAH'S DEFENSE

Dear Editor:

In what may be the least persuasive editorial ever written, Devon Courtney explains that hookahs are bad.

If I understand him correctly, he has two basic problems with hookahs:

1.) Hookahs, and the people that use them, are annoying.

2.) Smoking is bad for you.

I cannot reasonably argue nor do I believe that hookah smoke is any less dangerous than that of cigarettes. But in his editorial, Courtney merely reminds us that smoking tobacco is hazardous to our health. This is not a statement of opinion, this is a statement of fact – one that society has drilled into our heads. It's a platitude.

Hookah smokers make the personal choice to smoke. I consider hookah smoking relatively harmless (relative to drug/alcohol abuser. Though some hookah smokers inhale copiously, many smokers take few puffs and inhale only occasionally, if at all – addiction is rare. The act of smoking hookah is never just about the tobacco – it's a social lubricant around which people occasionally gather. So while I appreciate Courtney's concern for our health and well-being, I don't consider him thereby justified in telling us we should stop, nor in passing such harsh judgments on our pastime.

Is Courtney honestly concerned with the health and well-being of everyone who smokes hookah on this campus? Or does he simply find the health argument a convenient auxiliary, adding moral weight to his grievance and distracting us from his personal distaste for the habit? Courtney's writing is about people. It's about a trend he dislikes. He is not reacting to a health hazard. As such there is little sincerity and no conviction behind his misguided health arguments. Having dismissed them, I will now address his other concern.

His other concern is that people who smoke hookahs are annoying, as are trends. My response to these issues is fairly straight forward: shut up. If it bothers you so much, make friends who don't smoke hookah. Courtney carries on with aimless complaints about something he calls "college culture," proceeds to sloppily relate the hookah to this nebulous concept, and then says all his friends like hookahs, but he doesn't, so life sucks. When Courtney says "everyone one seems to have one," he essentially provides the definition of the word "trend." He suggests that "trend" is his concern. I lose track of his reasoning, but I think he's complaining, ultimately, about hookahs.

So, you wanna know what's so great about hookahs?

The cool, gentle, oh-so-velvety smoke that flows smoothly and fluidly from the hose, that with the slightest pull will kiss your lips, your tongue, your throat, that will eagerly infuse your mouth with sugary doses of rose and peach, that tastes like the airiest, most intense dessert you've ever had. The hookah provides an opportunity to relax with friends, lovers, acquaintances, and neighbors around a common medium that calms your nerves, opens your mind, pleases your pallet and perfumes the air. The hookah brings people together, grants them the space to speak, and ultimately unifies them. Voila, that's what's so great about hookahs.

I respond here both in defense of those who appreciate hookahs and more generally as a student beseeching his peers to seek information and spend a few moments actually thinking before submitting editorials. Courtney's piece reads more like a personal blog or diary entry than a considered editorial. Uninformed, unfocused jeremiads do not, in my view, constitute editorials.

Ace Heinle
UMass student

POINT-COUNTER-POINT

"Freedom rings where opinions clash." - Adlai E. Stevenson

Readdressing racism

A history of violence

Let it just be said that the debate about the Jena Six on this campus has been scattered and isolated at best. Despite the efforts of students groups and faculty, if you ask any random person walking through campus whether they've even heard of Jena, La., you're liable to get a varied response. The whole situation has been like a game of telephone, some people knowing a lot of the wrong information, others knowing only a small amount of the important stuff.

Katy Bruck

The idea that the incidents in Jena have become an inflated, over-analyzed figurehead for the ongoing racial tensions in this country is an overstatement. National coverage in newspapers and on television has been, much like awareness of the event on campus, scattered and often mentioned in passing. According to the timeline presented on the Jena local newspaper's Web site, the incident that sparked this so-called "frenzy" occurred in November of 2006 – almost a year ago. It wasn't until last month that the national news even touched the story.

Most of the national coverage revolved around the more than 20,000 person peaceful protest orchestrated by national civil rights leaders Reverend Jesse Jackson, Al Sharpton and Martin Luther King III. What didn't get as much coverage was the fact that, following behind the civil rights activists and college students was a smaller, but nearly as vocal procession of neo-Nazi, white supremacist leaders.

What didn't get as much coverage was the fact that, following behind the civil rights activists and college students was a procession of neo-Nazi, white supremacist leaders.

An FBI investigation was prompted after a neo-Nazi Web site posted the names and addresses of several of the black students and their families involved in the Jena Six controversy, calling for members to "drag them out of the house." The white mayor of Jena, as well as Justin Barker, the white teen who was at the center of the attack that prompted the charges against the Jena Six, granted interviews to the Nationalist Movement, a white supremacist group out of Mississippi. The mayor of Jena, Murphy McMillan, while touting to the press that he believes his town is being portrayed as unfairly racist, praised the efforts of the multiple white supremacist groups that have attempted to organize counterdemonstrations, saying that their "moral support means a lot." Justin Barker is quoted as urging white readers to "realize what is going on, speak up and speak their minds."

Upon confrontation about the interviews, David Barker, Justin's father insisted that he is not a white supremacist and neither is his son. He claims to have not known the nature of the group that was interviewing his family – a view not shared by Richard Barrett, the interviewer. Barrett claims that he very clearly explained who he was and what he stood for, and was invited to stay the night in the Barker's home.

I only wish I was making this up. If you still have any doubt in your mind, try investigating a little bit into the history of the Ku Klux Klan in Louisiana, particularly in Jena. David Duke, the former leader of the Klan ran for governor of Louisiana in 1991 (not all that long ago). He recently publicly announced his support for the white citizens of Jena, since they voted so overwhelmingly for him during his gubernatorial race.

It's easy for so many of us here at the University of Massachusetts to forget that there really are people like this out there. That even the "liberal media" fails to remember that their influence can still be felt, despite the best attempts of our federal government to prevent them from acting on their pro-white, "nationalist" impulses.

A local Ohio newspaper reported Oct. 1 on the appearance of a statue in a local resident's front yard. The statue was of a black figure, with a noose tied around its neck and chains around its legs. The statue had sat outside this residence for years, but only managed to attract some attention recently because of what's been going on in Jena.

While this could not be more offensively suggestive, it went without notice for so long because neighbors brushed it off as a "bad joke" or by insisting that the resident was "actually a nice person."

After being brought to their attention, local law enforcement officials stated, that, just like the nooses hung in the tree at Jena High School, and the newspapers and Web sites printed by the Nationalist Movement and other groups, the Ohio resident broke no laws. But to say, like the Jena school board insists, that these things are innocent pranks, derived from movies or popular culture is ignorant.

Racism still exists in this country. If you need more concrete examples, than what's going on in Jena, you can find them. Brushing it off as something different or less serious is irresponsible. Ahhhhhhh it's the first step. Unfortunately, for everyone involved, it seems that even the leftist hand of the media is too squeamish to even approach the real ugliness at the heart of the matter.

Katy Bruck is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at kbruck@student.umass.edu.

A gross overreaction

Imagine this scenario for a second: three upper-class black college students are falsely accused of a heinous crime. Despite an overwhelming preponderance of evidence indicating their innocence, local prosecutors make no effort to see the facts in the case. Instead, they simply treat the case as closed and the pending imprisonment of the alleged perpetrators as inevitable and necessary. Media outlets and public opinion uniformly condemn the alleged assailants without affording them due process of law or a trial by jury; the alleged criminals, heretofore without criminal records, are left with their reputations in irredeemable pieces and are made national pariahs well before the judicial process has run its course.

Brad DeFlumeri

However, when the truth is finally revealed, and the testimony of the three young black men is vindicated by the evidentiary facts and by the renunciation of the accuser's own accusations, there is still no outrage over the pervasive injustices that had just occurred. There is no legal defense fund established in the name of the falsely accused black men, and they are not portrayed as national heroes, cultural martyrs, or symbols of a racial divide.

On the contrary, they are still looked at with contempt and scorn because of their upper-class standing and privileged upbringing, and their accuser, far-from being labeled the liar and fraud that she was revealed to be, is coddled by the press and not prosecuted for systematically lying in an attempt to extort money from those she falsely accused.

So, does this scenario sound at all familiar? Probably not, because the three Duke lacrosse players who were vilified last spring while being falsely accused of rape by a stripper were white, and not black. As a result, there was no national outrage over a purported miscarriage of justice, activist college students did not rally in the name of the "Duke 3," and, thankfully, these selfless champions of civil rights Jesse Jackson and Al Sharpton – the dumb and dumber of the black victimhood movement – did not make the case their raison d'etre. There is not a direct parallel between the facts and the circumstances of the Duke Rape Case and the Jena 6 ordeal that this campus cares so much about, but what laborious examination of the two cases reveals is the ever-widening racially motivated double standard with which the liberal media and, in turn, society at-large view victims of institutional injustice.

This is the story that they won't tell us about, because it is a reality that rains on their little parade of perfect racial theater.

If it is a rich white college kid who gets screwed by the system, then we, despite his accuser's claims lacking the slightest bit of veracity, collectively take a sick pleasure in watching his life come crumbling down around him. We somehow rationalize the wrong that has been committed by saying "Well, his parents can afford a good attorney anyway," or worse, "He has been privileged his whole life, let him learn what it is like to in the real world."

However, when there appears to be a poor, Southern, black victim of injustice, the liberal exploiters of racial tension are quick to act with vulture-like efficiency and precision, in the interest of their own pocketbooks and to the detriment of the minority population that they so condescendingly profess to serve.

What has transpired in Jena, La., over the past year is expressive of ignorance, racism, and a failure of enlightened leadership all coalescing in a brutally destructive way to reveal something deeply disturbing about that part of the country, and maybe our country as a whole. However, the fact remains that Donald Washington, a black U.S. attorney from Louisiana, has said unequivocally that there was no connection between the original noose hangings and the 6-on-1 beating that resulted in the prosecution of the six black students-turned-martyrs.

"A lot of things happened between the noose hanging and the fight occurring, and we have arrived at the conclusion that the fight itself had no connection." said Washington.

Further, Mychal Bell – one of the central characters of this overly-sensationalized made-for-Hollywood story – is, far from being the beacon of civic and community sainthood that so many have made him out to be, actually a repeat-offending juvenile delinquent already convicted of assault and malicious destruction of property.

This is the side of the story that the Jesse Jacksons, Al Sharptons and Katie Courics won't tell us about, simply because it is a reality that rains on their little parade of perfect racial theater. We know that Jackson and Sharpton routinely get involved in these types of ordeals in their own self-interest. And, appreciatively, most credible black leaders and intellectuals long-ago renounced the right of these two clowns to lead African-Americans. Indeed, Sharpton and Jackson do little more than consistently portray blacks as helpless victims.

Martin Luther King, Jr., a real champion of empowering minorities and a trailblazing crusader for civil rights, consistently called upon whites to not hand preferences or freebies to blacks, but to simply afford them opportunities by which they could be empowered to high achievement. In a similar sense, the supporters of the Jena 6 should not be calling for the outright exoneration of the six black teens quite obviously guilty of assault.

Instead, they should be calling on black teens and black people around the country to rise above the racism that so many commentators don't think they can overcome. And until this message – that blacks should strive to attain equality not by portraying themselves as victims but as strong, independent, and accomplished citizens – is the one emerging from the lips of Sharpton and Jackson, we will surely remain a racially divided society in which black achievement is reflexively viewed as government-produced.

This status quo allows some disingenuous hiberals to paint all minorities as victims and allows frauds like Al Sharpton and Jesse Jackson to sustain prosperous careers in social dishonesty. Yet how will encouraging the Jena 6 – and others in the future – to feel like sympathy-deserving victims actually benefit them and set them on the path toward accomplished lives?

Brad DeFlumeri is a Collegian columnist. He can reached at bdeflume@student.umass.edu

The riot, the crackdown, the long ordeal

A little more than a week ago, Vice Chancellor Mike Gargano sent a message out to the students warning of the consequences of a potential riot. His premonition is not unfounded, as demonstrated by last December's Southwest riot, which broke out after UMass lost the Division I Football Championship Subdivision to Appalachian State.

Joe Hughes

The recklessness involved was amazing. Ten windows were shattered in John Quincy Adams and $100,000 worth of damage was caused in the Southwest residential area. Garments were lit on fire and thrown onto bystanders and chunks of concrete were hurled from towers. Many police officers were injured as bricks and bottles were thrown at them. Even the Chief of the University of Massachusetts Police Department was nearly hit by a flying jug of water with enough force to kill her.

Not surprisingly, the response by the UMass police department was swift. Although actual rioters who inflicted damage on property were arrested, there were a number of others who did nothing but watch, and were subsequently apprehended.

Although actual rioters who inflicted damage on property were arrested, there were a number of others who did nothing but watch, and were subsequently apprehended.

One such person was a friend of mine, who for the sake of anonymity, I'll refer to as Anthony. He had received a standard letter in the mail from the University threatening expulsion for supposed participation in the riots, with the charges being failure to disperse and incitement to riot.

Anthony was residing in Southwest at the time, in the Washington tower. It was the night of the big game, and he was spending his time inside his buddy's room in John Adams. When the riot began, they went outside to watch, but as his friend began hurling rocks and yelling, Anthony decided to return to his own dorm. He was surprised to discover that his building had been entirely barricaded by the UMass police, who were reportedly firing at approaching students' feet. Not having any place to go, Anthony attempted to return to his friend's dorm. When he arrived, however, he was denied readmission into the building, as a residence assistant insisted that he be present with the person who had originally signed him in. Anthony was forced to leave and go looking for him.

After searching for his friend for some time with no success, Anthony finally ran into another person he knew who lived in John Adams and who was able to sign him in. When they both arrived in the lobby, it was packed with students attempting to enter the building. In the midst of the pandemonium, perhaps provoked, the police fired tear gas into the room, sending all of the residents and guests darting for the stairwell, despite the long line to get in.

The physical damage from last year's riots in Southwest has since been repaired. But many students whose only crime was being present are still caught in the middle of legal battles in the aftermath.

When Anthony was taken to court, the police claimed that he had helped incite the riot by shaking his fist. A charge for incitement to riot based on this accusation alone would have been excessive enough, but he had not even done this – he was simply high-fiving a friend. That charge was later dropped after attending court hearings. As for the failure to disperse charge, where could he have gone? The police and the end of the semester, immediately before finals. All of Anthony's hard work was now for nothing, and a few months of his life gone. On top of that, he lost thousands of dollars in tuition, as well as lawyer fees – not to mention a substantial amount of time. His record was stained, and just like that his life was completely altered.

A few weeks after Anthony's trial ended, just as I was about to write an article about his story, I received a letter similar to his.

The charge was failure to disperse. I was pissed. At the time of the riot, my girlfriend, who lived in Southwest, had called me saying that she was caught in the middle of it and was afraid. Just as Anthony was prevented from entering his building, so was she – along with her roommate. I immediately ran to the scene. It was mayhem. The windows of the Southwest Cafe were shattered as students ran in and out of it, stealing whatever they could find. Toilet paper and garbage were strewn all along the complex. Every student was attempting to break away from the police line, and I was being signed in, a kid who had never was sneaking past security at the same time.

I hired a lawyer and decided that for my legal interests, I should put this article on hold. When the trial date finally approached, I brought my girlfriend and her roommate as witnesses. As I had done nothing wrong, one might think I had nothing to worry about. But I had enough sense to know that they had a long road ahead.

During the trial, I was surprised to see the police physically change some evidence of my involvement. They were reluctant [illegible] from the beginning, I had [illegible] a preliminary hearing.

Nevertheless, [illegible] didn't [illegible] and so they were [illegible] What the police [illegible] a picture of [illegible] ing a hat in a [illegible] like me, he [illegible] mass. [illegible] complexes [illegible] the police [illegible] studied the [illegible] The judge [illegible] of [illegible] the charges [illegible] [illegible] Big [illegible]

[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [

OCT 4 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS LIVING

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 4, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Kelly hits up Hukelau

Boston native prepares to bring brash style to Chicopee

By Ryan McAskill
Collegian Staff

Whether it's women, family or scaring people, comedian Robert Kelly brings a unique perspective to his comedy. He will be performing Oct. 6 at 7 p.m. in the Comedy Connection Hukelau in Chicopee, Mass.

In a phone conversation Monday, Kelly spoke about his comedy, short college experience, the Red Sox, Tom Brady, "Tourgasm" and his time in Baghdad.

Ryan McAskill: First off, we were sent your CD "Robert Kelly Live" and I have to say, it was really funny.

Robert Kelly: Thanks, bro. I thought you were going to say you got it and it was broken and you stabbed someone with it.

RM: No, the cave was actually messed up but the CD was fine.

RK: Well, I'm glad my agency is doing its best.

RM: How did you get started in stand-up?

RK: In college ... I was at a community college getting ready to transfer to the Mass College of Arts to be a painter or art teacher and did an improv class with a couple buddies as an elective. There was a talent show and we did an improv act and we won. That's when I knew.

RM: Who makes you laugh?

RK: Colin Quinn, Patrice O'Neal, Louis C.K., Dane [Cook]; they make me laugh.

RM: Are there any comedians you don't like?

RK: No. I mean comedy is such a personal thing. You may have a dry sense of humor and think a British mime is hilarious and I want to punch him in the face. Who am I to say that a comedian stinks? Comedy today is forced to be so original. There are only like five things that you can talk about that everyone understands. Back in the day you could say to another comedian, "Hey, you can use this joke in Albany," but not anymore.

RM: You have a Myspace page, a blog, a video podcast sometimes with Colin Quinn and your Web site has links to all your instant messaging information from AOL, Yahoo, MSN and even Xbox 360. Is there any way you're not trying to reach your fans?

RK: The most important thing for comedians is to get in touch with their fans. Back in the day you saw fans at a show and didn't see them again until you did another show. Most of them just want to say thanks and that they had a good time. I stay after every show and sign everything and take pictures, whether it's two people or a hundred. The fans are the ones that put me on the map. I feel guilty if I don't go out and talk to them.

RM: I interviewed Gary Gulman a couple months ago when he performed in Chicopee and he credited you and Dane for him having a Myspace page.

RK: I actually made [Gary's] Myspace page. Dane is really the originator of comedians doing stuff like that and believes in hanging out for as long as it takes afterward to meet people.

See KELLY on page 10

Comedian Robert Kelly of HBO's "Tourgasm" and Comedy Central's "Tough Crowd with Colin Quinn" brings his no-nonsense, foul-mouthed brand of comedy to the Hukelau on Saturday night.

Late start doesn't slow down musician

Ritter bases success on eclectic style

By Alexa McMahon
Collegian Correspondent

Last night musician Josh Ritter played the second show of his current tour at Pearl Street in Northampton. With the release of his fifth album, "Historical Conquest of Josh Ritter," the folk musician finds himself far away from his college days of studying neuroscience.

"My parents are neuroscientists ... when your parents are involved and talk about it around the dinner table you pick up on that," said Ritter. He explained his first career goal was being a neuroscientist.

When Ritter started to listen to Johnny Cash, Bob Dylan, and Bruce Springsteen, "they were like punk to me," said Ritter. At 18 years old, he started to open his eyes to different types of music and what it could offer to him.

These "classic" artists struck Ritter because he paid little attention to the world of music during his high school years.

"I only was familiar with the top 40 lists at that time," he said. Ritter started to experiment with different types of music and began writing songs while attending Oberlin College.

Instead of following his parents' footsteps, Ritter decided to start a music career on his own. After graduating in 1999 with a self-created American history and narrative folk music major, he debuted his first self-titled album.

When asked about his progression from his first album to now, Ritter said, "I do not believe in progression, I believe that each record is a snapshot of who you were at that time."

He described his first album as "a smorgasbord of romance." All five of Ritter's albums are reflections of where he was at that time in his life.

"My second album 'Golden Age of Radio' was very quiet because I was living in Providence at the time and was surrounded by mean neighbors," he joked.

This translates to his new record, "Historical Conquest of Josh Ritter," showing his growth from his first self-released album to where he is now, signed with the Sony label.

See RITTER on page 9

Singer songwriter Josh Ritter sat down with Alexa McMahon prior to his show at Pearl Street last night. The musician spoke about his late interest in the music business, early career path in neuroscience, reasons for not writing on the road and album influences.

Caribou stampedes into Iron Horse

Snaith brings old school feel

By Alex Hornbeck
Collegian Staff

Canadian musician Dan Snaith is bringing his musical project Caribou to Northampton tonight in support of "Andorra," his newest album, released in August on Merge Records.

Snaith started making music under the moniker Manitoba in 2000. The son of two mathematics professors and a student of math himself, his first album, 2001's "Start Breaking My Heart," was a sparse yet melodic collection of electronic music. Gaining comparisons to Four Tet and Boards of Canada, the album was well-received, if not an immediate hit.

Soon after the release of his first album, Snaith moved to London and began working on his second album. "Up In Flames," released in 2003, was a huge leap forward for Snaith in terms of musical expression.

While electronic elements still remained, his work gained a psychedelic orchestral beauty unmatched by similar artists. The album received a much greater critical response than his first, gaining spots in many critics' and Web sites' top ten lists at the end of the year.

In 2004, Snaith was threatened with a lawsuit from Handsome Dick Manitoba, the frontman of 1976's band The Dictators. Manitoba alleged that Snaith was using his name to release CDs under and, wary to go into a lengthy and expensive lawsuit, Snaith decided to change names.

While it would be difficult to imagine fans mistaking Snaith's music for the proto-punk put out by The Dictators, Manitoba was renamed Caribou, a name Snaith claims he came upon while on LSD in the Canadian wilderness.

The first album under the Caribou name was released in 2005, "The Milk of Human Kindness." A blend of the calculated electronic sound

See CARIBOU on page 10

Dan Snaith and his music project Caribou have been compared to The Zombies and other 1960s pop groups.

Molina brings crowd along on life journey

By Brian Wood
Collegian Correspondent

Resembling the battered denim jacket and dusty leather hat that he adorned, Jason Molina's lyrics exposed a traveled and well-worn man. Molina is constantly running from his ghosts while searching for silver linings. He is always in motion and never stagnant.

Molina's musical collective Magnolia Electric Co. took to the dimly-lit stage of the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton on Tuesday night. This particular stop on the road was one that Molina admitted he made special efforts to make happen.

"We love to play this room," Molina confessed following the first song of the evening. He applauded the crowd for creating such a positive musical environment in Northampton before further delving into a handful of musical selections from his expansive repertoire.

Molina first emerged onto the music scene performing and recording under the moniker, "Songs: Ohia," recording both as a solo musician as well as with a rotating set of musicians. Molina released his first full-length work in 1997, when "Songs: Ohia" was unveiled to the public on Secret Canadian Records, a label he has remained loyal to ever since.

Following the debut, "Songs: Ohia" released five full length albums; 1999's "Axxess And Aces," 1998's "Impala," 2000's "The Lioness" and "Ghost Tropic" and 2002's "Didn't It Rain," as well as several tour-only albums, singles and EPs. It wasn't until the release of 2003's "Magnolia Electric Co.," that Molina announced that all of his future collaborative work would be played and recorded under the same name as his latest album, while any continued solo work would be released under his own name.

Molina & Magnolia Electric Co. are currently touring in support of their most ambitious work to date, "Sojourner," a four album one DVD box set limited to 5,000 copies worldwide. The box set chronicles the bands works from the past two years following the releases of their last two studio albums 2005's "What Comes After The Blues," and 2006's "Fading Trails," and includes "The Road Becomes What You Leave" a film by Todd Chandler and Tim Sutton documenting the band's trek across the prairie provinces of Canada.

For their set on Tuesday, Molina opened the night with a selection from the new box set, "Texas-71." The song's minimalist organ driven verses contrasted by Molina's rich overpowering voice created a fitting commencement to the evening.

"Now I think twice about every bargain," Molina confessed, "everything I've had and what I've walked out on."

Molina wasted no time pulling his listeners into his past indecisions, and informed them of his constant flight from them. "Now which one of these can I not outrun and which one of these can I ... baby down Texas 71."

Following some lighthearted stage banter, the band quickly broke into "Montgomery," another solemn tale of Molina's own inability to be stationary in life. With an emotional flutter in his voice, Molina softly professed, "no want, no waste and no fight, this boy is Montgomery bound," reasserting to the audience that he is always on the move, while finally concluding, "the road becomes what you leave and my ghost ain't waiting."

Without warning or hesitation the band seamlessly transitioned into "Hammer Down," a fitting up tempo conclusion to "Montgomery." The song reaches its crescendo with Molina stating emphatically that he is "heaven bound" hypothesizing that he has seen the light and is making his way towards it with reckless abandon.

This was the first glimpse of optimism presented to the crowd, who had quickly become entirely consumed in Molina's personal blues, and hinted at a possible turn of fortune for the troubled inherently songwriter.

This sigh of relief proved to be short lived.

With his next two selections, "Bowery" and "Leave The City" Molina returned to allusions to his past emotional scars. No longer was he traveling towards heaven such as on "Hammer Down," rather Molina had slipped back into darkness and regret. Molina croons on "Bowery," "Broken hearts were the only things listening and blue eyes, I heard everything."

In "Leave The City" Molina reminisces about fleeing Chicago at an earlier stage in his life, a decision he remembers having all the reasons in the world for making, but in retrospect can't remember what they were in actuality. Just as sudden as the ray of optimism that sneaked its way into Molina's story arch appeared, he quickly retreated, reminding the audience of his inescapable past regrets, a theme that would resonate for the remainder of the performance.

Molina closed the evening with two selections off of the "Magnolia Electric Co." album. Onlookers cheered with delight when the band thrust into a self-proclaimed "classic rock" full band rendition of "Just Be Simple," and again for the final song of the night, "Farewell Transmission."

Like any well-constructed story, it was not until the show's very conclusion that Molina finally put his life long journey with the blues into context for listeners, eloquently professing on "Farewell transmission" that "the real truth about it is no one gets it right, the real truth about

See MAGNOLIA on page 9

Hanson helps Africa

Brothers team up with shoe company for new charity

By Teresa Reilly
Collegian Staff

More than 50 people left the Webster Theater Sept. 24 with blistered feet. At 3 p.m. the band Hanson took a walk down the dirty streets of Hartford, Conn. with their fans — completely barefoot.

While Hanson is touring to promote their new album "The Walk," they are simultaneously creating awareness for poor children in Africa. Hanson is bringing TOMS Shoes along with them this fall and selling pairs of shoes to fans at merchandise tables at their shows.

"We looked at TOMS Shoes and went, what they're doing, making a charity and giving a part of their success, it seems like such a cool way, such the right way, to start a business and succeed. We wanted to be a part of that," said band member Zac Hanson.

TOMS Shoes donates one pair of shoes for every pair sold.

"The goal is: When I buy these shoes, something actually happens. It's not like, oh wow, I bought the shoes and some money went to a giant fund. It's, I bought the shoes and these pair of shoes represent another person who has shoes because of these pair of shoes," said Isaac Hanson.

To promote the cause, the three brothers of the band Hanson are taking walks down the streets of major cities with fans who have already started to line up for the shows. The band asks fans to go barefoot in order to fully understand what shoes mean to everyday life.

"One of the first things you need to do to get out of poverty is to cover your feet," said Isaac.

The tactic seems to be working, as fans realize that their bare feet could get cut at any moment, a fear that is constantly with the poor of Africa.

"The other day I was talking to someone who had red stuff all over her feet and I was like, 'What's that?' She was like, 'Yeah, I cut my foot open.' She had blood all over her toes and her feet," said Zac Hanson of a recent walk.

"In a way, that's part of the ... it's not the idea, we don't want people to hurt themselves, but there's this reality to it," said Taylor Hanson, who can claim to his own hurting feet.

Besides the obvious positive of charity, the shoes are comfortable. They are light and come in a wide variety of designs. Considering that two pairs of shoes are being paid for with the $40 a typical pair of TOMS costs, it isn't that expensive.

"The shoes themselves, I really like," said Taylor Hanson, who owns four pairs himself. "You have to kind of work them in a little bit. They get more and more comfortable as you wear them."

The campaign with TOMS Shoes is the second charity that Hanson has brought to their fans. Beginning last spring, Hanson released their single "Great Divide" on iTunes, which featured an African choir. The profit went to an HIV hospital in Africa.

"These are two direct things that are issues in the AIDS ravished portions of the world that are directly linked. One is the virus itself and the other is poverty. What we're trying to do is tackle both of those issues at the same time. With 'Great Divide' we're attacking the virus, with TOMS Shoes we're attacking poverty," explained Isaac.

"Great Divide" is currently available on Hanson's new album titled "The Walk."

"There's a reality to the title 'The Walk.' There's a reality of bringing a shoe company with us," said Isaac. "We're going at a slow pace. We're not running.

See HANSON on page 10

The brothers of Hanson are joining TOMS Shoes in an effort to ease poverty in Africa. For every pair of TOMS Shoes bought, a second pair will be set aside and brought to Africa by Hanson in November.

Iron Horse special stop for singer

MAGNOLIA from page 8

it is we're all supposed to try. There ain't no end to the sands I've been trying to cross. The real truth about it is my kind of life's no better off if I've got the maps or if I'm lost. The real truth about it is there ain't no end to the desert I'll cross, I've really known that all along."

During the performance Molina's songs became more than just simple narratives, they became personal confessions. When he proclaimed, "I'm not looking for that easy way out," he meant it. There were no copouts in his approach, no shortcuts in his delivery and certainly no ambiguities for listeners to wrestle with in his wording, his voice acting as a trembling instrument of honesty.

In "Left the City" Molina explained, "Half my life spent on a highway, half my life I didn't choose, and I have seen the North Star." The North Star is the universal compass for any common traveler, but for Molina it is the embodiment of the light at the end of his tunnel, and while he accepts that he'll never reach it, he keeps traveling on. Traveling the only way he knows how, hammering down, one stop at a time.

Brian Wood can be reached at bjwood@student.umass.edu

Jason Molina and Magnolia Electric Co.'s performances are more like traveling through life than listening to music.

From neuroscience to rock star

RITTER from page 8

"[In this album] there is more vocal confidence and I am able to put my music out there," he said.

This is evident on stage as his strong vocals project clearly through the blaring instruments and holds everyone in the theater at a stand still.

Ritter has just recently signed with Sony Records. The first label he was signed with was Signature Sounds, located in Boston. Then, he moved to V2 American Records.

Although changing recorded label three times in that last eight years seems like a difficult obstacle for his music, Ritter does not view it that way. For someone who started out not knowing anyone in the music business and actually working with record labels, he saw it as fortunate.

The clean-cut musician stands on stage now with a black suit and white oxford collared shirt, quite a contrast from the college student who self-released his first two albums.

His categorized folk music has become very popular in Europe, especially in Ireland. Ritter credits his growth to the shows he played in Ireland.

He will be touring in the States for five weeks. His next show is tonight in Somerville, Mass. at the Somerville Theatre. After the five weeks he will be returning to Europe till mid-December. After the conclusion of the tour, he will be starting all over again.

"My mind is so busy with traveling that I rarely write," on tour," he said.

After the conclusion of the tour, he will resume writing, but remarked he has enough material from his past and current albums to keep himself busy.

Ritter's passion for music that has developed and grew over the last decade is shown through his performances. Ritter remarks that he enjoys playing "anywhere people will come to see me," expressing his dedication and passion for music.

Ritter's late start of listening, writing, and producing music has not kept him back from having a successful career. It has motivated him even more and pushed him to prove himself as an artist.

Victor McMahon may be reached at mcmahon@student.umass.edu

THE FINE ARTS CENTER
LET'S GO GLOBE HOPPING!
CENTER SERIES 07-08 SEASON

Jose Limón Dance Company
Friday, October 12, 8pm, Concert Hall
Hailed as "one of the world's great dance companies," the Jose Limón Dance Company is the keeper of one of the truly great American artistic legacies of the 20th century. The Village Voice writes: "For drama, virtuosity, and grace, there's no finer company."
$35 $25 $15 Five College Students $15 $10 $7 Youth 17 and under $12
Sponsored by El Planeta, Bank of America and WFCR 88.5FM
This performance is made possible by the National Endowment for the Arts American Masterpiece Dance initiative, administered by the New England Foundation for the Arts.

Miguel Zenón Quartet
Thursday, October 18, 7:30 pm, Bowker Auditorium
This dazzling young musician is quickly becoming a central figure in the new Latin jazz movement as he effortlessly blends bebop with Latin jazz. Miguel Zenón is a tour de force in contemporary jazz!
$25 $15 Five College Students $10, $7, Youth 17 and under $12
Sponsored by El Planeta, Bank of America, Open Square, Allison Burtinon and Anger and WEIB 106.3FM
Join us for a free Community Salsa Party at Open Square in Holyoke, Wednesday, October 17th from 7-11pm for some soul cleansing Latin dance music with Combo Sabrosito

Rosanne Cash: Black Cadillac The Concert
Saturday, October 20, 8pm, Concert Hall
Using the music from Black Cadillac as a roadmap, Cash invites the audience on a stirring trip through a multi-media performance of music, video, and narration of her personal legacy.
$35 $25 $15 Five College Students $15 Youth 17 and under $15
Sponsored by Peoples Bank, Valley Advocate, and 93.9 The River. Come at 7:30pm for a tour of the current exhibition at the University Gallery.

UMass Amherst FINE ARTS CENTER
For tickets call 545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMASS or go online to www.fineartscenter.com!

October is
Cyber Security Awareness Month

Security Clinics
October 9, 1:00 - 4:00 pm (Learning Commons)
October 16, 1:00 - 4:00 pm (Learning Commons)
October 23, 1:00 - 4:00 pm (Learning Commons)
Give your computer a check up! Bring your laptop or desktop computer to the Learning Commons every Thursday during the month of October.
* Don't bring your monitor, keyboard, or mouse. Help Services will supply them.

Cyber Security Table in the Campus Center
October 24, 25, 26, 29, 30, 8:30 am - 5 pm
(Campus Center Concourse)
Stop by our table in the Campus Center Concourse to pick up [illegible] securing your computer, ask questions, or enter our raffle for iTunes gift certificates.

Making FERPA Less Scary: A Lunch for Faculty
October 26, 11:30 am - 12:45 pm (A215 LGRC)
Join OIT/Academic Computing for a lunchtime discussion about the Educational Rights & Privacy Act (a.k.a. FERPA) and its relevance in [illegible] contexts.
Note: This presentation is only open to faculty and requires registration.
To register, go to: www.umass.edu/accesnet/workshop/register.php

Cyber Security Panel Discussion
October 30, 2:00 - 4:00 pm (Learning Commons)
Four UMass Amherst staff members will provide insight [illegible] issues that affect UMass Amherst faculty, students, and staff.

Office of Information Technologies oit
COMPUTING SECURITY http://oit.umass.edu/virus/

Hanson and fans take 'The Walk'

HANSON from page 9

we're walking. We're not going to turn around and go backwards but we're not anxious to get there as fast as possible. We're going to get there when we get there."

"The Walk" is Hanson's second independent release on their record label, 3 Car Garage, which the guys created after a falling-out with their major label, Island Def Jam. It has been 10 years since the release of "MmmBop" and all band members are married, with Taylor and Isaac having children of their own.

As for now, the three brothers will continue touring and supporting TOMS Shoes. In November, Hanson will be personally dropping off the shoes in Africa. TOMS Shoes has set a 50,000 shoe goal for the drop.

"We're hoping to continue to bring TOMS with us. We're going to just take it one step at a time. We'd like it to not end after the trip. Their goal is to go to Ethiopia in May [after the November drop] and we're hoping to help them with that goal," said Taylor Hanson. "A huge part of this for us is the going out and being active and then generating the next idea or the next partnership. What we hope is that someone who's coming to the shows for the music will come out with this sense of empowerment and feel even better about it. We'd like to give people even more ways to help. 'Cause it's like, 'I bought 1,000 copies of Great Divide.' We don't want people to feel like there's only one thing."

TOMS Shoes are available at The Hempest on Main St. in Northampton, as well as through their Web site, www.tomsshoes.com.

Teresa Reilly can be reached at treilly@student.umass.edu

The members of Hanson have been taking walks before their shows with their fans to demonstrate the dangers of not wearing shoes.

Comedian connects with fans

KELLY from page 8

After every show during the "Tourgasm" tour we did a meet and greet that was longer then the shows were. We would hang around for three to four hours. If you are willing to pay for a ticket to come out to see me, the least I can do is hang around for a photo and an autograph.

RM: Any advice for the college students?

RK: Come to my show at Hukelau and enjoy. Don't cheat … wear a rubber … don't eat fast food, it will give you heart burn … that's it. I dropped out of college so I'm the wrong person to ask.

RM: I ask because so many people go to college for one thing and end up doing something completely different, like what you did.

RK: That's true and that is what college is about, finding what makes your heart beat fast. I was a basic math and English credit away from earning an associates degree and transferring for a bachelors degree when I realized that comedy was for me and just said "f it."

RM: As a Boston guy, I need to know your thoughts on the Red Sox.

RK: I'm rooting for the Yankees to win, because if we don't have to go through the Yankees then what's the point. I see the Red Sox winning in five with Ortiz being the hero, or maybe JD Drew, because he has sucked all year but is coming around now. Regardless of what happens, we have the Patriots. Tom Brady is the man. I'm buying him a video camera for Christmas. One that's small so he won't get caught.

RM: You did a USO show back in 2005 with Colin Quinn. What was that experience was like?

RK: It was the most profound thing I have ever done. I visited Japan once and entertained the troops but it was completely different in Baghdad. We visited and were in real danger with bombs going off. Fans come up to you after a show and say "thank you," and they mean it but when you perform for a hundred Marines in a shitty hut and they come up to you and say "thank you" they really f mean it. It's overwhelming and emotional. I don't think they know how much of a pleasure it is for me to go there. I would play for them every day if I could. Those are 18- and 19-year-old men over there. I'm just a 37-year-old dude. It's scary over there and I'm a p*, but I never felt so safe than being around them.

RM: Back to a less emotional subject, in most of your television acting roles, you seem to play a Latino police officer.

RK: What can I say, I have full lips and tanned skin. I'm Irish, my name is Robert Patrick Kelly, but those seem to be the roles I book. The funny thing is, I get the role using the accent then when I show up, the directors don't care. I'm changing that around now. I had a small role in "Good Luck Chuck" as an airport security guard playing off opposite Dane and we improvised the whole thing.

RM: What do you have for future projects?

RK: I landed a couple small movie roles, one in Dane's upcoming movie, "Bachelor No. 2," and one in a movie with Greg Kinnear [called "Ghost Town"] and I play a ghost. I also have a new half-hour Comedy Central special after Christmas that will go along with a new CD and DVD that will feature the uncensored special and making-of.

RM: Anything you want to add?

RK: Come out to my show and if anyone has a questions feel free to send them to my Myspace page.

Ryan McAskill can be reached at rmcaskill@student.umass.edu

Kelly, a Medford native, has made a name for himself during his 15 years in the stand-up community. The former art major dropped out of college two credits short of receiving his degree to try comedy.

ROBERT KELLY
OCTOBER 6
7 P.M.
HUKELAU
21+
$22

Snaith provides psychedlic experience

CARIBOU from page 8

of his first album and the more psychedelic leanings of his second, it was well-received but seemed like less of a quantum leap than "Up In Flames."

That year also found Snaith touring with fellow Canadians Junior Boys and Russian Futurists. The tour stopped by the Iron Horse in May. Later in 2005 he also toured with the Welsh band Super Furry Animals.

Snaith was a busy man away from the road in 2005, releasing a DVD entitled "Marina," containing the short films played at his live shows and unreleased music from the "Milk of Human Kindness" recording sessions. He also completed his Ph.D in pure mathematics at Imperial College in London.

The year 2006 found Snaith taking a much-needed break from the world of music. Excitement began building for "Andorra" in early 2007 as details about the album began to leak out. It finally dropped on Aug. 21, his first release for Merge Records. His leanings towards psychedelic pop that have manifested on earlier albums come out in full force for "Andorra," an album full of lush orchestral production surrounding the most lyrics Snaith has ever written.

"Andorra" was met with high critical praise for its full band sound. Allmusic described it as containing "the energy and intensity of group participation, and that makes it Snaith's best yet."

Comparisons to The Zombies and other 1960s pop groups are accurate, and the electronic leanings of Snaith's past albums only rear their heads a few times.

Snaith is joined on this tour by Ryan Smith, Brad Weber, and Andy Lloyd. The band has been practicing for months and it's sure to be a treat to see Snaith transform his beautiful new songs into live arrangements. Caribou will be joined by Toronto's Born Ruffians.

The show starts at 10 p.m. at the Iron Horse in Northampton. Tickets are $12.50 in advance and $15 at the door.

Alex Hornbeck can be reached at ahornbec@student.umass.edu

CARIBOU
OCTOBER 4
10 P.M.
IRON HORSE
$12.50 AND $15

MOVING ON?
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Save 10% off your truck or cargo van rental
Coupon must be presented at time of deposit and reservation
Coupon applies to Potter's vehicles only
• Round Trip Rentals to and from Boston and New York
• One Way Rentals
• Hand Trucks & Furniture Pads Available for Rent
• Boxes & Moving Accessories Available for Sale
The Economical Way To Move
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.pottersauto.com

DRESSED
at Zanna:
Free People
Steve Madden
Uggs
7 jeans
Citizens jeans
and many more!
ZANNA
women's clothing, shoes and accessories
downtown Amherst

comedy CONNECTION
HUKELAU
413-593-5222
705 Memorial Drive in Chicopee
www.hukelau.com
ORDER YOUR TICKETS TODAY!
THIS SATURDAY!
From HBO's "Tourgasm" & Comedy Central's "Tough Crowd with Colin Quinn"
ROBERT KELLY
OCT. 27TH
From the movies "Norbit," "Date Movie," "Deuce Bigalow" & "Undercover Brother"
EDDIE GRIFFIN
OCT. 20TH
Host of NBC's "Last Comic Standing" & from FOX-TV's "Fanfone"
BILL BELLAMY
DEC. 1ST
Star of the HBO special "D.L. Hughley Unapologetic" and Host of BET's "S.O.B."
D.L. HUGHLEY
NOV. 3RD
From "The Howard Stern Show" and star of the HBO special "Robert Schimmel Unprotected"
ROBERT SCHIMMEL

Natural. Gentle. Safe. Effective.
• headaches • neck pain
• back pain • sports injuries
• auto injuries • and more...
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractor
Participating provider for HMO's Student Insurance, Blue Cross, GIC Car Insurance & most others
www.AmherstFamilyChiro.com
Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health
Most insurance accepted
228 Triangle Street
Amherst, MA
(near Bertucci's)
549-1500

LOVE BLOWS
BEN STILLER
THE HEARTBREAK KID
R
HeartbreakKidMovie.com
DreamWorks Pictures

Staffers choose season's award winners

One of the surprises of the 2007 season, the Colorado Rockies won the National League Wild Card in a one-game playoff. Shortstop Troy Tulowitzki (center) is one of the favorites for N.L. Rookie of the Year award.

MELONI from page 14

stingy walk total, just 37 in his 241 innings.

Boston's Josh Beckett edged Sabathia out in wins – 20 to 19 – and the Angels' John Lackey led the AL with a 3.01 compared to Sabathia's 3.21. In Beckett's case, he just picked the wrong stat to lead the league in. Wins and losses are easily the most-overrated statistic in sports, no matter what codgy commentators Joe Morgan and Dusty Baker have to say. Thankfully the Moneyball revolution of the last five years has brought this to light.

Lackey had the best season of his career in 2007, but Sabathia's remarkable peripheral statistics make him the only real choice. His K:BB ratio aside, he outdueled fellow ace and two-time Cy Young winner Johan Santana three times in the final two months of the season.

The back end of the Indians' rotation was inconsistent for most of the season. But Sabathia hailed his team out more often than not, winning 10 games following a Cleveland loss.

NATIONAL LEAGUE CY YOUNG
BRANDON WEBB, RHP, ARIZONA DIAMONDBACKS

Jake Peavy was the NL's best pitcher in 2007, maybe all of baseball. But when his team needed him the most, he wasn't there. On his regular four days rest, he allowed six runs and 10 hits in six forgettable innings.

Even after his team took a 4-3 lead with a rally he started by singling to lead off the inning, he promptly folded. It's been said that one game doesn't make a season, but, as far as 2007 is concerned, it did. San Diego needed an ace; for the first time all season, Peavy wasn't the guy.

AMERICAN LEAGUE ROOKIE OF THE YEAR
DUSTIN PEDROIA, 2B, BOSTON RED SOX

After hitting .182 in April, Pedroia got some advice from the rest of his teammates. The veteran Red Sox clubhouse told its young second baseman to relax. Stop trying to hit home runs and just play the game.

He took his teammates' advice and proceeded to hit .415 in May and .333 for the rest of the season. All those calling for Alex Cora quickly learned that Pedroia is the second basemen of the present and future for the Sox.

Among AL second basemen, he ranked second in batting average (.317), fourth in doubles (39) and fifth in hits (165). He also finished 10th in the AL in batting average and made six errors in 625 total chances. If you're still unimpressed by his defensive talents, I'd like you to recall Sept. 1. When Clay Buchholz no hit the Baltimore Orioles, Pedroia made a sensational play, diving to his left right, leaping to his feet and throwing back across his body to retire Tejada in the seventh inning.

NATIONAL LEAGUE ROOKIE OF THE YEAR
TROY TULOWITZKI, SS, COLORADO ROCKIES

Unlike the MVP, rookie of the year isn't about who the most valuable is, so much as it's about who played the best. In that case, Milwaukee third baseman Ryan Braun deserves the award, even though he only played five months of the season. In his 451 at-bats, he slugged 34 home runs and drove in 97 runs.

But Tulowitzki won this award in the bottom of the 11th inning with Kaz Matsui on second, trailing by two in the most important game of the year and one of the best closers in baseball history on the mound. The Colorado shortstop ripped a line drive into right-centerfield, scoring Matsui and getting himself into scoring position with no one out.

Tulowitzki went 4-for-7 in the game with an RBI. Much like Holliday, the rookie was at his best when the Rockies needed to be perfect. He hit .291 in September with six home runs and 27 RBIs.

Defensively, he was by far the best defensive shortstop in the NL and should easily collect his first gold glove.

AMERICAN LEAGUE MANAGER OF THE YEAR
JOE TORRE, NEW YORK YANKEES

On May 29, the New York Yankees were declared dead by 75 percent of the baseball world. They sat in the cellar of the AL East and 14.5 games behind the Red Sox, things were bad.

Every reporter in New York asked the Yankee skipper what was wrong, people expected he would be fired at anytime and if not for a May 22 win over the Red Sox, salvaging one game in a three-game series, the boss may have axed Torre.

For once, George Steinbrenner exercised some patience and let his manager do his job. The Yankees were the best team in baseball in the second half, going 51-25 and cutting the Red Sox lead in the East to 1-1 2 games on two separate occasions. Helping this was a 5-1 record against the Sox in the final six games of the series.

When the Yankees struggled, everyone wanted Torre's head and now that they're in the playoffs, no one wants to give him credit. People just don't realize how hard it is to deal with the highest of expectations. Not only must Torre win, he must win the World Series every year.

NATION LEAGUE MANAGER OF THE YEAR
CLINT HURDLE, COLORADO ROCKIES

Before the season started, ESPN's Peter Gammons warned everyone that the Rockies were more than capable of doing some damage in the NL West.

Since they're the Rockies, no one really listened. Gammons praised Clint Hurdle for the job he did developing his young players and making them believe they could win in spring training.

It took a while for the team to meld, but after a 10-16 April, the Rockies finished above .500 in every month for the rest of the season, including a 15-9 July and a 20-8 September/October.

Hurdle took also-rans from all around baseball, mixed with some prospects and turned them into a playoff-caliber pitching staff. Jeff Francis continued his progression winning 17 games for the Rockies and future ace Franklin Morales came out of the bullpen to earn three wins down the stretch, one of which came against Colorado's division series opponent Philadelphia.

Some may suggest the Phillies Charlie Manuel for the distinction, but it's difficult to give it to Manuel when his team underachieved for the first for a large portion of the season. And if the Mets didn't suffer the most pathetic collapse in my lifetime, they'd be hosting the Rockies in LDS, not the Phillies.

The players Colorado took off the scrap heap includes more than just pitchers. Players like Yorvit Torrealba, Matsui and Wily Tavares came to Colorado after other NL teams deemed them expendable. All found themselves under Hurdle and factored greatly in the Rockies surge.

Joe Melioni is a Collegian editor. He can be reached at jmelioni@student.umass.edu

ROSENSWAIKE from page 14

Their pitching staff finished 13th in the league in ERA (4.73) and still made the playoffs. Holliday had a terrific season, no question, but Colorado's staff led the NL in ERA after the all-star break. It wasn't just Holliday.

AMERICAN LEAGUE CY YOUNG
C.C. SABATHIA, LHP, CLEVELAND INDIANS

If you're a Red Sox fan, you may think that Josh Beckett deserves this award. You are wrong. Let me explain.

I don't care that Beckett led the league in wins with 20. If Matt Cain can go 7-16 with an ERA of 3.65 that means wins-and-losses is one of the most misleading statistic in all of sports. Plus, Sabathia only had one less win than Beckett.

Here are the stats that I value in this case: Sabathia had the best strikeout-to-walk ratio (5.65) of any left-handed pitcher in AL history. Sabathia had 24 starts this season of at least seven innings, while Beckett only had 15. Beckett pitched 40 fewer innings (201) than CC.

But what I value the most is the fact that Sabathia dominated against two of the premier pitchers in baseball – Johan Santana and Justin Verlander. Sabathia went 3-0 against Santana (2006 Cy Young winner), with a 1.64 ERA in three starts. And he went 2-0 against Verlander, last year's AL Rookie of the Year.

Sabathia went 4-0 with a 2.37 ERA in September, leading the Indians to an AL Central title over a talented Detroit Tigers squad. He led the league in innings pitched, finished second in wins and complete games (4) and finished in the top five in strikeouts (209), ERA (3.21), WHIP (1.134) and winning percentage (.731).

And he started just as well as he finished, beginning the season 12-2 to help the Indians get out in front of the divisional race over the Tigers.

NATIONAL LEAGUE CY YOUNG
JAKE PEAVY, RHP, SAN DIEGO PADRES

This is one of the most obvious choices in history. Speaking of history, since the Cy Young Award was instituted in 1956, 10 pitchers have led their respective league in wins, strikeouts and earned-run average. Of those 10 pitchers who won the "Triple Crown" of pitching, all 10 won the Cy.

Peavy became the 11th pitcher in history to win the Triple Crown this season.

My colleague begins his argument that Brandon Webb should win the award with the following: "Jake Peavy was the NL's best pitcher in 2007, maybe all of baseball."

Even his argument against Peavy (based solely on his sub-par performance in the one-game playoff) begins with an argument FOR Peavy.

Peavy had 19 wins, 240 strikeouts and an ERA of 2.54. No other pitcher in the entire National League had an ERA below 3.00.

Webb had a terrific season, no question, but Peavy has better numbers in almost every single category. Peavy also led the NL in quality starts (28), while Webb had 22. And what is the Cy Young all about? Quality starts. Nobody had more of them than Peavy.

AMERICAN LEAGUE ROOKIE OF THE YEAR
DUSTIN PEDROIA, 2B, BOSTON RED SOX

After a horrid April, I couldn't envision any scenario in which Pedroia would beat out Delmon Young or any other rookie in the AL for Rookie of the Year. But he did.

It's tempting to take Young and his 93 RBIs and 16 outfield assists, but Pedroia simply had the better season. He dominated Young in batting average, runs scored, hits, walks, strikeouts, on-base percentage and a number of other categories.

He played a solid second base and came up with big hits consistently. A number of rookies in the AL (Young, Josh Fields, Alex Gordon, Billy Butler) will have better careers, but none of them had a better season than Pedroia.

NATIONAL LEAGUE ROOKIE OF THE YEAR
RYAN BRAUN, 3B, MILWAUKEE BREWERS

Unfortunately there can only be one winner. Don't look at one game and pick Troy Tulowitzki. Look at the entire season and take the player who had the better season. And that would be Braun.

Braun was called up on May 25, and dominated the NL for the rest of the season. From his first game to his last game, Braun had a .634 slugging percentage which was higher than A-Rod's during that span.

Despite having 158 less at-bats than Tulowitzki, Braun hit more homers (34 to 24), had more extra-base hits (66 to 62) and stole more bases (15 to 7). Braun also easily topped Tulowitzki in batting average (.324 to .291) and slugging percentage (.634 to .479). It's even more impressive when you consider that Tulowitzki plays his home games at Coors Field.

Had Braun had just 10 more plate appearances, he would have qualified for the NL slugging percentage title. He had a better slugging percentage than teammate Prince Fielder, who hit 50 home runs.

AMERICAN LEAGUE MANAGER OF THE YEAR:
MIKE SCIOSCIA, LOS ANGELES ANGELS OF ANAHEIM

The Angels are nowhere close to as talented as both Boston and New York, yet, still finished within two games of the best record on all of baseball.

But what sets him apart as a manager is the fact that his team hit the fourth-fewest amount of home runs in all of baseball and STILL won its division. Eight teams slugged higher than the Angels in the AL. They made the playoffs because their manager pushed all the right buttons for a team that doesn't even compare to New York offensively. No manager did so much with so little.

NATIONAL LEAGUE MANAGER OF THE YEAR
BOB MELVIN, ARIZONA DIAMONDBACKS

The Diamondbacks were OUTSCORED by their opponents this season. They also had the best record in the entire National League. You can't do that without an incredible manager.

They did this all mostly without Randy Johnson (made just 10 starts) and with a lineup consisting of guys that most people don't know. The Phillies scored 180 more runs than Arizona, but the D-Backs finished with the superior record.

Eli Rosenswaike is a Collegian editor. He can be reached at erosensw@student.umass.edu

Coach names new captains for 2007

HOCKEY from page 14

and building its confidence."

Fellow freshman Matt Gedman figures into the race, but projects as the third goaltender. Although, Gedman will also play baseball at UMass and has spent most of this semester playing fall ball.

YOU GET WHAT YOU PUT IN

Nine players from last year's roster are no longer with the program. Five players graduated, including Zech Khan, who had a year of eligibility remaining. Quick signed a professional contract and three others transferred.

Cahoon replaced all nine of them, however, by signing nine recruits in what may be the most talented freshman class in program history.

Aside from the two goaltenders, UMass added six forwards to its rotation and one defenseman.

"There's a lot of dimension to this group. We've got some size and strength and some good puck skills," Cahoon said. "We've got some quick, clever smaller players.

"We think it's going to be a great compliment to the incoming group. And later, that group should be able to take over a leadership role. But it doesn't have to be until later."

The seven forwards provide several different dimensions to the UMass lineup. At 5-foot-7, James Marcou is among the smallest, but also the fastest of the class of 2011. He also drew comparisons to last season's scoring leader Chris Capraro from Meyers Chase Langer-up, 6-foot-2, and Marc Concannon, 6-foot-1 add size to a smallish UMass front line. The top three returning scorers from last season: senior PJ Fenton, junior Joey Quirk and sophomore Will Ortiz…are all under 6-feet.

CAPTAIN KOSTKA

Senior Mike Kostka will serve as team captain this season. Fenton, Quirk and senior David Leadbeater are his assistants.

Kostka and Fenton served as alternants last season along with graduated senior Mark Matheson. Matt Anderson was team captain last season and the two prior to that. Despite losing two team leaders, Kostka feels he learned a lot from the pair that led UMass during its run to the NCAA tournament.

"I really don't think my role has changed that much," Kostka said. "I had the privilege of being an assistant captain last year under Matt Anderson. I learned a lot from him."

With 12 upperclassmen on the roster, the loss of Anderson and Matheson doesn't seriously concern Cahoon. The Pittsburgh Penguins used the 201st pick in the 2007 NHL Entry Draft on sophomore defenseman Justin Braun. The Penguins had acquired his rights to the San Jose Sharks. Senior forward Matt Burns played for Team USA in the 2007 World Junior Ice Hockey Championships. The Minutemen are just outside of both the USA Today/USA Hockey poll and the USCHO.COM poll. UMass received 45 votes in the USCHO poll and eight in USA Today poll.

Joe Melioni can be reached at jmelioni@student.umass.edu

Serving as one of three assistant captains for the Minutemen this year, junior forward Cory Quirk scored 13 goals last season.

Live It Up...Go Bowling!
UMASS College Specials...
SPARE TIME
EVERY THURSDAY
Unlimited Bowling – Only $12
9pm-Close
50% OFF Open Bowling
Every Monday & Tuesday
9pm-Close
also featuring...Grandstands Bar
Live Bands – Every Sat night
Spare Time - Northampton
(formerly Northampton Bowl)
525 Pleasant St 584-4830

Ellio's wants you to Get It here!
-SATURDAY 10/6-
Men's Baseball vs. Brown – noon
-SUNDAY 10/7-
Men's Ice Hockey Exhibition Game 5:30 p.m.
Free Ellio's Thursday 10/11
@ The Harp 10:30 p.m.-12:30 a.m.
Ellio's
ADVERTORIAL GET IT.

LA PIAZZA PIZZA
GRAND OPENING
FAST FREE DELIVERY OR PICK-UP
CALL (413)253-6444
PIZZA CALZONES SUBS
SALADS WINGS ENTREES
AND MORE
30 BOLTWOOD WALK
AMHERST, MA
HOURS OF OPERATION
SUN. 4 PM - 1 AM
MON - THU : 4 PM - 2 AM
FRI - SAT : 4 PM - 3 AM
Check Our Menu On Line
WWW.LAPIAZZARISTORANTE.US
Click on our "TO GO MENU"
Delivery drivers wanted!
Call after 4 PM, everyday

NON-COLLEGE ENTERTAINMENT CONCERT PRESENTS

ALO
TUE. OCT. 9 • 7:00 PM DOORS 5:30 PM
Iron Horse Music Hall 20 CENTER ST NORTHAMPTON, MA

MAN MAN
PLUS WHO SHOT HOLLYWOOD
FRI. OCT. 5 • 8:30 PM DOORS 7:30 PM/CLUBROOM

THE NATIONAL plus Doveman
WED. OCT. 10 • 8:30 PM DOORS 7:30 PM/BALLROOM

VOXTROT
plus 1990s, The Little Ones
FRI. OCT. 12 • 8:30 PM DOORS 7:30 PM/CLUBROOM

Pearl Street Nightclub 10 PEARL ST. NORTHAMPTON, MA

TO PURCHASE TICKETS OR FOR MORE INFO VISIT OUR WEBSITE OR CALL: WWW.IHEG.COM
413-586-8686

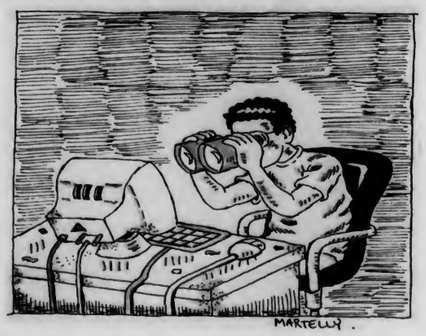
Free Delivery to UMass Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

	3				4		6	1
5	2	7					3	4
		4
			6	7
2			1		3			5
				8	2
						6
7	9					5	2	8
6	4		2			7

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Swimming is not a sport. Swimming is a way to keep from drowning. That's just common sense!"

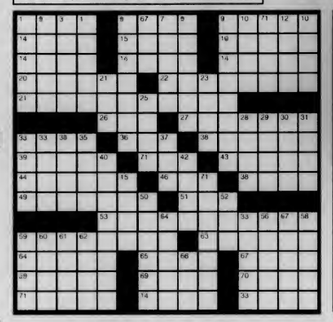
-George Carlin



ECOLOGY By Jen Fill

EXAMINATIONS By Tyren Barker

LABRAT By Richard Martelly



ACROSS
1 Health resorts
5 Sign of healing
9 Made do
14 Play's actors
15 Bye-bye!
16 One Astaire
17 Beatles' meter maid
18 Sidewalk stand drinks
19 Poetic piece
20 Joiner
22 Lent a hand
24 State of mourning
26 Afternoon social
27 Green crops cut for livestock feed
32 MDs
38 Mach+ jet
38 Porter
39 ___ committee
41 Magazine VIPs
43 Contemptuous expression
44 Hole out
46 Observed
48 Still well behind the ...
49 Monotone utterer
51 Air-travel watchdog grp.
53 Marine beasts
59 Attribute to
63 Expose
64 Intestine part
65 Starship hit
67 "Dheallo" role
68 Drive, as from bed
69 Zesi
70 50/50 test choice
71 Dueling swords
72 Dispatched
73 Cobra's cousins

DOWN
1 Use Brillo
2 "Common Sense" author
3 Up and about
4 Part of FSU
5 Goes hungry
6 Lout
7 Mr. T's outfit
8 Deep voices
9 Carries results
10 Keats works
11 Saucy and spirited
12 Different
13 Property record
21 Chow down
23 Elmo
25 Let up
28 Daisy Planet reporter
29 Location
30 Will of "The Waltons"
31 Flubs it
32 "Persistence of Memory" painter
33 Zeus' to Lars
34 Newsman Huntley
35 Flight school final
37 49-ers' 6-pointers
40 Says yes (to)
42 Out of danger
45 Garden pest
47 Sanction
50 Pay increases
52 Simian
54 Overused
55 Madonna role
56 Gets closer
57 Prepare to advance on a fly
58 Blackthorns
59 Farm division
60 Henhouse
61 Sleuth's lead
62 Gypsy ___ Lee
66 Managed

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

SEVEN DOWN: MR. T'S OUTFIT

Submit your comics!
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Not all salads require vegetables, thus salad is not inherently bad.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Think of the poor psycho who is responsible for inventing the Hokey Pokey.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
If Megaman and Nelson Mandella met they would really hit it off and eat pizza.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Ride your bike through campus really fast, screaming "My brakes are broken!"

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
It seems that if you sold your soul to the devil, you would not get much in return.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Create a habitat for birds to nest in by not brushing your hair before morning classes.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You work at such an efficient rate that you only require a four-day work week.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Like an elephant at a trashy traveling carnival in Utah, you aren't where you belong.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
There is a time and a place for everything. Sadly, it seems both of yours have passed.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Despite guacamole's odd name and radioactive color, it tastes like magic.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
In the lab of life, you can either be the scientist or you can be the experiment.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Is it safe that wild Alaskan seafood has come to Western MA to stay for a week?

Chicago Pizzaria
Free Delivery!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS - WRAPS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY SIZE PIZZA NOW AVAILABLE!
Now Hiring
Counter/Cashiers and Drivers
HOURS
Sun-Wed 3pm-2am
Thurs-Sat 3pm-3am
Order For DELIVERY or PICK UP
(413) 549-6073
150 Fearing Street
Next to Patterson Dorm
Amherst, MA 01002

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ACTIVITIES
Montreal weekend from $99.00. Complete, motel, transportation and more. Montreal express.net 781-979-9001. Lowest Prices on campus.

AUTO FOR SALE
Volvo GLE Sedan 1988 106000. $2100 5% Umass Discount. Tom: 256-6401.

EMPLOYMENT
Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext. 162

Drivers wanted. Must be able to work 20 to 30hrs a week. Nights and weekends. Apply at DP Dough, downtown Amherst.

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

INSTRUCTION
University Bartending Classes start soon. 1-800-U-CAN-MIX. www.universitybartending.com. Sign up now.

ROOM FOR RENT
Large furnished room in downtown Amherst for female grad student/professional. Includes utilities and WiFi. Great family! $600/month. Available immediately. Call Alex: 413-896-7641.

SALONS AND SPAS
HOLISTIC SALON AND SPA. Awesome upscale 7 point haircuts for male and female. www.shearblissamherst.com 413-253-2322

SERVICES
Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906,1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

Concerned About Your Eating? Do you eat too little? Eat too much? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic: 577-5101.

TAPESTRY HEALTH, providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling & rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St., Amherst www.tapestryhealth.org

TRAVEL
#1 Spring Break Website! 4 & 7 night trips. Low prices guaranteed. Group discounts for 8+. Book 20 people, get 3 free trips! Campus reps needed. www.StudentCity.com or 800-293-1445.

Spring Break 2008 Sell Trips, Earn Cash & Go Free. Call for group discounts. Best Deals Guaranteed! Info/Reservations. 800-648-4849/ www.ststravel.com.

WANTED
EGG DONORS WANTED. Help make a couple's dream of becoming parents come true by becoming an egg donor. Very generous compensation and expenses paid. Must be a non-smoking female between the ages of 21 and 32. For more information, please visit our website at www.robertnicholsesq.com or contact Julie at 781-551-0600

UMass triumphs on water

CREW from page 14

are older and practice right out on the Boston waters," Dietz said. "Especially with our young group here."

The UM open eight boat won the 3 1/4 mile course with a time of 22:52. It defeated two boats from the Riverside Boat Club.

Dietz was impressed by his team's overall performance.

"They were so technical with each stroke, which I didn't expect because it was not a major focus at practice," he said. "There was a lot of power per stroke rather than many strokes with much power. The captain's practices and off-water workouts must have caused this."

"The whole team stepped it up and our hard work showed," Marsan added. "All the work we put in really motivated us this weekend."

The workouts paid off when the UMass quad beat out the Merrimack River Rowing Club by over 30 seconds. The Minutewomen clocked in at 24:20 while the Merrimack quad finished at 24:54.

Freshman Elizabeth Euler took first place finished in the lightweight single after beating out a boat from the Riverside Club with a time of 27:42.

The Maroon and White lightweight four lost by 20 seconds to Community Rowing crossing the finish line at 24:54 with Community Rowing crossing at 24:24.

Marsan finished second in the open single by an eight second deficit to a boat from the Riverside Club. She came in with a time of 27:26 to Riverside's 27:18.

The lightweight eight also placed second for the Minutewomen coming in behind Community Rowing. Community Rowing crossed at 22:40 while UMass came in at 25:02.

UMass also finished ninth in the club eight and the open four. Simmons took the club eight, while M.I.T. claimed the open four.

This was a great way to start off the season agreed the coach and captain and when asked about this upcoming weekends meet both agreed it would be a challenge.

Although Dietz acknowledges that the win was a good way to start off the season, he knows that the team's next meet on Saturday. The Maroon and White travel to Derby, Conn., for the Head of the Housatonic.

"It's going to be much tougher," Dietz said. "Yale won the national championship last season and they're hosting the tournament. We should see some A-10 teams while we're out there like URI or Fordham so we definitely have a challenge ahead of us."

Marsan welcomes this weekend's challenge.

"I think we'll do well," she said. "We've trained a lot harder this week, especially in the mornings, and we feel really prepared."

Coley Michalik can be reached at emichalik@student.umass.edu

Offense takes advantage of multiple passing threats

FOOTBALL from page 14

ing attack this season, as the Minutemen average 156.4 yards rushing per game – compared to the 90.8 yard average of the opposition.

Lawrence (581 yards, 5.7 yards per carry) and Nelson (263 yards, 6.0 yards per carry) have helped the Minutemen accrue a 4.5 yards average per rush attempt – a figure that dwarfs the opposition's 2.5 yard average.

UMass has 43 rushing first downs this season, while opponents have just 32 (an average of 6.4 per game).

HEADS OR TAILS?

The Minutemen have an uncanny ability to win coin tosses – they've won all five this season – and it's something that Brown and his team takes advantage of.

Rather than choosing to receive the opening kickoff, like most teams do, Brown chooses to defer the decision to the opposition. The coach opts to choose which direction the teams will play before alternating between quarters.

"Well there's no question why I did it [against Maine], there was a very strong wind, so if we choose to defer, they have to take the ball and we get the wind," Brown said during the week leading up the Boston College matchup.

"And I have a lot of confidence that we will go out there, stop them and get the ball to the offense with good field position," he added. "So for a lot of our games, that's held up being true."

'SPREAD' OFFENSE

The Minutemen have scored 20 touchdowns this season. And those scores have come from a variety of people.

Coen has thrown 11 touchdown passes this season to eight different receivers. Only J.J. Moore, Rasheed Rancher and Jeremy Horne have caught two touchdowns. Two fullbacks (Chris Zardas and Evans), one tight end (Ian Jorgensen) and two receivers (Michael Omar and Joe Sanford) are the others who have been the recipients of a Coen touchdown pass.

Of the other nine UMass touchdowns, seven have come on the ground (Lawrence 5 and Omar and Evans 1), one has come on defense (Sean Smalls interception return) and one on special teams (J.J. Moore punt return).

Following the loss to Boston College, the Minutemen fell two spots in The Sports Network Poll, dropping to No. 4. The third-largest crowd (44,111) in UMass football history watched the Eagles defeat the Minutemen. The previous biggest crowds were road games against Kansas State in 2003 and North Carolina State in 2002. UMass committed 17 penalties for 114 yards against the Eagles, bringing its season total to 62 penalties for 516 yards in five games. Despite a 4-1 record, UMass opponents have gained 18 more first downs than the Minutemen (104-86). 19 of the 104 opponent first downs were gained on a UM penalty.

Eli Rosenwaike can be reached at erosenwaike@student.umass.edu

One of eight different receivers to catch a touchdown pass this season, senior J.J. Moore also returned a punt for a score earlier in 2007.

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN SPORTS.BLOGSPOT.COM

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL - W. SPFLD
Special Student Rate
Local-National Placement
Includes Certification
1-800-357-3210
BostonBarteoder.com

Service provided by AT&T Mobility ©2007 AT&T Knowledge Ventures. All rights reserved. AT&T and the AT&T logo are trademarks of AT&T Knowledge Ventures and/or AT&T affiliated companies.

OCT 4 2007

OCT

5

2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 4, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Training pays off for UMass

BY COLEY MICHALIK
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The Massachusetts women's crew team won four events at its opening meet of the fall season, the Textile River Regatta, behind a strong performance from the captains in the cold Lowell waters.

"We won so easy, it was definitely a bonus," UMass coach Jim Dietz said of last weekend's meet.

The team took first in the novice eight, open eight, quad and the lightweight single. With such a young squad – 18 freshmen, 14 sophomores, 10 juniors and nine seniors – Dietz credited their off-season workouts for their early success.

They really took the initiative to do more off-water training along with some 6 a.m. stadium runs," he said.

Senior captain Sarah Marsan also acknowledged the training as a large part of the team's overall victory.

"We've been holding a lot more captain's practices along with the early morning team workouts," she said. "We have had to get the younger members to buy into the team concept and I believe these workouts have helped with that as well."

The team's "A" boat started off by taking the novice eight over Simmons and Worcester Polytechnic with a time of 24:05.

The rest of the races involved club crew competition. Club crew teams usually include older members with more experience and practice time in these waters.

"To beat out the club teams was a nice feeling since they

See CREW on page 13

Delayed decision

Goalies compete for time in net as replacement for Quick

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The departure of goaltender Jon Quick after the 2006-07 season created a void in the lineup of the Massachusetts hockey team. Quick's performance in the second half of the season propelled the Minutemen to a Hockey East semifinal appearance and a birth in the NCAA Tournament for the first time in program history.

UMass Hockey

UMass coach Don Cahoon isn't worried; however, as sophomore Dan Meyers and freshman Paul Dainton have impressed the eighth-year head coach. A decision on the starter probably won't come soon, since neither has played significant time at the Division I level.

Meyers started the first game of the season against Sacred Heart last year and saw action in four other contests. He served as a good backup to the All-American Quick, posting a 2-1 record with a 2.97 goals-against average and didn't waste the opportunity to learn while on the bench.

"I know the speed of the game. I understand that players shoot to score at this level," Meyers said. "Paul and I come from junior hockey where the first line is all [D-I caliber players] and the rest of the team is kind of up and down. At this level, everyone can shoot and everyone can score, so you've got to be ready. And it's just a lot of concentration and I think I'm ready for that this year."

Cahoon agrees that Meyers' experience provides an inherent advantage, but loves what he's seen of Dainton in the preseason.

"Paul's quicker and will be able to get to a lot of pucks that other people might not get to," he said. "Right now it's just a matter of honing his skills

See HOCKEY on page 11

A week for recovery

MELISSA FREEDMAN/COLLEGIAN

Members of the UMass offense look on as trainers tend to redshirt junior quarterback Liam Coen in Saturday's loss at Boston College. Coen originally hurt his left knee against Towson in Week 3, but the quarterback hopes to be back on the field against Villanova next weekend.

Bye week a chance for Coen and Co. to heal from injuries

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It was a tumultuous weekend for the Massachusetts football team. And the 24-14 loss to Boston College on Saturday is only partly responsible.

Star UMass quarterback Liam Coen re-injured his left knee – despite wearing protective knee brace – early in the fourth quarter against the Eagles. Coen was hit on a first down play, while completing a 5-yard pass to fullback Breyone Lyans. The play ended up being called back because of a holding penalty. Coen stayed on the ground for a few minutes before limping off the field.

Coen originally injured his left knee against Towson, but only missed one series. Backup Scott Woodward replaced him in both games and looked solid throwing the ball. The Minutemen are off this weekend for their bye week and UMass coach Don Brown thinks that his signal-caller will be ready for the following week against Villanova.

UMass Football

"I would anticipate that he will be available to us next week," said Brown during the weekly teleconference. "He injured it initially against Towson. He played against Maine. They say he is not set back to that point.

"So that is a positive that we have the bye week," he added. "So there is no rush on our end. We just want to make sure we get it quieted down."

The Minutemen received more bad news when freshman Johnny Evans was stabbed in the buttocks early Sunday morning on campus.

The freshman linebacker does not travel with the team, and did not make the trip to Chestnut Hill.

A RUNNING START

UMass (4-1, 2-0 Colonial Athletic Conference) possesses one of the elite offenses in the Football Championship Subdivision, with a great combination of passing (Coen) and running with Matt Lawrence and Tony Nelson.

The Minutemen have averaged a superb 32.6 points per contest, outscoring their opponents 163-91 after five games.

But where UMass has really excelled is on the ground. Lawrence has led the rush-

See FOOTBALL on page 13

As playoffs begin, staffers hand out hardware

When Major League Baseball finalizes its schedule for an upcoming season, it has what happened in the last week of the 2007 campaign in mind – every game mattered. Various cellar dwellers like the Florida Marlins and Baltimore Orioles affected different races making their otherwise irrelevant seasons somewhat memorable.

Joe Meloni

Before the Mets forgot how to play baseball, there stood a chance for the most complicated playoff ever. It basically would've been a mini round-robin tournament to decide the National League East and Wildcard champion. But thanks to Tom Glavine, we not only got a playoff, but a monumental collapse that those in Queens will never live down.

But it's all over now; the Yankees earned that final spot and the playoffs started last night.

And while all the important things are up in the air, namely the World Series, the play of a few individuals around baseball already decided some things.

AMERICAN LEAGUE MVP
ALEX RODRIGUEZ, 3B, NEW YORK YANKEES

I feel like I don't really need to explain myself with this choice. Not only did Rodriguez put together one of the best seasons in baseball history, he did it while enduring more media scrutiny than any player this side of a BALCO investigation.

His 12 home runs and 31 RBIs in April gave way to a small slump in May. Shortly after that Rodriguez took his frustrations out on the pitching staffs of the American League. He led the AL in nearly every major offensive category, including home runs (54), RBIs (156), runs (143), slugging percentage (.645) and total bases (376). He also played a great third base for the Yanks and led a charge from eight games below .500 and 14-1/2 games out of first place to the AL Wildcard.

The slugger also consistently came through in key situations for the first time in his career. His walk-off grand slam off Orioles' closer Chris Ray on April 7 foreshadowed the rest of the season. That was April, however, and hitting well April typically means nothing. But A-Rod wasn't done. His lined shot into the right-field bullpen at Fenway Park off Red Sox closer Jonathan Papelbon on June 3 let the baseball world know that the Yankees weren't dead just yet.

NATIONAL LEAGUE MVP
MATT HOLLIDAY, LF, COLORADO ROCKIES

If you didn't know who Matt Holliday was before Monday night, I sincerely hope you do now. The definition of this award is often misconstrued by many who want to hand it to the flashiest player or the guy with the best numbers. But no one player in the NL, may be all of baseball, was as valuable to his team as Holliday was the Rockies.

This team had no business making the playoffs. Its players have no experience and if you want an idea of how average its pitching staff is, manager Clint Hurdle had no choice, but to start Josh Fogg in that one-game playoff.

Now that the 2007 Major League Baseball regular season has ended – following the incredible one-game playoff between Colorado and San Diego – one month of exciting, October playoff baseball remains.

Eli Rosenswaike

But before we all watch A-Rod choke (just kidding, I like A-Rod) in another postseason series, let's take a look back at the regular season and hand out the hardware.

Every year the voters inevitably screw up at least a few of the awards. But if they just listen to me, all will be right in the world.

Many baseball fans can't agree on much, but most can appreciate the season third baseman Alex Rodriguez is having in the Bronx.

Holliday led the senior circuit in batting average (.340), hits (216), total bases (386), doubles (50) and RBIs (137). Naturally, people question the numbers of anyone who plays 81 – or 82 – games in Coors Field. But Holliday hit .301 in 76 road games with 11 homers and 22 doubles.

Perhaps you're not convinced yet. In September the Rockies had two choices, make up six games in the standings or go home at the end of it. Holliday didn't want to go home, so he hit .365 with 12 home runs and 32 RBIs in the Rockies' final 27 games.

Oh yeah, he drove in the game-tying run and scored the game-winning run in the Rockies' win.

AMERICAN LEAGUE CY YOUNG
C.C. SABATHIA, LHP, CLEVELAND INDIANS

Pitchers that allow 238 hits in a season don't typically come up in conversations for postseason awards, unless, of course, they throw 241 innings and allow an absurdly low 37 walks.

Sabathia was brilliant in 2007. His 5.65 strikeout-to-walk ratio was the best of any lefty in American League history. And while his 209 strikeouts ranked fifth in the AL, the remarkable ratio had more to do with his point, they were 8.5 games back in the AL Wild Card race. Rodriguez dominated from start to finish (with a brief hiccup in May) to lead the Bronx Bombers to the Wild Card – a full six games ahead of that very same Seattle Mariners team that they once trailed.

Yes, the Yankees have an incredible lineup even without Rodriguez. But it was A-Rod who led this team all year long and helped them get through stretches in which their pitching staff couldn't get anyone out.

The numbers speak loudly. .314 AVG, 54 HR, 156 RBI, 143 R, 24 SB, .645 SLG.% He paced the American League in home runs, RBIs, runs scored and slugging. But what speaks even louder – in regards to his MVP campaign – is a game back on June 3.

Against arguably the best closer on the planet, A-Rod faced a bottom of the opposite field at Fenway Park off of Jonathan Papelbon. The solo home run with two outs in the ninth inning broke a 5-5 tie and gave the Yankees the victory.

Ordonez led the league in hitting with a .363 average and finished second in the league with 139 RBIs. But he will be watching the playoffs from home, while Rodriguez brings his big bat to the playoffs.

NATIONAL LEAGUE MVP
JIMMY ROLLINS, SS, PHILADELPHIA PHILLIES

Matt Holliday is the talk of the National League right now because of his performance in the one-game playoff. That's all well and good, but that doesn't make him the MVP.

That honor belongs to Rollins.

His MVP season began before the season even started, as he proclaimed that the Phillies were the team to beat – not the New York Mets – in the NL East. Most everyone thought he was crazy. Only he was right.

The collapse of the Mets is not news right now. But for the Phillies to capitalize on New York's struggles down the stretch, they HAD to go 16-6 in the final 22 games of the season. And they did.

You can thank Rollins for that. Without him they wouldn't have even had a prayer to be within striking distance of the Mets.

Rollins was a key factor in the comeback, hitting .301 during that span, driving in 15 runs. He had 11 extra-base hits in that stretch, stole 13 bases and scored 18 runs.

The Phillies' shortstop put up monster numbers for the season: .296 AVG, 30 HR, 94 RBI, 139 R and 41 SB. Not bad for a leadoff hitter.

He became just the fourth player in baseball history to record over 20 doubles, triples, home runs and stolen bases in one season. His 139 runs scored and 88 extra-base hits set modern-day records for most by an NL shortstop. He started all 162 games for Philadelphia, which only four shortstops in the NL have ever done.

He plays the most important position on the field, all while batting leadoff and being the unquestioned team leader for a Phillies team that nobody thought would beat the Mets. But they did, and they have Rollins to thank.

See MELONI on page 11

See ROSENSWAIKE on page 11

MINUTEWOMEN LOOK TO DOWN FLYERS | PAGE 8

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY [illegible]

PARTLY CLOUDY : HI: 88 LO: 59 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, OCTOBER 5, 2007

Conservative leader speaks at UM

Phyllis Schlafly spoke about the differing theories of conversatism and feminism on Wednesday evening, which elicited mixed reactions from the audience members.

BY CAITLIN QUINN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Conservative movement leader and author, Phyllis Schlafly, who spoke about the incompatible ideologies of conservatism and feminism at the University of Massachusetts on Wednesday night.

"I know that women in other countries are very much treated as oppressed, but in the United States, it's very different. Women have always been well treated," said Schlafly during her lecture about the "great debate."

Schlafly is the founder of the national volunteer organization Eagle Forum, the author of 20 books, and was named the 1992 Illinois "Mother of the Year."

"I am so excited to know that there are so many students interested in learning about feminism," Schlafly began. "We live in an age of diversity, and I think it is very tolerant of you to listen to a view of feminism which is probably quite different from what you get in your women's studies courses."

Schlafly said feminists have been "obsessed" with a claim of unfair treatment throughout history.

She supported this by pointing out that many men perform riskier jobs, like being on the front lines in the military. She said women are generally living longer and more and more are enrolling in college. Thus, according to Schlafly, American society does not produce oppression against women.

She used examples of oppressed women in other countries to support her argument.

Schlafly also used examples from her own life to show that women can do "whatever we want to."

"Conservatism says make your own life, solve your own problems," she said.

She discussed how she ran for Congress and faced no discrimination and sold three million copies of her self-published book.

Schlafly addressed her successful opposition to the Equal Rights Amendment, by stating she feels it "was a big fraud," because "the constitution doesn't talk about men and women." She later called the constitution a "beautiful, sex-neutral document."

"The ERA was a fraud because in the 10 years they were not able to show one benefit to women. They were not able to show anything it would give women that we don't have now," she said.

She added that the ERA would have the negative effect of making women eligible for the military draft.

One of Schlafly's personal ideas is that feminists ask more than they deserve of the government and therefore of taxpayers. She criticized affirmative action, saying it is not right to give women today "payback for women who lived generations ago."

She also said it's unfair to ask the government for daycare because childcare is a personal responsibility.

"Feminists pose the government as a solution to all their problems," she stated, listing abortions, legal services for divorce, and going "to the sexual harassment Gestapo" as services that

See SCHLAFLY on page 2

Linguist discusses profane language

BY SARAH BELANGER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Linguist Geoff Nunberg had an amusing lesson to teach on the word "ahole" to University of Massachusetts students yesterday.

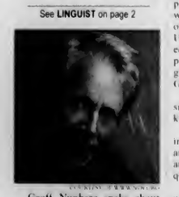
Nunberg, a professor at the University of California at Berkeley, author of "Talking Right" and regular language commentator on the National Public Radio (NPR) program "Fresh Air," was welcomed by the linguistics department in their sixth annual lecture series.

In his talk, titled, "What Words Can Teach," Nunberg took time to discuss a set of vulgar terms that came into play about 50 years ago.

"Linguists are concerned with language not as a social phenomenon but as a psychological phenomenon. Language provides insight into the mind and thought," said Nunberg.

Nunberg, concerned with how language has shaped thought, and the cultural implications of words, discussed the close relationship between words and concepts.

"The emergence of a word signals the emergence of an associated concept," he said.



Nunberg gave examples of concepts to which we previously had no lexical form of expression for. These include words such as: "plot twist," which emerged in 1829, and "ethnic," appearing the 1960s.

"New words indicate changes in American life and culture. Socially having a word for something signaled an important transformation. You have the concept, and then you come up with a word for it," he said.

To demonstrate his point, Nunberg educated the audience on the emergence of "asshole." He discussed the word from its anatomical position, to its position in mainstream American culture.

The vulgar diction has been around

See LINGUIST on page 2

Geoff Nunberg spoke about the etymology of profane speech yesterday.

Class of 1956 donates new crossing

BY ANDY SMITH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Anyone who has walked the paths located between the W.E.B. DuBois library and the campus pond has noticed the newest gift to the University of Massachusetts campus.

In honor of its 50-year reunion, the class of 1956 donated "Minuteman Crossing," the stone garden that will soon surround the Minuteman statue that faces the campus pond.

Robert Donald, a member of the gift and reunion committee of the Class of 1956, is very happy with how the project has turned out.

"It's really a very central focal spot where people walk," said Donald. "It's also close to the old campus, which the Class of 1956 remembers. They remember the Old Chapel, South College, Memorial Hall and campus pond."

The crossing is located on the large section of lawn between the Fine Arts Center, the library, and the campus pond.

Construction on the project has taken roughly two months. The project was originally supposed to be completed by the end of this week, but the fencing is scheduled to be removed October 10, according to the contractors.

The statue itself was presented five years ago as a gift from the class of 1950, in honor of their 50-year reunion celebration.

"Minuteman Plaza," as the finished project will be called, is a large circle, with two smaller circles protruding out the side closest to the library. Both smaller circles will be elevated from the larger one, but both will be easily accessible.

One circle will consist of small steps leading to the Minuteman statue, while the other will be a spiral stone pathway also leading to the statue. The entire plaza is made of Goshen stone, a dense, hard stone that can be broken into flat pieces for construction – valued at $100 per ton.

See MINUTEMAN on page 2

The Minuteman statue's new groundwork, "Minuteman Crossing," is a gift from the class of 1956 and is set to be open for UMass pedestrians on October 10.

Biology class to help kick the habit

Cancer and AIDS professor creates new support group

BY S.P. SULLIVAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

University of Massachusetts students looking to quit smoking could get course credit in the process.

Biology of Cancer and AIDS, a biology course for non-majors, now features a section on smoking cessation.

The smoking cessation lectures were made a permanent component of the course syllabus after instructor Wilmore Webley, an assistant professor in the UMass microbiology department, collected data from a survey given to students in spring 2007.

As of this fall, Webley is coupling his efforts in the classroom with a greater outreach program on campus. With the help of University Health Services health educator Tom Schiff, Webley has put together a smoking cessation group, the Quit Smoking Support Group.

"I don't smoke, never smoked, but I've helped people kick bad habits," Webley said.

The group will meet Thursdays in Webley's office in Morrill IV, and aims to facilitate networking amongst students interesting in quitting smoking.

Webley's group will work with the Student Health Advisory Board, which Schiff serves on, to help smokers set timetables, address the best methods for them specifically, and establish quit dates.

The goal of the group aims to provide a "very comfortable, non-judgmental environment."

"They're the victims; they're the victims of the system, they're the victims of the tobacco industry, and they're the victims of nicotine addiction," Webley said.

The survey, part of an assignment in the course, polled students on their smoking habits before and after participation in the class.

Of the 47 smokers who responded, 27 said they quit and eight were in the process of quitting. Since the results were published, two more students went to Webley and told him they also kicked the habit.

Even to the instructor and teaching assistants, the results were surprising.

"I expected, in all honesty, to have two or three quit," said Webley.

When the data was collected and presented to the approximately 470-person lecture, Webley recalled, the class cheered at the "overwhelming" response to the class assignment.

"Most of the students didn't understand the detrimental impacts of cigarette smoking and had never seen it presented as a whole," said Webley.

He felt that although society exposed students to a wealth of information on smoking risks, traditional methods of awareness were "lacking something very vital, and not going as deep as you need to go, but only providing peripheral knowledge."

The lectures in Webley's class provided a comprehensive collection of data ranging from the history of tobacco use to the questionable marketing methods of the tobacco industry in the 1970s.

Webley noted that even the students who were not smokers took something out of the class.

"Many students whose friends or relatives smoke made their best attempts at bringing the message home to them.

"I would explain what I was learning to my boyfriend at the time, because I had always been telling him to quit," said sophomore Vanessa Litoff, who took the class last fall. "After each class I would find something I hadn't known about the effects of cigarettes and send them to him. I think my persistence and some of the things I found out definitely decreased his smoking habits."

According to students, the course brought to light detrimental effects of casual smoking.

The increased risk of oral cancer from smoking while under the influence of alcohol was a subject that stuck in some students' minds.

"I'm not a smoker, but after taking the class I am more likely to avoid the casual cigarette and to warn my friends to do the same," said sophomore Stephanie Isaacs.

Webley decided to make smoking cessation a permanent part of the course after the results of the survey, especially how the course specifically designed for non-scientists to generally more than half freshman.

"These young people are extremely smart and we were able to make their understand that they're making a coming [not] later in life and how in the future that habit might effect that," said Webley.

Webley hopes that Quit Smoking Support Group, which makes available resources and materials from the American Lung Association and the National Cancer Institute, will be able to provide students who have been affected by the Biology of Cancer and AIDS [illegible] quit smoking.

The Quit Smoking Support Group is open to students [illegible] and according to Webley, will [illegible] approached to [illegible] interested in helping [illegible] others in the process.

Webley hopes to get many student [illegible] establish quit dates [illegible] with this year's [illegible] American Smokeout, which falls on the third Thursday of November.

"It's hard to just wake up and change your life, you need support to do it," said Webley. "And if you don't plan for quitting, it's really tough to quit."

A UMass study recorded [illegible] of students smokes edu

Part of the Biology of Cancer and AIDS course by UMass aims to encourage students to quit smoking.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVIII
Issue 23

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Nicholas Belanger
Managing Editor Katie Huston
Business Manager Dan Exter
Production Manager Chris Martin
Night Supervisor Meghan Murphy
Advertising Manager Alex Bender
Advertising Production Katherine Shea
Arts & Living Editor Tim McCall
Copy Editor Adam Scagon
Editorial Editor Sean Sullivan
News Editor Derrick Perkins
Sports Editor Jeremy Rice
Asst. Business Manager Eric Szymczak
Assistant Advertising Marisol Whooten
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Stephanie McPherson
Asst. Arts & Living Ryan McAskill
Asst. Arts & Living Teresa Reith
Asst. Editorial James Mathews
Asst. Editorial Melissa Garber
Assistant News Kate Olesin
Assistant News Will McGuinness
Assistant News Halle Swabsin
Assistant Sports Michael King
Assistant Sports Joe Meleni
Assistant Sports Elf Rosenwinkle
Web Editor James Hale
Photo Editor Evan Trinh

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar year. The Collegian is independently owned, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper belongs to Allot Lot, 30 Hair the Colonel Square, in 1903, the Weekly Collegian, in 1914 and the Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been published since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jeremy Rice

COPY EDITOR
Amber Vaillancourt

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1809 and snap a photo, then send it to news@dailycollegian.com

Schlafly lectures on feminist ideas

SCHLAFLY from page 1

oversteep the boundaries of what the government should provide.

"Feminists claim they want a completely gender-neutral society. That is a lie. They want the government to give them something to make up for what they think they don't have," she said.

She explained the importance of motherhood in her life, which she accomplished by fulfilling her career at a later time.

"I do not think being a feminist has really got anything to do with whether you choose a career or choose to be a homemaker," she said.

Schlafly feels the defining feature of the feminist movement is the feeling women are victims of a patriarchal society.

"I think it is wrong of them to tell young women that your real self-fulfillment is solely in the labor force," she said.

Schlafly doesn't want the government to begin "engaging in wage cutting in order to tell that the job of a woman, say, as a secretary in a nice, air conditioned office is the same as a prison guard who faces risks every day on the job."

Schlafly concluded her speech by advising young women "not to catch the disease of feminism because it is contagious," and reminding them, "You have they opportunity and good fortune to be an American woman."

Some students walked away with mixed reactions.

"I don't know why she thinks that feminism hurts women, so I want to hear what she has to say," said Amherst College student Ellie Zi.

Among the students and audience members gathered outside before the doors opened were the UMass Democrats handing out articles that included flyers for the Everywomen's center.

Several students wore T-shirts adorned with a women's rights symbol, and a group of students from Hampshire College wore white in support of women's rights.

"I couldn't just let this event come and go," said UMass freshman Liz Wahlman. "We already have the right to stay in the home, but many of us don't want to. We want to make ourselves useful in society."

Others were excited to hear what Schlafly had to say.

"I'm a conservative young student and she is a historical figure who deserves to be heard," said Adam Fuchs, a recent graduate of Franklin Pierce University.

Caitlin Quinn can be reached at cquinn@student.umass.edu

Courtesy Derrick Perkins/Collegian

Phyllis Schlafly, who spoke in Bowker auditorium on Wednesday, urged UMass women to make their own choices when deciding whether to pursue a career and to not "catch the disease of feminism."

Vulgarity addressed in linguist's speech

LINGUIST from page 1

for over 500 years, but its first recorded citation as a personal description can be attributed to Norman Mailer's 1948 book "The Naked and the Dead."

It was during the World War II era that the tongues of the working class got tied up in four-letter word speech.

"During war time it became precious as a way for millions of conscripts to note their anger and frustration," he said.

By the 1970s the notion of the word had become a part of American life.

"Everyone uses it, either inward or outward, and most of us have a clear sense of what it is and what it is not," he said.

According to Nunberg, the word is a new concept in that it is unconnected to social class, unlike its antecedents, words such as "scout," "villain" and "wretch," which all depicted ungentlemanly, and therefore, lower-class behavior.

Nunberg described the figure in media culture.

"In slasher films, it's always the guy that gets eaten first, and anyone that Tom Cruise plays always starts out as one," he said.

Today, according to Nunberg, people use the word in relation to the concept.

"We understand what makes someone an asshole and what doesn't. Cheating on your girlfriend, yes, cheating on your taxes, no ... If I ever finish the book I'm writing, I think I'll name it 'Mind Your Business, Asshole.'"

Sarah Belanger can be reached at sbelange@student.umass.edu

President's office bestows grants to UMass researchers

By Sruthi Valluri
Collegian Staff

A total of $1.4 million was awarded to research initiatives across the University campuses last week, marking the fourth year that the University President's office awarded grants to faculty researchers.

It is part of a larger plan to enrich the University's research enterprise, one that places the University as one of the top three research institutions in Massachusetts.

"As a major public research University, our research portfolio won't grow by accident – we need to promote excellence," said President Jack M. Wilson.

The grant pool was divided into two categories: Science and Technology Fund, which is in its fourth year, and the new Creative Economy Fund.

The money was given to 14 faculty projects, ranging from stem cell research to expanding Boston Public Library's access to rare books. Wilson said, the broad spectrum of the initiatives is one of the defining characteristics of the University's research ventures.

Since the founding of the fund in 2004, 34 projects have been funded. In the 2007 fiscal year alone, the technology commercialization revenue exceeded $41 million.

"We work hard to create an academic environment that helps professors convert revolutionary discoveries to solutions to real-world problems and bring them to market," said Wilson.

The University's success not only builds its reputation, but also attracts additional funding from outside sources. The National Science Foundation reported that in 2006, the research portfolio across the University's campuses surpassed $403 million dollars, a 38 percent increase since 2002.

Three years after the fund's conception, the president's office expanded its vision by adding the Creative Economy Fund.

"It's important to recognize that investments are needed across all disciplines," said Wilson. "I think these grants will create significant economic and cultural benefits."

The economic and cultural benefits Wilson mentioned refer to a larger image.

According to Wilson, the University is not just a center of education, but an outlet of research and a significant participant in the Commonwealth's social and economic development. This relationship between the University and the state is one that cannot be neglected.

According to the University president's office, there is still more to be done on this front.

"I think the Patrick Administration and the state legislature recognize the important role that UMass plays," said President Wilson, "but the University has to do all it can to keep fostering innovation."

Sruthi Valluri can be reached at svalluri@student.umass.edu.

Crossing to open next week

MINUTEMAN from page 1

As a result of the construction, some walkways have been uprooted and the base of the plaza is no longer level with the surrounding grass. These walkways will remain and the surrounding area will be graded to transition with the plaza, according to Bruce Thomas, landscape architect at the Facilities and Campus Planning Division.

The plaza will be handicapped accessible and hopefully be a welcoming place for people to go and take in the campus atmosphere, according to the landscape architects who worked on the project.

"I think this is a great gift," said Chris Baxter, one of the architects. "It will be here forever. This type of work lasts hundreds of years."

The total construction cost of the project was $158,385, which all came from funding collected by the class of '56. No University funds were used in creating the plaza.

Andy Smith can be reached at ajsmith@student.umass.edu.

Better
It's what we do...

Helping you feel better...
- routine, same-day and urgent medical care
- mental health care
- eye care and optical services
- physical therapy
- acupuncture
- mind/body medicine
- specialty care
- allergy clinic
- full-service pharmacy
- faculty/staff assistance program
- onsite laboratory and radiology services
- and more

Helping you live better...
- health education
- substance abuse prevention programs
- tobacco cessation
- nutrition and eating disorders services
- athletic health services
- travel medicine clinic
- support and therapy groups
- volunteer, outreach and academic opportunities
- online health information, resources
- big discounts on eyewear, pharmacy products and more

Taking better care of you...
- college health specialists
- convenient campus location
- open 24/7 during the semester

University Health Services
577-5000 • www.umass.edu/uhs
UMASS AMHERST

College Students
Get 15% OFF full-price items.
Must show valid college ID. Restrictions apply. Visit store for details.
Hadley
Mountain Farms Mall
351 East Russell St.
eastern mountain sports
EASTERN MOUNTAIN SPORTS

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
Editorial Opinion

Friday, October 5, 2007

"It were best that we not all think alike; it is difference of opinion that makes horseraces."
-Mark Twain

Editorial@dailycollegian.com

Tired of dreary news

Katherine Marr

I have heard college described as a four-year hiatus from the "real world." It has been compared to a blissful bubble of naivety – a safe haven from the troubles outside the microcosmic world on campus.

With college comes the luxury of being on the outside and looking in – your greatest concern is what to wear to Saturday night's frat party or how many pints of ice cream to buy for all-nighters during finals week. Make the most of these years. I've heard it said, because you'll never get to experience anything quite like them again.

Now that I'm in college, I cannot possibly fathom who thought up all that "blissful bubble" propaganda. Only a particular kind of student can enjoy such an utterly happy go-lucky existence.

In my opinion, it's the people who party non-stop, occasionally mixing in a study session. Or it's the students who, during breakfast, stare at their omelets instead of the newspaper headlines.

It is the students who temporarily lose their peripheral vision in the campus center, and are blind to the rows of tables protesting the Iraq War or saving Darfur (not to mention the MassPIRG volunteers waiting to pounce with some petition to help stop global warming – and I admit it, I was one of them last week).

So I succumbed to the realization that I am disillusioned. It's impossible to escape the world's hardships, even on a college campus of clichéd partying, cramming for exams and weekends that can last four days. On the contrary, it seems as if students today focus extensively on the problems plaguing society, and if we forget about those tribulations for two minutes we become uncaring, uninformed teenagers.

For me, the biggest indicator of this trend is today's media and the reactions it evokes in the public. The general consensus seems to be that the media is on a downward spiral because the priority is no longer "real" news. People shake their heads at the mere sight of Paris Hilton making a scene on the television screen, disgusted that her image has left the glitzy confines of "Entertainment Tonight."

We are in a world where the attention seems increasingly to be on all that is negative.

In response to a recent broadcast about a firefighter's rescue operation to save a puppy from a drainage ditch, I heard a student express vehement criticism that, "they could have been reporting something about the war."

We are in a world where the attention seems increasingly to be on all that is negative, dwindling natural resources, war in the Middle East, the diminishing environment, nuclear weapons – problems that are ultimately beyond the average person's control.

I'm at the point where it's almost refreshing to hear about something besides political affairs. Bring on the dogs in peril or escapades in the likes of Lindsay Lohan! Because sometimes I think that if I read one more column rehashing the war in this Editorial-Opinion section, I'll crumple up the newspaper.

There was something reassuring about reading the first CNN headline on Google's homepage on Monday evening: "Britney Loses Custody of Her Kids." Unfortunate, I know, but she did it to herself, and it's of an entirely different caliber than losing more ozone in the atmosphere, which is what the leading headline resembles the other 98 percent of the time.

Likewise, I recently logged onto AOL.com to be met with a lead headline to the effect of, "The Surprising Perils of Being a Garbage Man," and a subtitle of "Watch Video of Garbage Man Get Punked By Kid Jumping From Trash Can." Yes, being a garbage man has its occupational hazards (and, for that matter, it's also risky to leap out of a trash can, especially if you don't make it out in time), but it's considerably lower on the danger scale than war.

This trivial headline meant that nothing monumentally awful occurred that day, no glacier sunk into the Arctic or convoy of soldiers was targeted by a roadside bomb. And no news network felt obligated to dig up some depressing statistic to fill that void with a somber headline.

Don't misunderstand me, I believe that as the future generation of American leaders, we must be knowledgeable; that we harbor the responsibility to preserve the earth for our children and grandchildren and that we should support our servicemen and women.

But human interest pieces about celebrities, garbage men and dogs can transcend their semblance of mere fluff to also have societal relevance. Whether it is law enforcement officials going above and beyond the call of duty, or celebrities enjoying more lenient treatment in the penal system, there has to be some levity in the news. What we need is a happy medium, perhaps a little less, "U.S. News & World Report," and a tad more, "Newsweek."

Apparently, we don't have until after graduation to face the never-ending parade of problems, tragedies and causes to be fought. But the existence of darkness and doom doesn't mean that we cannot be entertained or interested by the lighthearted.

Maybe it's not life and death, but it doesn't always have to be. And don't worry – I can practically guarantee that there will be another 30 columns about the war on this page before the month is over.

Katherine Marr is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at kmarr@student.umass.edu.

No choice

Caitlin Petrizzi

Under what circumstances is it morally acceptable to take the life of another human being, more importantly, one without a voice? Is it possible, or is it thought to be "socially acceptable," to simply terminate a pregnancy because the thought of having a child is now an inconvenience in one's future plans?

I have noticed through conversation and general hostility regarding the issue of abortion (especially living in such liberal part of the United States) that it's rare to find someone who will adamantly admit that they are actually Pro-Life.

It's unfortunate that such a natural and exhilarating event can be twisted around and terminated under the myth of a woman's choice. Having an abortion is not a private matter between a couple, nor should it be taken as lightly as people seem to make it when they proudly broadcast that they are for women's rights and therefore are pro-abortion.

Not only is that an unfair and disrespectful statement, but many women take offense to it. How dare someone assume that when a woman becomes pregnant, or even thinks she is for that matter, that she should have an abortion. Or, if that she's recently had sex and feels there's a slight chance that she's pregnant, to quickly take the Plan B pill? Is that the first thought that comes to people's minds on this campus?

Women should be supported and encouraged and other people should be happy that those women are able to experience such a miracle.

As a woman, I take offense when others say that they are pro-women's rights and therefore pro-abortion. I don't feel the two are equivalent as the values they intend to portray. Whatsoever. Women have the right to have children and raise them without someone pressuring them to think otherwise by painting their thoughts into thinking abortion is a woman's choice.

Not only is that a ridiculous statement, but it's unfair to the women in society to feel it's acceptable to take such a wonderful and natural gift and change it around so that the end result is the death of a human being. The words and ideas are manipulated into what society looks at as "needed" and "a woman's personal choice", when referring to abortion, totally missing the intended goal of aiming for what is best for women.

There are children, not choices. One baby is aborted every 24 seconds.

Most people do not realize that after only 22 days after conception, the baby's heart begins to beat with their own blood, a type often different than the mother's. After only six weeks the brain waves can be detected. It is unfortunate that over 74 percent of women who have abortions do it because they feel the baby would "interfere" with work, school or other responsibilities.

These are children, not choices. One baby is aborted every 24 seconds, making that 3,342 every day, and over 107,750 every month. For every 1,000 live births, there are 396 abortions. Approximately one fourth of our generation since Roe v. Wade has and is continuing to be aborted.

Women are given mixed messages and false guidance when looking at the "facts" of abortion. The information and pamphlets sponsored by organization such as Planned Parenthood suggest in the mathematics of abortion and the killing of an innocent baby.

They conveniently omit information pertaining to the various types of abortion and the physical and emotional pain women are forced to experience following their procedure.

The information they do include is vague and makes abortion seem like it's quick, easy and simple. There is inadequate to zero information in the pamphlets informing the women of the stages of the fetus.

Most are unaware that their baby's heart beats fast and that he/she is quickly forming into a human being. If women truly want the best for themselves and for each other, they would take time to become informed as to what they were possibly destroying.

It likely that people are simply unaware of the truth and facts and quick side with the opinion that sounds good under the pretense of women's right. Of course people are for women's rights. Who wouldn't want the best for us?

The fear behind it is not how it's dealt with the killing of innocent babies. If people were really for women's rights they'd be everything for their power to raise children. But the pain and sadness for the part of those women as a result of a decision they made. Unfortunately a decision that is legally and socially accepted.

Caitlin Petrizzi is the President of Students for Life of America chapter at UMass and can be reached at cpetrizz@umass.edu.

Corporate responsibility

Bruce Lerner

The name Rachel Corrie should mean something to every person in America. She was an American citizen killed by a foreign army in 2003. The reason that people do not pay attention to this incident is because the foreign army happened to be one of an ally and not of an enemy, thus it must be ignored for strictly political reasons.

If demonized Iran had killed an American citizen, it would be an almost guaranteed pretext for a full-on war with that country and would be picked up in the media 24 hours a day. In this case, however, the perpetrator of the crime is the United States' number one ally in the Middle East, Israel.

Rachel Corrie was an activist who supported the Palestinians' fight for freedom from the murderous Israeli occupation. She was killed by an American-made Caterpillar D-9 bulldozer, bought by the Pentagon especially for Israel, while trying to stop the Israeli Defense Forces (IDF) from demolishing a Palestinian home in the West Bank.

Recently, Mahmud Kayed, a Palestinian youth, was also killed by a bulldozer while throwing rocks at the invaders. Rachel Corrie's family has sued the manufacturer of the bulldozer used to kill Corrie, the Caterpillar Corporation.

The suit was denied to the family on the grounds that to sue Caterpillar would be "implicitly questioning, and even condemning, United States foreign policy towards Israel." As if to condemn atrocities is beyond the realm of possibility in the U.S. Justice System. This rejection highlights one aspect of the disgusting culture in the U.S. with regards to human rights abuses in Israel.

Another cultural aspect in the U.S. has to do with corporate domination not only of resources but also of ideologies. It is generally accepted that corporations have the rights of persons and can act according to those rights. Since corporations have far more power than most people, the citizens of the U.S. have ceded control of their world to power hungry pathological entities whose sole purpose under the law is to make profit regardless of the human cost.

There is much precedent in the area of corporate culpability and government complacency in the commitment of war crimes.

The Caterpillar Corporation acts well within their prescribed societal role as the typical soulless entity known as a corporation, by selling bulldozers which will be used as weapons to the U.S. government for use in continuing a brutal occupation.

Interestingly, as well as typically, on their website, one finds several pleasant sounding assurances as to the benevolence of this entity known as the Caterpillar Corporation. One is: "Striving to ensure that our success contributes to the quality of life of all people."

Clearly if all people were included in this blatant lie, the Palestinians would not be subject to having their homes demolished by bulldozers clearly marked with a Cat symbol.

They also state that, "As a global company, Caterpillar seeks to become actively involved in all of the communities where we work and live." This may be true, but their involvement often involves rendering thousands of innocent people homeless for the sake of profit.

House demolitions themselves are illegal under article 53 of the Fourth Geneva Convention. Israel regularly engages in this practice, violating International Humanitarian Law. Collective punishment is also illegal, under article 33 of the same convention. By destroying houses of people who have not committed crimes, Israel is in grave violation of major codes of conduct.

Caterpillar cannot claim innocence in these processes, as they produce the major weapons used. If Bush tries to claim that Iran is responsible for killing troops in Iraq by providing weapons to insurgents, then by that logic, Caterpillar is responsible for killing Rachel Corrie and should at least give restitution to her family. Somehow, it is doubtful that the same standard will be applied to both cases.

There is much precedent in the area of corporate culpability and government complacency in the commitment of war crimes. IBM is a great example of a major U.S. corporation sacrificing (a rather questionable use of the word, for it implies that morals were actually present prior to the events) morals on the altar of business.

What did IBM, the great herald of U.S. technology do? They sold early computers in the form of punch card systems to the Nazi regime in Germany during WWII so that the Germans could expedite their process of extermination. After all, it would be hard to keep track of all those people without IBM's "innovation and expertise."

There are pictures of the IBM CEO at the time and Hitler sitting together. No one would claim that IBM did not have a role in the genocide, so why would the Rachel Corrie or Mahmud Kayed case be different?

It's time to put things in perspective. Israel commits crimes with the help of U.S. tax dollars and products made by U.S. corporations.

Corporations in general are immune from criticism and promote false images of themselves and their actions. The government of the United States sanctions crimes committed by both Israel and U.S. corporations when it is not committing crimes itself. These are deeply disturbing facts that need to be dealt with immediately for the sake of humanity, for the longest people let the corporation rule, and the government implements immoral policies, the longer everyone suffers everywhere.

Bruce Lerner is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at blerner@student.umass.edu.

Hilary poised to carry on the Clinton dynasty

Hannah Nelson

I've always been fascinated by the election process, eagerly counting down the years until I would finally get my chance to walk into a kiosk by myself instead of tagging along with my mom. Now that my chance is thirteen months away, it's a bit of a daunting challenge.

Having grown up amid the fad of "girl power" commercialism, I once swore that I would vote for a female candidate no matter what. It would obviously be irresponsible for me to do such a thing now.

Earlier this year I was naturally excited by the prospect of Hillary Clinton having the opportunity to be our first female president. But now I'm not so sure. This is primarily due to the fact that I am afraid she'll pull a Romney on us. "Health care for all" is an enticing promise, but at what cost?

There is a reason certain people don't have health care; some just can't afford it. So tell me what good it will do to impose a health care mandate that isn't free? Is Clinton just finishing what her husband started?

After all, he's the one who was proposing it during his term in office. That's something that sounds eerily like what Bush critics have to say about Iraq, that he is just finishing daddy's business.

On her Web site, she promises affordable, available, and reliable care. She says go ahead and keep current plans you like, and that no one will have to deal with unreasonable premiums in conjunction to their income. The list goes on and on, but is it really within reach? Do we dare to dream that lobbyists for the big name insurance companies would permit such a thing?

Insuring affordable health care for all is a very dangerous promise to a Massachusetts voter who has watched as people were forced into finding coverage this summer with the fear that they may not be able to afford it.

However, I have to look beyond my mixed feelings on health care alone. Clinton promises to restore the sullied reputation of the United States to a more favorable place in the global community as well as giving our veterans all the care that they truly deserve. Not to mention do something about that little sore spot more commonly known as Walter Reed. (According to recent reports, there hasn't been much improvement at the Army Medical Center over the past few months.)

Is Clinton just finishing what her husband started?

And aside from the hot button issues of global warming and the war in Iraq, there is the slightly less spotlighted issue of the middle class in America. In past years the gap between wealth and the poverty line has been growing increasingly larger. It seems so very cliché, but the rich are getting richer and the poor are getting poorer. Clinton promises to fix it, but you know what they say about politicians and their promises.

What she doesn't seem to have is the younger votes. It seems that every savvy and remotely liberal or moderate college student is all for Barack Obama. He's a fresh face on the scene, and has the natural advantage of not having too many skeletons yet. I think that is his greatest weakness and Hillary's greatest strength. The whole country already knows what is in her closet, as well as her husband's.

Then there is that small matter of our nation being in the hands of the same two families for the past eighteen years, and counting.

When I first realized the reality of that statement, I have to admit it scared me a bit. I became torn between my temptation of voting for improved health care and a corruption of the system.

I won't pretend to be ignorant to the fact that history has shown that political families have successfully had multiple members in position as president. What does worry me is that this time it would come in a four-person succession.

I started out this column by trying to find faults in Clinton. But low and behold, I was swaying more than usual as I started to read the convincing points listed by her posse on the official campaign website.

So with hopes that by writing this I would be convinced that I was swaying more towards Edwards, Obama, or even Giuliani, I now find myself even more up in the air than when I started.

Though, on occasion, it seems worth it to vote Clinton if for no other reason than just to have Bill be given the novel title of the first First Gentleman.

Hannah Nelson is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at hnelson@student.umass.edu.

Daily Collegian Reader Poll Results

How safe do you feel on campus?

Entirely

Somewhat
31.7%

Not at all
13.8%

Collegian Reader Polls are created on Mondays; results are tallied on Thursdays.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 23

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3499 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Hudson
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
COPY EDITOR Adam Scanlon
EDITORIAL EDITOR Sean Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
ART DIRECTOR Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ryan McAskill
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Teresa Reilly
ASST. EDITORIAL James Matthews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Will McGuinness
ASSISTANT NEWS Halle Seaburn
ASSISTANT SPORTS Michael King
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenwinkle
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE SEMESTER AT THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST AND THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY OWNED AND OPERATED BY STUDENTS. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BECAME KNOWN AS THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IN 1903, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1974 AND THE BIWEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1996. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1987. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN AWARDED THE PACEMAKER AWARD FOR EXCELLENCE IN JOURNALISM 3 TIMES IN THE PAST 10 YEARS. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED. REPRODUCTION OF ANY MATERIAL APPEARING IN THE COLLEGIAN WITHOUT EXPRESS WRITTEN PERMISSION IS PROHIBITED.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jeremy Rice

COPY EDITOR
Amber Vaillancourt

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1809 and snap a photo, then send it to news@dailycollegian.com

Schlafly lectures on feminist ideas

SCHLAFLY from page 1

overstep the boundaries of what the government should provide.

"Feminists claim they want a completely gender-neutral society. That is a lie. They want the government to give them something to make up for what they think they don't have," she said.

She explained the importance of motherhood in her life, which she accomplished by fulfilling her career at a later time.

"I do not think being a feminist has really got anything to do with whether you choose a career or choose to be a homemaker," she said.

Schlafly feels the defining feature of the feminist movement is the feeling women are victims of a patriarchal society.

"I think it is wrong of them to tell young women that your real self-fulfillment is solely in the labor force," she said.

Schlafly doesn't want the government to begin "engaging in wage cutting in order to tell that the job of a woman, say, as a secretary in a nice, air conditioned office is the same as a prison guard who faces risks every day on the job."

Schlafly concluded her speech by advising young women "not to catch the disease of feminism because it is contagious," and reminding them, "You have they opportunity and good fortune to be an American woman."

Some students walked away with mixed reactions.

"I don't know why she thinks that feminism hurts women, so I want to hear what she has to say," said Amherst College student Ellie Zi.

Among the students and audience members gathered outside before the doors opened were the UMass Democrats handing out articles that included flyers for the Everywomen's center.

Several students wore T-shirts adorned with a women's rights symbol, and a group of students from Hampshire College wore white in support of women's rights.

"I couldn't just let this event come and go," said UMass freshman Liz Wahlman. "We already have the right to stay in the home, but many of us don't want to. We want to make ourselves useful in society."

Others were excited to hear what Schlafly had to say.

"I'm a conservative young student and she is a historical figure who deserves to be heard," said Adam Fuchs, a recent graduate of Franklin Pierce University.

Caitlin Quinn can be reached at cquinn@student.umass.edu.

LOU BOUDREAU/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Phyllis Schlafly, who spoke in Bowker auditorium on Wednesday, urged UMass women to make their own choices when deciding whether to pursue a career and to not "catch the disease of feminism."

Vulgarity addressed in linguist's speech

LINGUIST from page 1

for over 500 years, but its first recorded citation as a personal description can be attributed to Norman Mailer's 1945 book "The Naked and the Dead."

It was during the World War II era that the tongues of the working class got tied up in four-letter word speech.

"During war time it became precious as a way for millions of conscripts to note their anger and frustration," he said.

By the 1970s the notion of the word had become a part of American life.

"Everyone uses it, either inward or outward, and most of us have a clear sense of what it is and what it is not," he said.

According to Nunberg, the word is a new concept in that it is unconnected to social class, unlike its antecedents, words such as "scout," "villain" and "wretch," which all depicted ungentlemanly, and therefore, lower-class behavior.

Nunberg described the figure in media culture.

"In slasher films, it's always the guy that gets eaten first, and anyone that Tom Cruise plays always starts out as one," he said.

Today, according to Nunberg, people use the word in relation to the concept.

"We understand what makes someone an asshole and what doesn't. Cheating on your girlfriend, yes, cheating on your taxes, no ... If I ever finish the book I'm writing, I think I'll name it 'Mind Your Business, Asshole.'"

Sarah Belanger can be reached at sbelanger@student.umass.edu.

President's office bestows grants to UMass researchers

BY SRUTHI VALLURI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A total of $1.4 million was awarded to research initiatives across the University campuses last week, marking the fourth year that the University President's office awarded grants to faculty researchers.

It is part of a larger plan to enrich the University's research enterprise, one that places the University as one of the top three research institutions in Massachusetts.

"As a major public research University, our research portfolio won't grow by accident – we need to promote excellence," said President Jack M. Wilson.

The grant pool was divided into two categories: Science and Technology Fund, which is in its fourth year, and the new Creative Economy Fund.

The money was given to 14 faculty projects, ranging from stem cell research to expanding Boston Public Library's access to rare books. Wilson said, the broad spectrum of the initiatives is one of the defining characteristics of the University's research ventures.

Since the founding of the fund in 2004, 34 projects have been funded. In the 2007 fiscal year alone, the technology commercialization revenue exceeded $41 million.

"We work hard to create an academic environment that helps professors convert revolutionary discoveries to solutions to real-world problems and bring them to market," said Wilson.

The University's success not only builds its reputation, but also attracts additional funding from outside sources. The National Science Foundation reported that in 2006, the research portfolio across the University's campuses surpassed $403 million dollars, a 38 percent increase since 2002.

Three years after the fund's conception, the president's office expanded its vision by adding the Creative Economy Fund.

According to Wilson, the University is not just a center of education, but an outlet of research and a significant participant in the Commonwealth's social and economic development. This relationship between the University and the state is one that cannot be neglected.

According to the University president's office, there is still more to be done on this front.

"I think the Patrick Administration and the state legislature recognize the important role that UMass plays," said President Wilson, "but the University has to do all it can to keep fostering innovation."

Sruthi Valluri can be reached at svalluri@student.umass.edu.

Crossing to open next week

MINUTEMAN from page 1

As a result of the construction, some walkways have been uprooted and the base of the plaza is no longer level with the surrounding grass. Those walkways will remain and the surrounding area will be graded to transition with the plaza, according to Bruce Thomas, landscape architect at the Facilities and Campus Planning Division.

The plaza will be handicapped accessible and hopefully be a welcoming place for people to go and take in the campus atmosphere, according to the landscape architects who worked on the project.

"I think this is a great gift," said Chris Baxter, one of the architects. "It will be here forever. This type of work lasts hundreds of years."

The total construction cost of the project was $158,385, which all came from funding collected by the class of '56. No University funds were used in creating the plaza.

Andy Smith can be reached at asmith@student.umass.edu.

Better
It's what we do...

Helping you feel better...
- routine, same-day and urgent medical care
- mental health care
- eye care and optical services
- physical therapy
- acupuncture
- mind/body medicine
- specialty care
- allergy clinic
- full-service pharmacy
- faculty/staff assistance program
- onsite laboratory and radiology services
- and more

Helping you live better...
- health education
- substance abuse prevention programs
- tobacco cessation
- nutrition and eating disorders services
- athletic health services
- travel medicine clinic
- support and therapy groups
- volunteer, outreach and academic opportunities
- online health information, resources
- big discounts on eyewear, pharmacy products and more

Taking better care of you...
- college health specialists
- convenient campus location
- open 24/7 during the semester

University Health Services 577-5000 • www.umass.edu/uhs UMASS AMHERST

After this, the corporate ladder will be a piece of cake.

College Students
Get 15% OFF full-price items.
Must show valid college ID. Restrictions apply, visit store for details.

Hadley
Mountain Farms Mall
351 East Russell St

eastern mountain sports
EASTERN MOUNTAIN SPORTS

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 5, 2007

"It were best that we not all think alike; it is difference of opinion that makes horseraces." – Mark Twain

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Tired of dreary news

Katherine Marr

I have heard college described as a four-year hiatus from the "real world." It has been compared to a blissful bubble of naivety – a safe haven from the troubles outside the microcosmic world on campus.

With college comes the luxury of being on the outside and looking in – your greatest concern is what to wear to Saturday night's frat party or how many pints of ice cream to buy for all-nighters during finals week. Make the most of these years. I've heard it said, because you'll never get to experience anything quite like them again.

Now that I'm in college, I cannot possibly fathom who thought up all that "blissful bubble" propaganda. Only a particular kind of student can enjoy such an utterly happy go-lucky existence.

In my opinion, it's the people who party non-stop, occasionally mixing in a study session. Or it's the students who, during breakfast, stare at their omelets instead of the newspaper headlines.

It is the students who temporarily lose their peripheral vision in the campus center, and are blind to the rows of tables protesting the Iraq War or saving Darfur (not to mention the MassPIRG volunteers waiting to pounce with some petition to help stop global warming – and I admit it, I was one of them last week).

So I succumbed to the realization that I am disillusioned. It's impossible to escape the world's hardships, even on a college campus of clichéd partying, cramming for exams and weekends that can last four days. On the contrary, it seems as if students today focus extensively on the problems plaguing society, and if we forget about those tribulations for two minutes we become uncaring, uninformed teenagers.

For me, the biggest indicator of this trend is today's media and the reactions it evokes in the public. The general consensus seems to be that the media is on a downward spiral because the priority is no longer "real" news. People shake their heads at the mere sight of Paris Hilton making a scene on the television screen, disgusted that her image has left the glitzy confines of "Entertainment Tonight."

We are in a world where the attention seems increasingly to be on all that is negative.

In response to a recent broadcast about a firefighter's rescue operation to save a puppy from a drainage ditch, I heard a student express vehement criticism that, "they could have been reporting something about the war."

We are in a world where the attention seems increasingly to be on all that is negative, dwindling natural resources, war in the Middle East, the diminishing environment, nuclear weapons – problems that are ultimately beyond the average person's control.

I'm at the point where it's almost refreshing to hear about something besides political affairs. Bring on the dogs in peril or escapades in the likes of Lindsay Lohan! Because sometimes I think that if I read one more column rehashing the war in this Editorial/Opinion section, I'll crumple up the newspaper.

There was something reassuring about reading the first CNN headline on Google's homepage on Monday evening: "Britney Loses Custody of Her Kids." Unfortunate, I know, but she did it to herself, and it's of an entirely different caliber than losing more ozone in the atmosphere, which is what the leading headline resembles the other 98 percent of the time.

Likewise, I recently logged onto AOL.com to be met with a lead headline to the effect of, "The Surprising Perils of Being a Garbage Man," and a subtitle of "Watch Video of Garbage Man Get Punked By Kid Jumping from Trash Can." Yes, being a garbage man has its occupational hazards (and, for that matter, it's also risky to leap out of a trash can, especially if you don't make it out in time), but it's considerably lower on the danger scale than war.

This trivial headline meant that nothing monumentally awful occurred that day, no glacier sunk into the Arctic or convoy of soldiers was targeted by a roadside bomb. And no news network felt obligated to dig up some depressing statistic to fill that void with a somber headline.

Don't misunderstand me, I believe that as the future generation of American leaders, we must be knowledgeable; that we harbor the responsibility to preserve the earth for our children and grandchildren and that we should support our servicemen and women.

But human interest pieces about celebrities, garbage men and dogs can transcend their semblance of mere fluff to also have societal relevance. Whether it is law enforcement officials going above and beyond the call of duty, or celebrities enjoying more lenient treatment in the penal system, there has to be some levity in the news. What we need is a happy medium, perhaps a little less, "U.S. News & World Report," and a tad more, "Newsweek."

Apparently, we don't have until after graduation to face the never-ending parade of problems, tragedies and causes to be fought. But the existence of darkness and doom doesn't mean that we cannot be entertained or interested by the lighthearted.

Maybe it's not life and death, but it doesn't always have to be. And don't worry. I can practically guarantee that there will be another 30 columns about the war on this page before the month is over.

Katherine Marr is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at kmarr@student.umass.edu.

No choice

Under what circumstances is it morally acceptable to take the life of another human being, more importantly, one without a voice? Is it possible, or is it thought to be "socially acceptable," to simply terminate a pregnancy because the thought of having a child is now an inconvenience in one's future plans?

Caitlin Petrizzi

I have noticed through conversation and general hostility regarding the issue of abortion (especially living in such liberal part of the United States) that it's rare to find someone who will adamantly admit that they are actually Pro-Life.

It's unfortunate that such a natural and exhilarating event can be twisted around and terminated under the myth of a womans choice. Having an abortion is not a private matter between a couple, nor should it be taken as lightly as people seem to make it when they proudly broadcast that they are for women's rights and therefore are pro-abortion.

Not only is that an unfair and disrespectful statement, but many women take offense to it. How dare someone assume that when a woman becomes pregnant, or even thinks she is for that matter, that she should have an abortion? Or, if that she's recently had sex and feels there's a slight chance that she's pregnant, to quickly take the Plan B pill? Is that the first thought that comes to people's minds on this campus?

Women should be supported and encouraged and other people should be happy that these women are able to experience such a miracle.

As a woman, I take offense when others say that they are pro- women's rights and therefore pro-abortion. I don't feel the two are equivalent in the values they intend to portray whatsoever. Women have the right to have children and raise them without someone pressuring them to think otherwise by tainting their thoughts into thinking abortion is a woman's choice.

Not only is that a ridiculous statement, but it's unfair to the women in society to feel it's acceptable to take such a wonderful and natural gift and change it around so that the end result is the death of a human being. The words and ideas are manipulated into what society looks at as "needed" and "a woman's personal choice", when referring to abortion, totally missing the intended goal of aiming for what is best for women.

These are children, not choices. One baby is aborted every 24 seconds.

Most people do not realize that after only 22 days after conception, the baby's heart begins to beat with their own blood, a type often different than the mother's. After only six weeks the brain waves can be detected. It is unfortunate that over 74 percent of women who have abortions do it because they feel the baby would "interfere" with work, school or other responsibilities.

These are children, not choices. One baby is aborted every 24 seconds, making that 1,542 every day, and over 107,750 every month for every 1,000 live births, there are 306 abortions. Approximately one fourth of our generation since Roe v. Wade has and is continuing to be aborted.

Women are given mixed messages and false guidance when looking at the "facts" of abortion. The information and pamphlets sponsored by organizations such as Planned Parenthood sugarcoat the malicious act of abortion and the killing of an innocent baby.

They conveniently omit information pertaining to the various types of abortion and the physical and emotional pain women are forced to experience following their procedure.

The information they do include is vague and makes abortion seem like it's quick, easy and simple. There is inadequate if any information in the pamphlets informing the women of the stages of the fetus.

Most are unaware that their baby even has a heartbeat and that he/she is quickly forming into a human being. If women truly want the best for themselves and for each other, they would adamantly be against abortion in every way possible.

It's likely that people are simply unaware of the truth and facts and quick, side with an option that sounds good under the pretense of women's rights. Of course people are for women's rights. Who wouldn't want the best for us?

The best however is to not have to deal with the killing of an innocent baby. If people were really for women's rights, they'd do everything in their power to avoid letting others feel the pain, guilt and sadness for the rest of their lives as a result of a decision they made, unfortunately a decision that is legally and socially acceptable.

Caitlin Petrizzi is the President of Students for Life. She can be reached at umassstudentsforlife@gmail.com.

Corporate responsibility

The name Rachel Corrie should mean something to every person in America. She was an American citizen killed by a foreign army in 2003. The reason that people do not pay attention to this incident is because the foreign army happened to be one of an ally and not of an enemy, thus it must be ignored for strictly political reasons.

Bruce Lerner

If demonized Iran had killed an American citizen, it would be an almost guaranteed pretext for a full-on war with that country and would be picked up in the media 24 hours a day. In this case, however, the perpetrator of the crime is the United States' number one ally in the Middle East, Israel.

Rachel Corrie was an activist who supported the Palestinians' fight for freedom from the murderous Israeli occupation. She was killed by an American-made Caterpillar D-9 bulldozer, bought by the Pentagon especially for Israel, while trying to stop the Israeli Defense Forces (IDF) from demolishing a Palestinian home in the West Bank.

Recently, Mahmud Kayed, a Palestinian youth, was also killed by a bulldozer while throwing rocks at the invaders. Rachel Corrie's family has sued the manufacturer of the bulldozer used to kill Corrie, the Caterpillar Corporation.

The suit was denied to the family on the grounds that to sue Caterpillar would be "implicitly questioning, and even condemning, United States foreign policy towards Israel." As if to condemn atrocities is beyond the realm of possibility in the U.S. Justice System. This rejection highlights one aspect of the disgusting culture in the U.S. with regards to human rights abuses in Israel.

Another cultural aspect in the U.S. has to do with corporate domination not only of resources but also of ideologies. It is generally accepted that corporations have the rights of persons and can act according to those rights. Since corporations have far more power than most people, the citizens of the U.S. have ceded control of their world to power hungry pathological entities whose sole purpose under the law is to make profit regardless of the human cost.

There is much precedent in the area of corporate culpability and government complacency in the commitment of war crimes.

The Caterpillar Corporation acts well within their prescribed societal role as the typical soulless entity known as a corporation, by selling bulldozers which will be used as weapons to the U.S. government for use in continuing a brutal occupation.

Interestingly, as well as typically, on their website, one finds several pleasant sounding assurances as to the benevolence of this entity known as the Caterpillar Corporation. One is: "Striving to ensure that our success contributes to the quality of life of all people."

Clearly if all people were included in this blatant lie, the Palestinians would not be subject to having their homes demolished by bulldozers clearly marked with a Cat symbol.

They also state that, "As a global company, Caterpillar seeks to become actively involved in all of the communities where we work and live." This may be true, but their involvement often involves rendering thousands of innocent people homeless for the sake of profit.

House demolitions themselves are illegal under article 53 of the Fourth Geneva Convention. Israel regularly engages in this practice, violating International Humanitarian Law. Collective punishment is also illegal, under article 33 of the same convention. By destroying houses of people who have not committed crimes, Israel is in grave violation of major codes of conduct.

Caterpillar cannot claim innocence in these processes, as they produce the major weapons used. If Bush tries to claim that Iran is responsible for killing troops in Iraq by providing weapons to insurgents, then by that logic, Caterpillar is responsible for killing Rachel Corrie and should at least give restitution to her family. Somehow, it is doubtful that the same standard will be applied to both cases.

There is much precedent in the area of corporate culpability and government complacency in the commitment of war crimes. IBM is a great example of a major U.S. corporation sacrificing (a rather questionable use of the word, for it implies that morals were actually present prior to the events) morals on the altar of business.

What did IBM, the great herald of U.S. technology do? They sold early computers in the form of punch card systems to the Nazi regime in Germany during WWII so that the Germans could expedite their process of extermination. After all, it would be hard to keep track of all those people without IBM's "innovation and expertise."

There are pictures of the IBM CEO at the time and Hitler sitting together. No one would claim that IBM did not have a role in the genocide, so why would the Rachel Corrie or Mahmud Kayed case be different?

It's time to put things in perspective. Israel commits crimes with the help of U.S. tax dollars and products made by U.S. corporations.

Corporations in general are immune from criticism and promote false images of themselves and their actions. The government of the United States sanctions crimes committed by both Israel and U.S. corporations when it is not committing crimes itself. These are deeply disturbing facts that need to be dealt with immediately for the sake of humanity, for the longer people let the corporation rule, and the government implements immoral policies, the longer everyone suffers every where.

Bruce Lerner is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at blerner@student.umass.edu.

Hilary poised to carry on the Clinton dynasty

Hannah Nelson

I've always been fascinated by the election process, eagerly counting down the years until I would finally get my chance to walk into a kiosk by myself instead of tagging along with my mom. Now that my chance is thirteen months away, it's a bit of a daunting challenge.

Having grown up amid the fad of 'girl power' commercialism, I once swore that I would vote for a female candidate no matter what. It would obviously be irresponsible for me to do such a thing now.

Earlier this year I was naturally excited by the prospect of Hillary Clinton having the opportunity to be our first female president. But now I'm not so sure. This is primarily due to the fact that I am afraid she'll pull a Romney on us. "Health care for all" is an enticing promise, but at what cost?

There is a reason certain people don't have health care; some just can't afford it. So tell me what good it will do to impose a health care mandate that isn't free? Is Clinton just finishing what her husband started?

After all, he's the one who was proposing it during his term in office. That's something that sounds eerily like what Bush critics have to say about Iraq, that he is just finishing daddy's business.

On her Web site, she promises affordable, available, and reliable care. She says go ahead and keep current plans you like, and that no one will have to deal with unreasonable premiums in conjunction to their income. The list goes on and on, but is it really within reach? Do we dare to dream that lobbyists for the big name insurance companies would permit such a thing?

Insuring affordable health care for all is a very dangerous promise to a Massachusetts voter who has watched as people were forced into finding coverage this summer with the fear that they may not be able to afford it.

However, I have to look beyond my mixed feelings on health care alone. Clinton promises to restore the sullied reputation of the United States to a more favorable place in the global community as well as giving our veterans all the care that they truly deserve. Not to mention do something about that little sore spot more commonly known as Walter Reed. (According to recent reports, there hasn't been much improvement at the Army Medical Center over the past few months)

Is Clinton just finishing what her husband started?

And aside from the hot button issues of global warming and the war in Iraq, there is the slightly less spotlighted issue of the middle class in America. In past years the gap between wealth and the poverty line has been growing increasingly larger. It seems so very cliché, but the rich are getting richer and the poor are getting poorer. Clinton promises to fix it, but you know what they say about politicians and their promises.

What she doesn't seem to have is the younger votes. It seems that every savvy and remotely liberal or moderate college student is all for Barack Obama. He's a fresh face on the scene, and has the natural advantage of not having too many skeletons yet. I think that is his greatest weakness and Hillary's greatest strength. The whole country already knows what is in her closet, as well as her husband's.

Then there is that small matter of our nation being in the hands of the same two families for the past eighteen years, and counting.

When I first realized the reality of that statement, I have to admit it scared me a bit. I became torn between my temptation of voting for improved health care and a corruption of the system.

I won't pretend to be ignorant to the fact that history has shown that political families have successfully had multiple members in position as president. What does worry me is that this time it would come in a four-person succession.

I started out this column by trying to find faults in Clinton. But low and behold, I was swaying more than usual as I started to read the convincing points listed by her posse on the official campaign website.

So with hopes that by writing this I would be convinced that I was swaying more towards Edwards, Obama, or even Giuliani, I now find myself even more up in the air than when I started.

Though, on occasion, it seems worth it to vote Clinton if for no other reason than just to have Bill be given the novel title of the first, First Gentleman.

Hannah Nelson is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at hnelson@student.umass.edu.

DAILY COLLEGIAN READER POLL RESULTS

How safe do you feel on campus?

Entirely	Somewhat	Not at all
✓	31.7%	13.8%

Collegian Reader Polls are created on Mondays; results are tallied on Thursdays.

Oktoberfest in New Hampshire

This is part one of a two-part series chronicling the journeys of three Collegian editors to Oktoberfest in Attitash, New Hampshire.

Tim McCall

Part One

It was just about an hour and a half past deadline, but we began our trip right on schedule. Derrick and I, kidnapped assistant sports editor Joe Meloni and headed east towards the city on the hill, Boston. It would be another 24 hours before Attitash, but we could smell the brews of Oktoberfest two days ago.

Oktoberfest originated in 1810 as a three week long festival, originating during the month of October only because of the favored weather. Nearly 200 years later, millions of people return annually to Germany to take part in the festivities. In recent years, college kids have come to the festival and become too intoxicated and have passed out. In Germany they call these college kids "Bierleichen." "Bierleichen" is German for beer-corpses.

"I hate how people drive out here [Western Mass.]," Derrick said as we barreled towards the Mass. Pike.

Roads in the Pioneer Valley were not designed for cars, it seems. None of them are nearly wide enough for cars and the longest strip of straight asphalt can't be longer than 12 feet.

Dinner, or where we were going to eat dinner more specifically, naturally became a topic of conversation. At this time Joe made the truest statement any Collegian sportswriter has ever made, the double-cheeseburger from McDonald's is the best deal in the history of American commerce. For $0.99, you get two burger patties, two pieces of cheese, a bun and a bevy of delicious pseudo-vegetables.

Oktoberfest might be fun; no one really knows what is going to happen, but we've been talking about and preparing for the event for weeks. We think it'll consist of drinking Sam Adams Octoberfest and rehearsing our German.

"Ich ben ein Berliner," Derrick declared.

Joe concurred.

The forecast for the weekend predicts peak foliage and brisk nights. Tourists from across the country have booked every motel, hotel and hunting lodge in a 28-mile radius forcing the media to find their own means of shelter, i.e. tents and sleeping bags - Keystone Light optional.

Most attempts to write were halted by vaguely sexual references to different women who sporadically appear in our lives. Unfortunately, Tim mixed in a story about his mom and a slumbering postmaster. Derrick and Joe found the tale to be lame.

On this particular Columbus Day weekend the Attitash Ski Area in Bartlett, N.H., is hosting its 10th annual Oktoberfest celebration.

For one weekend a year Bavaria is transported to Northern New England. Complete with a sampling of autumn-themed beers from local microbreweries, such as the Boston Beer Company, Harpoon Brewery and Magic Hat, Attitash will play host to a new-world version of an age old southern-German tradition. No Twisted Tea allowed -- or twist-offs for that matter.

To round the weekend out, a seven-piece King Ludwig Bavarian Brass band will be on hand to play for the assembled beer connoisseurs.

Admission is free for those under 21 and Attitash is providing a kinderplatz with a moonwalk, pumpkin painting and relay races. The non-alcoholic attractions are not exclusive to the under-aged folk. A 23-foot climbing wall and a EuroBungy trampoline will be available for the festival's patrons.

Unlike Oktoberfest, the Natick rest stop on the Mass. Pike isn't very mindful of its patrons. To Joe's dismay, there was no dollar menu, which meant we could not take advantage of the double-cheeseburger deal. We were all sad, briefly, but the weekend ahead curbed our disappointment.

We're told our whole lives that drinking cannot make us happy. The last four years have proved this wrong. The amount of delicious beer available will not directly factor into the mood, but as we cruise through a tunnel with the windows of Derrick's 1996 Oldsmobile down and the radio blasting, nothing can bring us down.

Tim McCall can be reached at tmccall@student.umass.edu.

Derrick Perkins can be reached at dperkins@student.umass.edu.

Joe Meloni was returned safely to his mother's apartment at 6:31p.m.

Keg-ch as Oktoberfest-celebrating attendees look on. The Tenth Anniversary Oktoberfest will be held Saturday and Sunday of Columbus Day Weekend at Attitash in Bartlett, New Hampshire.

Simple plot hurt 'Paris'

No originality in Delpy's film

By Kevin Koczwara
Collegian Correspondent

With a lack of intrigue, even Woody Allen style humor can't shake the predictability of "2 Days in Paris."

Woody Allen set the standard for smart, witty humor and it's unfair to compare any movie to one like "Annie Hall." "2 Days in Paris," however, is a love story filled with Woody Allen-like humor and characters. The sarcasm is abundant and whole-heartedly satisfying. There are bits of the usual slapstick humor with people in wrong places at the wrong time but it isn't forced or out of place. This is a movie for those who enjoy the clever punch line.

The introduction is a short narrative voiceover by Marion (Julie Deply, the writer, director, producer, editor, and female lead) who explains what has happened on her and her boyfriend Jack's (Adam Goldberg) vacation so far.

They are on their way to Paris from Venice by train. Marion gives us a short introduction into the two lovers. She is a photographer who hasn't taken any pictures during the vacation. She was raised in Paris by her two quirky and very funny parents (played by her real-life mother and father). Her frizzy blonde hair and black framed glasses bring instant thoughts of Woody Allen and the term "nerd" to mind. She eventually moved to New York for professional reasons.

Jack is an interior designer who has taken all of the pictures. He is a New Yorker at heart and in appearance. His dark sunglasses and black shirts are the main pieces of clothing in his suitcase representing his dark outlook on life.

Insight into the couple's relationship is the basis of the movie. When Marion and Jack arrive in Paris, they stand outside of the train station in a line of other travelers waiting for a cab. They debate on taking a bus or calling a taxi but both ideas fall through and they end up waiting for a cab.

After the short debate Jack is asked by a group of American tourists, like himself, how far the Louvre is from the station. He kindly gives the group some directions and tells them to walk there because the Louvre is so close a cab wouldn't even take them there.

After the group of "Da Vinci Code" reading and pro-Bush tourists begin to walk away, Marion turns to Jack and asks where he sent the tourists. When Jack replies "the Louvre," Marion becomes upset because he has sent the tourists in the wrong direction and the Louvre is miles away from the station. He then turns and moves up in line for a cab and explains to her that that is trying to mediate, she is consistently distracted and leaves Jack behind. Jack tries to understand the differences in culture at the exhibit as time after time he is shown drawings of Marion's mother having an affair with the artist.

The movie moves in a fluid motion and yet is all too simple. There are not really any original jokes or ideas here. There are no twists in the relationship, like in "The Crying Game," nor a "Casablanca"-like ending. It's all too predictable.

You leave the theatre liking the characters but not loving them. The disconnection between them and you is at the end when Marion narrates the final scene for the audience. It feels like a cop-out. It is always better to show and not tell, and Delpy tries to do both, but doesn't succeed. Let the audience feel for the characters and understand them with their own voices and words, not a summary.

Kevin Koczwara can be reached at kkoczwar@student.umass.edu.

2 Days in Paris

Starring Julie Delpy and Adam Goldberg

B

This simple insight into the characters gives the viewer an idea of two of the differences in the characters personalities, but lets them know that they do somehow work as a couple.

More insight comes at Marion's apartment building. The couple enters into the building when her mother pops out of a door in the hallway. The apartment in is in her parent's building. Marion becomes distracted by her mother and Jack heads upstairs. Jack comes back down to help bring in the last of the luggage and begins to tease Marion. They walk up stairs together pulling Marion's large suitcase. Marion at this point tells Jack, "There is no sarcasm in Paris."

Jack replies "I'll be quiet for two days then." This is the basic struggle in the movie that the couple has to overcome.

Jack is struggling to understand the language and culture around him. Marion is reminiscing with old friends, ex-lovers, and her family, but struggles to understand Jack's idea of a relationship. This is the plot of the whole movie. Marion is in control of her surroundings as Jack left behind and confused.

It is both a comedy and a story of true love. The comedy comes in the wit and the struggles that face Jack and Marion while in Paris.

Jack has to struggle with the open sexuality of Marion's free spirited parents and friends. At one point Jack is thrown into an art exhibit opening at Marion's father's gallery that is filled with erotic paintings and drawings. Jack has to struggle to understand what is being said about the drawings. While Marion

Shocked strays from hip-hop roots to record gospel album

By Len Right
The Morning Call
Allentown, Pa.

The clues that alt-folk singer-songwriter Michelle Shocked was serious about both religion and gospel music have been there all along, apparently hidden in plain sight.

Still, many of Shocked's fans were jolted by the Sept. 4 release of a live gospel recording called "ToHeavenURide" from the one-time self-described punk feminist who rose to fame with albums such as 1988's "Short Sharp Shocked," 1989's "Captain Swing" and 1991's "Arkansas Traveller."

"It's been a long time coming," says the Texas-born Shocked from her home in Los Angeles, the day before she is to catch a red-eye flight to Indianapolis, Md., to begin a tour in support of "ToHeavenURide."

"There was a rumor way back that the break with Mercury Records (a three-year battle she waged in the early 1990s) was over my wanting to make a gospel album," notes Shocked, 44. "That's less untrue than true."

In a 1996 interview with the Detroit News, Shocked (nee Karen Michelle Johnston) confessed she had a spiritual awakening five years earlier while listening to a gospel music choir at a black Pentecostal church in South Central Los Angeles. That transformation was reflected in her "Kind Hearted Woman" album, which was came out in 1996 after a three-year delay.

In 2002, Shocked released "Deep Natural," a soulful set she describes as "gospel-inspired, but not gospel." While touring behind the disc, she teamed with Hot Rize guitarist Nick Forster and members of the West Angeles Cathedral Church of God mass choir for a performance at the 2003 Telluride Bluegrass Festival.

Although her contract specifically prohibited recording producers of a festival DVD unintentionally taped the whole show. "I only found out it existed in February or March," says Shocked. "It was sent to me in a hard drive. I listened to the rough tracks and realized we had a pretty darn good live recording.

"I usually don't like live recordings of mine," adds Shocked. "They never sound as good in playback as they do in live settings."

Another reason Shocked is wary of concert recordings: Her first album, 1986's "Texas Campfire Tapes," was originally recorded directly onto a Sony Walkman at the Kerrville Folk Festival by Pete Lawrence, who claimed to be a writer for the British publication Folk Roots. He released the recording as a bootleg on his Cooking Vinyl label.)

"ToHeavenURide" has moments of real power, including the Shocked originals "Psalm," "Good News" and "Can't Take My Joy," from "Deep Natural" and "Quality of Mercy" from the "Dead Man Walking" soundtrack, as well as heartfelt takes on The Band's "The Weight," Sister Rosetta Tharpe's "Strange Things Happening Every Day" and the Staples Sisters "Wade in the Water."

So, does Shocked, as a born-again Christian, draw a distinction between religion and spirituality?

"No," says Shocked, who at 15 ran away from home in Texas to escape her fundamentalist Mormon mother. "I try to be as direct and up front as I can. But like a good artist, you work your way to the truth. I like it (delivered) in pithy one-liners. Metaphor and simile and other devices poets use are worthwhile in getting to the point. But if you have a truth to tell in my case it's the gospel of Jesus Christ there's no way of pussyfooting around it."

Still, Shocked is not one to swallow any belief system whole. "There are four or five different issues (where) my opinions are different from what you would say is my church's doctrine," she says. "Some of them I've already tried to address."

She recalls being upset when a visiting pastor railed against homosexuality, saying God created Adam and Eve, not Adam and Steve, or Madam and Eve.

"That's the hate doctrine that the right wing uses, and I was surprised to hear it coming from a pulpit of the church I attend," says Shocked. "I spoke to my pastor about it afterward, and he didn't say much. He could only parse it.

"When I made my decision, I decided that the good outweighed the differences that drove me away from God for so many years, so I'm just going to keep the good. I'm very idealistic, and maybe unrealistic."

'Friday Night Lights' recovers

By Diane Werts
Newsday

Everybody who's ever been a parent, or a teen, especially a parent of a teen, can relate to the nerve-rend insight of "Friday Night Lights." In the acclaimed NBC series' second-season return, Kyle Chandler's character is stunned when his crush-riven daughter resists his inquiring about her life during the months he's been halfway across Texas coaching his new college football team.

What does this have to do with you?" she answers flatly, with teen logic obstinacy, and some justification. And things get worse. After she's been up half the night chasing some bar-band stud, dad arrives to retrieve his teary girl, and she finally pours forth in the car. Turns out she's just mortified that if she makes nice in this podunk town, she'll end up like pipes her parents.

Now Friday's episode presents her admission a bit too easily and eloquently, but that's not the point. The miracle here is, as they say about the freq sing-ing offices, not how well it's done but that it's done at all.

Television doesn't deal with the heart anymore as acutely as this show does. Maybe TV never did. The way Chandler and long-distance wife Connie Britton look into each other's eyes, with innate knowing and bedrock devotion. The awkwardness of those desperate-to-mature high-schoolers, whether it's how to touch a girl's arm the first time or how to rebuild trust after they've stupidly stepp together. And there are the adults they grow into, without in some ways growing at all. "Friday Night Lights" boldly lets its characters screw up unspeakably or stew in silence, revealing volumes more than all the apt words in the world could.

This is that rare case where the spin-off surpasses the original: writer-director Peter Berg weaving thicker webs here than he could in his 2004 feature film. That one really was about high school football dominating its dusty Texas town. This one is about the people who devote themselves to the team's dream, which becomes theirs, because they so desperately need one.

NBC's first season fulfilled it on the surface. Chandler's team won state. But the star quarterback was paralyzed in action, and his sweet girlfriend felt in with his drunken fullback with the shattered home life, and the coach's daughter took up with the awkward second-string QB caring for his senile grandmother.

This fall, coach Chandler has moved up and away, miles from his pregnant wife and sulking daughter, hard-headed successor coach (Chris Mulkey) and floundering team. Everything his steady presence had pulled together now threatens to rip apart. And all of this, busy as it may be, is fine. Life is complicated, and Berg's creation zooms close-up on that knottiness in urgent cinema-verite style.

The problem comes when the premiere unduly escalates the melodrama. Coach's wife goes into labor early, when he's far away. A horrific crime is committed, and covered up beyond any reason the show has established. The troubled car salesman being supplanted as the team's biggest booster actually calls somebody a "hippie communist." Life death and other dovetailing promises feel way overplayed.

But "Friday Night Lights" gets its groove back next week, when the script more shrewdly portrays the ways in which exiting one's comfort zone can motivate growth, whether it's the cockily entitled college football star or a grandmother with an evaporating mind. This show captures a distinct culture, and the people jockeying for places in it, trying to prove, mostly to themselves, that their lives have value.

And so "Friday Night Lights" has more than almost any network show today.

Lack of focus to blame in recent defeat

FOCUS from page 8

its flops.

With the game tied 2-2 and time milking off the clock, senior captain Jenny Rochrig took the ball from midfield and shoveled a pass to forward Sydney Stoll. The sophomore broke down the right flank and knocked a cross-over pass in front of the net to senior Britt Canfield, who had been pacing Stoll. But Canfield got tangled up and the ball got past her, rolling innocently by the left post.

Less than two minutes later, Rasmussen tapped in Matthews's late-game corner kick to give the Dukes the 3-2 lead.

"We just kind of came out flat in the beginning and then it just kind of came back to hurt us," Walker said. "But, overall, everyone gave it their all."

She said her team's defense has been top-notch this season and that Sunday's game was uncharacteristic.

"I think our defense has been awesome," she said. "Our whole team just gets along and just is one group. Team chemistry's there. When we let a goal in it's not the end of the world because we know that we're going to work together, talk through it, find out what happened in the goal and just get back out there."

Walker and Rudy said they know the defense will pick itself up soon.

"The spirits are high and we just want to get out there and play and prove ourselves and not have people judge us by one loss to Duquesne," Walker said. "We want to show them this is not how our defense usually plays. It's not how we should be scouted or how we should be looked at."

Heading into a game with Dayton (8-3, 2-1 A-10) at 7:30 p.m. tonight and Xavier (3-8, 2-1 A-10) at 1 p.m. Sunday, UMass still has one of the best defenses in the Atlantic 10, leading the conference with the fewest goals allowed.

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu.

Senior forward Britt Canfield leads the Minutewomen in both assists (7) and points (15). She led the team in goals scored and points in 2006.

UM hopes to rebound

W. SOCCER from page 8

thing over with and move on."

Dayton (8-3, 2-1 A-10) beat UMass at Rudd Field last year, 3-1. The Flyers broke a 1-1 tie when freshmen forward Caitlin Proffitt and Mandi Back scored back-to-back goals. This young talent has been the core of the Flyers team.

This season, Back leads the team with 17 points (eight goals and one assist). The Flyers are ranked behind the Minutewomen at ninth in both the NSCAA/Adidas and Soccer Buzz Great Lakes Regional Rankings.

"They have a lot of depth," Rudy said. "We haven't been able to get a grasp on their system because they have changed it so many times and they play in a really hard place to play in."

Not only do the Flyers have depth, but they are also a young team. Freshman forward Kelly Blumenschein has totaled six points (two goals and two assists), while sophomore forward Colleen Gibson has one goal and three assists and junior midfielder Amanda Gallow has two goals and one assist.

Since their first meeting in 1996, the Minutewomen are 3-9-0 against the Flyers. They have not defeated the Flyers since 1998.

"Colleen [Gibson] is the other package, she's good, she loves to dribble, take you on and get at you," Rudy said.

The atmosphere at Dayton has been a wild scene in years past. Some fans have been ejected for acting out-of-line and shouting unnecessary comments to the UMass players.

"It's a unique environment because all the sound stays inside that little bowl," Rudy said about Baujan Field.

One year, the Flyers Marching Band walked right into the UMass bench area during halftime and was playing very loud. Coach Rudy said he got a little irate and hopes that there is less distraction this year.

"That should be our toughest game of the year, so far," he added.

Xavier (3-8, 2-1 A-10) has started fast in conference play. After losing to Dayton, the Musketeers beat George Washington and Saint Joseph's. Last season, the Minutewomen escaped with a 1-0 victory in overtime. Canfield scored the game's only goal while Kristin Walker played solid, recording 10 saves for the shutout. UMass leads the all-time series, 8-3-1, which dates back to 1992.

"They've had 30 people play in a game this year and they've had 20 different people start," Rudy said. "It's really tough getting a system of play and who does what, but it looks like the last few games they have played a lot less people.

"They played a pretty strong non-conference schedule and didn't win a lot of games," he added. "But some people are saying it's prepared them well. The whole purpose is to prepare them well for the conference [games]."

Leading the Musketeers attack is freshmen forward Carly anne Wenzel, who has 10 points (four goals and two assists). Wenzel earned A-10 Rookie of the Week honors for scoring a goal and notching two assists in the two Xavier conference wins. Sophomore midfielder Brittany Green leads the squad with six assists.

One area that Rudy would like to see improve over the weekend is the defense against corner kicks. Two of Duquesne's goals came from corner kicks.

"Defending corners [is] definitely a spot that's been identified by other people as our weakness," Rudy said.

Steve Gaines can be reached at sgaines@student.umass.edu.

Sophomore forward Sydney Stoll leads the Minutewomen this season with six goals. Three of her tallies have gone for game-winners, coming against Providence, Hartford and Saint Joseph's.

UMass to wrap up non-conference play

M. SOCCER from page 8

When offenses forced chances, UMass midfielders got back into defensive position and disrupted the attack. Against Harvard, UMass allowed the first Crimson score on a free kick. But against the Terriers and Huskies, midfielders maneuvered in front of their opponents and moved the ball into the flanks.

The UMass defense has three forwards to contend with in its match with the Hawks. Junior Andreas Blamo has four goals in his first seven games along with two assists. Senior Gary Muir stands just behind Blamo with three goals and two assists. Like most teams UMass has taken on in 2007, Hartford's roster consists of many players born outside of the United States.

Among the Hawks' top three scorers, only Daniel Antunez is a native of the United States. His six points on two goals and two assists put him ahead of two others tied at three.

Hartford is coming off a 3-1 loss to Connecticut after defeating defending A-10 Champion Rhode Island on Sept. 28. UMass is the third A-10 team on Hartford's schedule. The Hawks defeated Temple, 1-0, on Sept. 22.

Defensively, however, UH has struggled. Senior goalkeeper Matt Glaser's goals-against average is 1.28 for the season.

Hartford's team statistics are very similar to their opponents' totals, as shot attempts, corner kicks and even yellow cards are nearly identical.

The fact that Hartford has succeeded with numbers so close to their opponents is a product of its experience, with 12 players on the Hawks roster that are upperclassmen.

Joe Meloni can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu.

Redshirt junior goalkeeper Zack Simmons tied the school-record for most career shutouts (16) with his win over Boston University on Saturday.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
is looking for students throughout the
FIVE COLLEGES
to write for Arts, Editorials & News
Just send us an email!
Arts@DailyCollegian.com Editorial@DailyCollegian.com News@DailyCollegian.com

Former Amherst Drop Zone
227 Russell Street (Route 9), Hadley, MA
Everything Must Go!
Complete Liquidation
$5,000,000.00 Inventory
30 - 50% OFF
Something For Everyone
• Army-Navy Surplus • Pea Coats • Leather Jackets • Boots & Work Clothes • Lg Inventory T-Shirts • Sweatshirts
• Camping & Hunting Equipment • Flags • Blankets • Knives • Huge Paintball Department
GREAT DOOR SURPRISES!
National Brands Include: Timberland, CAT, Carhartt, Doc Marten, Woolrich, Sorel, Harley Davidson, Buck, Swiss Army, Corcoran, Magnum, Chippewa, Nexgen, Leather King, Tony Lama, Etc.
All Sales Final
Sale Under The Management Of:
CRG Auction
Sale Ends November 26
Hours Of Operation
Mon. -Sat. 10am - 7pm | Sun. 12pm - 6pm
www.crgauction.com • (800) 300-6852

ELEMENTS
HOT • TUB • SPA
GRAND OPENING CELEBRATION ~ Join Us!
FRIDAY, OCT. 5 ~ 4-6 pm
Live Broadcast with The River
Gift Certificate Drawings & Free Stuff
Reservations: 256-
413 Main Street Amherst
20% OFF w/ Student ID Sun-Thurs

UGG australia
Get 'em NOW!
classic tall, classic short, slippers and more!
chestnut chocolate black sand
ZANNA
women's clothing, shoes and accessories
downtown Amherst

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 5, 2007 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Oktoberfest in New Hampshire

This is part one of a two-part series chronicling the journey of three Collegian editors to Oktoberfest in Attitash, New Hampshire.

It was just about an hour and a half past deadline, but we began our trip right on schedule. Derrick and I kidnapped assistant sports editor Joe Meloni and headed east towards the city on the hill, Boston. It would be another 24 hours before Attitash, but we could smell the brews of Oktoberfest two days ago.

Oktoberfest originated in 1810 as a three week long festival, originating during the month of October only because of the favored weather. Nearly 200 years later, millions of people return annually to Germany to take part in the festivities. In recent years, college kids have come to the festival and become too intoxicated and have passed out. In Germany they call these college kids "Bierleichen." "Bierleichen" is German for beer-corpses.

"I hate how people drive out here [Western Mass.]" Derrick said as we barreled towards the Mass. Pike.

Roads in the Pioneer Valley were not designed for cars, it seems. None of them are nearly wide enough for cars and the longest strip of straight asphalt can't be longer than 12 feet.

Dinner, or where we were going to eat dinner more specifically, naturally became a topic of conversation. At this time Joe made the truest statement any Collegian sportswriter has ever made; the double-cheeseburger from McDonald's is the best deal in the history of American commerce. For $0.99, you get two burger patties, two pieces of cheese, a bun and a bevy of delicious pseudo-vegetables.

Oktoberfest might be fun; no one really knows what is going to happen, but we've been talking about and preparing for the event for weeks. We think it'll consist of drinking Sam Adams Octoberfest and rehearsing our German.

"Ich ben ein Berliner," Derrick declared.

Joe concurred.

The forecast for the weekend predicts peak foliage and brisk nights. Tourists from across the country have booked every motel, hotel and hunting lodge in a 25-mile radius forcing the media to find their own means of shelter, i.e. tents and sleeping bags - Keystone Light optional.

Most attempts to write were halted by vaguely sexual references to different women who sporadically appear in our lives. Unfortunately, Tim mixed in a story about his mom and a slumbering postmaster; Derrick and Joe found the tale to be lame.

On this particular Columbus Day weekend the Attitash Ski Area in Bartlett, N.H., is hosting its 10th annual Oktoberfest celebration.

For one weekend a year Bavaria is transported to Northern New England. Complete with a sampling of autumn-themed beers from local microbreweries, such as the Boston Beer Company, Harpoon Brewery and Magic Hat, Attitash will play host to a new-world version of an age old southern-German tradition. No Twisted Tea allowed -- or twist-offs for that matter.

To round the weekend out, a seven-piece King Ludwig Bavarian Brass band will be on hand to play for the assembled beer connoisseurs.

Admission is free for those under 21 and Attitash is providing a kinderplatz with a moonwalk, pumpkin painting and relay races. The non-alcoholic attractions are not exclusive to the under-aged folk; A 23-foot climbing wall and a EuroBungy trampoline will be available for the festival's patrons.

Unlike Oktoberfest, the Natick rest stop on the Mass. Pike isn't very mindful of its patrons. To Joe's dismay, there was no dollar menu, which meant we could not take advantage of the double-cheeseburger deal. We were all sad, briefly, but the weekend ahead curbed our disappointment.

We're told our whole lives that drinking cannot make us happy. The last four years have proved this wrong. The amount of delicious beer available will not directly factor into the mood, but as we cruise through a tunnel with the windows of Derrick's 1996 Oldsmobile down and the radio blasting, nothing can bring us down.

Tim McCall can be reached at tmccall@student.umass.edu

Derrick Perkins can be reached at dperkins@student.umass.edu.

Joe Meloni was returned safely to his mother's apartment at 9:31p.m.

Kegs fly as Oktoberfest-celebrating attendees look on. The Tenth Anniversary Oktoberfest will be held Saturday and Sunday of Columbus Day Weekend at Attitash in Bartlett, New Hampshire.

Tim McCall

Part One

Simple plot hurt 'Paris'

No originality in Delpy's film

By Kevin Koczwara
Collegian Correspondent

With a lack of intrigue, even Woody Allen style humor can't shake the predictability of "2 Days in Paris."

Woody Allen set the standard for smart, witty humor and it's unfair to compare any movie to one like "Annie Hall." "2 Days in Paris," however, is a love story filled with Woody Allen-like humor and characters. The sarcasm is abundant and whole-heartedly satisfying. There are bits of the usual slapstick humor with people in wrong places at the wrong time but it isn't forced or out of place. This is a movie for those who enjoy the clever punch line.

The introduction is a short narrative voiceover by Marion (Julie Deply the writer, director, producer, editor, and female lead) who explains what has happened on her and her boyfriend Jack's (Adam Goldberg) vacation so far.

They are on their way to Paris from Venice by train. Marion gives us a short introduction into the two lovers. She is a photographer who hasn't taken any pictures during the vacation. She was raised in Paris by her two quirky and very funny parents (played by her real-life mother and father). Her frizzy blonde hair and black framed glasses bring instant thoughts of Woody Allen and the term "nerd" to mind. She eventually moved to New York for professional reasons.

Jack is an interior designer who has taken all of the pictures. He is a New Yorker at heart and in appearance. His dark sunglasses and black shirts are the main pieces of clothing in his suitcase representing his dark outlook on life.

Insight into the couple's relationship is the basis of the movie. When Marion and Jack arrive in Paris, they stand outside of the train station in a line of other travelers waiting for a cab. They debate on taking a bus or calling a taxi but both ideas fall through and they end up waiting for a cab.

After the short debate Jack is asked by a group of American tourists, like himself, how far the Louvre is from the station. He kindly gives the group some directions and tells them to walk there because the Louvre is so close a cab wouldn't even take them there.

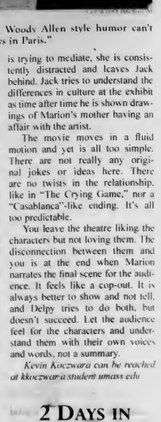
After the group of "Da Vinci Code" reading and pro-Bush tourists begin to walk away, Marion turns to Jack and asks where he sent the tourists. When Jack replies "the Louvre," Marion becomes upset because he has sent the tourists in the wrong direction and the Louvre is miles away from the station. He then turns and moves up in line for a cab and explains to her that that group of tourists is the problem with America today. The plus side to all of this is also that the couple is now second in line for a cab.

This simple insight into the characters gives the viewer an idea of two of the differences in the characters personalities, but lets them know that they do somehow work as a couple.

More insight comes at Marion's apartment building. The couple enters into the building when her mother pops out of a door in the hallway. The apartment (n is in her parent's building. Marion becomes distracted by her mother and Jack heads upstairs. Jack comes back down to help bring in the last of the luggage and begins to tease Marion. They walk up stairs together pulling Marion's large suitcase. Marion at this point tells Jack, "There is no sarcasm in Paris."

Jack replies "I'll be quiet for two days then." This is the basic struggle in the movie that the couple has to overcome.

Jack is struggling to understand the language and culture around him. Marion is reminiscing with old friends, ex-lovers, and her family, but struggles to understand Jack's idea of a relationship. This is the plot of the whole movie. Marion is in control of her surroundings as Jack left behind and confused.



It is both a comedy and a story of true love. The comedy comes in the wit and the struggles that face Jack and Marion while in Paris.

Jack has to struggle with the open sexuality of Marion's free spirited parents and friends. At one point Jack is thrown into an art exhibit opening at Marion's father's gallery that is filled with erotic paintings and drawings. Jack has to struggle to understand what is being said about the drawings. While Marion is trying to mediate, she is consistently distracted and leaves Jack behind. Jack tries to understand the differences in culture at the exhibit as time after time he is shown drawings of Marion's mother having an affair with the artist.

The movie moves in a fluid motion and yet is all too simple. There are not really any original jokes or ideas here. There are no twists in the relationship, like in "The Crying Game," nor a "Casablanca"-like ending. It's all too predictable.

You leave the theatre liking the characters but not loving them. The disconnection between them and you is at the end when Marion narrates the final scene for the audience. It feels like a cop-out. It is always better to show and not tell, and Delpy tries to do both, but doesn't succeed. Let the audience feel for the characters and understand them with their own voices and words, not a summary.

Kevin Koczwara can be reached at kkoczwara@student.umass.edu

'Friday Night Lights' recovers

By Diane Werts
Newsday

Everybody who's ever been a parent, or a teen, or especially a parent of a teen, can relate to the restrained insight of "Friday Night Lights." In the acclaimed NBC series' second-season return, Kyle Chandler's character is stunned when his crush-riven daughter resists his inquiring about her life during the months he's been halfway across Texas coaching his new college football team.

"What does this have to do with you?" she answers flatly, with teen logic/obstinacy, and some justification. And things get worse. After she's been out half the night chasing some bar-band stud, dad arrives to retrieve his teary girl, and she finally pours forth in the car. Turns out she's just mortified that if she makes nice in this podunk town, she'll end up like, yes, her parents.

Now Friday's episode presents her admission a bit too easily, and eloquently, but that's not the point. The miracle here is, as they say about the frog singing off-key, not how well it's done but that it's done at all.

Television doesn't deal with the heart anymore as acutely as this show does. Maybe TV never did. The way Chandler and long-distance wife Connie Britton look into each other's eyes, with innate knowing and bedrock devotion. The awkwardness of those desperate-to-mature high-schoolers, whether it's how to touch a girl's arm the first time or how to rebuild trust after they've stupidly slept together. And there are the adults they grow into, without in some ways growing at all. "Friday Night Lights" boldly lets its characters screw up unspeakably or stew in silence, revealing volumes more than all the apt words in the world could.

This is that rare case where the spin-off surpasses the original, writer-director Peter Berg weaving thicker webs here than he could in his 2004 feature film. That one really was about high school football dominating its dusty Texas town. This one is about the people who devote themselves to the team's dream, which becomes theirs, because they so desperately need one.

NBC's first season fulfilled it on the surface: Chandler's team won state. But the star quarterback was paralyzed in action, and his sweet girlfriend fell in with his drunken fullback with the shattered home life, and the coach's daughter took up with the awkward second-string QB caring for his senile grandmother.

This fall, coach Chandler has moved up and away, miles from his pregnant wife and sulking daughter, hard-headed successor coach (Chris Mulkey) and floundering team. Everything his steady presence had pulled together now threatens to rip apart. And all of this, busy as it may be, is fine. Life is complicated, and Berg's creation zooms close-up on that knottiness in urgent cinema-verite style.

The problem comes when the premiere unduly escalates the melodrama. Coach's wife goes into labor early when he's far away. A horrific crime is committed, and covered up beyond any reason the show has established. The troubled car salesman being supplanted as the team's biggest booster actually calls somebody a "hippie communist." Life/death and other dovetailing ironies feel way overplayed.

But "Friday Night Lights" gets its groove back next week, when the script more shrewdly portrays the ways in which exiting one's comfort zone can motivate growth, whether it's the cockily entitled college football star or a grandmother with an evaporating mind. This show captures a distinct culture, and the people jockeying for places in it, trying to prove, mostly to themselves, that their lives have value.

And so "Friday Night Lights" has more than almost any network show today.

Shocked strays from hip-hop roots to record gospel album

By Len Right
The Morning Call
(Allentown, Pa.)

The clues that alt-folk singer-songwriter Michelle Shocked was serious about both religion and gospel music have been there all along, apparently hidden in plain sight.

Still, many of Shocked's fans were jolted by the Sept. 4 release of a live gospel recording called "ToHeavenURide" from the one-time self-described punk feminist who rose to fame with albums such as 1988's "Short Sharp Shocked," 1989's "Captain Swing" and 1991's "Arkansas Traveller."

"It's been a long time coming," says the Texas-born Shocked from her home in Los Angeles, the day before she is to catch a red-eye flight to Annapolis, Md., to begin a tour in support of "ToHeavenURide."

"There was a rumor way back that the break with Mercury Records (a three-year battle she waged in the early 1990s) was over my wanting to make a gospel album," notes Shocked, 44. "That's less untrue than true."

In a 1996 interview with the Detroit News, Shocked (nee Karen Michelle Johnston) confessed she had a spiritual awakening five years earlier while listening to a gospel music choir at a black Pentecostal church in South Central Los Angeles. That transformation was reflected in her "Kind Hearted Woman" album, which was came out in 1996 after a three-year delay.

In 2002, Shocked released "Deep Natural," a soulful set she describes as "gospel-inspired, but not gospel." While touring behind the disc, she teamed with Hot Rize guitarist Nick Forster and members of the West Angeles Cathedral Church of God mass choir for a performance at the 2003 Telluride Bluegrass Festival.

Although her contract specifically prohibited recording, producers of a festival DVD unintentionally taped the whole show. "I only found out it existed in February or March," says Shocked. "It was sent to me in a hard drive. I listened to the rough tracks and realized we had a pretty darn good live recording.

"I usually don't like live recordings of mine," adds Shocked. "They never sound as good in playback as they do in live settings."

(Another reason Shocked is wary of concert recordings: Her first album, 1986's "Texas Campfire Tapes," was originally recorded directly onto a Sony Walkman at the Kerrville Folk Festival by Pete Lawrence, who claimed to be a writer for the British publication Folk Roots. He released the recording as a bootleg on his Cooking Vinyl label.)

"ToHeavenURide" has moments of real power, including the Shocked originals "Psalm," "Good News" and "Can't Take My Joy" from "Deep Natural" and "Quality of Mercy" from the "Dead Man Walking" soundtrack, as well as heartfelt takes on The Band's "The Weight," Sister Rosetta Tharpe's "Strange Things Happening Every Day" and the Staples Sisters' "Wade in the Water."

So, does Shocked, as a born-again Christian, draw a distinction between religion and spirituality?

No," says Shocked, who at 15 ran away from home in Texas to escape her fundamentalist Mormon mother. "I try to be as direct and up front as I can. But like a good artist, you work your way to the truth. ... I like it (delivered) in pithy one-liners. Metaphor and simile and other devices poets use are worthwhile in getting to the point. But if you have a truth to tell in my case it's the gospel of Jesus Christ there's no way of pussyfooting around it."

Still, Shocked is not one to swallow any belief system whole. "There are four or five different issues (where) my opinions are different from what you would say is my church's doctrine," she says. "Some of them I've already tried to address."

She recalls being upset when a visiting pastor railed against homosexuality, saying God created Adam and Eve, not Adam and Steve, or Madam and Eve.

"That's the hate doctrine that the right wing uses, and I was surprised to hear it coming from a pulpit of the church I attend," says Shocked. "I spoke to my pastor about it afterward, and he didn't say much. He could only parse it.

"When I made my decision, I decided that the good outweighed the differences that drove me away from God for so many years, so I'm just going to keep the good. I'm very idealistic, and maybe unrealistic."

Lack of focus to blame in recent defeat

FOCUS from page 8

its flops.

With the game tied 2-2 and time milking off the clock, senior captain Jenny Roehrig took the ball from midfield and shoveled a pass to forward Sydney Stoll. The sophomore broke down the right flank and knocked a cross-over pass in front of the net to senior Britt Canfield, who had been pacing Stoll. But Canfield got tangled up and the ball got past her, rolling innocently by the left post.

Less than two minutes later, Rasmussen tapped in Matthews's late-game corner kick to give the Dukes the 3-2 lead.

"We just kind of came out flat in the beginning and then it just kind of came back to hurt us," Walker said. "But, overall, everyone gave it their all."

She said her team's defense has been top-notch this season and that Sunday's game was uncharacteristic.

"I think our defense has been awesome," she said. "Our whole team just gets along and just is one group. Team chemistry's there. When we let a goal in it's not the end of the world because we know that we're going to work together, talk through it, find out what happened in the goal and just get back out there."

Walker and Rudy said they know the defense will pick itself up soon.

"The spirits are high and we just want to get out there and play and prove ourselves and not have people judge us by one loss to Duquesne," Walker said. "We want to show them this is not how our defense usually plays. It's not how we should be scouted or how we should be looked at."

Heading into a game with Dayton (8-3, 2-1 A-10) at 7:30 p.m. tonight and Xavier (3-8, 2-1 A-10) at 1 p.m. Sunday, UMass still has one of the best defenses in the Atlantic 10, leading the conference with the fewest goals allowed.

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu

Senior forward Britt Canfield leads the Minutewomen in both assists (7) and points (15). She led the team in goals scored and points in 2006.

UM hopes to rebound

W. SOCCER from page 8

thing over with and move on."

Dayton (8-3, 2-1 A-10) beat UMass at Rudd Field last year, 3-1. The Flyers broke a 1-1 tie when freshmen forward Caitlin Proffitt and Mandi Back scored back-to-back goals. This young talent has been the core of the Flyers team.

This season, Back leads the team with 17 points (eight goals and one assist). The Flyers are ranked behind the Minutewomen at ninth in both the NSCAA/Adidas and Soccer Buzz Great Lakes Regional Rankings.

"They have a lot of depth," Rudy said. "We haven't been able to get a grasp on their system because they have changed it so many times and they play in a really hard place to play in."

Not only do the Flyers have depth, but they are also a young team. Freshman forward Kelly Blumenschein has totaled six points (two goals and two assists), while sophomore forward Colleen Gibson has one goal and three assists and junior midfielder Amanda Gallow has two goals and one assist.

Since their first meeting in 1996, the Minutewomen are 3-9-0 against the Flyers. They have not defeated the Flyers since 1998.

"Colleen [Gibson] is the other package, she's good, she loves to dribble, take you on and get at you," Rudy said.

The atmosphere at Dayton has been a wild scene in years past. Some fans have been ejected for acting out-of-line and shouting unnecessary comments to the UMass players.

"It's a unique environment because all the sound stays inside that little bowl," Rudy said about Baujan Field.

One year, the Flyers Marching Band walked right into the UMass bench area during halftime and was playing very loud. Coach Rudy said he got a little irate and hopes that there is less distraction this year.

"That should be our toughest game of the year, so far," he added.

Xavier (3-8, 2-1 A-10) has started fast in conference play. After losing to Dayton, the Musketeers beat George Washington and Saint Joseph's. Last season, the Minutewomen escaped with a 1-0 victory in overtime. Canfield scored the game's only goal, while Kristin Walker played solid, recording 10 saves for the shutout. UMass leads the all-time series, 8-5-1, which dates back to 1992.

"They've had 30 people play in a game this year and they've had 20 different people start," Rudy said. "It's really tough getting a system of play and who does what, but it looks like the last few games they have played a lot less people.

"They played a pretty strong non-conference schedule and didn't win a lot of games," he added. "But some people are saying it's prepared them well. The whole purpose is to prepare them well for the conference [games]."

Leading the Musketeers attack is freshmen forward Caitlynne Wetzel, who has 10 points (four goals and two assists). Wetzel earned A-10 Rookie of the Week honors for scoring a goal and notching two assists in the two Xavier conference wins. Sophomore midfielder Brittany Green leads the squad with six assists.

One area that Rudy would like to see improve over the weekend is the defense against corner kicks. Two of Duquesne's goals came from corner kicks.

"Defending corners [is] definitely a spot that's been identified by other people as our weakness," Rudy said.

Steve Gomes can be reached sgomes@student.umass.edu

Sophomore forward Sydney Stoll leads the Minutewomen this season with six goals. Three of her tallies have gone for game-winners, coming against Providence, Hartford and Saint Joseph's.

UMass to wrap up non-conference play

M. SOCCER from page 8

When offenses forced chances, UMass midfielders got back into defensive position and disrupted the attack. Against Harvard, UMass allowed the first Crimson score on a free kick. But against the Terriers and Huskies, midfielders maneuvered in front of their opponents and moved the ball into the flanks.

The UMass defense has three forwards to contend with in its match with the Hawks. Junior Andreas Blamo has four goals in his first seven games along with two assists. Senior Gary Muir stands just behind Blamo with three goals and two assists. Like most teams UMass has taken on in 2007, Hartford's roster consists of many players born outside of the United States.

Among the Hawks' top three scorers, only Daniel Antunez is a native of the United States. His six points on two goals and two assists put him ahead of two others tied at three.

Hartford is coming off a 3-1 loss to Connecticut after defeating defending A-10 Champion Rhode Island on Sept. 28. UMass is the third A-10 team on Hartford's schedule. The Hawks defeated Temple, 1-0, on Sept. 22.

Defensively, however, UH has struggled. Senior goalkeeper Matt Glaser's goals-against average is 1.28 for the season.

Hartford's team statistics are very similar to their opponents' totals, as shot attempts, corner kicks and even yellow cards are nearly identical.

The fact that Hartford has succeeded with numbers so close to their opponents is a product of its experience, with 12 players on the Hawks roster that are upperclassmen.

Joe Meloni can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu

Redshirt junior goalkeeper Zack Simmons tied the school record for most career shutouts (16) with his win over Boston University on Saturday.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
is looking for students throughout the
FIVE COLLEGES
to write for Arts, Editorials & News
Just send us an email!
Arts@DailyCollegian.com Editorial@DailyCollegian.com News@DailyCollegian.com

Former Amherst Drop Zone
227 Russell Street (Route 9), Hadley, MA
Everything Must Go!
Complete Liquidation
$5,000,000.00 Inventory
30 - 50% OFF
Something For Everyone
• Army-Navy Surplus • Pea Coats • Leather Jackets • Boots & Work Clothes • Lg Inventory T-Shirts • Sweatshirts
• Camping & Hunting Equipment • Flags • Blankets • Knives • Huge Paintball Department
GREAT DORM SUPPLIES!!!
National Brands Include: Timberland, CAT, Carhartt, Doc Marten, Woolrich, Sorel, Harley Davidson, Buck, Swiss Army, Corcoran, Magnum, Chippewa, Nexgen, Leather King, Tony Lama, Etc.
All Sales Final
Sale Under The Management Of:
CRG Auction
Hours Of Operation
Mon.-Sat. 10am - 7pm | Sun. 12pm - 6pm
Sale Ends November 26
www.crgauction.com • (800) 300-6852

ELEMENTS HOT • TUB • SPA
Individual & Couples Massage Reiki
GRAND OPENING CELEBRATION – Join Us!
FRIDAY, OCT. 5 ~ 4-6 pm
Live Broadcast with The River
Gift Certificate Drawings & Free Stuff
20% OFF w/ Student ID Sun-Thurs
256-TUBS

UGG australia
Get 'em NOW!
classic tall, classic short, slippers and more!
chestnut chocolate black sand
ZANNA
women's clothing, shoes and accessories
downtown Amherst

FILE PHOTO/UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior runner Amber Sayer missed last week's meet with an illness, but is expected to compete this weekend in the New England Championships.

UM runners primed for meet

O'Brien, LaFreniere have more healthy teams for this weekend

By Melissa Turtinen
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts cross country teams will race in the New England Championships at Boston's Franklin Park on Saturday.

This meet is open to all schools, Division I, II, and III, from the New England states. The variety of teams will bring tough competition for the both UMass squads.

"[The New England Championships] is probably the only conference championship in the country that has a combination of Division I, II, and III schools competing for it," said UMass men's coach Ken O'Brien. "That is why it's so large."

The men's team is ranked No. 10 and the women No. 19 in the third edition of the 2007 New England Collegiate Cross Country Poll that, released on Oct. 2.

The men will be competing against approximately 45 teams with around 350 individual runners. Their toughest competition will likely come from Providence (ranked in the top 15 in the country), Dartmouth and Brown, which are both ranked in the top 25.

The Minutemen are coming off of a successful meet from last Friday where they took 11th place in the Paul Short Invitational. This meet had some of the top cross country programs from around the nation. Although the men were hoping for better placement, the tough competition prepared them for this Saturday.

The Minutemen came away from the meet learning how to race in a big crowd and remain close with the other runners on their team, according to O'Brien. Learning from last week's meet is one of the team goals for this weekend.

"We're a balanced and tight team – we don't have one leading point scorer on our team," O'Brien said. "We are more on balance and depth as opposed to a superstar."

He said he thinks any of his top seven runners could lead the team this Saturday.

O'Brien believes that the Minutemen will exceed their rank in recent polls and hopefully do better than eighth place. Last year the men's team finished eighth overall out of 45 teams.

The Minutewomen are traveling to Boston with lower expectations, due to a virus that has infected numerous players on the team.

There will be around 45 teams that the women will compete against from all different levels. Last year the women placed 16th out of 46 teams.

"Boston College and Providence College are two of the top programs in the country, certainly in New England," UMass women's coach Julie LaFreniere said regarding the competition the Minutewomen will face Saturday. "I've been trying to keep the team together, last week proved to be a disaster."

The Minutewomen struggled last week at the Paul Short Invitational due to many top runners not being able to participate. They placed 36th against many nationally-ranked runners, including last year's NCAA champion. Last Friday helped UMass prepare for this weekend because they left the meet feeling a little disappointed with their performances. According to LaFreniere, that will urge her team to make it up in the next race.

The Minutewomen look to senior Christina DeRosa to lead the team this Saturday. DeRosa finished 21st out of 317 runners last week.

"DeRosa has been feeling great and has been competing very well," LaFreniere said. "As long as she stays healthy, she'll take a minute off from her time last year and make it in the top ten."

Last year DeRosa finished 32nd overall with a time of 18 minutes, 30 seconds.

Senior Amber Sayer was unable to compete last week because she was ill, but is expected to be racing on Saturday. LaFreniere said that Sayer is back to where she was before she got sick.

"My goal is to survive this week with the athletes that we have," LaFreniere said. "We will not be going to the Championships with the full team. I'm hoping after this weekend everyone will be back on their feet."

Although the Minutewomen might be struggling health-wise this weekend, the course at Franklin Park could be to their advantage. The women will run 5,000 meters and according to LaFreniere, the course is fast, with few hills. This is a plus for the UMass freshmen who are more "middle–distance" runners, according to LaFreniere.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtine@student.umass.edu.

Freshmen paying off

Sowry's first recruiting class giving postive results in 2007

By Justin McGrail
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts field hockey team is hosting a doubleheader this weekend in Amherst. The Minutewomen are 5-6 and are looking to get back to .500. A big part of that effort is coming from the stellar play of the rookies on the team.

UMass coach Justine Sowry's first recruiting class has yielded three standouts, Makaela Potts, Katie Kelly and Jamie Bourazeris.

Potts, a midfielder, has seen action in all 11 games this season and has started seven of them. In her time on the field, she has been an effective ball-carrier. At Albany, she moved the ball a lot and was responsible for setting up multiple plays on the offensive end. Potts has also been effective in executing penalty corners.

She is always in the lineup and most of the time she is one of the players shooting the ball, baiting defenders with a fake shot or working the ball near the net for the chance to score.

Kelly started the season on the bench for the Minutewomen but has come into her own over the last few games. She earned a starting spot after performing well in a reserve role. Coming off the bench, Kelly scored her first-career goal in the team's 5-0 blowout of Harvard and added her second in a 2-1 win over Siena College.

Since earning the starting job, she's added her first-career assist, which came in a 2-1 win over Brown, and has continued to put pressure on opposing goalkeepers. She put five shots on goal over those three games. Kelly earned her starting spot because she has reinvented her game. At the last home contest, she was making plays all over the field. She said she was trying to work on her movement through the offensive zone and it has produced results.

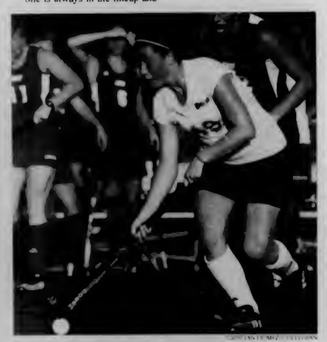
The player who's made the most of her time is Bourazeris. The defender has started all 11 games alongside senior veterans Erin O'Brien and Kristina DoRosario. She scored her first-career goal in the tough loss to Connecticut. Sowry speaks highly of Bourazeris.

"Jamie Bourazeris, in particular, has been a key player for us," Sowry said.

Before the season started, Sowry thought that Bourazeris would be competing for a starting spot. And now that she has shown that she is a solid addition to an already proven backfield, she has the job.

Sowry also commented on how potentially risky it can be to let freshmen see playing time so early in their careers.

"I think anytime when freshmen come in the beginning stages of their career you don't really know what sort of contribution they're going to make," Sowry said. "[And] particularly when you only have two weeks to get the team ready."



She also added that the freshmen who have seen time have earned their spots through hard work in practice and performance on the field, and is pleased with the contributions they have made. As for the other three freshmen, Ariana Cappelli, Christine Dzwill and Courtney Mayerick, Sowry remains optimistic.

"In terms of the other three, they still need to be working hard. We need depth off the bench and we're looking for contribution from them," Sowry said.

Their futures remain uncertain, though. Sowry said that she was unsure if they would see as much time as Kelly, Potts and Bourazeris and that they would see time depending on the situation and future time would depend on how well they did in practice and on the field.

The freshmen will look to help the Maroon and White get back on track with a pair of wins in the opening weekend of conference play.

Justin McGrail can be reached at jsmcgrail@student.umass.edu.

Senior midfielder Kara Murphy has recorded one assist this season in 11 games, including seven starts. She tallied five assists in 2006.

A-10 begins

FIELD HOCKEY from page 8

and when to back off, and putting pressure on the ball.

"We are looking for her to generate some attack when we have the ball," Sowry said. "We're really trying to work on her consistency, when she's playing well she's the best player."

Usually Sowry rotates the starting goaltender every game between Sarah Williams and Becky Mourneau. However, although Becky started last week, she will start in goal again this week. Williams has an undisclosed injury and Sowry said she was questionable to play.

The Minutewomen have a nice advantage in that they get to open up their conference slate at home. Playing at Garber Field has been a big advantage for the Maroon and White, the team is 2-4 on the road and 3-1 at home so far this season (they played one game on a neutral field). Last year the team only won two games total at home.

The start of conference play is almost like the start of a whole new season. The teams with the top four conference records get invited to the A-10 tournament. Last year the team missed the cut with a 3-4 record, but Sowry badly wants to make the tournament in her first year.

"I'm nervously excited just because we are starting the A-10s but this is what it's all about," she said. "Just seeing how we are going to measure up with our opponents. It's exciting, it's at home and the energy is going to be there. I think what the girls have brought this week to practice has been phenomenal."

Scott Feldman can be reached Sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

Senior forward Rachael Mervine has played in all 11 games this season for the Minutewomen, making six starts. She has been held scoreless.

UMass rowing team set for race

By Coley Michalik
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts rowing team will attempt to repeat its Week One results this Saturday at the Head of the Housatonic Regatta in Derby, Conn.

The event is hosted by Yale and holds tougher competition than the Head of the Textile Regatta last weekend (UMass won four events and took second in three others).

"This weekend is going to be tougher for our team," said UMass coach Jim Dietz. "The competition is going to be a lot better. This meet is hosted by Yale University, who won the national championship last year and there should be some [Atlantic 10] teams like Rhode Island, Fordham, etc."

Senior captain Sarah Marsan agreed this weekend is more of a challenge but felt confident about her team.

"I think we'll do well," she said. "We've been training much harder this week, especially in the mornings, and we are very prepared. Not only do these workouts train us physically but they make us bond and become more of a team which is very important since we are so young."

Dietz expects Yale to be better competition compared to Simmons and Worcester Polytechnic, as well as being championship contenders. He credits the recruiting process for that.

"Yale gets a lot of recruits year after year carrying on tradition, whereas at UMass, we rely more on walk-ons," Dietz said.

The Minutewomen hope to keep their momentum from last weekend's meet. UMass won the open eight, novice eight, quad and lightweight single while taking second in the lightweight four, open single and lightweight eight.

Both Marsan and Dietz pointed out the abundance of teamwork in the season opener and from such a young team (18 freshman, 14 sophomores, 10 juniors and nine seniors) that was key to obtaining victory.

Last week Fordham took control of its meet by winning the third annual Peter J. Sharp Head of the Harlem on the Harlem River. Fordham only entered one boat in the competition, but they set the fastest time for the Varsity 8, male or female, for the day at 13minutes, 58 seconds. Meanwhile, the Head of the Housatonic is the season opener for the URI and Yale squads.

UMass looks to repeat its successes from last week while holding off Fordham, which also looks to continue its winning ways. Yale and URI may come out with a slow start, seeing that this is their first meet of the season.

With such a young team, the upperclassmen need to step up as they did during last week's races.

"They did a great job," Dietz said. "They took the initiative to do a lot of off-water training as well as the mandatory team workouts."

With another strong performance this week, the Minutewomen would be setting themselves up for a successful season – in addition to building the team for the future with so many underclassmen.

Coley Michalik can be reached at emichali@student.umass.edu.

LA PIAZZA PIZZA
GRAND OPENING
FAST FREE DELIVERY OR PICK-UP
CALL (413)253-6444
PIZZA CALZONES SUBS
SALADS WINGS ENTREES
AND MORE
30 BOLTWOOD WALK
AMHERST, MA
HOURS OF OPERATION
SUN 4 PM - 1 AM
MON - THU 4 PM - 2 AM
FRI - SAT 4 PM - 3 AM
Check Our Menu On Line
WWW.LAPIAZZARISTORANTE.US
Click on our "TO GO MENU"
Delivery drivers wanted!
Call after 4 PM, everyday

comedy CONNECTION
HUKELAU
413-593-5222
705 Memorial Drive in Chicopee
www.hukelau.com
ORDER YOUR TICKETS TODAY!
THIS SATURDAY!
From HBO's "Tourgasm" & Comedy Central's "Tough Crowd with Colin Quinn"
ROBERT KELLY
OCT. 27TH
From the movies "Norbit," "Date Movie," "Deuce Bigalow" & "Undercover Brother"
EDDIE GRIFFIN
DEC. 1ST
Star of the HBO special "D.L. Hughley: Unapologetic" and Host of BET's "1/2 Hr."
D.L. HUGHLEY
OCT. 20TH
Host of NBC's "Last Comic Standing" & from FOX TV's "Fastlane" BILL BELLAMY
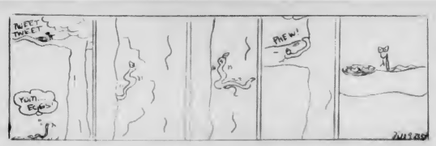
NOV. 3RD
From "The Howard Stern Show" and star of the HBO special "Robert Schimmel: Unprotected"
ROBERT SCHIMMEL

amherst cinema
FRI 10/5-THU 10/11
IS THE SHADOW OF THE MOON
"Riveting! Enthralling! Will capture you entirely." Kenneth Turan
2:15 5:00 7:40 OPENS FRI 10/5
IN THE VALLEY OF ELAH
Baby-friendly show! 10/9 2:00
2:00 4:30 7:00 9:30
2 DAYS IN PARIS
2:20 5:15 7:20
DEATH AT A FUNERAL 9:20
once 9:40
28 AMITY ST. DOWNTOWN AMHERST
413-253-2547
www.AmherstCinema.org

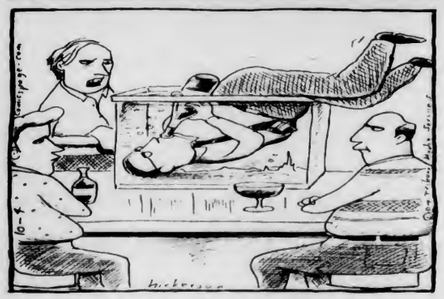


Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

5	9	4	1		8
			5	6		9
	7				9
	1	3				4	8
				4
	5	7				6	9
			3				7
		6		8	7
			6		5	3	4	8

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"If you obey all the rules, you miss all the fun."
-Katharine Hepburn



ECOLOGY By Jen Fill

LAST DITCH EFFORT By John Kroes

THE QUIGMANS By Buddy Hickerson

"That's just Bob. He drinks like a fish."

ACROSS
1 Jab deliverer
5 Atlantic and Pacific
11 Rockies zone
14 Golden Rule preposition
15 Remove from power
16 Flock member
17 Identifying mark
18 Join
20 Filetta units
22 Doctrine
23 Haggard or Oberon
24 Chopper blade
26 Mutiny
27 Like some cows?
29 Part of an act
31 Docs' bloc
32 "Me ___ and Irene"
34 Not entirely closed
38 Disoriented
40 Unbelievable bargain
41 Pre-Euro currency
42 Elder or alder
43 Evening repast
45 Genteel affair
46 Must-haves
48 Biting shape
50 Part of TGIF
53 Memorial marker
54 Highway divisions
55 School grp.
57 Body hairs
60 Component
63 R.I.P. notice
64 Sense of self
65 Pinpoint
66 Pueblo dwellers
67 Match unit
68 Deckhand
69 Breakfast choice

DOWN
1 Diner
2 Part of a yard
3 Spiral flight, sometimes
4 Lethargy
5 Atrium track
6 TV studio warning
7 Invites
8 Straw one as a light touch
10 Poilen producing organ
11 Paris underground
12 Hogwash
13 Basic belief
19 Disclose
21 Gabriel part
25 Homeric epic
28 Mirror
27 NeO
28 ___ vincit omnia
29 Oozes
30 Applaud
33 Bell ornament
35 Strenuous acrobatic dance
36 Territory
37 Hindi part
39 Sensitive
44 Cheer (for)
47 Art stands
49 Forty winks
50 Takes to the air
51 Mountain's subdivision
52 Fort Knox bar
53 Stocking stuffer
55 Type size
56 Players on a sofa
58 Be a stool pigeon
59 Elevator man
61 John or Jane?
62 Sawbuck

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Fifty-seven Down: Tricky Bamboo Eater

Submit your comics!
collegiancomics@yahoo.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You are a weak-willed piece of clay easily shaped by others. Harden up!

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You are Potty-seidon, god of the toilet and all who dwell within its mystical bowl.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Start a rickshaw service between campus and Puffton and be a designated puller.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Ask a very tall person if a bird has ever flown into their face.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Let me tell you a secret: there is no 57 down in today's crossword.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Wear Heelies out this weekend so you can easily evade angry bike police.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Be BOLD.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Tell touchy guys that your mother was a poison dart frog and thus your skin is toxic.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Given the name, you'd think more men would seek manicures.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Take a drive through town and map the location of all the roadkill in Amherst.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
People think you smell bad, but on the bright side flies seem to love you.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Chicken is your lucky food for the weekend. You best start rocking that sultry poultry.

This weekend:
Shark vs Bear
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ACTIVITIES
Montreal weekend from $99.00. Complete, motel, transportation and more. Montreal express.net 781-979-9001. Lowest Prices on campus.

ANNOUNCEMENTS
Free! Ride to Church & back in Dwight Chapel Van. Be at Haigis Mall @ 10:00am or Converse Hall @ 10:20am Sundays. www.dwightchapel.org See you there!

AUTO FOR SALE
Volvo GLE Sedan 1988 106000. $2100 5% Umass Discount. Tom: 256-6401.

EMPLOYMENT
Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext. 162

Drivers wanted. Must be able to work 20 to 30hrs a week. Nights and weekends. Apply at DP Dough, downtown Amherst.

EMPLOYMENT
Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

FOUND
Watch found on 10/3 in Boyden men's shower room. To claim go to Umass Police Dept.

INSTRUCTION
University Bartending Classes start soon. 1-800-U-CAN-MIX. www.universitybartending.com. Sign up now.

SALONS AND SPAS
HOLISTIC SALON AND SPA. Natural smooth body sugaring (wax) www.shearblissamherst.com. 413-253-2322

SERVICES
Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

SERVICES
Concerned About Your Eating? Do you eat too little? Eat too much? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling & rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential. Affordable. Safe. 413-548-9992 27 Pray St., Amherst www.tapestryhealth.org

TRAVEL
#1 Spring Break Website! 4 & 7 night trips. Low prices guaranteed. Group discounts for 8+. Book 20 people get 3 free trips! Campus reps needed. www.StudentCity.com or 800-293-1445

Spring Break 2008 Sell Trips, Earn Cash & Go Free. Call for group discounts. Best Deals Guaranteed! Info/Reservations 800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

OCT 5 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 5, 2007

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass looks to regain form

Following first loss, UM gets back to work

BY STEVE GAMES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts women's soccer team travels to Ohio this weekend to take on Atlantic 10 foes Dayton tonight and Xavier on Sunday.

The Minutewomen (6-1-1, 1-1 A-10) are coming off their first loss this season against Duquesne, 3-2 on Sunday. They lost more than just a game, as junior defender Melissa Toulouse left the contest game after suffering a concussion.

UMass coach Jim Rudy said she has not been cleared to play yet. Senior midfielder Christina Nunes battled back to nearly full strength after spraining her MCL in preseason. She also left the game with a serious knee injury and is out for the rest of the season.

Senior forward Britt Canfield practiced all week with a bad ankle and is expected to play tonight. Canfield is the team's top-scorer with 15 points on four goals and seven assists.

"You are who you put on the field and you try not to make too many excuses for it, that's why you have a squad of 20 kids," Rudy said.

These losses are crushing to the team, as they were starting to get healthy going into conference play. This week in practice the Minutewomen have still maintained their focus for the next two games and have put the defeat behind them.

"I don't think it's going to stay with them," Rudy said. "[We're thinking] let's get this undefeated

See W. SOCCER on page 5

Redshirt senior goalkeeper Kristin Walker and the Minutewomen lost their first game of the season Sunday against Duquesne. They travel to Ohio for a pair of Atlantic 10 Conference games this weekend. They take on Dayton tonight and Xavier two days later.

Little focus during defeat

Rudy unhappy with effort

BY DOMENIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With its 3-2 loss to Duquesne on Sunday, the Massachusetts women's soccer team doubled its goals-allowed total this season. The mix of atypical performances and misfortune has left the frustrated Minutewomen wondering just one thing: What happened?

"I think we lost a little bit of our focus," UMass coach Jim Rudy said. "I just don't think we were as focused in there as we needed to be. It was a very unusual game and we're going to have to improve that focus."

He went on to say his team was drained from a trip to Philadelphia to play Saint Joseph's (2-7, 0-1 Atlantic 10) two days earlier. After beating the Hawks, 3-0, UMass (6-1-1, 1-1-0 A-10) hopped on the bus for a long ride back to campus. The team got back to campus at 3 a.m.

The long trek to Pennsylvania, following a week of classes and midterms took its toll on the Minutewomen, who seemed winded and fatigued Sunday afternoon.

One area that has been especially troublesome for the Minutewomen is defending against corner kicks. Of the six goals UMass has allowed, four have come on corners, including two in Sunday's matchup.

The Dukes (4-4, 1-1 A-10) drew first blood six minutes, 25 seconds into the game when senior Audra Matthews lined up for a corner kick. The shot bounced around the net, where it was punched in by sophomore Christina Murawski to put the Dukes up 1-0. Matthews was credited with the assist.

Lightning would strike a second time at 80:20, when another Matthews corner kick bounced around near the goal. This time senior Faye Rasmussen booted a loose ball past UMass goalkeeper Kristin Walker. The goal made it 3-2 Duquesne.

The Dukes' seeond goal was scored in the 27th minute when sophomore Shiana Geisler laced a shot over Walker from about 30 yards out.

But Rudy said he couldn't blame Walker for the goal.

"I don't know who in the world would have saved it," he said.

Though the defense had an off day, the offense was not without

See FOCUS on page 5

Bryan Hogan battles for the ball in an exhibition match vs. Montreal earlier this season, while teammate Mark DeSantis looks on. The Minutemen travel to Hartford Saturday for a road matchup with the Hawks.

Minutemen battle Hawks

Koch and Co. face Hartford before conference play begins

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts men's soccer team travels south on Saturday for a matchup with Hartford.

The Minutemen (4-4-0) are coming off a two-game winning streak after dropping three consecutive games. The wins came against Boston University, 1-0, and Northeastern, 2-0, in the first two home games of the season. UMass will need to continue its progression against the Hawks (5-2-1) who lead the all-time series 11-6-1.

Last season, UMass defeated Hartford, 1-0, on a Bryan Hogan goal on Sept. 15. The Minutemen were No. 22 in the NSCAA/adidas poll at that point.

Consistent offensive production eluded the Minutemen in the beginning of the season. But UMass appears to have located its touch, scoring goals in each of its last three games.

Freshman Stuart Amick scored the game-winning goal in UMass's win over Boston University last Saturday. It was his second of the season – his first came against Harvard in a 2-1 loss.

He's adapted well to playing on the left side after spending most of his time on the right prior to playing in Amherst. Both of his scores came at times when the Minutemen needed a goal, at Harvard to get back into the contest and against BU to take control of the match.

The improved offensive output has not hurt UMass's defensive play. In fact, its only two shutouts came in the two home wins. The entire team looked fresher and executed its assignments better than it had in earlier games.

See M. SOCCER on page 5

A–10 slate set to begin

Minutewomen welcome West Chester to Garber Field today

BY SCOTT FELDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

This afternoon at Garber Field, the Massachusetts field hockey team kicks off Atlantic 10 Conference play against the West Chester Golden Rams.

UMass (5-6) is coming off of a difficult game Sunday against No. 17 Albany. The team started off very promising when Cher King scored an impressive goal less than five minutes into the game. The defense, which is usually the strength of the team, allowed the Great Danes to rally back with three first-half goals. While they tightened up the defense in the second half, the damage was done and UMass lost, 3-1.

West Chester (3-7) has far less talent than Albany and they are currently in the midst of a six-game losing streak. The major concern for the Minutewomen is their tendency to play down to the level of inferior competition. UMass coach Justine Sowry notices the trend and wants to make sure it doesn't happen today.

"Maintaining that high level of play is one of the issues we're struggling with at the moment," Sowry said, referring to the team's consistency issues.

West Chester is led by forward Sara Conrad, who has scored seven goals at this point of the season. But aside from her, the team doesn't have many weapons, so Sowry believes the best strategy to use against West Chester is to stick to the basics and have the team impose it's will on the Golden Rams.

"It's very crucial for us that we stick to the gameplan, get return in the circle, and hope at the end of the day we get a positive result," Sowry said.

As usual, penalty corners will be the focus of the UMass gameplan. Sowry noted that the team has improved in getting penalty corner chances, but the execution of the set plays is not as sharp as it needs to be. In the match against Albany, the Minutewomen earned six penalty corners to Albany's five, but could not convert the chances into goals.

Sowry believes the offense is improving throughout the course of the season.

"We're definitely generating more chances, [and] our circle efficiency has improved, but obviously we are still searching for more goals," Sowry said.

UMass has a big advantage on defense due to the talent of its defensive backfield. Captain Erin O'Brien, Kristina DeRosario and newcomer Jamie Bourazeris are among the team's best players and Sowry praised their overall consistency this season.

The player who will be the major key to the Minutewomen's success or failure will be freshman midfielder Makaela Potts-Potts, alongside Cher King will be in charge of setting up the UMass offense, deciding when to press

See FIELD HOCKEY on page 6

Senior midfielder Nicole Phelan has started all 11 games this season for the Minutewomen. Atlantic 10 Conference play starts for the team today at Garber Field in a matchup against West Chester.

Not Published

Holiday

OCT
9
2007

PAST WRESTLING ROYALTY COMES TO UM | PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN
NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY [illegible]96

PARTLY CLOUDY : HI: 69 LO: 59 | WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM | TUESDAY, OCTOBER 9, 2007

Seafood week succeeds at UM

Dining Services introduces Alaskan seafood to students

By Ben Williams
Collegian Staff

Last week, students had the chance to eat Alaskan seafood while learning about sustainability and nutrition.

The University of Massachusetts Dining Services teamed up with the Alaska Seafood Marketing Institute (ASMI) to bring in salmon, cod, halibut, scallops and black cod – all sustainably farmed in Alaska.

UMass also brought in Randy Rice, the technical program director at ASMI, to talk about sustainability and nutrition.

Sophomore John Dunn said he "enjoyed the cod with scallions" in the Berkshire dining common last Thursday. He said he loves seafood and would like to see a seafood week again in the future.

Sophia Yavorski, a freshman, didn't like the fried fish, but loves seafood and would like to see more too.

However, neither student said he or she learned much about the nutrition or sustainability of fish, though Rice addressed concerns he said have been overplayed in the media about mercury and PCBs.

"We're not seeing any toxicological effects on development [from mercury]," said Rice. "Benefits [of eating fish] far outweigh the risks."

He also said that one is "not likely to get the correct story from the popular media … do a little investigation on your own."

Rice is concerned that people advised against eating a lot of fish will consequently eat almost no fish. He said that fish are one of the only sources of long-chain omega-3s which are good for combating heart disease, the number one cause of death in the United States.

Rice also talked about sustainable fishing practices, which he said the state of Alaska's fisheries adhere to.

According to the Dining Services blog of Ken Toong, executive director of Food Services at the University, "UMass Dining Services is supporting seafood sustainability and will become a partner of Seafood Watch. The Seafood Watch is a program of Monterey Bay Aquarium designed to raise consumer awareness about the importance of buying seafood from sustainable sources. Starting this September, we will eliminate the Atlantic cod on the menu; instead we will serve Pacific cod, haddock, and tilapia." He added, "For salmon, we will reduce the use of farmed Atlantic salmon and serve wild Alaska salmon periodically. We think it is a right thing to do, as nearly 75 percent of the world's fisheries are either fully fished or over fished; these issues are more important than ever."

Randy Rice, technical program director at the Alaska Seafood Marketing Institute speaks at the Dining Commons last week.

Ben Williams can be reached at bwilliam@student.umass.edu

Research improves security

By Elizabeth Hawley
Collegian Staff

A credit card security improvement was presented over the summer by two University of Massachusetts professors and a graduate student.

Electrical and computer engineering professor Wayne Burleson, computer science professor Kevin Fu and electrical and computer engineering student Dan Holcomb presented the new breakthrough last July at the annual conference on Radio-Frequency Identification (RFID) Security.

The team made the improvement working on RFID tags, wireless devices found on credit cards, as well as building access cards. Using new technology with the tags' existing memory cells, the researchers hope their work will allow the tags to be more secure, without loosing their small size.

"We believe we're the first to show how a common existing circuit

See RFID on page 3

Senior forward Britt Canfield scored two goals in the Minutewomen's 3-1 win over Xavier on Sunday. UMass dropped its first game of the weekend to Dayton, 2-0, on Friday.

UM splits weekend pair with A-10 foes

By Steve Games
Collegian Staff

Senior Britt Canfield scored two consecutive goals on Sunday to push the Massachusetts women's soccer team past Xavier, 3-1. On Friday night, the Minutewomen were shutout in a 2-0 loss to Dayton.

By splitting the weekend games, UMass (7-2-1) is at the .500 mark in Atlantic 10 conference play at 2-2. This week, the Minutewomen will have three consecutive home games, starting with Rhode Island on Thursday.

UMass	3
Xavier	1
UMass	0
Dayton	2

Last Friday, senior goalkeeper Kristin Walker was on her heels the entire night. the Flyers (10-3-0, 3-1 A-10) attacked the net all game, acculating 12 shots. Walker managed 10 saves, but the Flyers offense was too much as they pushed two unassisted goals in the net.

The first score came eight minutes in when sophomore Mandi Back scored her ninth goal of the year off a deflected shot from sophomore Colleen Gibson. With 28 seconds left in the first half, senior Jen Leslie scored off a side volley from 10 yards out.

"When you play a team like Dayton on [its] field, you have to have your parts together and you have to hit your shots," UMass coach Jim Rudy said. "We had four good looks at the goal. It wasn't that we weren't completely without chances, it's just they were too few and too far between."

Sophomore forward Sydney Stoll had her shot deflected by Dayton senior goalkeeper Niki Reed. Reed had six saves to record her sixth shutout of the season.

"The keeper was going one way and the ball was going the other way and [Reed] just barely somehow threw a hand back and got it knocked down," Rudy said.

Sophomore forward Katie Ruggles had a one-on-one opportunity with the goalkeeper, but it

See WOMEN'S SOCCER on page 6

Summer and winter courses help students

By Jennifer Bergen
Collegian Staff

The office of Continuing & Professional Education at the University of Massachusetts is encouraging students to enroll in both summer and winter sessions.

These sessions are ideal opportunities for students to take on a variety of classes ranging from introductory to higher level courses. The classes are offered both online and in classrooms.

As for the timing of the classes offered, the students are able to do their work when they do not have many other priorities. Not only does the timing of the classes assist in the students' success in the classroom, the online courses make it so that the students do not even need to leave the comfort of their own home. The benefits and overwhelming convenience of these sessions allow for students to either catch up on course work or even raise one's grade point average.

"I took a class to finish up my Gen. Ed.s. I wanted to graduate on time and bring my grade point average up. It made my course load a lot easier the next semester; I didn't have to take six classes," said Senior Vicky Hong.

"I could take the classes I actually wanted to take in my major and the class sizes were a lot smaller. It's not that the material is easier in the summer, it's just that it's easier to focus on your studies when you're not taking a full 15 credits, and it makes your course load easier the next semester," she added.

According to Sue Cassidy, the marketing strategist for Continuing & Professional Education, "another advantage is more personal attention because usually the classes are much smaller."

Students can benefit from smaller classes for there will be more direct contact between the student and professor.

"The same faculty is there for

See SUMMER/WINTER on page 3

MASSPIRG campaigns for global warming

By Kate Olsen
Collegian Staff

Last Wednesday, students lined up to have their picture taken with Uncle Sam to support the institution of the Global Warming Solutions Act in Massachusetts.

The University of Massachusetts student group, MASSPIRG, kicked off this year's campaign with photo shoots and a petition event to encourage Senator Stanley C. Rosenberg to support the act. The Global Warming Solutions Act aims to cut emissions in Massachusetts by 80 percent by the year 2050.

"We would like to show that college students really care about these issues and that we would like our voice heard," said UMass sophomore and MASSPIRG intern, Alice Mui.

UMass students took candid photos with Uncle Sam to send to Senator Rosenberg in addition to their 800 written peti-

See MASSPIRG on page 3

Members of MASSPIRG and other UMass students support the Global Warming Solutions Act in Massachusetts and have gained about 800 signatures in their campaign.

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

► Amy's no ugly betty.*

pwc.tv/ch2

The Firm now playing on Channel 2.

*connectedthinking

© 2007 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (a Delaware limited liability partnership) or, as the context requires, the PricewaterhouseCoopers global network or other member firms of the network, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. "connectedthinking is a trademark of PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (US). We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

OCT 9 2007

Online courses expand

SUMMER/WINTER from page 1

the summer sessions. The summer school has small classes and higher levels of interaction with professors," said visiting student Kate Radebaugh.

Cassidy listed a variety of courses offered for students during both summer and winter sessions. The list consisted of such classes as: Introduction to kinesiology, elementary French, calculus, introduction to sports management, organic chemistry, child psychology, as well as many others. Many Gen. Ed's are offered online, particularly during summer sessions. A list of summer 2008 classes will be available online at www.umassulearn.net very soon.

As for winter sessions, registration begins on Nov. 13. The session schedule runs from Jan. 2-24. The advantage with winter classes is that within the three weeks of the course, students receive a total of three credits.

Online classes have been exponentially increasing in the past year, as more than two-thirds of the participants are UMass students. The office of Continuing & Professional Education is still eagerly encouraging students to take advantage of this resource.

Jennifer Bergen can be reached at jbergen@student.umass.edu

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1809 and snap a photo with your cell phone, then send it to news@daily-collegian.com

UM team researches RFID tags

RFID from page 1

can both identify specific tags and protect their data," said Burleson. "The key innovation is applying the technology to RFID tags, since they're such tiny devices with very small memories."

RFID tags are used on credit cards, government and corporate ID cards which allow access to specific rooms or buildings, passports and innumerable other identification and tracking devices. When a radio antenna attempts to read the memory stored on the RFID tag, passive systems embedded inside of the tag respond to the electromagnetic fields produced.

This technology allows the consumer to access a locked building or room, or to purchase items like gas without taking out their wallet.

However, it also allows for security breaches. Credit cards using RFID technology can be read by thieves with proper equipment without physically removing the card from the victim.

Using the idea of random numbers to encrypt the data each tag sends to make each message transmitted unique, the researchers have found an inexpensive way to strengthen RFID tag security. Normally, in order to produce a random string of numbers, a machine needs specific hardware and software, like that of a desktop computer.

The tiny RFID tags (approximately the size of a matchbook) are not built for this function. However, the researchers have developed a method to work around this fact. Specialized software will allow tag readers to use the current, existing hardware of tags to extract a unique data set.

"An RFID tag has the unusual property that it's powered up and down by an external source because it doesn't have a battery," said Burleson.

The reader powers the RFID tag up, reads the stored information then powers the tag down. The researchers relied upon this fact in conducting their research because an RFID tag loses its stored memory when it is removed from a power supply. When a tag is powered up, a number of its memory cells won't immediately settle onto a stable value, randomly fluctuating between two binary states first. This allows the creation of a series of numbers that can be used by the RFID to authenticate itself to the tag reader.

"There's enough complexity in each one [RFID tag] that can give it a unique fingerprint," said Burleson.

This unique fingerprint, with the new technology, allows a tag reader to tell the difference between tags and illegal imitations of tags.

The work is still in its preliminary phase, and there are still some unresolved issues. Temperature, noise and data retention may still have unknown effects on the tag's ability to create random numbers and therefore on the ability of the reader to authenticate tags.

However, the research has lead to a larger collaboration between departments, being called the Trusted Reliable Embedded Networked Devices and System (TRENDS). TRENDS will continue to explore issues of embedded security using the research of Burleson and his colleagues Fu and Holcomb to make future RFID tags more secure.

Elizabeth Hawley can be reached at ehawley@student.umass.edu

Farmer's market offers autumn goodies

By Juli Lonardo
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Right in between the entrance of the campus center and the Bluewall Cafe sits a little corner overflowing with fresh flowers and an array of tempting produce from various local farms in the Pioneer Valley.

The new farmer's market that the University of Massachusetts Dining Services has set up to run every Thursday and Friday until November 16 boasts fruits, veggies and spreads at low costs.

"Our goal is to break even financially and to support the local farmers," said Ken Toong, Director of Dining and Retail Services.

"This is another step we are taking in our commitment to support the local farmers."

Joe Czajkowski of Hadley and Stan Kielbasa of Amherst own two of the farms that provide fruit and produce for the market, while breads and rolls are featured from Old School Baking Inc., located in Northampton.

Four other farms are also showcasing their specialties. The North Hadley Sugar Shack, which has been owned and operated by Joe and John Boissvert since 1996, is known for its pure maple syrup and maple candies. They offer pancake breakfasts and sugaring tours during the maple sugar season from mid February to April.

They also sell farm-grown produce such as squashes, Indian corn and pumpkins in autumn and have an animal village where visitors can go in and pet the animals.

The farmer's market will have honey from the Warm Colors Apiary of South Deerfield, where Bonita and Dan Conlon raise honeybees from the fields of Western Massachusetts and make an assortment of flavored honey. They also sell pure beeswax candles that "burn longer, cleaner and brighter than petroleum based candles," according to their Web site, www.warmcolorsapiary.com.

The Mapleline Farm has been in the Kokoski family since 1904. They grow and sell vegetables without the use of growth hormones, along with fresh milk sold at the farm stand built on their property in Hadley. They also sell a number of dairy products ranging from cheeses to ice cream but are most notably recognized for their home-delivery service. Starting in 2001 when fifth generation Paul Kokoski took over, Mapleline Farm returned to the time-honored tradition of delivering milk to customers' doorsteps in glass bottles.

The Cold Spring Orchard of Belchertown, which is run by the UMass Department of Plant, Soil and Insect Sciences, yields a variety of fruit, including over 100 varieties of apples. The profit made at the orchard goes to the maintenance of the research and education facility, which scientists use to "study ways to grow more tree fruit in less space, compare the ability of varieties of fruit to resist disease and insects, and search for ways to reduce the amount of potentially hazardous chemicals used in growing fruit," as stated on their Web site, www.coldspringorchard.com.

The new farmer's market will be open on the Campus Center Concourse outside the Bluewall Cafe from 11:30 a.m. until 4 p.m. on Thursdays and Fridays. The prices are low: 25 cents for a potato, eight plums or three tomatoes for a dollar, and even apple pies made at the UMass bakery for five dollars.

This week there will also be cider donuts and apple cider. Senior Manager of Retail Operations David Fichstaedt says although there is some competition because there are so many farms on the way to campus, the market is still convenient because "students like the stuff they can grab easy and take back to their dorm rooms — the fruit, honey and jams." Whether the craving is for some fall favorites or just to support the local farms, the Farmer's Market is a quick and affordable stop on the way home from class.

Juli Lonardo can be reached at jlonardo@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 25

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belsinger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exner
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
COPY EDITOR Adam Staigin
EDITORIAL EDITOR Sean Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marwa Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ryan McSkill
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Teresa Reilly
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Will McGuinness
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seaburn
ASSISTANT SPORTS Michael King
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Mekrut
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenwaike
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Tom Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS ACADEMIC SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALMA LETTER FROM COLLEGE SCHOOL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1958. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN AN ADVERTISER SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Will McGuinness

COPY EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

Student organization recruits 800 to fight against global warming

MASSPIRG from page 1

tions.

"We have 800 signatures," said Mui. "That's pretty big. And it's only been from the beginning of September and just from this semester."

MASSPIRG representatives have been active in the campus center all semester. But on Wednesday, they stood in the Student Union building with petitions to gain written support from UMass students for the act.

According to Mui, many UMass students get involved with the group, but also give it plenty of support.

"I think [MASSPIRG] is really good because we have a lot of people, and we deal with a lot of issues which are really important to us and important to the whole world," said Mui.

Mui said global warming is an issue that MASSPIRG regularly addresses every semester.

"I think students here generally know a little bit about global warming," said Mui. "It's not one of those issues that people think is going to affect them now, but it should be something we can do something about now."

The Global Warming Act's goal aims to take place in stages. It calls for carbon dioxide emissions to reduce by 2% percent by the year 2020 and 80 percent by 2050, according to MASSPIRG.

MASSPIRG plans to hold other global warming related events on campus throughout the month.

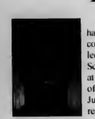
The group has two events planned for the month of October, including a showing of "Who Killed the Electric Car?" on Oct. 10 at 7:30 p.m. in Bartlett 202. Although dates haven't been established yet, the group will also be testing hybrid cars.

Kate Olesin can be reached at kolesin@student.umass.edu

Write for news
news@dailycollegian.com

SPECIAL SECOND FRIDAY OCTOBER 12 4-8PM FREE!

William Kentridge Prints
September 28, 2007 through January 6, 2008



Poetic Science
Bookworks by Daniel E. Kelm
October 12, 2007 through February 10, 2008

BookArts: A Celebration of the Art of the Book
Second Thursdays
Advocate
Northampton
Smith College Museum of Art

WWW.SMITH.EDU/ARTMUSEUM

Butterfly
Chinese & Japanese Restaurant
WWW.BUTTERFLYHADLEY.COM
GRAND OPENING!
蝴 蝶
Presented by the former owner of Panda Garden in Northampton
In the old location of All Fired Up
Vegetarian Menu Available
Enjoy drinks at the full bar!
Free Delivery Hadley (Min. $15.00) Out of Town (Min. $20.00)
(413) 585-8989
Mon. – Thurs.: 11:30am – 10:00pm | Fri. & Sat.: 11:30am – 11:00pm
Sunday: 12:00noon – 10:00pm
48 Russell St (Rt. 9) Hadley, MA 01035

Reevaluating feminism

Greg Collins

Almost a week has passed since conservative intellectual Phyllis Schlafly spoke here at the University of Massachusetts. Judging by the reactions from protestors and members of the College Democrats of Massachusetts, Schlafly's remarks about the dignity of housewives and the counterproductive effects of feminism were dismissed as conservative banter. Her points deserve to be reiterated to clarify that the policies she cautions against implementing lead to the true subjugation of women.

First, there is a stark difference between the aspiration of the original efforts of women to be treated equally under the rule of law and that of contemporary feminists. This principle created the foundation for the women's suffrage movement, which culminated in the ratification of the 19th Amendment in the early 20th century.

While conservatives are typically skeptical of any supposed social gains produced by "movements," the right to vote was one substantive benefit attained by the efforts of this movement's organizers. Whether one could accurately label this achievement as the first sign of feminism is up for debate. What is not up for debate, however, is that this result was based on the notion that men and women should be treated equally under the law regardless of gender. It must be stressed that most critics of modern feminism do not disagree with this principle.

Yet the modern conception of feminism – starting in the 1960s – bears little resemblance to the push advocating for policies promoting equality under the law. Rather than advancing this belief, contemporary feminism calls for different rights based on gender.

A large part of modern feminism, Schlafly noted, endorses increased government intervention to offset the patriarchal subjugation of women in American society. For instance, it calls for the government to ensure that women are paid just as much as men for equal work, since feminists frequently note that women are paid "x" number of cents for every dollar a man makes.

The "equal pay for equal work" mantra does not take into account other variables which create conditions for different wage earnings.

For instance, say a leader of a contemporary feminist movement wanted to hire two secretaries for the entire year. The two candidates considered include an older woman who has been a secretary before and has two grown children. The other is a young woman who has not been a secretary before and is pregnant. The logical choice would be for the leader to pay the older woman a higher wage, since she is more familiar with a secretary's responsibilities and is less likely to ask for paid leave because of pregnancy.

In this case, additional variables like experience and the likelihood of future labor illustrate why "equal pay for equal work" is simplistic by overlooking other important factors.

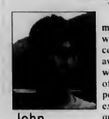
The central message is that women have more freedom in America than in any other place in the world.

Contrary to what women's studies professors and feminists claim, government intervention in the economy does not lead to the empowerment of women. Rather, it explicitly expresses that women cannot make economic decisions on their own without input from a third party. For a movement that supposedly claims to liberate women from external forces, the policies it supports subjugate them to the very same second-class standards it hopes to overcome.

And, as Schlafly emphasized, raising a family and performing household chores are not indicative of second-class social status. Instead, they are more dignified and productive endeavors than many other professions considered to be high-skilled jobs. Women's studies professors may be idolized by modern-day feminists, but theorizing has had virtually no impact on nurturing children nor has it empowered women to make the individual economic and social decisions they are fully capable of making.

Yet the most important point is not that housewifery is a dignified position. The central message is that women have more freedom in America than in any other place in the world to choose whichever life path to pursue, whether this entails raising children and/or becoming a full-time professional.

As Schlafly noted, these two aspirations are not mutually exclusive; rather, different circumstances in a woman's life demand effort to be devoted to these priorities at different points in their lives.



For instance, Schlafly raised her six children at home while her husband was the family's primary wage earner. This division in responsibilities had little to do with the supposed patriarchal structure in American society. Instead, it had everything to do with the mutual decision between Schlafly and her husband to divide these household tasks based on their knowledge concerning who was in the best position to raise the children and who was in the best position to make money at that particular time. No centralized government could possibly possess this knowledge. (Evidently, Schlafly pursued a law degree after her children were fully grown).

It is not hyperbole to say the policies supported by the modern-day feminist movement dehumanize women by suggesting that they are unable to make informed decisions without assistance from a third party.

Fortunately, as Schlafly made abundantly clear, the incentives created through free markets and equality under the law provide the greatest opportunity for women to pursue a life goal that is in accordance with their individual preferences and not those of professors, activists or government.

Greg Collins writes on Tuesdays. He can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu

Equality by neccesity

John Gruenenfelder

The Iraq War has seen a marked change in the roles women play in the military, continuing the expansion of available roles, which began with the end of the draft. Most of these changes have been positive with a few important exceptions, but this had not quelled debate from all sides of the political spectrum.

Current Pentagon rules prohibit women from being assigned to ground combat units such as the infantry or special operations. Virtually every other job is available and has been performed by women at some point over the past four and a half years.

Last week, in a five part series on NPR on women in the military, Bill Carr, the deputy undersecretary for military personnel policy, said that current practices are following Pentagon rules and are "consistent with the expectations and the wishes of the nation."

While it is perhaps strictly true that no women are deployed in the infantry, the very nature of the current war has changed most of the rules. The old policies were developed to be in line with a "conventional" war, one with a defined front.

When fighting an insurgency – short of assaulting a stronghold – there is no front. Attacks can happen anywhere; and soldiers, male or female, must defend themselves and engage in combat. The roles women occupy are changing not because of new rules from the top but out of necessity.

Still, the statistics do back up the Pentagon. So far, 86 U.S. female soldiers have died in Iraq, making up just over two percent of the 3,815 U.S. fatalities. This indicates that women are surely not serving in excessively-dangerous combat operations.

The changing roles are something of a double-edged sword. On one side, women are able to do more in the military and many relish that opportunity. Yet for some, this may not be what they signed up for. The argument cannot be made that women enlisting now are unaware of what Iraq holds in store; but if you enlisted, say, five years ago, then you could have a genuine grievance about constantly being in a near, or complete, combat role.

A number of critics, primarily social conservatives, are unhappy with the current situation. Phyllis Schlafly, who spoke here at UMass last week, argues that women need not fight for strict equality since men are performing the more dangerous job of combat duty. This might be a perk of the current rules, but it is clearly not equality.

Another critic, Elaine Donnelly, the president of the Center for Military Readiness, is against having women in both combat and combat-support roles. She uses the example of a wounded soldier needing to be rescued and if the nearest person is a female combat support soldier, then that woman would not be able to carry the wounded soldier from the battle. In a more conventional war, this is unlikely, but in a battle with no front, this is presumably more probable.

Could this not be solved by having proper standards? Donnelly argues that no woman could perform this role, but this is clearly false. After all, there are female firefighters serving all across the country and the nation has yet to take up arms against this. In the case of firefighters, there are clear requirements for the job, such as being able to carry a grown person. If a woman in full fire gear can do this, then why not a female combat support soldier or even female soldier in the infantry?

Equality does not erase the very real physical differences between the sexes, but select groups of men and women are capable of performing any of these duties.

Women pushing for more equality across the board understand that equality brings responsibilities. Equality does not erase the very real physical differences between the sexes, but select groups of men and women are capable of performing any of these duties. And in the case of our all-volunteer military, the women joining want the job. They are not being drafted and sent out to the front lines.

Our country's military is moving towards full equality amongst men and women, a change that has gained momentum since the seventies. Other countries, such as the Netherlands and Israel, have no rules against women in combat, but in practice this is almost never the case.

The changes in the U.S. services are occurring from the bottom up. Necessity, a volunteer force and the realities on the ground dictate how the military must operate. Eventually, the rules at the top will reflect the new reality.

John Gruenenfelder writes on Tuesdays. He can be reached at jgruenen@student.umass.edu

Prescribing accountibility

Joshua H. Wilder

While we are living in the most technologically advanced society to date, some things simply remain the same. The average person today faces the same sort of pressures that his forefathers did.

Getting and keeping a good job, making a decent living, raising kids and juggling other commitments can create enough anxiety to leave even the strongest person some serious stress.

How the individual person deals with his problems is ultimately left up to him, with some people making better decisions than others. After having a bad day at the office, some might go out for a jog. Others will take their stress and channel it into other mediums, such as cooking or playing an instrument.

Another large group of people turn to illicit substances to clear their mind and release some of the pressure. This is the one solution that society seems to generally look down upon. The person who goes off and drinks her problems away is hardly viewed as a good role model.

Pre-schoolers are supposed to be high-strung, not zombies on Zoloft.

And while people who turn to alcohol as a solution to their problems are low on the public-admiration totem pole, those who use drugs are perhaps even lower than that – unless they use drugs provided by the pharmaceutical industry.

In fact, while using illegal drugs is a practice to be vilified, having a prescription for any sort of "legal" drug is not only seen as a good thing but is actually encouraged. When pressures mount, as they always do, people have been convinced that they can find solutions in magical little pills with names like Lexapro, Effexor and Zoloft.

I hate to be the bearer of bad news; but if it sounds too good to be true, it probably is. Not only do these supposed cure-alls have side effects such as nausea, agitation and – according to the Zoloft website – ejaculation failure, but excessive dosage of such medications can also be fatal.

Case in point – take the tragic tale of Rebecca Riley, a four-year-old girl from Hull who died from an overdose of Clonidine last December. She had lethal amounts of the drug – one used to treat hyperactivity – in her blood system. Almost a year after the incident, the state has finally decided to do something about it.

According to Bostonh.com, the state Medicaid system is analyzing records of 82,900 children under the age of five, searching for those who are taking at least three psychiatric drugs or a single prescription of a powerful antipsychotic drug.

What is wrong with this picture, aside from the fact that it took a disappointingly long time for the state to react to Riley's death? They have quite the task ahead of them. Thousands of young children are prescribed drugs to improve their health, but the drugs themselves cause even worse health woes. The irony would be funny if it wasn't so true.

And while most reasonable people would believe that children under the age of seven are too young to be taking such medications, it seems as though the men in white coats disagree. Doctors prescribed antipsychotic drugs, which raise the risk of diabetes and obesity, to 536 children under the age of seven, according to MassHealth records.

Many psychologists have voiced concern about prescribing such medications to preschoolers mainly because they are too young to show clear signs of mental illness, and their brains are still developing.

If a forty-year-old decides that he wants to gamble by taking such medications, that's one thing, but to give these pills to preschoolers is not only unfair, but it's criminal. For one thing, these kids have no say in the matter, but many so-called "profession-als" still have no idea how the child will react to the given dosage.

Little Timmy is acting crazy – running around, full of energy and maybe not listening to you. Who would have thought that little kids act in such a way, how do these parents expect their kids to be – sitting calmly, eyes glazed over and showing signs of a lobotomy?

Preschoolers are supposed to be high-strung, not zombies on Zoloft. The blame should be placed on the parents, doctors and ultimately the multi-billion dollar pharmaceutical industry.

Parents, instead of relying on a little pill to improve whatever behavioral problems they might think a child has, why don't you actually try to parent them through tough times? Just because you think you need Zoloft to make your life better doesn't mean your six-year-old does.

Doctors, here is a wild idea. Instead of blindly prescribing medications to children, try doing some research as to possible side effects. You have quite a powerful role as a doctor, so try to be educated on the dangers of pills before you dish them out.

Finally, to the kind-hearted people at the pharmaceutical industry, we all know that you are simply looking out for our best interests by creating these medications to make our lives so much better, but try employing something called 'conscience' first. Instead of eyeing the bottom lines, why don't you take a look at the people whose lives you destroy while creating unsafe medications?

Joshua H. Wilder is a Collegian columnist and can be reached at jhwilder@student.umass.edu

DAILY COLLEGIAN READER POLL

The recent speech by conservative author Phyllis Schlafly has sparked dialogue about feminism. Are feminism and conservatism compatible?

☐ Yes ☐ No ☐ I don't know

Cast your vote online at www.dailycollegian.com!

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Editorial@DailyCollegian.com

REGARDING THE JENA SIX

DEAR EDITOR:

As we consider the rally that started Monday at the Student Union and winded its way to Amherst's center, we indeed believe this to be one of the many times when one is impelled by prudence, common sense and a commitment to the inherent solidarity of humankind to speak out against racism, which has no other intention or purpose other than to systematically oppress the people of our world.

We, the Radical Student Union, do hereby express our sentiment, mandated by our basic ethics and morality as well as our commitment to a just society, that we stand in solidarity with the Jena 6, the Black Student Union and all the other fine organizations on campus and elsewhere that are committed to ending racism, not only in the Pioneer Valley and in rural Louisiana but also the rest of the world.

Racism, that omnipresent ghost which continues to haunt us today, indeed motivates the unconscionable actions of prosecutor and LaSalle Parish District Attorney Reed Walters in charging the Jena 6, who are all black students, with attempted murder. That ghost also haunts us when Superintendent Roy Breithaupt noted that some white students hanging nooses upon the "White Tree" in Jena was but an adolescent prank.

That ghost haunts us when, in a supposedly civilized society, the names and numbers of the Jena 6 families are posted on a Web site and, according to the Federal Bureau of Investigation, called to be lynched.

In a truly conscious society where the rights of humankind are respected and cherished, such atrocities would never occur. That which proves oppression is still with us is legion. Meagan Williams, a black woman, was repeatedly raped and tortured while being called racist slurs. At least five gay bashings occurred in Seattle in August. The examples pile on and on.

As people with some semblance of what is right and wrong, we are committed to a world where incidents such as these are wiped clean from quotidian occurrence, where oppression of many turns into freedom for all. As a result, we gladly continue fighting one of the battles for social justice in our times: the fight to end racism.

We shall never rest until we break the chains of economic serfdom that subjugate us, the people. We shall never rest until we can walk, each of us people of the world, hand in hand, arm in arm with each other as equals, as family in society.

Until that day, we shall tirelessly struggle and fight the fight for freedom. Until we, as a society can truly call this world one of liberty and justice for all, we will be there, fighting to right the many wrongs that pervade society.

Until everyone may taste the sweet fruits of freedom, not hanged from the "White Tree" by the many nooses of oppression, three of which are racism, sexism and homophobia, we have been and will always be, in solidarity forever.

The Radical Student Union

DEAR EDITOR:

The idea that racial discrimination is over-exaggerated and unfairly portrays minorities as victims is a gross misunderstanding. If we are not victims in a society that invalidates our concerns and masks discrimination through more politically correct terms, such as class, then what the hell are we?

Brad DeFlumeri's argument that black people need to focus on rising above racism instead of portraying themselves as victims is weak because he doesn't realize that all minorities in this country are victims – in a society that is run by and for white people. The falsely-accused Duke players were done an injustice, but their acquittal – which would have deserved national coverage if the Duke players were black – happens all the time. There is no national coverage when black people are found innocent in our American justice system, because they are disproportionately convicted – innocent or otherwise.

If voicing racial injustice makes DeFlumeri mad, then ignorance about that injustice leaves me in awe. The Jena 6 incident does deserve national coverage and whether it caused the fight or not, interpreting black students beating up white students as attempted murder is wrong.

Let me explain what a noose means in my eyes and in the eyes of many others. It means black men's lives taken over and over again, and no one doing anything about it. It means that white superiority is right, and anything challenging that is invalidated, because there's no room for justice when you are black. It means that although many black people have emerged from racism, shining and accomplished despite destructive forces, they are still considered less.

DeFlumeri's article suggests to me that blacks should move past racism, keeping our mouths shut, and let racial injustice prevail. But to be silent about racism is just as detrimental to racial justice as hanging a noose from a tree.

Ventura Dennis
UMass Student

The Daily Collegian encourages reader responses; letters to the editor should be limited to 550 words and can be sent to editorial@dailycollegian.com

NEW TO THE DAILY COLLEGIAN WEBSITE:

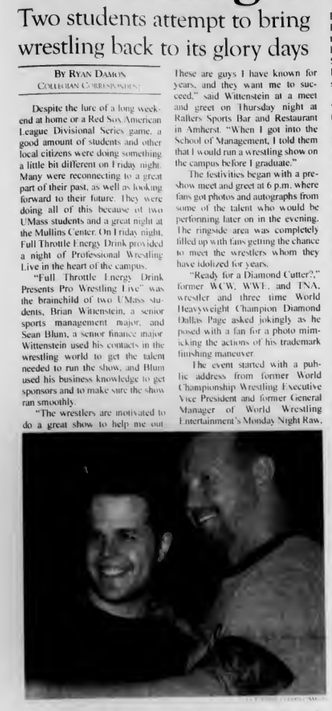
The Editorial staff regrets that – due to space constraints – not all letters to the editor can be printed. Additional letters can be found online in our new Letters to the Editor subsection at dailycollegian.com.

Wrestling event turns back the clock

Two students attempt to bring wrestling back to its glory days

By Ryan Damon
Collegian Correspondent

Despite the lure of a long weekend at home or a Red Sox American League Divisional Series game, a good amount of students and other local citizens were doing something a little bit different on Friday night. Many were reconnecting to a great part of their past, as well as looking forward to their future. They were doing all of this because of two UMass students and a great night at the Mullins Center. On Friday night, Full Throttle Energy Drink provided a night of Professional Wrestling Live in the heart of the campus.



"Full Throttle Energy Drink Presents Pro Wrestling Live" was the brainchild of two UMass students, Brian Wittenstein, a senior sports management major, and Sean Blum, a senior finance major. Wittenstein used his contacts in the wrestling world to get the talent needed to run the show, and Blum used his business knowledge to get sponsors and to make sure the show ran smoothly.

"The wrestlers are motivated to do a great show to help me out. These are guys I have known for years, and they want me to succeed," said Wittenstein at a meet and greet on Thursday night at Rafters Sports Bar and Restaurant in Amherst. "When I got into the School of Management, I told them that I would run a wrestling show on the campus before I graduate."

The festivities began with a pre-show meet and greet at 6 p.m. where fans got photos and autographs from some of the talent who would be performing later on in the evening. The ringside area was completely filled up with fans getting the chance to meet the wrestlers whom they have idolized for years.

"Ready for a Diamond Cutter?," former WCW, WWE, and TNA, wrestler and three time World Heavyweight Champion Diamond Dallas Page asked jokingly as he posed with a fan for a photo mimicking the actions of his trademark finishing maneuver.

The event started with a public address from former World Championship Wrestling Executive Vice President and former General Manager of World Wrestling Entertainment's Monday Night Raw, Eric Bischoff. Bischoff thanked Blum and Wittenstein for making the event happen and for inviting him to speak earlier in the day at the School of Management in a guest lecture about the business of professional wrestling.

Diamond Dallas Page (right) returned to the wrestling ring for the first time in two years.

All of the details of the show were chosen to make the event feel that it could have taken place in the 1990s, during an era some people refer to as the second golden age of wrestling, or as it is more commonly called: Monday Night Wars.

A third company called Extreme Championship Wrestling grew from a cult following to become a major player in the professional wrestling industry. The companies involved in this era, WWE, WCW and ECW, were known simply as the "The Big Three." This era is now over because WWE purchased WCW in 2000 and ECW folded early in 2001.

The opening contest of the evening was Scott "Too Hot" Taylor taking on "The Midnight Idol" Nicky Benz. Benz tried to get under the crowd's skin with a horrible rendition of "New York, New York." Taylor, a native of Westbrook, Maine came down to the ring wearing a Red Sox jersey, and made short work of Benz finishing "The Midnight Idol" with his worm dance following by a vicious chop to Benz's chest.

The event featured a special challenge six-man tag-team contest. The legendary and controversial pro wrestling manager Prince Nana issued an open challenge to any of wrestlers known as the Embassy – "Hurricane" John Waters and the tag team known as "The Outcast Killaha." This challenge was accepted by KIX 97.9's Shaggy, who brought out three local wrestlers to take on the Embassy. With the help of Prince Nana, the Embassy won a very tainted victory.

One of the premier matches of the night was former Cruiserweight champion Billy Kidman taking on former Tag Team Champion "Primetime" Elix Skipper. This match did not disappoint; it was hard-hitting wrestling action.

Kidman got the victory with a sit-out Powerbomb off the top rope called "The B.K. Bomb." It would have been better had he ended the match with his "Shooting Star Press," but it was still a great match.

One match in the evening was very important to a student here on campus. Max Bauer of the University of Massachusetts wrestled in front of a homeschool crowd on Friday night. Bauer's opponent, Eugene Dinsmore, came down to the ring wearing a leather Boston College jacket. The proud UMass student could not take his school being insulted. As Europe's "The Final Countdown" played, the Mullins Center board flashed the UMass logo and the crowd chanted UMass as Max Bauer came down to the ring.

During an in-ring interview, Buff Bagwell challenged Diamond Dallas Page to have their advertised main event a little bit early. Diamond Dallas Page accepted the challenge and finished Bagwell with the "Diamond Cutter." Page looked in great shape and didn't show any sign of "ring rust" even though he hasn't competed in over two years.

At the Rafters Sports Bar and Restaurant in Amherst on Thursday Night, Justin Credible spoke about his "Amherst Street Fight" match against Brother Runt. "We're going to bring it back to the roots of the old ECW. There's going to be stop signs, trash cans, steel chairs, tables and everything you associate with hardcore wrestling," said Credible. When asked how he prepares for a wrestling event, Justin Credible said, "I've been doing this for 13 years; it all comes naturally to me. I just have a couple of beers to loosen up."

At the end of the match, both Justin Credible and Brother Runt were bloody messes. Justin Credible fought Brother Runt while having to deal with a hostile crowd. At the end of the match, he reversed Brother Runt's finishing move by throwing him outside the ring through the timekeeper's table. Ceasing the momentum, Credible finished off Brother Runt with his tombstone pile driver called "That's Incredible!"

Justin Credible re-ignited an old feud with Brother Runt in an "Amherst Street Fight." The event included tables, trash cans and steel chairs.

Near the end of the event the crowd was treated to the comic styling of the Voodoo Kin Mafia (formerly The New Age Outlaws, Billy Gunn and Roaddogg). The tag team used their unique form of comedy and wrestling action to quickly defeat the team of The Hearthreakers (Antonio Thomas and Romeo Roselli). The match didn't have the best wrestling of the night, but Voodoo Kin Mafia entertained just like they did in the 1990s. The crowd ate it up.

If all wrestling events were run like "Full Throttle Energy Drinks Presents Pro Wrestling Live!" a new golden age of professional wrestling could dawn. This event was like turning back time, and at least for one night, the "Monday Night Wars" were back.

Ryan Damon can be reached at rdamon@student.umass.edu

ALO returns to the Iron Horse

By Cory Kalter
Collegian Correspondent

On Oct. 9, the Animal Liberation Orchestra, more widely known as the ALO, will be performing at the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton. ALO, though not too well known, still have a rich fan base all over the country. Their friendship with Jack Johnson, who discovered them and eventually signed them to his own record label (Brushfire Records), has helped them immensely in getting more publicity. With their recent release back in May of their second album "Roses & Clover," a rich show of fun and entertainment surely awaits.

For those of you who are unfamiliar with ALO, they could be categorized as a quirky, jam-pop band, but those with experience know they are much more. Their soulful tunes, like their most popular song "Maria" and "Roses & Clover," from the album by the same name, show their seriousness about life and music in general. One of their well-known songs, "Girl, I Wanna Lay you Down," from their debut album, "Fly Between Falls," features Jack Johnson and really gives a sense of what ALO is all about. It sends an underlying serious message, but at the same time, it gives a flare of fun with lyrics that are very eccentric. Other songs like "Plastic Bubble" and "Barbeque" also show this uniqueness that can only be recognized as ALO.

Hailing from Santa Barbara, Calif., Zak Gill (keyboard, accordion, ukulele and vocals), Dan Leibowitz (guitar, percussion and vocals), Steve Adams (bass and vocals) and Dave Brogan (drums and vocals) show the world that original music still exists. Three of the band members – Gill, Leibowitz and Adams – have known each other since high school. The addition of Brogan to the band created a chemistry that has lasted throughout the years. It's this chemistry that adds to both their studio works as well as there performances. Without this chemistry, their improvisational sections of songs would not hold together so well and would not be so defining. These attributes are exactly what to look forward to during their upcoming performance.

ALO is currently doing a tour of relatively small shows, at least in comparison to the venues they usually perform during the summer. This tour will be concentrating mostly on smaller audience settings, which will give this show a more private feeling. This will not be the first time ALO has hit up Northampton, so they will feel right at home here in Western Mass.

With the release of "Roses & Clover" last May, their recent feature-article in the newest issue of Relix Magazine, and their catchy tunes getting tons of airplay, this is definitely a joyous time for the small-time band. Fans of Jack Johnson and Phish will surely enjoy this show and all music fans will enjoy the enthusiasm and heart that ALO puts into their live performances.

ALO will hit the stage on Tuesday, October 9, at the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton at 7 p.m. Tickets are $10 in advance and $13 at the door.

Cory Kalter can be reached at ckalter@student.umass.edu

ALO, signed to Jack Johnson's record label (Brushfire Records), show soul in their latest album, "Roses & Clover."

Bon Jovi fails fans with repetitive album

By Steven Stafford
Collegian Staff

Rednecks are the only people who can pull off mullets anymore. That said, it is appropriate that Bon Jovi, one of the few bands to survive the 80s hair – metal screech pop era with any living brain cells, takes a decidedly red-state turn on their new disc, "Lost Highway." Their tenth CD sounds like any other Bon Jovi CD but with overalls and cowboy boots on.

If you love Bon Jovi, don't be afraid. This is still definitely the same Jon and Richie, the same shout-along choruses, the same guitar-humping rock that made millions adore them for decades. Yes, they are older now. Yes, they had a number one single on the country charts last year. "Who Says You Can't Go Home," but it's still Bon Jovi. They're still from New Jersey, but now they wear cowboy hats.

The title track is a driving, fist-pump inducing track, and despite its corny lyrics (has anyone else ever compared life to a highway before?), it rocks, even by young-Bon Jovi standards. However, that seems to be the best fruit off of the entire CD; the rest of the disc feels like a bad imitation of the lead off.

The lead single "Make A Memory" is a disappointing power, something like power – ballad Bon Jovi – tired, older and thus not cool at all. In a year when "Crank Dat (Soulja Boy)" was a number-one single, this might as well be from the 19th century it's so far from hip.

"We Got It Goin' On" is a toe-tapping rock song featuring country stars Big and Rich. Featuring a "Frampton Comes Alive!" talk box, this is even more of a guilty pleasure than it intends to be, with a goofy-talking bridge, the phrase "can I get an Amen" and an extended talk box solo. After all, the song is called "We Got It Goin' On," so how seriously can you take it?

Songs like "Any Other Day" make you think that Bon Jovi is pulling one three-decade-long practical joke on the world, and that they've managed to write the same song hundreds of times. The chorus is numbingly familiar, and lodges itself in your short-term memory, where it soon dies – another forgettable Bon Jovi song to take up space on the CD. It's still catchy, and fades into the background well, so if you own a dentist office, you'll be sure to get this one. It isn't bad, it's just miles away from interesting.

The band collaborates with country prodigy LeAnn Rimes on "I'll We Ain't Strangers Anymore," with her voice being the only unique touch on yet another acoustic-flavored country-rock ballad. Rimes's timbre is perfect for country, but country is a genre that rewards similarity and not uniqueness. Young listeners may simply think she is another perfect-voiced blonde like Carrie Underwood.

Whether or not you know it, you will soon be sick of the song "I Love This Town," a fiddle-driven closer that has found its way onto more than a few football commercials. There's not necessarily anything wrong about that because the track sounds like a loud TV-show theme song.

One thing that Bon Jovi lacks, and desperately needs, is conflict. Songs like "I Love This Town" are boring because they are one-dimensional; maybe it would work if the bridge was about the dark side of the town. The band falls victim to this time and time again on this and their other CDs – their songs don't go anywhere lyrically, and sonically they go places, but only to predictable ones.

By the time you get through the album, you're not sure if it's all the same song or at least the same chord progressions and structures. Even the album art is boring. But Bon Jovi has made a fortune creating paint-by-numbers cookie-cutter pop-rock, and they deserve credit for still going at it after all these years, all the drama, and surviving a "Behind the Music" episode.

This album debuted at number one in America, no small feat in today's youth-oriented, image-obsessed, rap-saturated, pro tools-tified music industry. It's also no small feat to have a hit album that doesn't require a Parental Advisory sticker. Their lyrics don't degrade women, glorify drugs or violence, even if they are boring and seem to inevitably wind up in people's AIM profiles. Don't worry – after a few had metaphors, your brain begins to filter them out. Besides, is there anything meant to be intellectually stimulating about a song called "I Love This Town?" Is that even possible?

You've got to respect the guys for trying after all these years when others are supposed to be on a VH1 reality show or a court-mandated anti-drug PSA series. At least they're not trying to write political songs like John Mellencamp. You may even find yourself singing along.

Steven Stafford can be reached at sstaffor@student.umass.edu

BON JOVI
"LOST HIGHWAY"
MERCURY NASHVILLE
3/5

Bon Jovi sticks with the sound that made them famous in the 80s with the band's latest release, "Lost Highway."

Men take third, women take 29th in Boston

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

Fresh off of impressive team showings at the historic Paul Short Invitational, the Massachusetts cross country teams had impressive individual achievements at the New England Championships on Saturday at Franklin Park in Boston. The Minutemen took third place while the Minutewomen placed 26th.

The Maroon and White have struggled with injury and illness all season, but this had many runners step up and attempt to fill the void.

Sophomore Andy McCann led the Minutemen; he took ninth place overall out of 282 runners. The competition was stiff, as there were 43 teams from Divisions I, II and III. UMass faced competition from Providence, Dartmouth and Brown, who are all nationally ranked.

McCann finished at an overall time of 25 minutes, 25 seconds. This is a dramatic improvement from the results he had during his freshman campaign. Last season, McCann finished 110th overall and sixth on the team with a time of 26:05. McCann's minute-per-mile average was 5:10.

Rounding out the rest of the top five for the Minutemen were sophomore Daniel Barry, freshman Chris Carle, junior captain Jesse Regnier and sophomore Jon Pierce.

UMass coach Ken O'Brien indicated that although the team did not meet his admittedly high expectations in the Paul Short Invitational last week, the performance in Boston should be attributed to the experience that the team gained from that meet.

"I thought they did benefit from the experience we had last week, and they did put that experience to good use," O'Brien said. "Actually, finishing third was right on the side of the toughest aspirations I had for a great performance. I think the overall result was somewhat amazing for us."

The Minutewomen had gaps to fill as well, due to the absence of redshirt sophomore Shiyi Zan, senior captain Amber Sayer and freshman Gina Perno. All three are among the top runners on the team.

"Obviously, Christina DeRosa did a really nice job, as did Lauren Stocker, but we were without three of our top five," Lafreniere said. "I knew going in there that, teamwise, it wasn't going to be a pretty picture, and it sure wasn't. The New England Championships was not the end all, be all for us. Obviously we love to do well; but because we didn't have the entire team, [winning] just wasn't going to happen for us."

Senior captain Christina DeRosa led all Minutewomen, finishing fourth place overall at a time of 17:58, a tremendous improvement from last year's race when she finished 32nd overall, again leading the team with a time of 18:30.

Lafreniere spoke very emotionally of the commitment and competitiveness that DeRosa has shown not only this season, but throughout her entire career.

"She's a no nonsense type of athlete," Lafreniere said. "She makes many, many sacrifices to be where she is. Obviously, she's one of the top runners in the Northeast. My eyes started to water watching her compete [on Saturday]. She not only loves to train, but she's not afraid to train hard. She works really hard. I think the other athletes see that."

The rest of the top five runners for the Minutewomen included Stocker, freshman Kristin Darling, junior Beth Harlow and freshman Elizabeth Fisk.

Stocker continues to pave her way into the upper echelon of the team. She has finished in the top five on the team in every race that she has competed in this season.

Both teams will next compete in the Albany Invitational this weekend in Albany, N.Y. The women's race will begin at 11:15 a.m., and the men's race will begin at 12:15 p.m.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu

Senior Amber Sayer missed the New England Championships due to injury this weekend. The Minutewomen finished 29th in her absence.

Minutewomen stifle fiery WC offense goalkeeper for her third goal of the season.

FIELD HOCKEY from page 8

UMass set up for a penalty corner again with six minutes left in the first half and Phelan inserted to Murphy, who stopped for Bourazeris, who blasted a shot that froze WC goalkeeper Joelle Zarefross and gave UMass a 2-0 lead.

The most impressive goal of the afternoon was scored by Cher King.

Alone with two defenders standing between her and the net, she tipped the ball over the first defender's stick, did the same to the second defender and beat the goalie near post to pad the lead at 3-0.

"To be able to beat one then two and stay composed to slap the ball home at that angle that was one of the best goals you're going to see this year," Sowry said.

The final goal came less than a minute later when Katelyn Orlando rifled a shot that bounced off the goalkeeper's chest. Murphy was there to get the rebound and put it in the back of the cage for her first goal of the season.

UMass silenced the Golden Rams' leading scorer Sara Conrad, not allowing the senior a single shot on goal. Conrad has two hat tricks this season and has a total of seven goals and one assist for 15 points. Sowry mentioned after the game that she was pleased that the defense was effective in neutralizing Conrad and that she focused heavily on stopping her in team meetings.

One of the bright spots for UMass was the play made by Bourazeris.

Sowry stressed that she wants the team to execute better when it takes penalty corners and that is the area where Bourazeris is excelling.

"Every game she shows me something else; and in the last week, she has shown me that she's potent in penalty corners," Sowry said. "Everyday, I'm going to challenge her because she's going to be a huge part of our future."

This is the first time that the Minutewomen have gone 2-0 in A-10 play since 2001. The two wins this weekend give the team more wins than last season's total.

UMass continues conference play when they will travel to Philadelphia to take on Temple and Saint Joseph's this weekend.

Justin McGrail can be reached at jpmcgrai@student.umass.edu

King stays on stride

PENALTY CORNERS from page 8

Cher King also returned to her goal-scoring ways for the Minutewomen. In the West Chester game, she scored one of the most impressive goals one will ever see in field hockey.

Coming down from the left endline, King lifted the ball over two defenders then beat Zarefoss from a near impossible angle. The goal gave UMass a 3-0 lead and put the game out of reach for the Golden Rams.

King's goal was not her only contribution of the weekend. With the Minutewomen clinging to a 1-0 lead with six minutes left in the game against La Salle, they were awarded a penalty corner. King recognized a defensive formation, and instead of shooting the ball, she spotted a wide-open Nicole Phelan in the lower left corner. Phelan received the pass and put it into an empty left side of the net; it was her first goal of the season.

Against La Salle, UMass used a statistical advantage to create opportunities and defeat the Explorers. Shots on goal were 9-2 in favor of the Minutewomen, and they dominated penalty corners 9-1.

"You can use stats however you want to use them," Sowry said. "There have been a couple of games this year where statistically we have out shot and out cornered our opponents and haven't won. The fact that we did come away with six goals was a good thing."

While the Minutewomen haven't taken advantage of all their opportunities to win games this season, they did capitalize this weekend and stand at the top of the A-10.

Mike Connors can be reached at myconnor@student.umass.edu

Sophomore Cher King scored her team-leading seventh goal in UMass's 2-0 win over La Salle on Sunday.

Toulose's return gives UM depth

WOMEN'S SOCCER from page 1

was denied.

"I give our kids credit for keeping it a 2-0 game; when you give up one right before halftime [during the last twenty-eight seconds] that can kill a team," Rudy said.

After missing the first game of the road trip, junior defender Melissa Toulouse was back on Sunday to play Xavier.

With senior Tina Rodriguez out recovering from her ACL injury and senior Christina Nunes done for the season with a serious knee injury, the middle defense for UMass was thin. Toulouse's presence gives Rudy the luxury of having an experienced player filling in for the injured.

"We put some people in uncomfortable roles [and] against a team like Dayton you're not going to get away with it," Rudy said.

Toulouse suffered a concussion against Duquesne last Sunday and was questionable for the weekend.

"It was a big difference. It gave us a player who's played back there in the center and it gave confidence to the team," Rudy said about Toulouse's impact. "Along with maturity, she's just very skillful in there."

In the ninth minute, Xavier forward Melissa Zimmerman knocked a header past Walker for the game's first goal. After losing two straight games and going down 1-0 on the road, where the thermometer in the press box said 99 degrees, the Minutewomen somehow switched the momentum to their side.

"It was a gut check," Rudy said. "It was like, define who you are and that game did."

Senior midfielder Kaelyn Caldwell picked a good spot to score her first goal of the season. From outside the box, she hit the ball over the goalkeeper to tie the game right before the half.

"It was a Cincinnati all-time [record] temperature, so you have to figure its well over 100 degrees on the field," Rudy said. "[Xavier] played 20 people before halftime."

To deal with the heat, Rudy also played more people in the game rotation. In the 83rd minute, senior forward Britt Canfield scored the go-ahead goal. She knocked in the first header of her career set up by Stoll, who broke through the defense and passed to junior forward Vanessa Patry, who fed Canfield near the net.

Five minutes later on a breakaway, Patry hit the ball over the defense to a sprinting Canfield. She took the ball and ran it in from about 30 yards out and shot it past the keeper to put UMass up for good at 3-1.

"That was great that she got the goals," Rudy said. "I know she was disappointed about the Duquesne game, but she's scored a lot more goals than she's missed."

The combination of Stoll, Canfield and Patry has accounted for 14 of the team's 20 goals.

"That's a pretty good attacking package when we can get it there," Rudy said.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu

Higgins leads Hofstra over Black Bears

CAA FOOTBALL from page 8

game very well and I wanted to see how R.J. could do in a battle like that. I felt R.J. handled himself pretty well. Ricky wanted to go, and we just decided it would be better to hold him out and not injure it any further."

McDonnell also said that Santos won't do much Tuesday or Wednesday, but Santos believes he'll be able to play Saturday against Iona.

After three quarters, Delaware (5-1, 3-1 CAA) trailed 35-10, but they outscored the Wildcats by 20 points in the final quarter and nearly pulled off the comeback.

Running back Omar Cuff grabbed a 31-yard touchdown pass from Joe Flacco and also had a 3-yard touchdown run. The Blue Hens' two point conversion attempt failed with 1:33 left in the game, and they left Durham with the five-point loss.

"They [UNH] kind of put us in a hole, which is not the way we've been playing," Delaware coach K.C. Keeler said. "We've played terrific, especially in first halves of ball games this year. You have to give a lot of credit to New Hampshire. I'm disappointed that we didn't come out and play crisp."

Pride remains undefeated

Running back Kareem Higgins had two touchdowns, including a 92-yard kick-off return for a touchdown in the Pride's 38-13 victory over Maine.

Higgins' touchdown run earned him CAA Special Teams Player of the Week. The senior also scored on a 71-yard run in the fourth quarter.

"Kareem is our leader, regardless of offense, defense or special teams," Hofstra coach Dave Cohen said. "He's the hardest working athlete I've worked with in 20 years. He's special. He brings an intensity level and a work ethic that's second to none."

The senior rushed for 137 yards on the game, and this was the fourth time in five games he has surpassed 100 yards rushing this season.

Hofstra (5-0, 2-0 CAA) also received contributions from junior quarterback Bryan Savage. He completed 16-of-20 passes with two touchdowns and also ran for 59 yards and a touchdown.

With his nine receptions for 84 yards, wide receiver Charles Sullivan surpassed Marques Colston for second place on Hofstra's all-time receptions list; the senior now has 191 catches.

The Pride is off to its best start since opening the 1999 season with six consecutive victories.

Maine (1-4, 3-0 CAA) has yet to win a conference game and has given up 38 points in three of its losses on the season.

The Black Bear offense was led by Landis Williams' 64 yards receiving.

Quarterback Adam Tarkes completed slightly over half of his pass attempts and was also intercepted by Stanley Gutierrez for a Pride touchdown.

Mike Connors can be reached at myconnor@student.umass.edu

For more coverage on UMass Sports
Check Out
From the Press Box
www.dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com

They practically wrote the book on Couple & Family Therapy.

Who better to learn from?

The Master's Degree in Family Therapy (MFT)

Choose to learn from one of the best and most experienced family therapy faculties in our new two-year Master's in Family Therapy program. Council for Relationships – for 25 years a leader in the field – has joined with Thomas Jefferson University – one of Philadelphia's most respected healthcare institutions – to provide students with a diverse and stimulating learning environment. You'll learn from, and work closely with, experts in the field of couple, family and sex therapy. Be part of the excitement – and together, let's write the next chapter!

Thomas Jefferson University | Jefferson College of Health Professions
Council for Relationships
For more information, Call 1-215-503-1044 or visit www.jefferson.edu/mft

Alumni Association

Free Networking Breakfast for Students, Faculty, Staff, Alumni

Sponsored by the UMass Amherst Alumni Association and Brueggers Bagels of Amherst

(Limited to first 250 people)

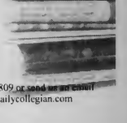
Wednesday, October 10
8:30 - 10:30 a.m.
Memorial Hall

Brueggers Baked Fresh

Take a photo of yourself with your completed SUDOKU or CROSSWORD and see yourself on the COMICS page!
COLLEGIANCOMICS@YAHOO.COM

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

1	6					9	2
		5	6	4	3	8
8								3
		8	7		6	9
		9	4		8	7
5								9
		2	3	9	1	6
9	4						2	7



ACROSS
1 News services
6 Periods
10 Informal conversation
14 Entertain
15 Barber's call
16 Whip
17 Where Tao ruled
19 Otherwise
20 Weaver's apparatus
21 Layer
23 Hard up for cash
27 Unspanng
28 Plunder
29 80 yards of wool
31 Yields
32 Maps within maps
35 Change
37 Afternoon affair
38 Blushes
40 Existed
43 Boardwalk extensions
44 Casual top
48 VCR port
49 Poisonous evergreen
51 Feed the kitty
52 Tight spot
54 Having the sharpest taste
57 Political refugees
59 Pull (for)
60 Arrived
61 Lasting just a little while 66 Yemen port
67 Ripped up
68 Word before tale or ring
69 Hey, over here!
70 "Nania" star
71 Trap

DOWN
1 New Jersey cape
2 Oldrich relative
3 Made a ditch
4 Set apart
5 Fable man
6 Tooth covering
7 Auto gear: abbr.
8 Arkies' WWI opponent
9 RBIs and ERAs
10 Beaver's family name
11 Stopped
12 Make certain
13 Mo's
18 Cut off
22 Alcove
23 Narrow fissure
24 Verbal subtlety
25 Santa ___ CA
26 Determined
30 Pub quaff
33 More hackneyed
34 Observe
36 Explosive letters
39 And
40 Chablis or Chianti
41 BA word
42 Prooter's word
43 Strong smelling
45 Port-au-Prince resident
46 Polar region
47 Wanderers
48 Prepares
50 Spann or Harding
53 Takes a short breax
55 ___ for profit
56 Plays the links
58 Worn out
62 Prospector's find
63 By way of
64 Blunder
65 Change the color of

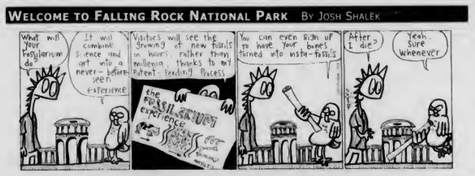
Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is looking for writers from within the five colleges area. Your news could be tomorrow's headline!

Call us at 545-1809 or send us an email to news@dailycollegian.com

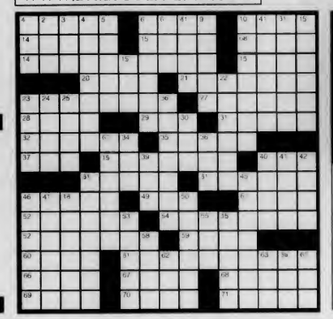
Quote of the Day



"The body is a sacred garment."

-Martha Graham

Ecology By Jen Fill



Welcome to Falling Rock National Park By Josh Shalek

Labrat By Richard Martelly

Submit your comics!
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Hey Judy, quit judging everyone who walks by; you're no prize.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Your earrings are an island unto themselves. Sir Elton John would be proud.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Face it, there is no way to look tough in a minivan.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Only using the men's or women's room is sexist. It's time to shake things up a bit.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
It may be a four day week, but every day is going to feel like Monday.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
At what point did wrestlers say, "this would be much better if we were almost naked?"

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
People will hunt you like a magical unicorn with a mystical horn.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Get off the bench of loneliness, and step up to the plate in the dating game.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Sobriety suits you much better than a face full of toilet water and projectile vomiting.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
A mugshot is not a reasonable substitute for a formal head shot on a job application.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Bring your underweight friend a cheeseburger with a side of pure bacon fat.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
There is no escaping your passion for cheesy yet rewarding Hallmark movies.

Get your freak on...
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Activities
Montreal weekend from $99.00. Complete, motel, transportation and more. Montreal express.net 781-979-9001. Lowest Prices on campus.

Auto for Sale
Volvo GLE Sedan 1988 106000. $2100 5% Umass Discount. Tom: 256-6401.

Employment
Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext. 162

Employment
CAFE HELP PART-TIME nights and weekends must be fast, accurate, efficient and friendly. Apply in person at the woodstar cafe. 60 Masonic St. Northampton.

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Found
Watch found on 10/3 in Boyden men's shower room. To claim go to Umass Police Dept.

Instruction
University Bartending Classes start soon. 1-800-U-CAN-MIX. www.universitybartending.com. Sign up now.

Salons and Spas
HOLISTIC SALON AND SPA. Heated stone Massage with Shiatsu! www.shearblissamherst.com. 413-253-2322

Services
Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906,1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

Concerned About Your Eating? Do you eat too little? Eat too much? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic: 577-5101.

Services
TAPESTRY HEALTH, providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling & rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St., Amherst www.tapestryhealth.org

THANK YOU

Travel
#1 Spring Break Website! 4 & 7 night trips. Low prices guaranteed. Group discounts for 8+. Book 20 people, get 3 free trips! Campus reps needed. www.StudentCity.com or 800-293-1445.

Spring Break 2008 Sell Trips, Earn Cash & Go Free. Call for group discounts. Best Deals Guaranteed! Info/Reservations. 800-648-4849/ www.ststravel.com

OCT 9 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 9, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Sophomore Nicole Phelan celebrates her second half goal in UMass's 2-0 win over La Salle on Sunday. The Minutewomen also defeated West Chester over the weekend to begin A-10 play with two wins.

UM rolls in A-10 play

Penalty corners spark offense

By Justin McGrail
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts field hockey team helped UMass coach Justine Sowry celebrate her birthday by winning both of its games over the weekend.

UMass defeated two Atlantic 10 opponents, La Salle, 2-0, on Sunday and West Chester, 4-0, on Friday.

La Salle (8-7, 1-1 A-10) entered the game off of a 3-0 win over Rhode Island.

The Explorers controlled the ball in the early stages of the game, forcing senior goalkeeper Becky Letourneau to make some acrobatic saves. But when the Minutewomen were given the chance, they capitalized.

The team was awarded a penalty corner in the 14th minute. Erin Parker inserted the ball to Kara Murphy, who stopped it, then passed to Jaime Bourazeris who shot a laser past La Salle goalkeeper Ellen Axelsen to open the scoring.

UMass	2
La Salle	0
UMass	4
WC	0

It was her second goal of the weekend.

The team carried that lead into halftime and got another insurance goal later in the half on another penalty corner. The personnel was different, but the results were the same.

Nicole Phelan inserted the ball to Murphy, who stopped it for Cher King; but as King was about to shoot, she passed it to a wide-open Phelan who found the back of the cage for her first goal of the season.

"It's pretty exciting. As a defender we don't get a lot of the scoring glory. But I was more excited about the win and putting it to 2-0 as opposed to 1-0," Phelan said.

As well as they did on Sunday, they did even better on Friday. The Maroon and White scored early and often, shutting out West Chester to win its first conference game of the season. It was a hot and sticky day at Garber Field; and to make matters worse, UMass was forced to wear its all-black uniforms.

Also, because of the heat, the field was over-watered which caused a number of players to fall. Despite the slick field, the UMass offense executed plays on offense.

Junior Lauren Gillespie started the scoring when Mary Shea brought the ball into the right side of the circle and threaded a pass to the opposite side where Gillespie was waiting. She beat the WC

See FIELD HOCKEY on page 6

Minutemen hold on in win over Hawks

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

All it took was 10 minutes of soccer before Zack Simmons had all of the offensive support he needed to lead the Massachusetts men's soccer team to victory. As part of the Minutemen's 1-0 victory over Hartford on Saturday, Simmons broke the school's career shutout record with 16.

Senior defender Kenny Cook scored the game's lone goal off of a pass from redshirt junior Doug Rappaport.

UMass	1
Hartford	0

The team's third straight victory sends UMass (5-4-0) into conference play next week with positive momentum. The Minutemen face Atlantic 10 rivals Dayton and Xavier on Friday and Sunday, respectively, both at Rudd Field.

Simmons received strong play from the UMass defense on Saturday. It limited the Hawks (5-3-1) to nine shots, yet the goalkeeper made just two saves to preserve the victory and the record-breaking shutout.

In the 10th minute, Cook fielded a pass from Rappaport near the right side of the penalty area, eight yards away from the net. The center back launched a shot past Hartford goalkeeper Matt Glaeser and into the center of the goal.

The goal was a culmination of a flurry of UMass scoring chances early in the first half. Sophomore forward Mark DeSantis brought the ball into the offensive zone while a gap was in the Hawk's defense. DeSantis put a shot on net, but Glaeser deflected the ball over the goal. The Minutemen failed to capitalize on the ensuing corner kick but struck one minute later on Cook's shot.

Though Hartford dominated time of possession, the UMass defense played well enough to prevent the Hawks from creating a significant amount of dangerous chances.

Just 13 minutes after the game's only goal, the Hawks had their best scoring chance of the half. Forward Gary Muir's shot from the left side was saved by Simmons. Though it was the goalkeeper's only physical save of the half, Simmons and the UMass defense dealt with the Hawk's offensive pressure for the remainder of the period.

In the second half, sophomore forward Bryan Hogan nearly scored for the Minutemen after catching Glaeser out of position near the midpoint of the period. But Hogan sent his shot wide right of the net.

Hartford had one final quality chance to equalize the score with 10 minutes remaining. However, Andreas Blamo did not take advantage of an open net, launching a shot wide left from the left side.

UMass coach Sam Koch utilized a smaller rotation than in previous games. Koch rotated three players into the match, while UMass typically brings in five players off the bench per game.

The match was also marked by physical play from both squads. The teams combined for 24 fouls and six yellow cards.

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu.

Junior Doug Rappaport assisted on the lone UMass goal in a 1–0 win over Hartford on Saturday night. The Minutemen have won three in a row.

Towson defeats No. 20 Richmond, earns first CAA

Schaefer's record-setting day propels Tigers over Spiders

By Mike Connors
Collegian Staff

Towson's Sean Schaefer rebounded from last week's three interceptions to win the Colonial Athletic Association's Offensive Player of the Week. Schaefer threw for 287 yards and two touchdowns.

"It was just vintage Sean Schaefer," Towson coach Gordy Combs said in this week's CAA teleconference. "Any time that he has the ball in his hands, he's going to make things happen. He came back from a couple rough starts he had in his previous games. That's just the type of athlete, and more importantly, the type of person he is."

The Tigers (3-3, 1-3 CAA) used Schaefer's performance to pull a 23-21 home upset victory over No. 20 Richmond (3-2, 2-1 CAA). He completed 29-of-33 passes for a completion percentage of 87. This enabled the junior quarterback to break the Tigers' all-time record for a single game.

Schaefer broke another school record when he completed 15 straight passes in the third quarter.

On Tiger scoring drives, Schaefer completed all 18 of his passes that included 4-for-4 on the final drive, which lasted only 22 seconds.

Villanova dominates W & M

Villanova used four touchdown passes from Antwon Young to defeat the Tribe 63-21 at Villanova Stadium.

The 63 Villanova points were good enough to tie them for most points scored by a CAA team this year. William & Mary (3-3, 1-2 CAA), the Wildcats' victims this week, put up 63 against Virginia Military Institute on Sept. 8.

"It was one of those things where it was a turnover night, and we were hot," Villanova coach Andy Talley said. "Our quarterback executed real well, so we just had a great night offensively."

The Tribe lost four fumbles in the game, including two on first quarter kickoff returns that allowed the Wildcats (4-2, 2-1 CAA) to put 14 quick points on the board with a short field.

"We didn't do a real good job on kickoff coverage," William & Mary coach Jimmye Laycock said. "We didn't do a real good job on kickoff returns of holding onto the football. Defensively, we didn't do a real good job on third down. Credit Villanova ... they did a nice job offensively. They got rolling, got hot and executed pretty well."

With 4-of-5 of his tackles coming behind the lines of scrimmage, Villanova's Greg Miller earned the CAA Defensive Player of the Week.

Miller was all over the field against William & Mary. The junior recorded three sacks, recovered a fumble and forced a fumble.

The three sacks were especially impressive considering the Tribe had allowed six sacks in its previous five games on the season.

UNH bounces back

Coming off a tough loss to Richmond, No. 11 UNH recovered and handed No. 15 Delaware its first loss of the season.

Keith LeVan led the Wildcat (3-2, 1-2 CAA) offense with two receiving touchdowns and a passing one as well. The team's 21-point second quarter began when LeVan took a lateral from quarterback R.J. Toman and connected with Mike Boyle for a 45-yard touchdown. Toman replaced regular starter Ricky Santos in the second quarter after the starter left the game with a right shoulder injury.

"He's got an AC [Acromioclavicular] sprain," UNH coach Sean McDonnell said. "He possibly could have played the second half, but I felt that R.J. was managing the

See CAA FOOTBALL on page 6

Towson quarterback Sean Schaefer completed 29-of-33 passes for 287 yards and two touchdowns in the Tigers win over Richmond.

Colonial Athletic Association Standings

North Division

Team	CAA Record	Overall Record	PA	PF
Hofstra	2-0	5-0	168	95
Massachusetts	2-0	4-1	163	91
New Hampshire	1-2	3-2	197	182
Rhode Island	0-2	1-4	112	158
Northeastern	0-2	1-4	80	139
Maine	0-3	1-4	58	152

South Division

Team	CAA Record	Overall Record	PA	PF
James Madison	3-0	5-1	201	109
Delaware	3-1	5-1	227	103
Villanova	2-1	4-2	172	141
Richmond	2-1	3-2	177	130
William & Mary	1-2	3-3	196	235
Towson	1-3	3-3	113	142

Bourazeris, King earn praise in wins

By Mike Connors
Collegian Staff

Even the black uniforms it donned Friday against West Chester weren't enough to prevent the Massachusetts field hockey team's offense from heating up.

The Minutewomen are 1-of-2 Atlantic 10 teams to start out conference play with a pair of wins. And after struggling for a majority of the first 11 games, the offense hit its stride and began to pressure the opposition's defense and score more consistently. It combined for six goals in its two games against La Salle and West Chester.

The new-found offensive aspect of its game has put UMass in good position to earn a top four spot in the A-10 and qualify for the conference tournament.

"I think we were really able to spread the field very nicely, so it opened up a lot of space," UMass coach Justine Sowry said after her team's 4-0 victory over West Chester. "Some of the ball movement was fantastic. With our defense, we were able to stretch their press out. We had a lot of space through the midfield. Our passing really opened up through that midfield area, and we kept switching the ball. I couldn't have asked for anything better."

One player who stood out over the weekend was Jaime Bourazeris. Using her powerful shot, the freshman defender scored off a penalty corner in each game. She has started every game this year and has three goals.

With just under six minutes remaining in the first half against West Chester, Bourazeris received a Nicole Phelan penalty corner and ripped a shot past goalkeeper Joelle Zarefoss to give UMass a 2-0 lead. The shot immediately bounced back into play after it hit the backboard.

Bourazeris attributed her recent success to learning how to deal with failure.

"I've learned to stay composed after something doesn't go the way it's supposed to," she said.

She matched her feat Sunday against La Salle. After two teammates allowed the ball roll to past them, Bourazeris beat goalkeeper Ellen Axelson.

"Every game she shows me something else," Sowry said. "In the last week, she's shown me that she's potent on the penalty corners. If our execution, including the push out and the trap are on, Jaime will hit it past any standing goalkeeper. Every day I'm going to challenge her because she's going to be a huge part of our future."

See PENALTY CORNERS on page 6

FOXX LEADS ALL-STAR CAST IN "THE KINGDOM" | PAGE 4

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

CLOUDY : HI: 64 LO: 52 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 10, 2007

Following Lombardi's lead

Continued increase of faculty the focus for Chancellor Cole

By Nick Bush
Collegian Staff

At the beginning of September, Dr. Thomas W. Cole, Jr. began his one-year term as interim chancellor of UMass Amherst.

A former president of Clark Atlanta University, Cole came out of retirement to assume the temporary position. While a 24-member committee appointed by the Board of Trustees currently searches for a long-term replacement for departed chancellor John V. Lombardi, Cole has been adapting to his new position.

Cole is set with the task of filling Lombardi's shoes. The former chancellor took over the reins of the University while it was in the middle of a $40 million budget cut and in five years shaped it into a top research institution.

"Dr. Lombardi, when he came on board, he came at the heels of a very difficult budget situation," said Cole. "They were in the process of budget cuts, a bad situation, which turned around shortly thereafter to one of more prosperity and resources for the University."

Cole praised Lombardi and the policies enacted during his term as chancellor for allowing the faculty to focus more on teaching and research and less on dealing with budget cuts.

"What the chancellor and vice chancellors did was free up the extraordinarily talented faculty here, which allowed them to be more aggressive in writing for research grants," Cole said. "It resulted in much greater success and increased revenue from that area."

The interim chancellor called the continuation of the Amherst 250 plan — a project begun in 2005 to increase the number of faculty at UMass by 250 — a critical part of his current job.

"We need to not only identify the faculty we want to bring about, but also provide them the space to do cutting-edge research. We are planning on continuing to bring about 30 to 50 faculty members a year, over the course of the five-year plan," Cole said. "It is a very aggressive and ambitious plan."

A large number of construction proj-

See COLE on page 2

The interim leader of UMass calls the Amherst 250 plan to hire more faculty a "very aggressive and ambitious" project.

UMass engineers build memorial

By Lee Wallett

A group of University of Massachusetts civil engineering students helped build a playground this weekend in memory of Victoria Snelgrove, an Emerson student killed during Red Sox celebrations in 2004.

The students built the playground Saturday at the Gordon Mitchell Middle School in East Bridgewater, Mass. Snelgrove's hometown.

Eight UMass students helped out with the project by means, cement operating machinery to move mulch and putting together playground equipment, among and other tasks.

The UMass students were a part of the American Society of Civil Engineers (ASCE), a registered student organization (RSO) at UMass that hosts guest lectures and participates in community service projects that involve civil engineering.

Snelgrove was the 22-year-old college student struck in the eye by a pepper pellet in Boston in 2004. She was out celebrating the Red Sox victory over the Yankees during the 2004 American League Championship Series at the time.

Boston Police Commissioner Kathleen O'Toole later said in a Boston Globe article that the police department accepted full responsibility for Snelgrove's death.

"Her death was tragic. She was a big part of the community," said UMass president Michael Sullivan.

Over 50 people were involved in the playground project. Constructed over the three-day weekend, the playground was given the name "Tessa's Place Too," according to an article in the Whitman & East Bridgewater Express.

"The community did such a beautiful job and it is so great for the kids to be able to have this," Dionne Snelgrove, Victoria's mother, told the Express.

Lee Wallett can be reached at lwallett@student.umass.edu.

Colleges grapple with racial incidents

UMD students take steps to fight racism

By Lucas Correia
Collegian Staff

Students and administrators at colleges and universities across the country, including the University of Massachusetts, are attempting to grapple with racial incidents.

UMass sophomore Maha Mudawar, vice president of the Arab Students Club, recalls a confrontation she had last Halloween.

An unnamed student was "dressed from head to toe in what he considered to be a 'suicide bomber' costume and making jokes with a fake foreign accent," Mahawar said.

The student claimed his outfit didn't imply he was Arab, yet he was wearing an Arab Kaffiyah scarf, according to Mahawar.

Mahawar called the costumed student a racist. "He answered me back by screaming that his brother was fighting in Iraq, and how he was going right after him to fight and 'kill all the Muslims.' At that point I just walked away laughing, although I was deeply angered by his ignorance," she said.

UMass is not alone, according to a Sept. 26 Washington Post article. College campuses across the nation have become the scene of racial incidents.

On Friday, Sept. 7, a noose was left hanging on a tree outside of the Nyumburu African American Cultural Center at the University of Maryland.

On Monday, Sept. 24, a swastika was spray-painted on a student's car. The owner of the car is a

See RACE on page 2

Students at the University of Maryland found a noose hanging from the branches of a tree outside the Nyumburu African American Cultural Center early last month.

NSF grant awarded to AC researcher

By Danielle Kahn

A $244,581 National Science Foundation (NSF) grant will be awarded last month to an Amherst College assistant professor to investigate the effect of plant chemicals on animals.

In late September, assistant professor Ethan Gehlert received the grant, allowing him to fund him next three years of his research on the effects of phytoestrogens in fish.

Phytoestrogens are chemicals produced by plants that act like estrogens in mammalian and avian cells and bodies. Found in many plants, the chemical mimic the actions of the body's own hormone, estrogen, when ingested. Consuming the chemical can result in alternations in behavior, reproductive endocrinology and neurophysiology.

Gehlert's research are aimed primarily on fish because they are more likely to accidentally ingest phytoestrogens from man-made and agricultural sources.

Gehlert has done similar research in the field of animal behavioral studies and physiology.

During past research, Gehlert and his students found that exposure to levels of contamination found in fish in the environment can have such normal behavior and endocrinology as a role in reproduction.

Gehlert has also written many articles on his research of mammals, mostly fish and birds — and has received numerous other awards for his work including a National Institute of Health (NIH) grant in 2001 and a Harry Frank Guggenheim grant in 2005.

The NSF — an independent federal agency established by Congress in 1950. Its primary goal is the promotion of science, progress, wealth, national health and to secure the national defense of the United States, according to the NSF Website. Its annual budget of around $5.92 billion funds nearly 20 percent of all federally supported research across colleges and universities in America.

Ethan Gehlert has been a member of the Amherst Biology department since 2001. He has obtained a Ph.D. and a MA from the University of Wisconsin and a B.A. from the University of North Carolina.

The biology department at Amherst offers introductory courses in biology, chemistry and physics. Also those courses, the department — itself — offers upper courses to explore different fields of research from the Amherst community, according to the department's website.

Adventure brewing in New Hampshire

By Tim McCall and Derrick Perkins
Collegian Staff

This is part two of a two-part series chronicling the journey of three Collegian editors to Oktoberfest in Bartlett, New Hampshire.

BARTLETT, N.H. — Tim got caught up at a Northeastern party in Allston, Mass., instead of meeting Joe Meloni at a bar he didn't even go to. A poor omen for the rest of the weekend, if you were to ask any of us. Guess it fits right along with the chaos of the rest of the weekend's plans.

Derrick and Tim didn't originally plan on having Joe come along to Oktoberfest. But after the long fun ride down the Mass Pike Thursday we invited him along. Or he invited himself; no one is sure.

The plan was to meet up at 9 a.m. Saturday, but after Manny Ramirez turned on a Francisco Rodriguez fastball to put the Red Sox up two games in the American League Division Series, all plans went out the window. Tim fell asleep around 3 a.m., Joe took a cab from Boston to North Quincy and Derrick fell asleep comfortably at his house in Bridgewater, Mass.

Bartlett, N.H., is a lot farther from Boston than MapQuest thinks it is. As journalists, we constantly praise the Internet for making our lives far easier than they it should be. But at 5 p.m. on Saturday when we finally arrived at Attitash for Oktoberfest, we were not on good terms with the World Wide Web.

Derrick and Tim didn't originally plan on having Joe come along to Oktoberfest. But after the long fun ride down the Mass Pike Thursday we invited him along. Or he invited himself; no one is sure.

The plan was to meet up at 9 a.m. Saturday, but after Manny Ramirez turned on a Francisco Rodriguez fastball to put the Red Sox up two games in the American League Division Series, all plans went out the window. Tim fell asleep around 3 a.m., Joe took a cab from Boston to North Quincy and Derrick fell asleep comfortably at his house in Bridgewater, Mass.

Bartlett, N.H., is a lot farther from Boston than MapQuest thinks it is. As journalists, we constantly praise the Internet for making our lives far easier than they it should be. But at 5 p.m. on Saturday when we finally arrived at Attitash for Oktoberfest, we were not on good terms with the World Wide Web.

Drinking pumpkin-flavored beer is certainly not what Oktoberfest's creators had in mind, but it was a wonderful way to start our weekend. The first official beer of the weekend, and our personal kick-off to Oktoberfest, Shipyard's Pumpkinhead beer went down like a liquid pumpkin pie. Light in body and smooth in texture, Pumpkinhead left a perfectly spiced autumn aftertaste to start off the rest of our beer-celebrating weekend.

It certainly appeared that Shipyard's fall brew was the choice of the crowd, but a local favorite, Moat Mountain's Oktoberfest, won the award for the best brew. For a community with a low population, Oktoberfest had a lot of local brewers.

We encountered more characters on this trip than types of beer.

After the first day of Oktoberfest in the pouring rain we walked to a bar from our campsite and met a married couple. Their daughter originally had wanted to be a journalist just like the three of us, but they talked her out of it. She is now a history major at Bridgewater State College. Her new parent-approved career plans are to be a history professor and a writer on the side. It appears as though parents hate the idea of their son or daughter doing anything that won't immediately result in a winter home in Florida.

The rain-soaked walk back included a stop at a grocery store for Budweiser and snacks. Poor weather aside, the whole area was beautiful even though Joe didn't seem to feel even the least bit comfortable with the idea of sleeping in a tent ... so he didn't.

See OKTOBERFEST on page 4

Award-winning brewmaster, former Utah ski bum, and New Hampshire native, Will Gilson took home the top prize at the 10th annual Oktoberfest at Attitash this past weekend.

OCT 9 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 9, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Sophomore Nicole Phelan celebrates her second half goal in UMass's 2-0 win over La Salle on Sunday. The Minutewomen also defeated West Chester over the weekend to begin A-10 play with two wins.

UM rolls in A-10 play

Penalty corners spark offense

By Justin McGrail
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts field hockey team helped UMass coach Justine Sowry celebrate her birthday by winning both of its games over the weekend.

UMass defeated two Atlantic 10 opponents, La Salle, 2-0, on Sunday and West Chester, 4-0, on Friday.

La Salle (8-7, 1-1 A-10) entered the game off of a 3-0 win over Rhode Island.

The Explorers controlled the ball in the early stages of the game, forcing senior goalkeeper Becky Letourneau to make some acrobatic saves. But when the Minutewomen were given the chance, they capitalized.

The team was awarded a penalty corner in the 14th minute. Erin Parker inserted the ball to Kara Murphy, who stopped it, then passed to Jaime Bourazeris who shot a laser past La Salle goalkeeper Ellen Axelsen to open the scoring.

UMass	2
La Salle	0

It was her second goal of the weekend.

The team carried that lead into halftime and got another insurance goal later in the half on another penalty corner. The personnel was different, but the results were the same.

Nicole Phelan inserted the ball to Murphy, who stopped it for Cher King; but as King was about to shoot, she passed it to a wide-open Phelan who found the back of the cage for her first goal of the season.

UMass	4
WC	0

"It's pretty exciting. As a defender we don't get a lot of the scoring glory. But I was more excited about the win and putting it to 2-0 as opposed to 1-0," Phelan said.

As well as they did on Sunday, they did even better on Friday. The Maroon and White scored early and often, shutting out West Chester to win its first conference game of the season. It was a hot and sticky day at Garber Field; and to make matters worse, UMass was forced to wear its all-black uniforms.

Also, because of the heat, the field was over-watered which caused a number of players to fall. Despite the slick field, the UMass offense executed plays on offense.

Junior Lauren Gillespie started the scoring when Mary Shea brought the ball into the right side of the circle and threaded a pass to the opposite side where Gillespie was waiting. She beat the WC

See FIELD HOCKEY on page 6

Minutemen hold on in win over Hawks

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

All it took was 10 minutes of soccer before Zack Simmons had all of the offensive support he needed to lead the Massachusetts men's soccer team to victory. As part of the Minutemen's 1-0 victory over Hartford on Saturday, Simmons broke the school's career shutout record with 16.

Senior defender Kenny Cook scored the game's lone goal off of a pass from redshirt junior Doug Rappaport.

UMass	2
Hartford	0

The team's third straight victory sends UMass (5-4-0) into conference play next week with positive momentum. The Minutemen face Atlantic 10 rivals Dayton and Xavier on Friday and Sunday, respectively, both at Rudd Field.

Simmons received strong play from the UMass defense on Saturday. It limited the Hawks (5-3-1) to nine shots, yet the goalkeeper made just two saves to preserve the victory and the record-breaking shutout.

In the 10th minute, Cook fielded a pass from Rappaport near the right side of the penalty area, eight yards away from the net. The center back launched a shot past Hartford goalkeeper Matt Glaeser and into the center of the goal.

The goal was a culmination of a flurry of UMass scoring chances early in the first half. Sophomore forward Mark DeSantis brought the ball into the offensive zone while a gap was in the Hawk's defense. DeSantis put a shot on net, but Glaeser deflected the ball over the goal. The Minutemen failed to capitalize on the ensuing corner kick but struck one minute later on Cook's shot.

Though Hartford dominated time of possession, the UMass defense played well enough to prevent the Hawks from creating a significant amount of dangerous chances.

Just 13 minutes after the game's only goal, the Hawks had their best scoring chance of the half. Forward Gary Muir's shot from the left side was saved by Simmons. Though it was the goalkeeper's only physical save of the half, Simmons and the UMass defense dealt with the Hawk's offensive pressure for the remainder of the period.

In the second half, sophomore forward Bryan Hogan nearly scored for the Minutemen after catching Glaeser out of position near the midpoint of the period. But Hogan sent his shot wide right of the net.

Hartford had one final quality chance to equalize the score with 10 minutes remaining. However, Andreas Blamo did not take advantage of an open net, launching a shot wide left from the left side.

UMass coach Sam Koch utilized a smaller rotation than in previous games. Koch rotated three players into the match, while UMass typically brings in five players off the bench per game.

The match was also marked by physical play from both squads. The teams combined for 24 fouls and six yellow cards.

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu.

Junior Doug Rappaport assisted on the lone UMass goal in a 1-0 win over Hartford on Saturday night. The Minutemen have won three in a row.

Bourazeris, King earn praise in wins

By Mike Connors
Collegian Staff

Even the black uniforms it donned Friday against West Chester weren't enough to prevent the Massachusetts field hockey team's offense from heating up.

The Minutewomen are 1-of-2 Atlantic 10 teams to start out conference play with a pair of wins. And after struggling for a majority of the first 11 games, the offense hit its stride and began to pressure the opposition's defense and score more consistently. It combined for six goals in its two games against La Salle and West Chester.

The newfound offensive aspect of its game has put UMass in good position to earn a top four spot in the A-10 and qualify for the conference tournament.

"I think we were really able to spread the field very nicely, so it opened up a lot of space," UMass coach Justine Sowry said after her team's 4-0 victory over West Chester. "Some of the ball movement was fantastic. With our defense, we were able to stretch their press out. We had a lot of space through the midfield. Our passing really opened up through that midfield area, and we kept switching the ball. I couldn't have asked for anything better."

One player who stood out over the weekend was Jaime Bourazeris. Using her powerful shot, the freshman defender scored off a penalty corner in each game. She has started every game this year and has three goals.

With just under six minutes remaining in the first half against West Chester, Bourazeris received a Nicole Phelan penalty corner and ripped a shot past goalkeeper Joelle Zarefoss to give UMass a 2-0 lead. The shot immediately bounced back into play after it hit the backboard.

Bourazeris attributed her recent success to learning how to deal with failure.

"I've learned to stay composed after something doesn't go the way it's supposed to," she said.

She matched her feat Sunday against La Salle. After two teammates allowed the ball roll to past them, Bourazeris beat goalkeeper Ellen Axelson.

"Every game she shows me something else," Sowry said. "In the last week, she's shown me that she's potent on the penalty corners. If our execution, including the push out and the trap are on, Jaime will hit it past any standing goalkeeper. Every day I'm going to challenge her because she's going to be a huge part of our future."

See PENALTY CORNERS on page 6

Towson defeats No. 20 Richmond, earns first CAA

Schaefer's record-setting day propels Tigers over Spiders

By Mike Connors
Collegian Staff

Towson's Sean Schaefer rebounded from last week's three interceptions to win the Colonial Athletic Association's Offensive Player of the Week. Schaefer threw for 287 yards and two touchdowns.

"It was just vintage Sean Schaefer," Towson coach Gordy Combs said in this week's CAA teleconference. "Any time that he has the ball in his hands, he's going to make things happen. He came back from a couple rough starts he had in his previous games. That's just the type of athlete, and more importantly, the type of person he is."

The Tigers (3-3, 1-3 CAA) used Schaefer's performance to pull a 23-21 home upset victory over No. 20 Richmond (3-2, 2-1 CAA). He completed 29-of-33 passes for a completion percentage of 87. This enabled the junior quarterback to break the Tigers' all-time record for a single game.

Schaefer broke another school record when he completed 15 straight passes in the third quarter.

On Tiger scoring drives, Schaefer completed all 18 of his passes that included 4-for-4 on the final drive, which lasted only 22 seconds.

VILLANOVA DOMINATES W & M

Villanova used four touchdown passes from Antwon Young to defeat the Tribe 63-21 at Villanova Stadium.

The 63 Villanova points were good enough to tie them for most points scored by a CAA team this year. William & Mary (3-3, 1-2 CAA), the Wildcats' victims this week, put up 63 against Virginia Military Institute on Sept. 8.

"It was one of those things where it was a turnover night, and we were hot," Villanova coach Andy Talley said. "Our quarterback executed real well, so we just had a great night offensively."

The Tribe lost four fumbles in the game, including two on first quarter kickoff returns that allowed the Wildcats (4-2, 2-1 CAA) to put 14 quick points on the board with a short field.

"We didn't do a real good job on kickoff coverage," William & Mary coach Jimmye Laycock said. "We didn't do a real good job on kickoff returns of holding onto the football. Defensively, we didn't do a real good job on third down. Credit Villanova – they did a nice job offensively. They got rolling, got hot and executed pretty well."

With 4-of-5 of his tackles coming behind the lines of scrimmage, Villanova's Greg Miller earned the CAA Defensive Player of the Week.

Miller was all over the field against William & Mary. The junior recorded three sacks, recovered a fumble and forced a fumble.

The three sacks were especially impressive considering the Tribe had allowed six sacks in its previous five games on the season.

UNH BOUNCES BACK

Coming off a tough loss to Richmond, No. 11 UNH recovered and handed No. 15 Delaware its first loss of the season.

Keith LeVan led the Wildcat (3-2, 1-2 CAA) offense with two receiving touchdowns and a passing one as well. The team's 21-point second quarter began when LeVan took a lateral from quarterback R.J. Toman and connected with Mike Boyle for a 45-yard touchdown. Toman replaced regular starter Ricky Santos in the second quarter after the starter left the game with a right shoulder injury.

"He's got an AC [Acromioclavicular] sprain," UNH coach Sean McDonnell said. "He possibly could have played the second half, but I felt that R.J. was managing the

See CAA FOOTBALL on page 6

Towson quarterback Sean Schaefer completed 29-of-33 passes for 287 yards and two touchdowns in the Tigers win over Richmond.

Colonial Athletic Association Standings

North Division

Team	CAA Record	Overall Record	PA	PF
Hofstra	2-0	5-0	168	95
Massachusetts	2-0	4-1	163	91
New Hampshire	1-2	3-2	197	182
Rhode Island	0-2	1-4	112	158
Northeastern	0-2	1-4	80	139
Maine	0-3	1-4	58	152

South Division

Team	CAA Record	Overall Record	PA	PF
James Madison	3-0	5-1	201	109
Delaware	3-1	5-1	227	103
Villanova	2-1	4-2	172	141
Richmond	2-1	3-2	177	130
William & Mary	1-2	3-3	196	235
Towson	1-3	3-3	113	142

OCT 10 2007

FOXX LEADS ALL-STAR CAST IN "THE KINGDOM" | PAGE 4

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN
NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

CLOUDY : HI: 64 LO: 52 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 10, 2007

Following Lombardi's lead

Continued increase of faculty the focus for Chancellor Cole

By Nick Bush
Collegian Staff

At the beginning of September, Dr. Thomas W. Cole, Jr. began his one-year term as interim chancellor of UMass Amherst.

A former president of Clark Atlanta University, Cole came out of retirement to assume the temporary position. While a 24-member committee appointed by the Board of Trustees currently searches for a long-term replacement for departed chancellor John V. Lombardi, Cole has been adapting to his new position.

Cole is set with the task of filling Lombardi's shoes. The former chancellor took over the reins of the University while it was in the middle of a $40 million budget cut and in five years shaped it into a top research institution.

"Dr. Lombardi, when he came on board, he came at the heels of a very difficult budget situation," said Cole. "They were in the process of budget cuts, a bad situation, which turned around shortly thereafter to one of more prosperity and resources for the University."

Cole praised Lombardi and the policies enacted during his term as chancellor for allowing the faculty to focus more on teaching and research and less on dealing with budget cuts.

"What the chancellor and vice chancellors did was free up the extraordinarily talented faculty here, which allowed them to be more aggressive in writing for research grants," Cole said. "It resulted in much greater success and increased revenue from that area."

The interim chancellor called the continuation of the Amherst 250 plan – a project begun in 2005 to increase the number of faculty at UMass by 250 – a critical part of his current job.

"We need to not only identify the faculty we want to bring aboard, but also provide them the space to do cutting-edge research. We are planning on continuing to bring about 30 to 50 faculty members a year, over the course of the five-year plan," Cole said. "It is a very aggressive and ambitious plan."

A large number of construction proj-

See COLE on page 2

The interim leader of UMass calls the Amherst 250 plan to hire more faculty a "very aggressive and ambitious" project.

UMass engineers build memorial

By Lee Wagoner

A group of Universal of Massachusetts civil engineering students helped build a playground this weekend in memory of Victoria Snelgrove, an Emerson student killed during Red Sox celebrations in 2004.

The student-built playground Saturday at the Gordon Mitchell Middle School in East Bridgewater, Mass., Snelgrove's hometown.

Eight UMass students helped out with the project by mixing cement, operating machinery to move mulch and putting together playground equipment, among and other tasks.

The UMass students were a part of the American Society of Civil Engineers (ASCE), a registered student organization (RSO) at UMass that hosts guest lectures and participates in community service projects that involve civil engineering.

Snelgrove was the 22-year-old college student struck in the eye by a pepper pellet in Boston in 2004. She was out celebrating the Red Sox victory over the Yankees during the 2004 American League Championship Series at the time.

Boston Police Commissioner Kathleen O'Toole later said in a Boston Globe article that the police department accepted full responsibility for Snelgrove's death.

"Her death was tragic. She was a big part of the community," said ASCE president Michael Sullivan.

Over 50 people were involved in the playground project. Constructed over the three-day weekend, the playground was given the name "Torrie's Place Too" according to an article in the Whitman & East Bridgewater Express.

"The community did such a beautiful job and it is so great for the kids to be able to have this," Dianne Snelgrove, Victoria's mother, told the Express.

Lee Wagoner can be reached at lwagoner@student.umass.edu.

Colleges grapple with racial incidents

UMD students take steps to fight racism

By Lucas Correia
Collegian Staff

Students and administrators at colleges and universities across the country, including the University of Massachusetts, are attempting to grapple with racial incidents.

UMass sophomore Maha Mudawar, vice president of the Arab Students Club, recalls a confrontation she had last Halloween.

An unnamed student was "dressed from head to toe in what he considered to be a 'suicide bomber' costume and making jokes with a fake foreign accent," Mahawar said.

The student claimed his outfit didn't imply he was Arab, yet he was wearing an Arab Kaffiyah scarf, according to Mahawar.

Mahawar called the costumed student a racist. "He answered me back by screaming that his brother was fighting in Iraq, and how he was going right after him to fight and 'kill all the Muslims.' At that point I just walked away laughing, although I was deeply angered by his ignorance," she said.

UMass is not alone, according to a Sept. 26 Washington Post article. College campuses across the nation have become the scene of racial incidents.

On Friday, Sept. 7, a noose was left hanging on a tree outside of the Nyumburu African American Cultural Center at the University of Maryland.

On Monday, Sept. 24, a swastika was spray-painted on a student's car. The owner of the car is a

See RACE on page 2

Students at the University of Maryland found a noose hanging from the branches of a tree outside the Nyumburu African American Cultural Center early last month.

NSF grant awarded to AC researcher

By Danielle Kahn

A $242,541 National Science Foundation (NSF) grant was awarded last month to an Amherst College assistant professor researching the effect of plant chemicals on animals.

In late September associate professor Ethan Hollteller received the award, allowing him to fund the next three years of his research on the effects of phytoestrogens on bird.

Phytoestrogens – are chemicals produced by plants that act like estrogens in mammalian and avian cells and bodies found in many plants, the chemicals mimic the actions of the body's own hormone, estrogen, when ingested. Consuming the chemical can result in alternations in behavior, reproductive endocrinology and neuroendocrinology.

Hollteller's research will focus primarily on fish because they are most likely to accidentally ingest phytoestrogens from industrial and agricultural sources.

Hollteller has done much research in the field of sexual behavioral ecology and neuroendocrinology.

During past research on birds and his students found that exposure to levels of estrogen-like chemicals in the environment may suppress male sexual behavior and alter neurotransmitter activity in the brain.

Hollteller has also written many articles on his research of animals – mostly fish and birds – and has received numerous other awards for his work, including a National Institute of Health (NIH) grant in 2001 and a Harry Frank Guggenheim grant in 2005.

The NSF is an independent federal agency established by Congress in 1950. Its primary goal is the promotion of science; progress wealth, national health and to secure the national defense of the United States, according to the NSF Web site. Its annual budget of around $5.92 billion funds nearly 20 percent of all federally supported research across colleges and universities in America.

Ethan Hollteller has been a member of the Amherst biology department since 2003. He has received a Ph.D and a MS from the University of Wisconsin and a B.A. from the University of South Carolina.

The biology department at Amherst offers introductory courses in biology, chemistry and physics. After those courses, the biology department offers several courses in research projects conducted from the Amherst College biology department associate, organism and genetics, or neurobiology, according to the department.

Adventure brewing in New Hampshire

By Tim McCall and Derrick Perkins
Collegian Staff

This is part two of a two-part series chronicling the journey of three Collegian editors to Oktoberfest in Bartlett, New Hampshire.

BARTLETT, N.H. – Tim got caught up at a Northeastern party in Allston, Mass., instead of meeting Joe Meloni at a bar he didn't even go to. A poor omen for the rest of the weekend, if you were to ask any of us. Guess it fits right along with the chaos of the rest of the weekend's plans.

Derrick and Tim didn't originally plan on having Joe come along to Oktoberfest. But after the long fun ride down the Mass Pike Thursday we invited him along. Or he invited himself; no one is sure.

The plan was to meet up at 9 a.m. Saturday, but after Manny Ramirez turned on a Francisco Rodriguez fastball to put the Red Sox up two games in the American League Division Series, all plans went out the window. Tim fell asleep around 3 a.m., Joe took a cab from Boston to North Quincy and Derrick fell asleep comfortably at his house in Bridgewater, Mass.

Bartlett, N.H., is a lot farther from Boston than MapQuest thinks it is. As journalists, we constantly praise the Internet for making our lives far easier than they it should be. But at 5 p.m. on Saturday when we finally arrived at Attitash for Oktoberfest, we were not on good terms with the World Wide Web.

Drinking pumpkin-flavored beer is certainly not what Oktoberfest's creators had in mind, but it was a wonderful way to start our weekend. The first official beer of the weekend, and our personal kickoff to Oktoberfest, Shipyard's Pumpkinhead beer went down like a liquid pumpkin pie. Light in body and smooth in texture, Pumpkinhead left a perfectly spiced autumn aftertaste to start off the rest of our beer-celebrating weekend.

It certainly appeared that Shipyard's fall brew was the choice of the crowd, but a local favorite, Moat Mountain's Oktoberfest, won the award for the best brew. For a community with a low population, Oktoberfest had a lot of local brewers.

We encountered more characters on this trip than types of beer.

After the first day of Oktoberfest in the pouring rain we walked to a bar from our campsite and met a married couple. Their daughter originally had wanted to be a journalist just like the three of us, but they talked her out of it. She is now a history major at Bridgewater State College. Her new parent-approved career plans are to be a history professor and a writer on the side. It appears as though parents hate the idea of their son or daughter doing anything that won't immediately result in a winter home in Florida.

The rain-soaked walk back included a stop at a grocery store for Budweiser and snacks. Poor weather aside, the whole area was beautiful even though Joe didn't seem to feel even the least bit comfortable with the idea of sleeping in a tent – so he didn't

See OKTOBERFEST on page 4

Award-winning brewmaster, former Utah skydiver, and New Hampshire native Walt Dabrowski took home the top prize at the 10th annual Oktoberfest at Attitash this past weekend.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 18

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
COPY EDITOR Adam Szajgin
EDITORIAL EDITOR Sean Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Stysczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ryan McAskill
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Teresa Reilly
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Will McGuinness
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Michael Kang
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenovaike
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Tom Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR YEAR(S) YES. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY OWNED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, IT IS PARTLY FUNDED BY THE STUDENT ACTIVITY FEE. SINCE 1967, THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN HEADQUARTERED SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Katie Huston

COPY EDITOR
Domenic Poli

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

Cole committed to 'New Dirt'

COLE from page 1

ects, most of them under the umbrella of "New Dirt," also loom on the horizon as Cole begins his tenure as interim chancellor. For the University to initiate new construction, financial flexibility is crucial.

"We will be renovating and constructing for a long time. It is a constant process. We were so far in the hole as an institution not long ago in terms of campus construction; there was a lot of deferred maintenance and a strong need for new construction," Cole said. "The staff now finds itself in the pleasant situation of getting to prioritize new construction projects over the next five to 10 years. This phase we are in currently is part of a three-quarters of a billion dollar renovation."

The next phase of construction, according to Cole, will be a massive building project to erect new laboratories, student spaces and athletic facilities. Groundbreaking for the new student fitness center, which will include a new gymnasium and indoor track, is less than a month away, he added.

"We have been able to use our contribution of resources to our advantage. We can borrow money through bonds and other means, receive money from private donors and alumni, use our own funds and get money from the state. The budget is moving in the right direction," he said.

The departure of former chancellor Lombardi came after a mid-May proposal for the centralization of the University of Massachusetts system deemed the "One University Plan," which had reportedly caused friction between Lombardi and UMass President Jack Wilson.

The proposal overall called for collaboration between the system's leadership, and the consolidation of administrative offices.

"In the minds of some people, [the One University Plan] is just a clearer definition of what the University is, and a way of better using our resources," Cole said. "We all have the same vision for the University. We want it to be considered one of the best in public education. There are pockets of extreme excellence here, as good as you will find anywhere."

The goal, according to Cole, is excellence in every aspect of the University. The One University Plan is one way to make sure the University has the resources to move forward and ensure excellence in the future.

"There are other areas of the University that need more attention," he said. "We would like to see, across the board, undisputed excellence in every thing that we do."

From 1989 to 2002, Cole served as president of Clark Atlanta University. He has also been both the chancellor of the West Virginia Board of Regents and the president of West Virginia State College, and remains one of four African-Americans to lead a public state higher education system.

"No two institutions are the same," said Cole. "They all have their own cultures, their own set of challenges, and their own way of doing things. One thing I know is that what works at one university may not work at another. It depends on the circumstances and the people involved. You have to weigh out all the options, and decide what's best at particular points in time."

Nick Bush can be reached at nbush@student.umass.edu.

KEITH EVERSLEY/COLLEGIAN

The interim chancellor is looking forward to the construction of laboratories on campus, as well as the new student fitness center.

Shipwreck found off Alaskan coast

BY JEANNETTE J. LEE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

A private dive team has discovered the wreckage of an American ship that sank off the south-central Alaska coast 139 years ago. The Forrest sank in Cook Inlet in 1868 after tidal currents rammed it into a reef south of the Kenai Peninsula. Documents from the period show that all 155 people on board survived.

The U.S. had purchased Alaska from Russia less than a year earlier, and about 130 Army soldiers had come north on the Forrest to build the first U.S. military fort in south-central Alaska.

The shipwreck is the oldest American wreck ever found in Alaska.

"It's a very significant find because it's right after the purchase, during the transition from Russian to American authority," said Judy Bittner, a state historic preservation officer. "It's the very beginning of federal presence in Alaska and the establishment of order."

A four-man dive team led by Steve Lloyd, owner of Anchorage's largest independent book store, found remnants of the wreckage in July. They kept the discovery secret at the request of state officials, who wanted more time to document the site before any looters arrive. Its discovery was announced Monday.

An array of objects, from guns, cannons, shoes and plates, are hidden beneath the broad leaves of giant kelp beds or concealed in caverns and crevices among massive boulders, Lloyd said.

"It's like walking through a field of tall grass and undergrowth looking for a baseball that you've lost," Lloyd said.

Big finds include the two anchors, sections of hull and heavy bronze rudder hinges weighing about 100 lbs.

About 2,500 ships have wrecked off the Alaska coast since Russian explorers first arrived in 1741, according to Mike Burwell, a cultural anthropologist for the federal Minerals Management Service.

Drug found to help alcoholics

BY CARLA K. JOHNSON
ASSOCIATED PRESS

A migraine pill seems to help alcoholics taper off their drinking without detox treatment, researchers report, offering a potential option for a hard-to-treat problem.

The drug, Topamax, works in a different way than three other medications already approved for treating alcoholism.

Experts said the drug is likely to appeal to heavy drinkers who would rather seek help from their own doctors, rather than enter a rehab clinic to dry out. The drug costs at least $350 a month, plus the price of doctor's visits.

But side effects are a problem, and it's unclear whether the findings will make a dent in an addiction that affects millions of Americans.

Addiction specialists not involved in the study said the findings are promising, although side effects such as trouble concentrating, tingling and itching caused about one in five people to drop out of the study. Drowsiness and dizziness are also problems.

"The size of the treatment effect is larger than in most of the other medications we've seen," said Dr. Mark Willenbring of the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism. "And all the drinking variables changed in the right direction."

The study, published in Wednesday's Journal of the American Medical Association, was funded by the maker of the drug, Johnson & Johnson Inc.'s Ortho-McNeil Neurologics. The researchers also reported financial ties to the company. Ortho-McNeil reviewed the manuscript, but did not change the results or interpretation, the researchers reported.

The study followed 371 heavy drinkers for 14 weeks. About half were randomly assigned to take Topamax, also called topiramate, in gradually increasing doses. The others took dummy pills.

All volunteers were encouraged – but not required – to stop drinking.

At the start of the study, they drank, on average, 11 standard drinks daily. That's about two six-packs of beer each day, or two bottles of wine, or a pint of hard liquor.

By the end of the study, 27 of the 183 people, or 15 percent, who took Topamax had quit drinking entirely for seven weeks or more. That compared to six out of 188, or 3 percent, in the placebo group.

Others cut back. The Topamax group cut back to six drinks a day, on average, assuming everyone who dropped out of the study relapsed into heavy drinking. That compared to seven drinks a day for the placebo group.

"You can come in drinking a bottle of scotch a day and get treatment without detox," said Dr. Bankole Johnson of the University of Virginia, who led the study, which was conducted at 17 U.S. sites from 2004-2006.

The study didn't follow the drinkers long-term, so it's unclear how many relapsed after they stopped taking the pill.

But there were lasting effects for Tom Wolfe, 44, a carpenter from Earlysville, Va., who said he has been sober for two years thanks to Topamax. After years of heavy drinking, he took part in an earlier Topamax study. He felt "a little lightheaded" at first until he got used to the drug. Alcohol lost its enjoyment, strengthening his resolve to quit.

"It's been a miracle to me," Wolfe said. "It got the monkey off my back."

The drug works by inhibiting dopamine, the brain's "feel-good" neurotransmitters that are involved in all addictions, said Stephen Dewey, a neuroscientist the Brookhaven National Laboratory, who was not involved in the study but does similar research.

It's a new approach, he said, that "clearly did work on a very small subset in the population."

Willenbring, who wrote an accompanying editorial, predicts that a future pill, although probably not Topamax, will do for alcohol dependence what Prozac did for depression: Remove the stigma.

Prozac changed the nature of depression treatment 20 years ago by allowing patients to see their family doctors for help, Willenbring said. An effective drug with few side effects could do the same for alcoholism treatment, he said.

"This is a huge market," Willenbring said. "We're approaching a Prozac moment."

But Topamax has big obstacles. With the drug maker's patent expiring next year, there won't be any big push to advertise it for alcoholism, Willenbring said.

Doctors are free to prescribe drugs for uses that have not been approved, but drug companies are prohibited by law from marketing drugs for these so-called "off-label" uses.

Students combat intolerance

RACE from page 1

member of the Christian fraternity Kappa Alpha.

The Washington Post also reported that contemptuous racial statements have been written in public places, including the student union of the University of Maryland.

Students in Maryland are actively trying to put an end to incidents on campus.

According to University of Maryland senior Kyle Carson, a co-president of the student organization Community Roots, students were "disappointed but not shocked."

"Incidents like this tends to happen on this campus every semester, but aren't usually publicized," he said. Carson thought the two September incidents received more attention because they were a local reminder of the Jena 6 controversy.

On the Monday following the noose episode, the campus' Black Student Union held a meeting open to all students and closed to the media, to allow students to express their feelings on the incident.

The next day, the university held a public speak-out to give the administration ideas on how to handle the situation. Since then, the administration has been meeting with campus leaders to come up with an updated policy to deal with the racially charged incidents.

According to Carson, the students and administration are "working on a code of unity, a pledge to learn about each other and be constructive."

The primary goal of Community Roots is to "attack the mentality that allows these things to happen," Carson explained. The organization is also working to document more racial incidents to show the administration that what has been going on in the past weeks is not isolated.

"Lots of students are energized and willing to speak out," Carson said. Testimonies of newly documented incidents are being collected to give to the administration.

University of Maryland junior and first vice president of the Black Student Union Shawna Murray said, "Students want to come together to make a change."

The incidents at the University of Maryland and at UMass come to light as colleges nationally are being forced to deal with race relations on campus.

In a similar incident at the U.S. Coast Guard Academy nooses were left amongst a black cadet's personal effects and in the office of a staff member who had been leading students through racial sensitivity training.

More than 200 students in Virginia have publicly spoken out against a comic in the University of Virginia's campus newspaper that depicted both starving Ethiopians and a slave.

The Washington Post article noted that the Halloween season tends to be a catalyst for racially offending incidents on college campuses.

Last year, students at Macalester College in Minnesota threw a "politically incorrect" themed Halloween party. The most offending costumes included a student with a painted black face, another wearing a noose, and another dressed as a member of the Klu Klux Klan.

Similar parties were reported at Johns Hopkins University, the University of Texas at Austin, Trinity College, and Clemson University.

As Community Roots leader Carson put it, incidents like these show that "everyone is ignorant of other cultures," and that there is "still work to be done" to fix this problem.

Lucas Correia can be reached at ljcorrei@student.umass.edu.

Menu Featuring:
Scrambled Eggs (local)
O'Brien Potatoes (local)
Cranberry French Toast (UMass Bake Shop)
Vegetable Tart
Apple Coffee Cake (UMass Bake Shop)
Maple Sticky Buns (UMass Bake Shop)
Sandra Berry Juice, sampling (local) Worcester DC only Sausage Patty
Fresh Apple Cider (local)
Maple Syrup (local)
Honey (local)
Raspberry Sauce (local)
Assorted Jams (local)

Wednesday
October 10, 2007
7 - 11:00 am

Pioneer Harvest BREAKFAST

Worcester DC
Franklin DC
Hampshire DC

umass.edu/diningservices

DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
2007 Grand Prize Winner
Be A Local Hero!
FoodManagement's BEST CONCEPTS

INFO SESSION
Wednesday, October 10
Campus Center Room 162-75
7:00 PM
TEACH FOR AMERICA
www.teachforamerica.org

Want to write for news?

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
EDITORIAL OPINION
WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 10, 2007
"It were best that we not all think alike; it is difference of opinion that makes horseraces." Mark Twain
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Albums suffering a death by the salesmen

Anthony David Rueli

Once upon a time, there was a thing called an "album." People would go to record stores, purchase these "albums," take them home, and listen to them. They would be forced to listen to every song them, as there was no "skip" or "next track" button on their record players or tape decks.

Some say this started with the CD player, and this may be true to a point, but not entirely. The CD player did indeed offer a "skip track" option, but when people still bought the entire CD, they at least owned every track. It would be foolish not to give the entire album a shot if you have spent your hard-earned money on it.

No, the album was still intact around the time that the CD player arrived. The item responsible for the mess the music industry is in today is known lovingly as the iPod.

The main problem with this situation is that the "album" as it was known from the '60s to the '90s is, for the most part, dead. Artists used to focus on making the album as complete as possible, making each song flow with the one before it and even adding a theme or feel to each of their particular albums.

Now, it's all about the single. It doesn't matter how good a particular album is – if it doesn't have hit singles that can gain money for the record companies, it's worthless.

With artists geared towards churning out generic music guaranteed to climb the pop charts, there's no room anymore for new artists to actually concoct an album that will be worth listening to as a whole.

When the iPod came around, it allowed people to buy their songs from iTunes (see the theme here? Macintosh is evil). This meant that people no longer had to purchase a complete album; they could buy (or illegally download – but that's a story for another day) only the songs that they wanted, i.e. the songs that they know.

Because of this, many people will never even hear the non-hit album tracks that go hand-in-hand with their favorite songs. They won't hear them unless they buy them, but they won't buy them unless they've heard them.

This is only a very small fraction of the reason that I hate the iPod. Among other reasons, the iPod is unreasonably more expensive than a generic MP3 player, it causes antisocial behavior, and it's become far too fashionable for my tastes. The distinctive white earphones have become more of a fashion craze than torn jeans. None of this, however, compares to what the iPod has done to the music industry and to the album of the past.

If it doesn't have hit singles that can gain money for the record companies, it's worthless.

One group, however, has managed to resist the wily charm of the iPod and the hit single. The exception to the way the modern recording industry works is the older artists who are still around, the ones who were making music back in the day of the album. They have become established enough to know that a hit single isn't necessary for their albums to sell – and they also have enough experience in the music industry to not care if their album is a huge hit, as long as they make it the way they want. That is the definition of an artist.

Anthony David Rueli is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at arueli@student.umass.edu.

Since the advent of the iPod, the recording industry's focus on recording quality albums – rather than just singles – has gone down the toilet.

Practice what you preach

Dan Nicastro

Students in institutions of higher learning are expected to take full responsibility for their actions. College, we're told, is a time where we are expected to mature and one of the ways we should show our newfound maturity is by learning how to effectively deal with our mistakes. If we can't fully take responsibility for our actions, universities punish us through a failing grade or un-enrollment from the college. For the most part, it's a fair system which does not allow students to hide from rightfully placed blame. Unfortunately, the University of Massachusetts is ever-ready to shirk its academic responsibility by hiding behind blameless entities like SPIRE.

Right now I'm enrolled in a journalism class which was listed as four credits. When I enrolled in the class, I did so with the understanding that it was worth four credits. Apparently my assumption was incorrect. Nine days after the add/drop period ended, the students enrolled received an e-mail from the journalism department informing us that the information on SPIRE was incorrect and the class was worth only three credits.

I replied to this administrator and lodged a protest against these actions, but was told that the journalism department had decided long ago to make the class in question worth only three credits. In essence, the administrator blamed SPIRE, a faceless entity, for these problems.

I can't deny that SPIRE is a tool which has made signing up for classes much easier. It was implemented my first year at UMass and it is certainly easier than trying to relay your class information directly to Whitmore. However, SPIRE was not constructed to act as a shield, and it seems disingenuous and unfair that teachers, advisors and administrators are able to use it as such.

I want to make it clear that I highly doubt the journalism department was acting maliciously towards the students in this class. In fact, I believe that there probably was a clerical error on SPIRE. However, that doesn't excuse what transpired and what may happen in the future because of slips like this.

There is an unwritten contract in the world of higher education. Students pay the university they attend to provide them with an education. In turn, the university provides an education and the services necessary to obtain that education. However, for a contract to hold any meaning, both parties need to fulfill their obligations to the best of their ability. One party to the agreement cannot arbitrarily decide to change the rules without first consulting the other party involved.

Why should the academic environment be exempt from this rule? And what power do students have to fight it? Students can't violate their end of the bargain or they are kicked out of school. That doesn't leave a lot of recourse for those who have been legitimately wronged.

A public university is supposed to help – and not hinder – its students on their way to receiving a higher education.

When I sign up for a class which is listed as four credits, I expect to receive those four credits when I satisfactorily complete the requirements of the class. UMass changed the rules of the game without consulting the students involved and that makes me scared for what else might happen and what students may be required to fight.

One of my friends told me to threaten to transfer because "the administration always caves when they see money walking out the door," but I don't think I should be forced to make idle threats to the administration in order to open up a dialogue on this issue. Students should not be penalized for clerical errors or lack of administrative oversight and they should not have to think up nefarious and crafty ways to get UMass to recognize their legitimate grievances. In an ideal world, UMass would realize and admit that it was the one that screwed up and we, as innocent students, should not be punished.

Unfortunately, I know this will not be the case. Instead, I will be put in the position of fighting a losing battle for one measly credit.

This is not about my unwillingness to part with one credit. In the grand scheme of things, one credit is not a big deal and while it would make it easier for me to graduate, it's not necessary. So why should we as students fight this? Because it sets precedent.

This current issue revolves around the loss of one credit, but the stakes may continue to rise higher and higher. What if administrators continue to hide behind SPIRE and continue to erode the contract between students and this university? After a short time, any sort of academic contract will be gone and students will have little to no recourse against an all-powerful university.

A public university is supposed to help – and not hinder – its students on their way to receiving an education. UMass prides itself on being an institution which listens to its students and provides affordable education to those who may not get the chance. However, if the cost of affordable education is a breach of trust between the university and its students, it's a much higher cost than many people may be willing to pay.

Dan Nicastro writes on Wednesdays. He can be reached at dmcastro@student.umass.edu.

The impending liberal extinction

Ben Duffy

The future is so bright, I have to wear shades. The good news about the future is that it will be owned by those who have children today. Those who prefer not to pass on their genes will go the way of the dinosaurs.

I'm talking about a species known as the American liberal. As luck would have it, this political affiliation will probably end up on the endangered species list within two or three generations.

Liberals, by all accounts, are suffering from a fertility gap – they aren't having children, while their conservative counterparts are being fruitful and multiplying. As time goes on, fruitful conservatives will outnumber childless liberals.

According to a 2006 San Francisco Chronicle article, "Take a randomly selected sample of 100 liberal adults and 100 conservative adults. According to an analysis of the 2004 General Social Survey – a bible of data for social scientists – the liberals would have had 147 kids, while the conservatives would have had 206. That's a fertility gap of 41 percent...Now superimpose this on a map of the United States. The highest fertility rate is found in the most Republican state, Utah, home to the Mormon Church. The lowest fertility belongs to Vermont, a state liberal enough to be the first to sanction gay unions. The states with the next highest fertility rates, according to the latest National Center for Health Statistics survey, are Arizona, Alaska and Texas, otherwise known as 'red states.' States with the next lowest fertility rates are Maine, Massachusetts and Rhode Island, all 'blue states.'"

Contrary to popular belief, conservatives enjoy sex. Meanwhile, liberals are sewing the seeds of their own long-term defeat by limiting family size. The one reason or another. The exact causation is probably complicated and abstract, having to do largely with religion and lifestyle. The urban/suburban-rural trichotomy probably also plays a role, as well as education, income, feminism, and regional culture. They're all valid explanations, but the end result is always the same – fewer liberals in the future.

The San Francisco Chronicle elaborates: "Liberal women are statistically more likely to delay childbirth into later years than are conservative women, and they may also be more open to abortion, although the data is unclear. Gays and lesbians, who vote Democratic by a roughly 4-1 ratio, are much less likely to have children than heterosexuals. Some on the left advocate fewer children as being 'socially responsible' to lessen the toll on the planet's finite resources."

The idea of anemic liberal birthrates gives me a warm, fuzzy feeling inside that I can only compare to being seven years old on Christmas morning.

By no means do I advocate abortion, not even to reduce the population of liberals. Yes, I want liberals to be "socially responsible," but not by killing their children in the womb.

Nonetheless, the idea of anemic liberal birthrates gives me a warm, fuzzy feeling inside that I can only compare to being seven years old on Christmas morning. I'm absolutely giddy, and it's as if I'm bounding down the stairs to see what Santa has left me. As I think of the future of the "progressive movement," I envision silver-haired liberals growing old somewhere in the Pioneer Valley, with nothing but their Subarus and organic vegetables to keep them company. There will be no pitter-pattering of grandchildren's feet, because they will have voluntarily removed themselves from the gene pool.

Parents have a large influence on the political preferences of their children. With some exception, liberal parents tend to raise liberal children and conservative parents tend to raise conservative children. Commenting on the political fertility gap, Syracuse University professor Arthur Brooks stated: "80 percent of people that express a political party preference are voting like their folks."

My only fear about the fertility gap is what liberals will do in their desperation to maintain power. One of their traditional methods is to find a group of people that is normally unable to vote (felons, illegal immigrants and the deceased) and somehow get them to the polls – legally or otherwise. Hence the push for "immigration reform" among most Democrats. Many Republicans – including our president – have their own unsavory reasons for "immigration reform," but the Democrats' motivation is largely political. If they could only get some documents for these "undocumented Americans," as Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid has called them, they would win the loyalty of Latinos for the foreseeable future.

Hope remains for Republicans. Forty-four percent of Latino voters chose President Bush in 2004. I have a feeling that if the rest of this devoutly Catholic demographic group learned a bit more about the Democrats' hostility toward their faith, they might swing toward the GOP. Democrats however, will try to make Latinos into wards of the state who will blindly vote for Democrats just to keep their government handouts coming. I believe that the Latino community's tireless work ethic and sense of pride will be enough to thwart the efforts of the Democrats. Party to infantilize their people. At least that's my hope.

In any case, the left's power will decline in coming generations if they don't start having more children. Fortunately for me, liberals never listen to my advice and I'm not afraid that they will start now. Perhaps my great-grandchildren will inherit a world without liberals. What a glorious day that would be.

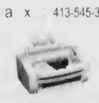
Ben Duffy writes on Wednesdays. He can be reached at bduffy@student.umass.edu.

DAILY COLLEGIAN READER POLL

The recent speech by conservative activist Phyllis Schlafly has sparked dialogue about feminism.

Are feminism and conservatism compatible?

☐ Yes ☐ No ☐ I Don't Know



Cast your vote online at www.dailycollegian.com!

SUBMIT A LETTER TO THE EDITOR OR OPINION

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: 413-545-3699

Mail: Letters to the Editor, 113 Campus Center, Amherst, MA 01003

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 10, 2007 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

OCT 10 2007

All hopped up in the mountains

No pint-sized tale

An Oktoberfest adventure, pt. 2

OKTOBERFEST from page 1

He chose instead to pass out in the back seat of Derrick's car. But not before the three of us beat the rain by sitting in the tent and adequately preparing ourselves for the freezing night ahead. Again, drinking isn't supposed to solve one's problems, but the easiest way to fall asleep when uncomfortable is to be inebriated while doing so; that's where the Budweiser came in.

The sun came out much earlier than it needed to, forcing Tim out of the tent. Joe was half asleep in the car with a jacket wrapped around his arms and an old "I Love New York" T-shirt wrapped around his legs in place of his soaking wet socks. Derrick chose to ignore our requests and slept for another half hour. We cleaned the campsite as well as we could without trash bags and folded up our tent.

The next character we met on our adventure in the White Mountains was Will Gilson. Gilson was the top brewer for Moat Mountain Inn brewery. Originally a self-proclaimed ski bum, he started brewing as a hobby, but after bringing beers to friends' parties he decided that brewing could become his decided career path. Gilson has been working for MMI for the past five years and is also one of the company's drivers.

Gilson won the people's choice award for best beer for his version of the age-old Oktoberfest beer. He was kind enough to let us sample the rest of the selection he had brewed up for the festival, including a dark, or dunkel in German, hefeweisen. A bit more exotic than most weisen beers, Gilson's particular brewing process involved the palpable use of bananas.

Still, Woodstock's Pig's Ear Brown Ale became the Collegian team favorite, though Tuckerman's porter finished in close second. The almost completely black beer, rich in aroma and flavor, with a hearty, full body, packed a punch.

Occasionally the emcee of the festival provided updates from the Patriots' game, but those stopped after the first half. Nothing outside Attitash really mattered at that point. The warm sun, the scenery and, of course, the beer injected a sense of festivity into the patrons.

Standing in the shadow of an enormous mountain, almost everyone we met over the age of 35 was – at one point – a ski bum. The leader of King Ludwig's Bavarian Band, Lenny Holmes, met his fellow lederhosen-clad musicians at different mountain in the New England area. Initially we all supposed it was a side job for him, but we quickly learned that it was much more than that. Once the band formed, its members began studying German to better appreciate the history of Bavarian music.

Holmes excused himself and began the final number of this year's installment of Oktoberfest. Everyone rushed to the brewers to get their last fix of the main attraction before it came to a close. We left the resort and began our trip south, back to civilization.

Tim McCall can be reached at tmccall@student.umass.edu.

Derrick Perkins can be reached at dperkins@student.umass.edu.

If anyone has seen Joe Meloni's socks and debit card please e-mail him at jmeloni@student.umass.edu

'Kingdom' surprises viewers

Foxx leads all-star cast in action-packed crime thriller

By Peter Rizzo
Collegian Correspondent

"The Kingdom," at first glance, appears to be one of those movies which the average moviegoer is always wary of, the political thriller. It's a genre that when poorly developed can be at the very worst, confusing, preachy and overly eager to teach the audience an overly obvious moral about life, love, etc.

All this is avoided, however, in "The Kingdom" which operates more like a conventional FBI thriller than most other political thrillers. Director Peter Berg, whose last credited movie, "The Rundown," bears more than a passing resemblance to this movie, steers clear of anything that could have made this movie anything more than a popcorn crowd pleaser.

This is quite a task, as the movie is set in the Middle East and the characters are involved in an unnamed terrorist attack in Saudi Arabia. The similarities to the Iraq war are hard to ignore, especially right now when our country is so divided on the subject. But the movie gives no mention of the war, so if you're looking for the next "Platoon," this movie is not working towards the same goal.

Jamie Foxx, who stars as Ronald Fleury, plays the role which Will Smith and Steven Segal carried successfully for years, the tough yet sensitive FBI agent who doesn't take no for an answer and still tucks his child into bed. All this changes when Fleury, who is at his son's career day, no less, is informed of a large-scale terrorist attack on an American oil company base in Saudi Arabia.

This opening sequence is the furthest into political territory the movie will go, and for a period of 10 minutes one could be quite convinced that with all the intense montages about the current war, this movie could have the style and grace of a classic war movie.

The disturbing sequence of the terrorist attacks is stunning to watch as the lines between good and bad are intertwined – it is truly the movie's most poetic moment.

After that, however, the movie returns to the protective cocoon of the usual action thriller. After much scuffling between the FBI director and the government, Foxx's team finally gets clearance to go into Saudi Arabia and catch the men responsible for the attack. Along the way he gets teamed up with Janet Mayes (Jennifer Garner), Adam Leavitt (Jason Bateman) and Grant Sykes (Chris Cooper).

Bateman plays the wisecracking sidekick of the team, while Cooper plays the slightly crazy command role he has perfected for years. Garner is anything other than her usual self, downplayed into her most reserved movie role yet on screen.

During the team's stay in Arabia, it fights with the local area governments and sooner or later learns to bond with the local

See KINGDOM on page 5

Jaime Foxx's performance as Ronald Fleurs in "The Kingdom" is one of the highlights of the film.

Radiohead disses music industry

Radiohead is turning heads with a new experimental sales tactic: the consumer picks the price to pay for the MP3.

Yes, picks the price. All you need to do is go to their Web site, www.inrainbows.com, select whatever donation you would like to make, and the MP3s for their new album, "In Rainbows," are yours today when the album debuts.

Leigh Greaney

In an industry where downloaded music is usually either stolen or bound to the user's computer, the plan may sound ludicrous to most musicians. If you go out on a limb and decide to test your fate with LimeWire, you just might be charged $750 for each of your stolen songs. If you decide to use the ever-popular Ruckus, then you're limited to listening to your songs only while you're at your computer.

However, the popular English alternative band's faith in its fans has allowed it to take this new approach.

Thom Yorke, the front man of the band, has basically said "screw the major label companies" with this straight-to-the-audience way of getting his music out. This is the industry's worst nightmare. A superstar band that sells out shows is now promoting for itself and profiting for itself. Middlemen such as Best Buy, Wal-Mart, and the other large CD-selling industries typically own the physical distribution of CDs and are able to profit from the billing. Both the artist and the CD-selling industry depend on one another to make a profit. This marriage between artist and industry has been a fairly happy one until now.

In most major entertainment industries such as television and movies, it's

See RADIOHEAD on page 5

Radiohead fans have two options for ordering the band's new album. One way is to pick your price for MP3s; the other is an expensive box set.

Blue: Heeeeeeeey buuuuddddddy

Comedian performs exciting set at Calvin Theater in Noho

By Ryan McAskill
Collegian Staff

Josh Blue invaded the Calvin Theater in Northampton Friday night. The comedian performed in front of a semi-packed house.

Blue's opening act was D.C.-based comedian Al Goodwin. Goodwin's material was rather standard stuff, but the audience ate it up. He touched on his wife and kids, his high school years as a potheid and the confusing lyrics of the Doobie Bothers, Red Hot Chili Peppers and Eddie Vedder. The muffled singing by Goodwin was spot on and the crowd loved it.

The biggest reaction during Goodwin routine came during a conversation about his sex life – more specifically, spanking. "We've been married 15 years and I thought maybe [spanking] was something that could spice it up again…nope. That's something you have to try early on."

Goodwin ended his set with a unique reason for why he does comedy. He explained that he has been doing stand-up for 16 years, but it was 13 years ago, while playing "Ms. Pac-man" that he realized life is a giant Pac-man game, with himself as Ms. Pac-man, "breasts and all."

"Gandhi, Mother Teresa, Jesus, anyone else who preached peace on earth made it to the crazy fruit level. The way I see it every laugh I got tonight is like extra points.," he said.

With that Goodwin introduced Josh Blue.

Blue immediately informed the audience that he was well aware of the coat hanger in his right hand (his movement and coordination are infringed by his cerebral palsy) and that there was nothing he could do about.

Following the quick open, Blue went right into his routine and didn't miss a beat. It was clear from the get-go that fans who knew Blue from just NBC's "Last Comic Standing" were seeing a different side of the stand-up.

"I'm sure some of you are thinking 'he wasn't like this on NBC' and you would be right. I do like to swear from time to time, or as I call it, well timed tourettes…I yeah, That's a good thing about having a disability – if you have one you can have them all." Blue then crossed his arms and made a disapproving face, a gesture he would bring back many times throughout the evening.

At one point following a punch line, one member of the crowd continued his loud, almost painful sounding laugh long after the rest of the audience had died back down, causing Blue to lose his concentration for a minute.

"I love it when that happens because it means someone can relate to that joke on some strange, f-up level."

Blue was not afraid to poke fun at himself in all his jokes. He talked about his sense of obligation to use any and all handicapped stuff, including bathrooms, ramps and automatic door openers, his trouble on airplanes and the condescending ways in which people talk to him.

"I know some of you are trying to be nice but this is how it sounds to me, 'Heeeey buuuuuddy. How…are…you?' So I usually answer (in a loud grunting voice) 'I need a blow job.'"

Blue then spent a moment talking about being on the Paralympics soccer team and explained the difference between Paralympic and Special Olympics. "The Paralympics are for people with physical disabilities and the Special Olympics are for people with mental disabilities. We play for medals and they play for hugs. I love how you get all quiet, like 'Be quiet, he's teaching us.' Para means physical, 'special' means retard, got it.'"

Not all of his material was self-described "cripple" related. Blue talked about what people said to him after "Last Comic Standing."

"A lot of people said to me 'Josh, don't forget the little people.' What the f do midgets have to do with anything. Like a midget walked into my house, grabbed my hand and said 'follow me to your career goals.'"

It wasn't until one of his final bits that Blue showed how talented he truly is. He took a break from his routine and opened it up for a question and answer period, encouraging the audience to just shout out their queries.

While the ability to play off the crowd is an essential weapon to any comedian, an open forum style segment is not done by many stand-ups. It is a practice more commonly performed by improv groups.

The crowd jumped at the opportunity to asked the comedian questions, and could be heard yelling from all over the theater. While most of the questions were innocent enough ("Who are your favorite comedians?" and "Who inspires you?" the audience did ask some head scratchers.

"How do you shave?" prompted Blue to reply, "With a razor, sir."

Blue ended by going back to the Paralympics and talking about going to the White House with the rest of the Olympians (Paralympians and others) set.

"We were all standing in a line and the president was shaking everyone's hand (crowd laughter)…wait for it…I grabbed his hand tight and said, 'Heeeeeey buuuuuuuuddy…how…are you?'"

Ryan McAskill can be reached at rmcaskill@student.umass.edu.

During a portion of Josh Blue's set on Friday night, the comedian explained his role on the Paralympics soccer team.

Terrorist attacks inspire plot

KINGDOM from page 4

people.

The one endearing thing about the movie, however, is its willingness to poke fun at the subject matter. It is not afraid, for example, to show a scene where Leavitt (Bateman) reads aloud "The Koran for Dummies" at the team headquarters, or to have a character say "Can we get a handle on those situations?" in reference to Garner walking around Arabia without regard for the local dress code.

It is Foxx, though, that provides the movies emotional center, and his character provides a good example of how America's own quest for answers in the Middle East ended with such complicated relations. After going in with a headstrong mentality, things start to go awry, despite the fact that he may have good intentions. This changes, though, once he begins to befriend the Saudi police officer and learns a thing or two about cooperation and respecting cultural differences.

All this spirals into the movie's finale, which is satisfying if only too typical. The main character senses danger and before long cars are exploding and a rescue mission ensues. It is a testament to "The Kingdom" that these tried-and-true formulas which it uses to get to the ending are at the least satisfying and not disappointing.

And it isn't disappointing. Sure, the movie could have been a great revelation about the war, however, even those movies these days have fallen victim to cliches. Rather than being a political thriller with no ambition, it comes across as an FBI thriller with a willingness to embrace political issues and go for some interesting humor – which I suppose, like the glass-half-full test, can have results that differ from your point of view and your expectations.

Indeed, the movie does effectively break convention. If not in the earthshattering ways of the great war movies, it at least brings heart and humor to a genre that can find itself tightrope walking the lines of peoples' tastes. And thus "The Kingdom" turns out to be a safe but satisfying movie experience.

Peter Rizzo can be reached at prizzo@student.umass.edu

THE KINGDOM

STARRING:
JAMIE FOXX
JASON BATEMAN
JENNIFER GARNER

B+

Jason Bateman, known for using his sarcastic wise guy in most of his roles, does not let viewers down despite the movie's action sequences.

Band puts record online, not in stores

RADIOHEAD from page 4

almost impossible to create a product without the help of a middleman to get your product to the consumer. Music, however, is a different breed. It doesn't cost a lot of money to create an album. This process of self-distribution also gives the band more freedom to say what it wants on record and not have to clean it up for the RIAA. It becomes self-inspired, self-made, self-distributed and self profiting.

This slap in the industry's face is Radiohead saying that it's rich enough. The band is no longer under contract with EMI Capital records. After its last album, "Hail to the Thief," its contract expired, and the band seems to be ecstatic about this new freedom. Yorke told Time Magazine, "I like the people at our record company, but the time is at hand when you have to ask why anyone needs one."

Radiohead doesn't need to glamorize its music in the fashion that the music industries elite does. It doesn't need a billboard in Times Square, it doesn't need to be featured in a Pepsi commercial, and it doesn't need a deal with anyone but its fans. The band's loyalty belongs to those who appreciate it the most. For that, credibility is established that remains unmatchable with other artists of their time. Radiohead's members are thinking for themselves and letting their consumers do the same with this viral marketing technique.

Along with the digital release of the album, the band is releasing an $80 box set containing two CDs, a vinyl record and an extra disc as well as artwork. The box set will be available Nov. 10 for $80 after the digital release. Radiohead fans will be able to order the box set and have it shipped further in December.

In addition, it has been said the band is releasing a physical version although quantities are limited due to the high cost and the box set's limited availability. The circulation of the album and take the power of the music industry elite's hand.

The only thing left to work is the music itself. Is it needed to carry on? Is the music actually good? Only time will tell. It is certain, however, that Radiohead's real matter is the music. It's not a matter of dollars and cents. It's not a matter of hard-to-get records. It's not a matter of the hand in your pocket.

Basically, Radiohead is doing huge, bold things for the music industry. It is certain to be a risky business decision, but it will give back. Hopefully the risk of distributing music and paying a set price will set a precedent of other kind. Time will tell, but as it stands now, it is a gamble. They accept the risk and the police will handle the rest.

Leigh Greaney can be reached at lgreaney@student.umass.edu

Arts meeting on Thursday at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center basement. Be there!

Develop Your Career in Psychology at MSPP

A Practical Approach to Training

At the Massachusetts School of Professional Psychology we believe that a practice-oriented approach to learning not only builds confidence and skills, but it provides you with the necessary tools to become successful psychologists able to meet the challenges of a constantly changing society.

- Doctor of Psychology (PsyD) Forensic, Health, Child Adolescent and Family Psychology
- School Psychology (MA/CAGS)
- Counseling Psychology (MA)
- Programs in Respecialization for Psychologists
- Graduate Certificate in Executive Coaching/Organizational Psychology
- Non-Matriculating Program
- Continuing Professional Education

For more information on these and other professional options in Psychology visit www.mspp.edu
Be sure to see our new and exciting Latino Mental Health Program

MSPP
Massachusetts School of Professional Psychology
221 Rivermoor Street
Boston, MA 02132

JOB FAIR

OKEMO MOUNTAIN RESORT
SATURDAY, OCTOBER 13
10:00 A.M. - 3:00 P.M.
OKEMO BASE LODGE

Accounting/Administration Staff
Assistant Day Care Manager
Banquet Staff
Bell Staff
Bussers
Cashiers
Child Care Teachers/Providers
Cooks
Dishwashers
Equipment Mechanics
Front Desk Receptionists
Groomers
Grounds Crew
Group Sales Coordinators
Guest Services Staff
Housekeepers
Instructors
Ski & Snowboard
Nordic Center
Internships
Jackson Gore Inn
Bell/Valet Staff/Ski Check
Front Desk Receptionists
Housekeepers
Owner Services Assistant
Jackson Gore Real Estate
Promotions Agent
Kitchen Managers
Lift Operators
Maintenance Staff
Marketing Assistant
Mechanic/Mechanic's Helper
Night Custodians
Nurses
On Hill Skier Services Staff
Parking Attendants
Patrollers
Pool Attendants
Racing/Events Management
Reception
Rental & Repair
Resort Host
Restaurant Staff
Retail Staff
Sales Agents
Sales Manager
Shuttle Bus
Snowmakers
Terrain Park Crew
Ticket Sellers
Training
Vehicle Maintenance
Wait Staff & Bartenders
WORK, SKI AND RIDE!
BENEFITS
OPPORTUNITIES AT A COOL RESORT

TO APPLY STOP BY THE JOB FAIR OR COMPLETE AND SUBMIT APPLICATION TO:
Okemo Mountain Resort - Human Resources
77 Okemo Ridge Road, Ludlow, VT 05149
Fax: (802) 228-4558 E-Mail: jobs@okemo.com
Phone: (802) 228-1903 Web: www.okemo.com
Okemo Mountain is an Equal Opportunity Employer

Spiders return to form

Richmond opens A-10 with win after tough early schedule

By David Brinch
Collegian Correspondent

After dropping their final game of September to Princeton, 5-1, Richmond opened its Atlantic 10 schedule Friday with a 2-1 victory over Temple.

The Spiders have beaten Temple in all 13 meetings between the two schools.

On Sunday, Richmond (1-9, 2-0 A-10) defeated Saint Joseph's 3-2 with two goals scored by sophomore forward Adrian Pickar.

Pickar, the Atlantic 10 Player of the Week, has three goals on the season.

The Spiders, who were 1-9 before conference play, have won 44 consecutive games against Atlantic 10 opponents, as their overall record now falls to 2-9.

Britt backs West Chester

Rhode Island got shut out 3-0 by La Salle Friday, but rebounded to shut out West Chester on Sunday, 2-0.

Nine minutes into the game, senior forward Jen Cetenich scored the game-winning goal.

Senior goalkeeper M.J. Britt had 10 saves for the Rams (7-4, 1-1 A-10) who gained her conference-leading fourth shutout of the season.

Lokey scores three

Temple lost its Friday conference opener to Richmond, 2-1, but quickly rebounded two days later with a victory over Saint Louis.

Senior midfielder Alli Lokey scored all three of the Owls' goals in the victory. Lokey, named the Atlantic 10 Player of the Week, leads the A-10 in goals (10), points (27) and shots (85).

Temple (10-5, 1-1 A-10) will host Massachusetts on Friday.

Golden Rams fall

West Chester (3-9, 0-2 A-10) was blanked in its A-10 season opener, losing to Massachusetts, 4-0, Friday. The UMass defense stifled the Golden Rams' leading scorer, senior forward Sara Conrad. The Minutewomen outshot the Golden Rams, 14-7, in the losing effort. WC also lost Sunday to URI, 2-0.

A-10 Field Hockey

Hawks go down to the wire

Saint Joseph's got its first conference victory over Saint Louis, 2-1, Friday.

The Billikens struck first, scoring on a penalty stroke by Kelsey Shultz and had another goal waved off early in the second half.

The Hawks (6-6, 1-1 A-10) tied the game with 19 minutes to go, on a goal from sophomore forward Krista Bordogna. With fewer than five minutes remaining, sophomore midfielder Anne Schreuders netted her first goal of the season on a penalty corner. The Hawks outshot the Billikens 21-6 in the victory.

Explorers win, then lose

La Salle opened its conference schedule Friday with a road victory against Rhode Island.

The Explorers scored all three of their goals in the second half. Sophomore midfielder Kelly Dougherty, sophomore forward Kara Harpel and sophomore Colleen Lechner were the goal scorers for La Salle.

Senior goalkeeper Ellen Axelsen had seven first-half saves to help record her second shutout of the year. Massachusetts denied the Explorers (8-7, 1-1 A-10) their third straight victory with a 2-0 loss Sunday. The Explorers recorded three shots all game, while the Minutewomen had 16.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

Jason Tetrick/Collegian

La Salle goaltender Ellen Axelsen and the Explorers had an up-and-down weekend, beating the Rams before falling to the Minutewomen.

Letourneau making case to start in net

Field Hockey from page 8

record to 3-5. She also upped her save percentage to .711.

"Any time that we were sloppy defensively, she cleaned it up," UMass coach Justin Sowry said. "That's her job and to get two shutouts is great. I expect nothing less from her. She should be happy with her performance, as I am."

Sowry also mentioned that Williams, who is coming off an injury and dressed only for the La Salle game, needs time to become comfortable in her pads. Letourneau currently has high confidence and earned the start against the Explorers.

UMass beats heat

Unfavorable weather struck Amherst Friday afternoon, but the Minutewomen overcame the conditions and put four goals on the board against West Chester. The Golden Rams didn't look as quick to the ball as the Minutewomen, and UMass continually applied pressure.

"What's important in the heat like this is that you hold the ball," Sowry said. "You keep moving the ball, and you want to keep possession because otherwise you're going to be a lot of running."

UMass doubled the Golden Rams in shots on goal, 10-5. The four goals the team scored on goalkeeper Joelle Zarefoss forced West Chester coach Kathy Krannebitter to insert backup Brittney Harding 13 minutes into the second half. Zarefoss, who has played in 11 of 12 games this season, has continually been put to the test, as is evident by her average of eight saves per game.

Tough conference road games loom

UMass will face its toughest conference task yet when it heads to Philadelphia to square off with Temple Friday.

The Owls (10-5, 1-1 A-10) won their first conference game Sunday behind a hat trick from Alli Lokey. The senior just recently won her second A-10 Player of the Week honors, and leads the A-10 with 11 goals on the season.

Temple dropped its first game to Richmond, but beat Syracuse and Vermont, two teams the Minutewomen fell to earlier this season. However, the Minutewomen have progressed significantly since then.

The Saint Joseph's Billikens will host UMass Sunday, and the Hawks have a similar record to the Minutewomen.

Similar to Temple, the Hawks (6-6, 1-1 A-10) lost a conference game to Richmond. Also similar to the Owls, they defeated the Billikens, whose record stands at 2-12.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

Rowers shine at Yale regatta

Rowing from page 8

at 17:12.375.

Community Rowing is a group of individuals aged 19-27 that travel around the New England area competing in events such as the Head of the Housatonic.

UMass coach Jim Dietz mentioned that community and club teams are more experienced due to the age of most of their rowers.

They also have the advantage of practicing more often without the constraints of a college class schedule.

The quad event was won by Trinity College, which edged UMass by 1.8 seconds. Trinity crossed at 18:14.077, while the Maroon and White finished the race at 18:32.301.

Trinity finished in second last year in the Division III NCAA Championship Regatta for the varsity eight.

UMass boats placed third and fourth in the novice eight, with times of 17:33.536 and 17:42.633, respectively.

Yale, the defending national champion and host of the regatta, came in first with a time of 16:05.048. This was Yale's first meet of the season, but with first-place finishes in the novice eight and the collegiate eight, it did not look like the Bulldogs had skipped a beat coming off of its national championship run a year ago.

Yale also took third and fifth in the collegiate eight, finishing at 15:37.048 and 16:08.565, respectively.

Liz Euler finished fifth in the lightweight single with a time of 20:37.542, which was about a minute and a half off of the pace set by Fiona Augar from the New York Athletic club. Augar came in with a time of 19:14.923.

Northeastern took the collegiate four with a time of 17:02.874 and the Minutewomen placed sixth just a minute behind the pace at 18:05.800. This was Northeastern's first meet of the season.

Yale won the collegiate eight at 14:42.864 with UMass coming in a minute and a half later at 16:14.953 with an eighth place finish.

The Minutewomen come home this weekend and host the UMass Regatta on Saturday on the Connecticut River.

Coley Michalik can be reached at emichali@student.umass.edu.

Brown solid in net for 49ers

W. Soccer from page 8

Spiders defeated St. Bonaventure 4-0 as junior midfielder Jessie Wolfe scored two goals, including the game-winner, as well as an assist.

Meanwhile, George Washington defeated St. Bonaventure 2-0 as Keara Mehlert scored her third and fourth goals of the season leading to the Colonials first A-10 win of the season.

St. Bonaventure (3-8-1) returns home this week against Xavier on the 12th in hopes of ending their six-game losing streak.

Charlotte shuts out competition

Charlotte 49ers (8-3-1) sophomore goalie Lauren Brown allowed nothing to pass her against Temple and Saint Joseph's last week, posting shutouts of 1-0 and 4-0, respectively. Brown has a 0.60 goals-against average this season and a .844 save percentage in 12 games this season (11 starts).

Freshman Danielle Mayeaux scored the game-winning goal against Temple. It was her second game-winner of the season. She also has a pair of assists this year, for six total points this season.

Fordham junior climbs ranks

Junior forward Katie Sanchez moved into a tie for third place in school history as she notched her 22nd career goal in the Fordham Rams' 2-0 win over La Salle. The La Salle Explorers earned a 4-0 win over New Jersey Tech Friday.

The Explorers (7-6-0) are 6-0 this season when they score first. The Rams (4-3-2) have upcoming home games against Temple Friday and Saint Joe's Sunday, while the Explorers have a weekend homestand against Saint Louis and Temple.

Billikens soar over Hawks

The St. Louis Billikens edged a 3-2 victory over Saint Joseph's as freshman Alyssa Mautz scored her third game-winning goal of the season – a mark that leads the team.

In the loss, Hawks freshman midfielder Danielle Debernardo scored her first career goal. The Billikens (6-3-1) return home this week to face off against Richmond and George Washington.

Temple freshman shines

Cori Gallagher, the Temple Owls junior defender, scored off of a free kick which tied the score 1-1 with St. Louis Friday. Freshman Kara Williams won Rookie of the Week honors for the second time this season. Temple (5-4-2) faces off against La Salle and Fordham this week.

Xavier's unbeaten streak snapped

Xavier fell 3-1 to Massachusetts Oct. 7, snapping its three-game winning streak. The Musketeers (3-9-1) look to bounce back against St. Bonaventure Oct. 12.

Coley Michalik can be reached at emichali@student.umass.edu.

Conference slate holds plenty of intrigue

M. Soccer from page 8

sively dominated, the Rhode Island offense was relentless against the Spider defense.

Senior Geoffrey Cameron had five shots to lead the Rams, while junior Kedan Crosby added four. No Richmond player came close to those totals, though five Spider attackers had two shots each.

With the draw, Rhode Island finished with a 2-6-1 record in conference play, while Richmond moved to 3-6-1. The teams will not play each other during the conference portion of the schedule.

Both teams enter A-10 play this weekend, with Rhode Island opening at home against Xavier and Dayton, while the Spiders travel to George Washington for a Saturday match.

Charlotte adds another shutout

Charlotte has emerged as a team to beat after recording their third consecutive victory – and third straight shutout – Wednesday at Central Florida.

Sophomore keeper David Martin recorded five saves to complete his 10th career shutout. He has minded goal in each game of the 49ers' shutout streak.

The Charlotte offense was led by junior forward Chris Salvaggione, whose two goals and one assist was more than the Niners needed for the victory.

All three goals were scored in the first half, including Salvaggione's first just over a minute into the game.

For his performance, Salvaggione was named the Atlantic-10 co-Player of the Week, making it three weeks that a Charlotte player has received the honor. He joins sophomore midfielder Luke Exley, and last week's honoree, senior forward Tom Woollard, as the three 49ers to receive the award, the most for any team.

Despite the victory, Central Florida dominated the game on offense. They managed 23 shots, against only nine for Charlotte. Both teams allowed five shots on goal. However, the Charlotte defense held the line for the 49ers once again.

They have been the difference so far this year for Charlotte, allowing only four goals in the Niners' six wins this year, compared to five in their three losses.

Charlotte (6-3) will enter Atlantic 10 play this week, traveling Friday to Pittsburgh to take on Duquesne.

GW outscored in slugfest

Despite an outburst by its offense, George Washington couldn't hold on Saturday, losing to Central Carolina, 4-3.

The GW offense was led by sophomores Erick Perez-Segnini, Kyle Albrecht and Andrew Krocuick, who each scored for the Colonials.

However, the upperclassmen also had their say, with assists by seniors Abimbola Pedro and Thomas Stuber, along with freshman Steve Wujek.

Pedro's assist was his sixth of the season, while Wujek recorded his first career point with his assist on Krocuick's score 39 seconds before intermission.

In light of the game's offensive onslaught, goaltending was the factor in the game. Phillip Latham made five saves for Coastal Carolina, but GW senior Greg Yahr could make just one save on five tries for the Colonials.

CCU edged GW, 16-15, in total shots along with an 8-3 advantage in corners. The Colonials led in shots on goal, 8-5.

George Washington will start A-10 play Saturday, hosting Richmond ... Star midfielder Kyle Patterson scored two goals for No. 14 Saint Louis Saturday, but the Billiken defense let him down, allowing three goals in a 3-3 draw. This broke a four-game winning streak for SLU ... Sophomore Alex Torda had a goal and an assist to lead Dayton past Oakland, 2-1. The Flyers are now a perfect 4-0 at home on the season and 4-0-1 in their last five games ... Temple's defense helped them even their record to 4-4-1, shutting down A-10 rival La Salle in a non-conference win. Keeper Tony Pratico needed to make only one save in the shutout.

Sam Ehrlich can be reached at sehrlich@student.umass.edu

zanna
shoe sale
4 DAYS ONLY!
Wednesday, October 10 through Saturday, October 13
20%off
all your favorite shoes and boots.
*includes sale table
downtown Amherst

SPECIAL SECOND FRIDAY OCTOBER 12 4-8PM FREE!
William Kentridge Prints
September 28, 2007 through January 6, 2008
Poetic Science
Bookworks by Daniel E. Kelm
October 12, 2007 through February 10, 2008
SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART
WWW.SMITH.EDU/ARTMUSEUM

Seven O's
LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO HAVE A PRIVATE EVENT/PARTY?
CALL 413-530-6996
Route 116, 330 Amherst Rd Sunderland, MA 01375 (413) 665-8708
3 PM TO 1 AM M-F
1 PM TO 1 AM SAT&SUN
Next To Cumberland Farms

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

			9
5			2	6		4		3
	3	9			1	7
9			6				7
	5						1
	6				7			9
		3	8			5	2
8		5		1	6			7
				7

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

ACROSS
1 Ment. as money
5 Cogito ___ sum
9 Go through an alteration
14 Square measure
15 King of a sort
16 Doll
17 College sports org.
18 Bracket shapes
19 Silly
20 Finished before
22 Sort of threat
23 Before, formerly
24 Hog haven
25 ___ cuticles
26 Hit the slopes
27 Partner in crime, perhaps
31 Brought to you (by)
35 Writer Zola
36 Place of great activity
37 More modern
39 Icelandic literary work
40 Fist-stringers
42 Enduring
44 Put up for sale
46 Prize money
47 Silver screen star
48 Existed
49 NHC forerunner
50 All the rage
55 Of the Far East
57 Partner's input
58 Begin moving
59 Jason's ship
60 Expunge
61 Jot
62 Panorama
63 Yertle the Turtle's creator
64 Pre-owned
65 Fish story

DOWN
1 Tippy vessel
2 Come to pass
3 Really ticked off
4 Approach
5 November event
6 The Hoosier Poet
7 Precious metal
8 Switch positions
9 Methodological discipline
10 Crime partner?
11 & others: Lat.
12 Square of three
13 Landowner's paper
21 Queries
22 Moving vehicle
25 Passover feast
26 Conman's trait
27 Felled
28 The South of France
29 "Paper Lion" star
30 Oscar winner Patricia
31 Counterfeit
32 Gyro bread
33 At an end
34 Drive back
38 Fixed
41 Interferes
43 Rocket cap
45 Diminutive dog
48 Scribble
49 Open
___ Yearlyros
50 Type of beaver?
51 Blurb
52 Driving gadgets
53 Very unusual
54 Jacob's twin
56 Mao ___ Regrets
58 Word before bulb or beam
58 Tex. campus

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Quote of the Day

"The world is round; it has no point."
-Adrienne E. Gusoff

Ecology By Jen Fill

Paul By Billy O'Keefe

Labrat By Richard Martelly

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Seek serenity by eating at least 13 earth-toned crayons. Brown, deep green, etc.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You need to eat more meat. You're being tofu-lish.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Laugh because Virgos are to dumb to realize that sheep don't bleat, they bah.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Be brave and try kissing a bunch of frogs. I promise, one will turn into a sex machine.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
If there were a consumer market for armpit sweat, you'd be as wealthy as you are wet.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Break out the rowboat and Natalie Cole; your life just turned into Dawson's Creek.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Fortune is a fickle succubus, but you are bold and she digs your groove.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Mount a sheep and ride to class. Bleat Bleat, who got the keys to my sheep?

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You with your multi-pocketed vest, you have made the Backstreet Boys proud.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Lopsided lobsters long for logical lacerations leaving less where there once was more.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Cherish the classics like Frank Sinatra, Ed Sullivan, Ovaltine and Limp Bizkit.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
It is not wise to eat an entire unit of anything measured in loaves.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is looking for writers from within the five colleges area. Your news could be tomorrow's headline!
Call us at 545-1809 or send us an email to newsa@dailycollegian.com

Submit your comics!
collegiancomics@yahoo.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

Not that Oedipus is a good role model, but he'd like you to submit some comics.

collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Activities

Montreal weekend from $99.00. Complete, motel, transportation and more. Montreal express.net 781-979-9001. Lowest Prices on campus.

Employment

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext. 162

Employment

CAFE HELP PART-TIME nights and weekends must be fast, accurate, efficient and friendly. Apply in person at the woodstar cafe. 60 Masonic St. Northampton.

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Instruction

University Bartending Classes start soon. 1-800-U-CAN-MIX. www.universitybartending.com. Sign up now.

Services

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906,1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Services

Concerned About Your Eating? Do you eat too little? Eat too much? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic: 577-5101.

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling & rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992 27 Pray St., Amherst www.tapestryhealth.org

Travel

#1 Spring Break Website! 4 & 7 night trips Low prices guaranteed Group discounts for 8+ Book 20 people, get 3 free trips! Campus reps needed www.StudentCity.com or 800-293-1445

Travel

Spring Break '08 The New Math: 10+1=10 Book TEN of your friends on our SB '08 packages, the 11th is FREE Contact STA TRAVEL, Campus Center, Room 224 (413) 256-1261 AMH@statravel.com www.freespringbreak08.com

OCT 10 2007

OCT

11

2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 10, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Bourazeris leads the way

Freshman scores a pair on corners

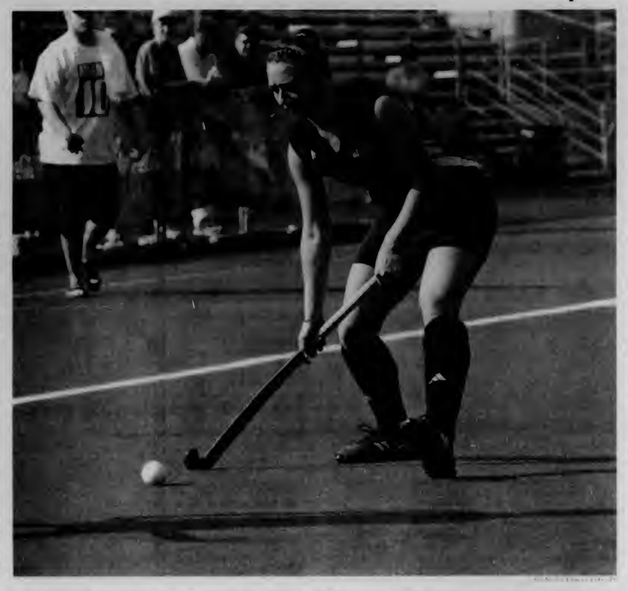
BY MIKE CONNORS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Jaime Bourazeris earned her first collegiate honor this week. The freshman defender scored on penalty corners in consecutive games against conference opponents West Chester and La Salle, earning her Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week.

Her first-half goal against La Salle helped break a scoreless tie, and eventually proved to be the game-winner in a 2-0 UMass (7-6, 2-0 A-10) victory. She also helped the defensive unit hold both its opponents scoreless.

Bourazeris has started every game this year, which is rare for a freshman. In the weekend's games, she continually shot the ball at the net with excellent velocity, and she already has three goals on the year.

UMass Field Hockey



With her award, Bourazeris joined Cher King as the second UMass player to be honored this year. King won A-10 Player of the Week on Sept. 3.

LETOURNEAU MAKES CASE TO START

While Becky Letourneau started out the season with a respectable save percentage, her record stood at 1-5. Sarah Williams had a 4-1 record, with a better save percentage.

In this weekend's games, Letourneau made six saves in her two shutouts, and improved her

See FIELD HOCKEY on page 6

Freshman back Jaime Bourazeris earned Atlantic 10 Player of the Week honors for her pair of goals – including the game-winner against La Salle – last weekend. Bourazeris is now tied for second on the team in scoring with seven points on three goals and an assist.

UMass chases Yale in Conn.

Rowers impress in second race of fall season

BY COLEY MICHALIK
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The Massachusetts rowing team has started strong in the early season. After taking four first-place finishes in their first meet, the Minutewomen placed second in three different events over the weekend against stronger competition at the Head of the Housatonic River Regatta in Shelton, Conn. UMass took silver in the novice four, lightweight four, open eight and quad events.

In the novice four, UMass fell to Community Rowing, who won with a time of 17:44.108, while the Minutewomen crossed at 18 minutes, 47.539 seconds. UMass also fell to Community Rowing in the lightweight four and open eight. In the lightweight four, Community Rowing finished with a time of 17:44.108, with UMass finishing in second and third with times of 18:47.583 and 20:20.483, respectively.

The open eight had Community Rowing crossing the line at 16:48.142 while UMass came in

See ROWING on page 6

Spiders, Rams battle to draw

A-10 champ URI struggles following back-to-back titles

BY SAM EHRLICH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Even before the Atlantic 10 conference schedule could start this week, Richmond and Rhode Island showed how exciting the season could be.

The two teams battled to a scoreless tie Sunday in one of the first matchups of conference opponents this year.

A-10 Soccer

However, since the match was scheduled as a non-conference game, it will not count towards either team's conference standing.

The Rams, who are struggling to defend their two consecutive conference titles, controlled most of the match, outshooting Richmond 23-13, with a 6-3 advantage in corner kicks.

However, the Spiders, led by junior goalkeeper Eric Sciocchetti, managed to fight their way to the scoreless tie against the heavily favored Rams.

Sciocchetti made eight saves to add a third shutout to the non-conference season and the 12th of his career. His Rhode Island rival, sophomore Chris Pennock, recorded five saves for his second shutout of the season.

Though the match was defen-

See M. SOCCER on page 6

Richmond goalkeeper Eric Sciocchetti made eight saves against Rhode Island to preserve a 0-0 tie with the defending A-10 champ.

Reed dominant for Flyers

Dayton hands Rhode Island first conference loss of season

BY COLEY MICHALIK
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

DUQUESNE MAKES HISTORY, ST. BONAVENTURE STRUGGLES

Duquesne defeated Richmond last week 2-1 while senior Audra Matthews notched her 20th career goal tying her with Erica Carey as the school's all-time leading scorer.

A-10 Soccer

Matthews led the Dukes to their third straight win. Duquesne (6-4-0) knocked off Richmond (3-7-2) and George Washington (7-6-0) on the road for the first time in the school's history.

The Dukes' freshman Samantha Kaiser was given co-Rookie of the Week honors. The Richmond

See W. SOCCER on page 6

Goalkeeper Niki Reed shut out the vaunted Rhode Island Rams offense, helping the Flyers to a 2-0 upset.

COLLEGIAN SPORTS ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

BECKY LETOURNEAU, GOALKEEPER FIELD HOCKEY

Senior Becky Letourneau improved her record to 3-5 by posting two shutouts this weekend. The pair of clean sheets also gave the Minutewomen positive momentum in the Atlantic 10, knocking off West Chester and La Salle. UMass coach Justine Sowry said both wins were very important to the team's chances of making the A-10 tournament later this season.

Letourneau had lost some heartbreaking games earlier this year, but stayed composed and picked up two very important wins for UMass. She made six saves and was broke up six penalty corners as well. While Letourneau was not tested over the two games, she made one acrobatic save against West Chester. West Chester had a penalty corner and put a shot on net. Letourneau ranged to her right and with full extension, made a kick save. Senior Erin O'Brien spoke highly of her play after Sunday's game against La Salle.

Letourneau has started eight of the Minutewomen's 13 games this season, registering a goals-against average of 1.43 and a .711 save percentage. Her 52 shots faced this year is more than double that of fellow goalkeeper Sarah Williams (23).

Sowry was also impressed with Letourneau's play. She said she was happy with the way Letourneau played and, like O'Brien mentioned, Sowry was also impressed with her communication skills and her ability to get the ball out of the circle if one had slipped by the defense.

Letourneau and the Minutewomen will try to keep their unbeaten streak in conference play alive against two more A-10 opponents this weekend, Temple and St. Joseph's.

RUNNER-UP:
BRITT CANFIELD, FORWARD
WOMEN'S SOCCER

Forward Britt Canfield scored two consecutive goals in a crucial Atlantic 10 matchup against Xavier. The score was tied at one after the first half, and after losing two consecutive games, Canfield didn't let down. Her first goal came at 83:52 when she knocked a header past Xavier goalkeeper Kelly Farrell. After scoring 26 career goals, the 27th was the first header she hit for a score.

The next goal came on a breakaway when Canfield used her track-running speed to push past the defense and beat Farrell again, solidifying the 3-1 win.

"That was great that she got the goals," UMass coach Jim Rudy said. "I know she was disappointed about the Duquesne game, but she's scored a lot more goals than she's missed."

Despite spraining her ankle against Duquesne, she played in both games over the weekend.

"She's got that thing taped up like a cast," Rudy said.

Canfield leads the team in total points with 19 (six goals and seven assists). She is second in the A-10 in point and first in points per game (1.90). She is second in the league in assists and leads the league with .70 assists per game. Canfield made the most of her opportunities against Xavier – it only took her three shots to score two goals.

MASS ATTACK KICKS OFF NEW SEASON | PAGE 12

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SHOWERS : HI: 83 LO: 60 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, OCTOBER 11, 2007

UM to clean its energy

BY HANNAH NELSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts Amherst is looking to make a mark in Massachusetts with clean energy efforts.

The goals were presented to the Faculty Senate at its meeting Oct. 4 by Paul T. Kostecki, vice provost of research and UMass alumnus. He would like to see the campus become a major player and set a standard within the state.

"This is an exciting time for the University. Research activities are growing across the campus, and we are welcoming more high-quality researchers each year," said Kostecki.

All four UMass campuses have faculty and staff who are currently involved in researching clean energy, and the Amherst campus covers about 85 percent of the current work. The 30 projects range from solar and wind energy to fuel cells and biofuels.

"We are the 800-pound gorilla in clean energy," said Kostecki.

Energy applicable microorganism research at the University has already resulted in the formation of Sunf:thanol in Amherst.

Many of the efforts have been in partnership with the Clean Energy Working Group, which would also be on board for projects to be proposed in the future. The group is currently striving to further inform top state officials. "We want to make the case to the governor and legislators why the University should be in their free-thoughts," said Kostecki.

Kostecki believes that the more attention it receives, the greater the likelihood to draw in University funding in addition to the pre-existing funds. Governor Patrick has already set aside funds, and last year, the U.S. Department of Energy contributed $1 million. An additional $10 million came from the National Science Foundation.

"We want to help position Massachusetts as a global leader in clean energy," he said. "We're well-positioned to lead this, and we've got a lot to offer."

The panel in charge of the clean energy efforts will give a proposal next month of potential research and study for the future.

Hannah Nelson can be reached at hnelson@student.umass.edu.

SGA briefed on duty

Speakers urge more activity

BY DERRICK PERKINS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Directing Attorney of Student Legal Services Office (SLSO) Charles DiMare urged senators to take responsibility for policies that affected student affairs during last night's Undergraduate Student Senate meeting at the University of Massachusetts.

"It's critical to understand that you are actually a formal member of University governance," DiMare said. "This senate has been formally recognized by the Board of Trustees."

DiMare's comments came during a 45-minute presentation on the Wellman document, which delegates the authority of the Board to campus institutions, including both the undergraduate student senate as well as the administration.

Highlighting the section outlining the role of the student body in University governance, DiMare advised the assembled 26 student senators to exercise their legal authority over the trust funds either operated for or funded by students.

According to the 1973-98 Wellman Document, students have the primary responsibility

See SGA on page 3

Charles DiMare speaks to the SGA in last night's meeting.

LaDuke speaks on water, environment

In a lecture given at the Campus Center, activist Winona LaDuke spoke of America's position in a crossroads on global warming.

BY S.P. SULLIVAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Environmental activist and former Green Party vice presidential candidate Winona LaDuke spoke at the University of Massachusetts Campus Center last night on the topics of global warming and environmental social justice.

LaDuke, an Ojibwe activist and author of the 1997 novel "Last Standing Woman," as well as several non-fiction books, is a self-described "rural economist by training" who got her degree in native economic development from Harvard University in 1982. The speech covered issues ranging from the effects of western capitalist policies on the environment to sustainable living and human rights with regards to resources.

"A lot of people think that climate change is a 'new' problem," she said. "The reality is that it is a symptom of a larger set of problems."

She stressed the importance of tackling the "daunting challenge" presented by global warming.

"We have combusted ourselves pretty much to the brink of oblivion," she said.

LaDuke placed the blame of many of the economic and environmental problems faced today on the tenets of western imperialism.

"A society based on conquest is not sustainable," she said. She added that food sustenance becomes an environmental liability when the "average food product travels 1,546 miles – and I'm not talking about kiwis from Australia."

"Part of what I think we need to think about in this millennium is how to make a society that has a resonance on this earth, and not one based on empire," she said.

"We are the most wasteful society anyone has ever known," said LaDuke. "We produce 50 trillion pounds of waste each year – and that's not including waste water."

She went on to point out that over 1.7 billion people – including many in the European Union – are deprived of clean water.

"This should be a basic human right; it should not be something you have to buy," she said. "It should not be something owned by Nestle in Massachusetts."

LaDuke also addressed the overburdening of the nation's prison systems and what she described as a lack of funding for education and school meal plans.

We need to create an industry in this society that is not based on human misery," said LaDuke, in

See LADUKE on page 3

A special Pioneer Breakfast greets sleepy diners; DCs feature fall-flavored fare.

Students awoke to a special breakfast Wednesday morning when Hampshire, Franklin and Worcester dining commons hosted their Pioneer Harvest breakfast. Cranberry French toast was the highlight.

Minutemen return to the gridiron

Wildcats come to McGuirk

BY ELI ROSENWAKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The bye week came at the right time for the Massachusetts football team, but it may come one week too late for Villanova, with starting quarterback Antwon Young a question mark for this Saturday's game at McGuirk Stadium.

Young, who suffered William & Mary last weekend in a 63-24 victory, sprained his left knee in the third quarter and his playing status is undetermined. The Minutemen (4-1, 2-0 Colonial Athletic Association) appear healthy at quarterback following a week of rest for Liam Coen, who also has a tender left knee.

"We're going to prepare for Young, because we think they'll do more with him and less with whoever else plays," UMass coach Don Brown said. "So, we'll be totally prepared for whoever else they'll do."

No. 4 UMass comes up first action since the 24-14 loss to Boston College on Sept. 29. The Minutemen used the bye week to integrate some of the younger players in the lineup, including wide receiver Victor Cruz and defensive backs Rashaude Goodwin and Spencer Ridenhour. Coen's knee is stronger with the week off, and redshirt senior tight end Brad Folsom might see the field for the first time this season.

The 63 points allowed by William & Mary to Villanova (4-2, 1-1 CAA) is the most it's allowed in 87 years – when it lost 91-0 to North Carolina A & E on 1920. The Wildcats finished the game with 233 rushing yards, six touchdown passes and 515 yards of total offense. Five different players caught a touchdown pass. Three players threw a touchdown and the Wildcats converted 9-of-13 third down chances.

Despite leaving the game in the third quarter against the Tribe, Young compiled 224 yards of total offense with four touchdown passes and another on the ground. He has 14 touchdown passes and six touchdown runs in six games this season. Reserve signal-caller Lorenzo Whitney could get the start if Young is unable to play. The only pass in his career went for 22 yards and a down on Saturday.

We have an intact two-deep now with our quarterback," Villanova coach Vids Tallev said on Monday during this week's CAA Video conference. "I'm not sure where we're at this point. We'll see where we're going to be.

"I can't quote figures or stuff," Talley said later in the conference. "We've lost several guys for the year and all starters. It's been really frustrating to that respect, because when you don't play with your best kids, it's tough enough in this league."

Villanova's defense has over-

See FOOTBALL on page 9

The No. 4 Minutemen come off of their bye week to welcome Villanova Saturday at McGuirk Stadium. The all-time series between the schools is tied at 11-11 with UMass taking three straight contests.

Getting personal:

Authors speak on their books

BY LAURA OBERSTAR

Authors Carole O'Malley Gaunt and John Hanson Mitchell read excerpts from their memoirs Tuesday night, bringing the past to life in Memorial Hall.

Celebrating the literary genre of the Memoir, hosted by the University of Massachusetts' poet laureate department, was held in Memorial Hall.

Gaunt is a UMass alumna and author of "Hungry Hill," a memoir depicting the hardships of growing up in Springfield in the early 1900s. Gaunt graduated from UMass in 1967, pursuing a career in theater and playwriting.

Her UMass Press released "Hungry Hill" in June 2007. The book has been praised by Frank McCourt, the renowned author of "Angela's Ashes" as "more than a memoir ... a social document, a story of a family, a document of the human heart ... according to the UMass Press.

"Hungry Hill" narrates Gaunt's struggle after the death of her mother as she stepped in as an understudy, caring for her seven brothers and her alcoholic father.

She read an excerpt describing an instance in which she dumped her father's whisky down the drain, taking a stand against his alcoholism.

John Hanson Mitchell, author of the memoir, "The Rose Late Love and War in Cursive," also spoke at the lecture. He is a graduate of Columbia University and received an honorary PhD from Fitchburg State for his book "Ceremonial Time."

During the lecture Mitchell read an excerpt illustrating a Halloween party and the array of costumes and people. His reading came complete with voices and imagery as he detailed his escapades in France.

Mitchell said that beginning with a small memoirs or scene and elaborating on it or looking through notes from that period is the easiest way to recall memories.

"Once you start to relive that, details come back – smells, sounds, life," said Mitchell.

Laura Oberstar can be reached at loberstar@student.umass.edu.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVIII
Issue 27
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Nicholas Belanger
Managing Editor Katie Huston
Business Manager Dan Ester
Production Manager Chris Martin
Night Supervisor Meghan Murphy
Advertising Manager Alex Bender
Advertising Production Katherine Shea
Arts & Living Editor Tim Mickall
Comics Editor Adam Stanger
Editorial Editor S.P. Sullivan
News Editor Derrick Perkins
Sports Editor Jeremy Rice
Asst. Business Manager Eric Svoinczak
Assistant Advertising Marnea Whoeven
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Stephanie McPherson
Asst. Arts & Living Ryan Mckaskill
Asst. Arts & Living Teresa Reilly
Asst. Editorial James Mathews
Asst. Editorial Melissa Garber
Assistant News Kate Olson
Assistant News Will McGuinness
Assistant News Holly Seaburn
Assistant Sports Michael King
Assistant Sports Joe Melore
Assistant Sports Eli Rosenwaike
Web Editor James Hale
Photo Editor Joan Trinh

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts' calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, generating its advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aleph Lit, became the College Signal in 1907, the Weekly Collegian in 1919 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been published since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Meghan Murphy

COPY EDITOR
Nichole Amaral

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

Student opens fire at high school

By Joe Milicia
Associated Press

CLEVELAND — A 14-year-old suspended student opened fire in a downtown high school Wednesday before killing himself, and five people were taken to hospitals, authorities said. After the shooting, shaken teens called their parents on cell phones, most to reassure but in at least one case with terrifying news: "Mom, I got shot."

Mayor Frank Jackson said the three teens and two adults were hurt. He said the children were in "stable, good condition," and the adults were in "a little elevated condition."

The shooter was enrolled at the SuccessTech Academy alternative school but had been suspended Monday for fighting, said Charles Blackwell, president of SuccessTech's student-parent organization.

Blackwell said the shooter entered the high school, a converted five-story office building, and gradually worked his way up through the first two floors of administrative offices to the third floor of classrooms.

"Nobody knows how he got in," he said.

Student Donersha LeVert, who hid in a closet with two other students after she heard a "Code Blue" alert over the loudspeaker, said the shooter had threatened students Friday.

"He's crazy. He threatened to blow up our school. He threatened to stab everybody," she said.

Romnell Jackson, 15, said he saw a shooter running down a school hallway.

"He was about to shoot me, but I got out just in time," he said. "He was aiming at me I got out just in time."

LeVert said she heard about 10 shots.

"I heard gunshots but I just thought someone was banging a book on the desk," said Rasheem Smith, 15. He soon realized there was a shooting and told his classmates to flee down the stairs.

Tammy Mundy, 38, who has a son and daughter at the school, told The Plain Dealer that her daughter called when the shooting started.

"She said, 'Mom they're shooting in here, kids are running out. I'm hiding in the closet,'" Mundy told the news-paper.

Then she called her 18-year-old son, Darnell Rodgers, on his cell phone, and he told her he had been shot in the arm.

"He said, 'Mom, I got shot,'" Mundy told the newspaper.

Rodgers' girlfriend, 17-year-old Latersha Riddlehill, who hid in a bathroom during the shootings, confirmed that Rodgers had been shot in the elbow. She said he told her he was going to be fine.

The mayor said the other two teens injured were a boy and a girl, both 14, and that the girl had fallen and hurt her knee while running out of the school.

A hospital spokeswoman said Rodgers was listed in stable condition. David Kachadourian, 57, was in good condition, and a 42-year-old man was in surgery and his condition unavailable. The other two injured teens were taken to a children's hospital, which would not release their names, ages or conditions.

Students stood outside the building, many in tears, hugging each other and on cell phones. Others shouted at reporters with TV cameras to leave them alone. Family members also stood outside, anxiously waiting for their children to be released.

"I'm scared. I'm hoping no more people got hurt," Romnell Jackson said.

The shooting occurred across the street from the FBI office in downtown Cleveland, and students were being sent to the FBI site.

"There are a lot of emergency vehicles," said spokesman Scott Wilson. "They're just trying to sort things out right now."

Wilson said he had no information on the shooting.

SuccessTech Academy is an alternative high school in the Cleveland city school district that emphasizes technology and entrepreneurship. It is housed on several floors of the district's downtown Cleveland Lakeside Avenue administration building.

"It's a shining beacon for the Cleveland Metropolitan School System," said John Zitzner, founder and president of E City Cleveland, a nonprofit group aimed at teaching business skills to inner-city teens. "It's orderly, it's disciplined, it's calm, it's focused."

EMT cuffed for DUI

Police tipped by bad driving

ASHLAND, Ky. — A West Virginia ambulance driver has been charged with driving under the influence of controlled substances after he ran two red lights with a patient in the back, Ashland police said.

Steven Ray Marcum of Mingo County, W.Va., was transporting a patient Tuesday for Jan Care Ambulance Inc., a regional service, when he ran the traffic lights, said Ashland police Capt. Todd Kelley.

The lights and sirens of the ambulance weren't on, tipping police officer Bill Lucas that something was wrong, Kelley said.

"With this guy, it was obvious," Kelley said.

Marcum failed a field sobriety test and was blood-tested for drugs before going to jail at the Boyd County Detention Center, Kelley said. Marcum was released Tuesday night after posting a $750 bond, a spokeswoman at the detention center said Wednesday.

Directory assistance did not have a listing for Marcum.

Jan Care Vice President J. Todd Cornett said Marcum tested "negative on a pre-hire drug screen five weeks ago and a post incidence urine drug screen."

"Results are pending from the police-ordered blood test and the independent test we ordered," Cornett said in a statement released Wednesday.

The Beckley, W.Va.-based company is assisting in the investigation, he said.

Marcum was transporting a patient from Our Lady of Bellefonte Hospital in Ashland. The patient was transferred to another ambulance and taken to a Huntington, W.Va., nursing home. There was also another EMT in the ambulance, Kelley said.

Associated Press

Students react to injection case in Supreme Court

Alana Goodman
Collegian Staff

The Supreme Court agreed to consider the constitutionality of lethal injection at the end of September. Since then, at least 10 states have postponed executions in anticipation of the Court's decision.

The debate centers not so much on the legality of lethal injection in general but on the type and amount of drugs used in the procedure. Opponents argue that the drug cocktail violates the 8th amendment, which prohibits cruel and unusual punishment.

The deadly drug cocktail is made up of three different substances. Sodium pentothal, a barbiturate which puts the inmate into a coma; Pancuronium bromide, which paralyzes the muscles, including muscles of respiration; and Potassium chloride, which causes cardiac arrest.

The problem with this cocktail, challengers claim, is that sodium pentothal is a very short acting drug and in certain cases it may wear off before the inmate has died. This would leave the person in a great amount of pain with the inability to cry out for more anesthesia since his or her muscles are paralyzed.

Supporters of the death penalty disagree that the procedure is painful, and emphasize that the average time to death with lethal injection is only 7-11 minutes. Though sodium pentothal is short-acting, the dose given to the inmates is so large and the body is so saturated with it that it has the ability to induce a coma lasting up to 60 hours. Supporters maintain that the drug could never wear off in less than 26 minutes.

On the University of Massachusetts campus, in a state that outlawed capital punishment in the 1980s, the response to this issue was mixed.

"I am completely for the death penalty and lethal injection. I feel if you are sentenced to the death penalty, you deserve whatever you get," said Julie Wolvek, a sophomore communication major.

Josh Hilzenger, a freshman astronomy major, went even further.

"Lethal injection is probably the least painful form of execution," he said. "I feel like if the criminal did something really bad, the type of death penalty that he receives should be even more severe."

However, there were those on campus who were staunchly against lethal injection.

"I am opposed to the death penalty in all forms," said junior food science major Lauren Placzek. "I would rather have the criminal rot in prison for the rest of their lives. I think death is too good for them."

Tom N., a senior marketing major, disagreed for a different reason.

"Lethal injection definitely violates the 8th amendment," he said. "We are already killing the person. It is cruel to put someone in so much pain and give them no way to cry out for relief. We are not savages, and there is no reason why we can't execute our criminals in a painless way."

Even if the Supreme Court decides that lethal injection is unconstitutional, there are those who do not think that the executions should be halted.

"It all comes down to states' rights," said UMass Republican Club President Brad DeFlumeri. "The individual states should have the ultimate decision in what form of execution they administer."

Alana Goodman can be reached at angoodma@student.umass.edu.

Butterfly
Chinese & Japanese Restaurant
WWW.BUTTERFLYHADLEY.COM
GRAND OPENING!
蝴 蝶
Presented by the former owner of Panda Garden in Northampton
Vegetarian Menu Available
Enjoy drinks at the full bar!
Free Delivery Hadley (Min. $15.00) Out of Town (Min. $20.00)
(413) 585-8989
Mon. - Thurs.: 11:30am - 10:00pm | Fri. & Sat.: 11:30am - 11:00pm
Sunday: 12:00noon - 10:00pm
48 Russell St (Rt. 9) Hadley, MA 01035

SPECIAL SECOND FRIDAY OCTOBER 12 4-8PM FREE!
William Kentridge Prints
Poetic Science
Bookworks by Daniel E. Kelm

September 28, 2007 through January 6, 2008
October 12, 2007 through February 10, 2008
Bookworks: A Celebration of the Art of the Book
Second Friday
Advocate
Northampton
Smith College Museum of Art
WWW.SMITH.EDU/ARTMUSEUM

UNIVERSITY LIQUORS
Monday - Saturday 10am - 11pm
Open Sunday 5pm - 9pm
Under New Management
Busch Light 18pk $8.99 + dep
Yellow Tail Wine Handles 2 for $24.99
Rubinoff Handles $10.99
BEER
WINE LIQUORS
LOTTERY
CIGARETTES
LOW LOW PRICES
6 University Dr., Amherst MA
549-5758 Easy free parking

SGA briefed on duty

DiMare, Snow call for greater involvement

SGA from page 1

over services and activities that are created to serve students, or are funded by students, as well as managing student political affairs and organizational matters, while also "setting standards for student behavior, conduct and discipline."

"To exercise it, I suggest you try to create boards," he said. "Boards over every single possible area that is financed by you and is designed to serve you."

The first step for students and for the Student Government Association to take, according to DiMare, is to give input into the way the University is governed at every opportunity.

"Right now, they have you isolated down to student activities trust fund. I think you're missing a lot of other responsibilities," DiMare told the student senate. "Now obviously, if you start exercising that authority, then that is going to be a lot of person power."

DiMare's Wellman training followed a presentation by Senator Vanessa Snow, chair of the State and Federal Organizing committee, on organizing students across the UMass campus to make higher education affordable and accessible in both the Commonwealth and across the nation.

Snow called on the student senators, especially those who had been elected on a platform of affordability, accessibility and accountability in higher education, to organize and create action committees. While states like Oregon and California had several statewide student associations to act as advocates for issues in higher education, Massachusetts had none according to snow.

Snow cited the recent state cuts in Massachusetts grants and the Board's increase of fees, as well as the F grade given to minority representation and access at UMass in a report by the education trust and a 50 percent decline in lower income students as reasons to organize at the University, state and federal levels.

The creation of the new SGA action committees, the Student and Academic Affairs committee and the State and Federal Organizing committee is the response of the undergraduate senate to the lack of a statewide student association, Snow said.

"A lot of students at UMass have been working in the development of PHENOM; but at the same time, there still needs to be a stronger student voice," Snow said. "If there isn't a strong student voice in that coalition, then the agenda is probably just going to be guided by faculty and staff."

Derrick Perkins can be reached at dperkins@student.umass.edu.

Building grassroots coalitions among students at UMass and across the Commonwealth would allow for better representation in both federal and state-level issues of higher education, according to Snow. While the Public Higher Education Network of Massachusetts (PHENOM) nominally organized students, faculty and staff from public colleges and universities across the state, Snow said that a stronger student voice was needed.

"[The Student and Academic Affairs committee] was created to build statewide student coalitions and also work at nationwide coalitions," Snow said. "They are not really supposed to be committees based on motions, but based on building coalitions on campus and organizing and initiating direct action campaigns."

Senator Vanessa Snow urged SGA members elected on a platform of affordability in higher education to follow through and organize committees.

Myanmar opposition leader tortured to death by group

BANGKOK — A Myanmar opposition leader who was arrested during last month's mass protests against the junta died due to torture during interrogation, an activist group said on Wednesday.

In Washington, the United States threatened new sanctions against Myanmar after media reports of the death of Win Shwe.

"The junta must stop the brutal treatment of its people and peacefully transition to democracy or face new sanctions from the United States," White House spokesman Gordon Johndroe said in a statement.

The White House did not say what additional sanctions it was considering on the former Burma, but it called for a full investigation into Win Shwe's death.

The Assistance Association for Political Prisoners (AAPP) said that Win Shwe, a 42-year-old member of the National League for Democracy, and four other people were arrested on Sept. 26 because of their active support for and participation in the biggest pro-democracy protests in nearly 20 years.

"He died as a result of torture during interrogation," the Thai-based group said in a statement on its Web site (www.aappb.org), sourcing its information to authorities in Kyaukpandawn township.

"However, his body was not sent to his family and the interrogators indicated that they had cremated it instead."

Official media in Myanmar said 10 people were killed when the junta sent in soldiers to end days of Buddhist monk-led demonstrations in September, although Western governments say the toll is likely to have been much higher.

The AAPP said in its statement that "many dead bodies and injured persons were cremated or placed in the river."

"Some dead bodies of monks have appeared in the Pazundaung River in Rangoon [Yangon] in the past few days. In addition, many of those who have been arrested have been tortured during interrogation."

U.S. First Lady Laura Bush told USA Today in an interview published on Wednesday that the United States would announce further sanctions on Myanmar's military government "within the next couple of days" if the junta does not take steps toward democracy.

Associated Press

Monks from Myanmar listened to United Nations proceedings Friday. An opposition leader was tortured to death during interrogation.

LaDuke speaks on water, environment

LADUKE from page 1

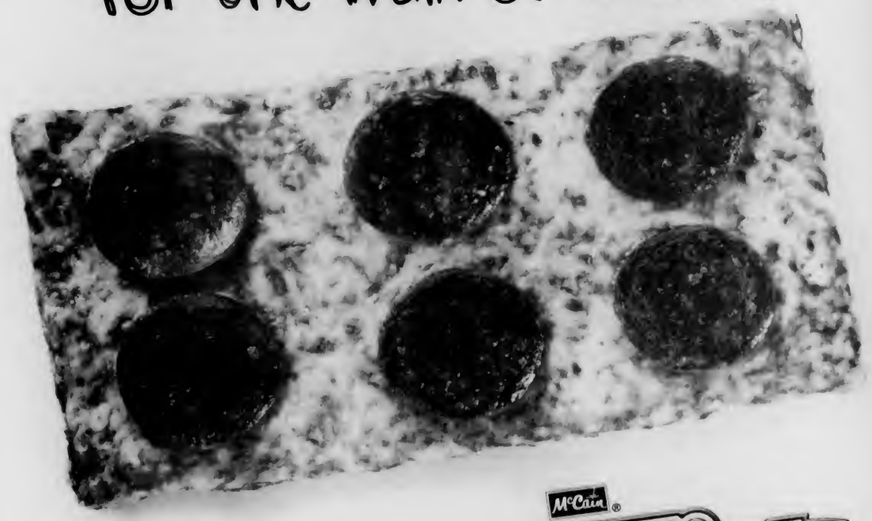
reference to the nation's prisons, which she described as "a growth industry."

LaDuke made a pointed political message in regards to the recently-reenergized push for "clean nuke power, which is an oxymoron," referring to vice president Dick Cheney's efforts to enact "a nuclear policy right out of the Nixon administration."

LaDuke pointed to the teachings of her own people, the Ojibwe, whom she described as "technically the poorest community in Minnesota," as a model for greener living. LaDuke used the example of her own White Earth Land Recovery Project's efforts at localizing food sustenance on the White Earth Reservation, as well as finding alternate sources of energy with solar power and wood.

"If we can do it, you can do it," she said.

She went on to mention a proverb issued by Ojibwe prophets.



"There are two paths. One is well-worn, but it is scorched. The other is not well-worn, but it is green. The choice is ours to make," she said.

S.P. Sullivan can be reached at spsulliv@student.umass.edu.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is looking for writers from within the five colleges area. Your news could be tomorrow's headline!

Phone Number
545-1809

Email
news@dailycollegian.com

Essential vitamins & minerals for the walk of shame.

McCain Ellio's GET IT.
©2007 McCain Foods USA, INC.

OCT 11 2007

Rule in favor of discretion

Most University of Massachusetts students have suffered some sort of self-described "injustice" at the hands of an unruly professor or teaching assistant. We're college students – we couldn't fathom chalking up a poor grade to a lack of understanding of the material, or the fact that perhaps we should've been studying Thursday night instead of partying. But few make a federal case out of it.

Enter Brian C. Marquis, Marquis, a 51-year-old sociology and legal studies major, made headlines in The Massachusetts Daily Collegian in February when he filed suit against the University for what he considered not only a poor grading policy, but manipulation of empirical data.

Marquis received a C in Philosophy 161: Problems in Social Thought, though he claims that the sum of his tests, quizzes and assignments earn him an A-, or at least a solid B. He brought 15 different charges against UMass, among them intentional infliction of emotional distress and violation of civil and contractual rights.

In Marquis' defense, he did not just run to the district courts to settle his dispute right off the bat. He first approached the teaching assistant, and when that proved to be of no avail he went to Catherine Porter, the UMass ombudsman, and filed complaint. Porter urged Marquis "to accept this grade and continue on with your course work as there were no grounds for an academic grievance," she told The Collegian in February.

There is also a legitimate difference between this case and other "academic grievances," to borrow Porter's term. While a student may have a complaint about a grade he or she got on a paper or project – which are evaluated in a largely subjective matter, at the discretion of the evaluator – Marquis' case is one in which the empirical data was quite clear, but the grade was altered after it was gathered.

But while it is disappointing that a student who earned a numerical B should ultimately find a C on his transcript, it is not the job of the courts to tie the hands of class Instructors. With the No Child Left Behind Act forcing primary education institutions to "teach to the test," state and federal overlegislation has done enough harm to the learning.

It is the job of TAs and professors to use their better judgment – which has been honed by years of education and certification – to evaluate a student's progress. And by and large, we students trust them to do the job – until it doesn't go our way. Brian Marquis might have gotten a numerical B, or even an A-. But for one reason or another, his TA didn't think he deserved any higher than a C, and that's his call, not the court's.

And the District Court agreed; they dismissed the case two weeks ago. Unfortunately for the University, Marquis is appealing to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the First Circuit. It might be good practice for Marquis, who intends on apply to law school. But we doubt that the federal courts will – or should – see things any differently.

Unsigned editorials reflect the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian editorial board.

Brian C. Marquis might have had an overzealous teaching assistant – but that's not for the courts to decide.

A case of misdirected outrage

Nick Milano

West Roxbury, a quiet neighborhood in the city of Boston, awoke the morning of Aug. 30 to find its main thoroughfare clogged with fire trucks, police cars and news vans. In a disastrous restaurant grease fire, two Boston firefighters lost their lives and twelve others were injured. It was estimated that some 10,000 firefighters descended upon the city of Boston for the two fallen men's funeral celebrations. Heroes by profession, the city mourned their deaths.

Just over a month later their reputations have unfortunately been shattered by the revelation that one had a blood alcohol content (BAC) three times the legal limit to drive and the other's blood work showed traces of cocaine.

At first, the entities that attracted the most blame were neither the firefighter's union nor the cities that have ignored illicit warnings of a problem within the firefighting ranks. Instead, the journalists who reported the autopsy results and the government officials who anonymously leaked the private medical records are under

The city and the state are paying for the shortcomings of the city and union negotiators in enforcing a drug or alcohol testing policy.

lic outrage after the report by the O'Toole Commission, the union was still able to avoid important changes, among which was drug testing implementation. The teaching, police and fire ranks, any negations are sure to be tense and protracted. The issue of drug testing and alcohol treatment for the members of the Fire Department was ignored by negotiators on both sides of the table.

Now the city and the state are paying for the shortcomings of the city and union negotiators in forcing a drug or alcohol testing policy.

Historically, the fire union has refused to implement random drug tests on the basis that they violate the privacy rights of the firefighters. Granted, people do have certain inalienable rights, but is not the right of the citizens and taxpayers of the city of Boston to have sober and drug-free firefighters more important?

A Boston Globe article on the issue made this point smartly by reporting the incidents in which one New York firefighter high on cocaine caused 13 injuries when he crashed his fire truck into another. Four firefighters in San Francisco were caught drinking while on the job. In contrast to Boston, these two major cities now have major drug and alcohol testing programs.

In 2000, despite the public outrage after the report by the O'Toole Commission, the union was still able to avoid important changes, among which was drug testing implementation. The union is still attempting to deflect any blame for the illegal use of drugs and alcohol by the two firefighters who died, instead choosing to attack the reporters' "reckless and illegal release of confidential information."

Leaked information about the discovery of drugs and alcohol in the bloodstreams of two deceased Boston firefighters has raised controversy. But is the question whether or not the press should've released the information – or is it why the department failed to address this problem sooner?

Commissioner of the Fire Department Roderick Fraser has claimed to visit every fire house, and reported, "Never once did I get any indication that anyone I talked to was using controlled substances or under the influence of alcohol."

Commissioner, what about statistics that show nearly 10 percent of the firefighting force over the last three years had to enter treatment programs?

Paul Cahill and Warren Payne were among the first firefighters to enter the kitchen of that burning restaurant. One's state of drunkenness and the other's history of cocaine use did not cause collapse of the roof, which unleashed a massive and lethal fireball. But there are plenty of other situations where their states of mind could have impacted their decision-making and the efficiency of their services.

The Boston Fire Department's union leaders and those of departments all across the state must recognize this incident as a warning to get their act together. Anything less would be an insult to the communities the departments are dedicated to serve.

Nick Milano writes on Thursdays. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu

My theory of everything

Brad Leibowitz

Immutably, across the board, as long as you are above the age of, say, five, you have your own "theory of everything." Whether you think everything you know was created by an invisible being, the big bang – or even a 70-foot purple alien who sneezed our universe into existence – everyone has one. Even Stephen Hawking has one, and I'm pretty sure it has something to do with black holes, vortexes and that 70-foot purple alien twitch by the way, Hawking affectionately named Juan Rivera).

Aside from the majority of people who believe in the whole Biblical seven-days story, the most famous proposal was put fourth by Albert Einstein. Einstein, a man with hair that would make Don King jealous, proposed his "Theory of Relativity." In it, he explains gravitational pulls, light speed, the color indigo, strippers and kumquats. Now, I can't say I have read any of it but from what I hear, it's the best we have so far.

As for me, although I highly enjoy the 70-foot purple alien theory and am tickled by the whole "Adam and Eve, you saw my naughty parts so now we have to put leaves over ourselves" theory, I personally believe it all started with Bob Vila and Chuck Norris.

Bob Vila and Chuck Norris. That's right. See, it's a little-known fact that I assume only Bob and Chuck fully know, but as a team, they have single handedly constructed everything in the world. I guess it happened because both men – although said to be born in the 1900s – were really born with the start of time.

Now, I know what you are thinking, "Brad, you're over-the-wall crazy." Well, am I? Let's think about it.

For the majority of you, I am assuming you fall into either one of two categories. Either, you're part of the 95 percent of the world that is a devout religious believer or you're part of the other 5 percent that sees science as the stem and end to everything.

Concerning religion, saying an all-eternal being, which knows everything, is all-powerful and has the ability to change the universe as it sees fit, takes the same sort of leap of faith as saying Vila and Norris – although seemingly human – have the same power.

As for the Big Bang Theory, which Hawking and Einstein advocated, this theory is also a hit ... as-kew.

Alright, so there's nothing. And then there's a whole bunch of more nothingness. But then, out of the nothingness, comes some kind of super-condensed matter, which, under the right conditions, has the power to expand at infinite rates and create exponentially more mass then it ever carried itself.

Now, I'm not questioning the whole ball of mass thing, that seems sane enough, but I am questioning is its point of origin. For the majority of Big Bang believers, this is where they say something to the effect of, "Well, it was just always there," which is just another way of saying, "I'll be damned if I know." The truth is that scientists say this because they don't want to acknowledge the possibility of an ultimate architect.

For me, when it comes to this point in the argument, my answer is Vila and Norris. Bob had the hammer and Chuck had the fist. Together, with their might and expertise combined, they both caused the Big Bang and from that moment – with the power of their beards – they have constructed everything that you and I know.

So as you see, my logic (or what's left of it anyway) seems pretty, well, logical.

Vila has had four shows, all of which were some variation of the "This Old House" formula. He is credited with the building and renovation of more than 100 historical homes – which begs the obvious question of, since he is cited as only being alive since 1946, how in the hell could he build a historic home? Again, as previously stated, Vila was born with the start of it all.

In the end, it doesn't matter what you or I believe about anything or everything. The only one immutable fact is that we are.

As for Norris, after "Walker Texas Ranger" and a series of debilitatingly terrible movies, he has moved onto the ever-growing world of infomercial-peddled faux-gym equipment. Aiding in this is his beard and the bottom of his left foot. I don't know what it is, but there is just something about that man's beard and roundhouse kicks that evokes fear into the hearts of the masses.

I say this not because it helps their cause, but only because it keeps them under the radar and provides them with the tools to build everything.

So you see, in the end, it doesn't matter what you or I believe about anything or everything. The only one immutable fact is that we are. Regardless if you believe the God thing or the Big Bang thing, or maybe the Vila and Norris thing, we still just are.

If my theory is correct, I assume, within the week of the printing of this article, I will get a visit from Mr. Vila and Mr. Norris, in the form of a hammer and a roundhouse to the face. If this true, I will have my vindication, yet, sadly, the world will never know the truth.

Lastly, if you're wondering who created Bob and Chuck, the answer to that, my friends, is a little boy named Tim. Don't ask, just trust.

Brad Leibowitz, a metaphysical guru, writes on Thursdays. He can be reached at bleibow@student.umass.edu

DAILY COLLEGIAN READER POLL

The recent speech by conservative activist Phyllis Schlafly has sparked dialogue about feminism.

Are feminism and conservatism compatible?

☐ Yes ☐ No ☐ I don't know

Cast your vote online at www.dailycollegian.com!

POINT-COUNTER-POINT

"Freedom rings where opinions clash." - Adlai E. Stevenson

Health care: the great debate

Universal coverage

Michael Shulman

Hot button issues run the political debate here in the United States, and with the presidential elections kicking into full gear this fall, these wedge issues will be continuously debated on FOX, CNN and between the major candidates from both parties. Aside from the war in Iraq, second on the minds of most Americans is healthcare and how to fix a broken system. Currently millions of Americans live either without any or with inadequate healthcare, including over 15 million children. The question on everyone's mind is how we are to correct these problems, and many have cited adopting a universal healthcare policy for the country.

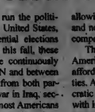
The United States is currently one of the very few industrialized nations that lack a basic federalized healthcare system. England, France, Italy, Canada and most of Europe all have well-managed and top-notch healthcare systems that rival or surpass our own. With the learning system of private insurance companies running the healthcare in this nation, we rank 23rd in infant mortality, down from 12th in 1960 and 21st in 1990. Moreover, the United States ranks between 50th and 100th in immunizations depending on the immunization. Overall, the United States ranks 67th – right behind Botswana. These facts are just some of the overwhelming evidence that the system needs to be altered and that a non-profit system needs to be enacted to provide health coverage to all Americans.

Clearly, when all the facts are in, a universal healthcare plan for the United States is the only reasonable response that will fix the crisis of our current system.

Many opponents of a universal healthcare policy argue that it would raise taxes and hurt the economy. However, federal studies by the Congressional Budget Office and the General Accounting Office show that single-payer universal health care would save $100 to $200 billion per year despite covering all the uninsured and increasing health care benefits. More importantly, a government-run healthcare system would reduce administrative costs that people pay to insurance companies and at the same time increase benefits to all Americans and not just the ones that can afford some form of coverage.

Current estimates put U.S. healthcare spending at approximately 15 percent of our GDP, by highest in the world. Despite this, only an estimated 84.2 percent of citizens have some form of health insurance coverage, either through their employer, purchased individually or through government sources. Our government already spends on health coverage. All that a universal healthcare policy would do would be to reallocate the money to be more efficient and reduce the red tape and muck, allowing an individual to see the doctor of their choosing and not the one they are forced to see by the insurance company.

The current system not only fails to cover all Americans, but is also biased to cover those who can afford it, excluding poorer Americans and many minorities. A universal coverage system would be more democratic and reduce the inefficiencies and biases we deal with in the current system. Single-payer universal health care administered by a state public health system would be much more democratic and much less intrusive than our current system. The United States denies access to health care based on the ability to pay. Under a universal health care system, all would access care. There would be no lines as in other industrialized countries due to the oversupply in our providers and infrastructure, and the willingness of the United States to spend more on health care than other industrialized nations.



Critics want to brand this new approach to broken system as socialized medicine and scare Americans by comparing a universal healthcare plan to being communist. Fortunately, this empty rhetoric is getting tired and many Americans are already fighting to adopt a universal healthcare policy, including Massachusetts, which is moving towards a state-level healthcare plan. Other critics who argue that a universal health plan reduces service need to be reminded that doctors in all of the other nations with federalized health care still earn high wages. Unlike Europe and Canada, where people hear horror stories of long waits for doctors, the United States currently has about a 30 percent oversupply of medical equipment and surgeons, whereas demand would increase about 15 percent with the new people under the coverage umbrella.

Clearly, when all the facts are in, a universal healthcare plan for the United States is the only reasonable response that will fix the crisis of our current system. Universal healthcare would reduce administrative costs levied by insurance companies, open up a greater network of available doctors, and allow all Americans, no matter how rich or poor, to get access to doctors and medical treatment.

In reality, the healthcare debate is not a political argument, but an argument over a basic human right to have the ability to have access to medical treatment. A universal health care plan would better the U.S. economy and, more importantly, end, would rise to the moral failings within the current system. However, until government officials stop keeping the money of insurance companies in their pockets, this issue will go unresolved, and in the meantime, many Americans will become ill and suffer as a result.

Michael Shulman is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mshulman@student.umass.edu.

Individual choice

Greg Collins

Health care policy has been one of the most important issues shaping the platforms of current presidential candidates. While not as socialized as the systems of Europe, the American health care system is still largely centralized. For every dollar the United States spends on health care, according to ABC's John Stossel, 68 cents is paid by government or employers.

The underlying differences between the candidates' various health care proposals are based on the debate over whether the American health care system should become more socialized or whether it should become more privatized. America should privatize its system in order to create the conditions for health care to become affordable and available the fastest possible way.

One deceptive statistic should be clarified to show why the health care "crisis" is overblown. The figure that 47 million people do not have health insurance is used to justify the federal government mandating that everyone must have it. However, within this number are many noncitizens, illegal immigrants, and healthy young professionals at entry level jobs who have decided on their own terms, taking into account their specific health situations like the likelihood of becoming seriously ill, that getting insurance is not worth it at that particular time in their life. Additionally, this statistic is based on the number of uninsured people at any point over a designated 12-month span, which indicates how the figure assumes that people do not change their health insurance plans or do not even look to obtain it.

Individuals will be empowered to make wiser decisions since the money that will be spent will be their own and not that of the government.

Would someone who walks to his job and rarely drives obtain auto insurance? The answer is probably no, since the costs would not be worth offsetting the unlikely scenario that he would get in an auto accident. Extending this reasoning to health care, would a healthy young professional working at an entry-level, low-wage job feel it is worth the costs to get health insurance, when the risks of needing insurance to cover a life-threatening illness is low? Whether the answer is yes or no does not matter as much as the fact that this person has far more knowledge about his life than the government to make this informed decision.

Similarly, proposals by Hillary Clinton and John Edwards to provide universal coverage in some form or another assume that isolated government officials have far more knowledge about people than they actually do. This assumption illustrates why privatizing health care is the better option for America right now. Individuals will be empowered to make wiser decisions since the money that will be spent will be their own and not that of the government.

In contrast to Clinton's, Edward's and, to a lesser extent, Mitt Romney's plans, individuals should be afforded the freedom to choose the health insurance plan that best fits their needs and specific living circumstances, such as their overall health risks and socioeconomic status. For example, government restrictions should be lifted, which would allow individuals to buy insurance policies out-of-state. A New Jersey resident wanting to obtain a cheaper insurance policy from a different state can not do so currently since state policy prohibits residents from getting out-of-state insurance.

Another key component for health care reform is removing government mandates that employees have to purchase the health care plan specified through their employers. Instead, private health savings accounts, managed by individual employees, should be encouraged so people can manage their health care spending with greater attention and with more scrutiny. For instance, the increase in health savings accounts for Whole Foods employees resulted in a 13 percent drop in health care costs, says Stossel. This decrease exemplifies how privatization inevitably produces lower prices and how centralized systems directly undermine this natural affordability. For those who want to make health care affordable and available by lowering prices, there is no better way to accomplish this task than by privatizing it.

Also, just because a person doesn't have health insurance does not mean that he or she does not receive health care. If resources are devoted to enhancing one service through government mandates – in this case, health insurance – they will be restricted from being directed towards other areas by individuals, who, it must be emphasized again, make wiser decisions about money than bureaucracies. For instance, if a person has to pay higher taxes towards a universal health care plan, he will have less money to use for buying food, paying for utilities, or finding a home in an area with good air quality or school systems. These elements all contribute to maintaining or improving an individual's health, but they are rarely considered when the term "health care" is referenced.

Creating health savings accounts, allowing individuals to purchase out-of-state insurance, and keeping money in people's pockets are three steps in the right direction to improving the current health care problem. Edwards and Clinton feel that affordable and available health care is possible only through government intervention, but real-world situations illustrate how the means they resist so adamantly – privatization – promotes these goals far more quickly than centralization.

Greg Collins is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Editorial@DailyCollegian.com

PRESCRIBING SENSITIVITY

DEAR EDITOR:

Re: Prescribing accountability (Ed/Op Oct. 9)

Joshua H. Wilder has made some extremely inflammatory remarks regarding the use of prescription drugs. These comments, however, do not spark debate – they completely undermine and insult the community at large.

Some members of the apparently "large" group of people turning to what Wilder calls "illicit" drugs for treatment of depression, anxiety or psychotic behavior are without a doubt family members, friends, and readers of Joshua Wilder's – some of whom may have even had their lives saved by these medications.

Aside from the fact that Wilder deems it appropriate to lump all forms of behavior modifying drugs into one category (he neglects the fact that Zoloft is an anti-depressant and Effexor an anti-anxiety drug and also ignores the differences in time that lapses before acute or long-term drugs take effect) he also, unbelievably, finds it appropriate to classify the behaviors of children and others who take these medications as "calm with eyes glazed over and showing signs of a lobotomy."

As a person controlling anxiety via medicinal treatment, I am astounded that Wilder is making such tasteless generalizations about people who use these medications. While I agree that over-prescription and haphazard prescription of medications – especially to children – is a problem, I refuse to agree with Wilder or his assumptions that these medications "destroy" the lives of users. They are, in fact, implemented to do the exact opposite.

Proposing that parents of children who have been prescribed these medications actually try to parent their children through tough times instead of, as Wilder implies, simply pumping their children full of meds is one of the most – if not the most – hurtful messages I have ever received.

He clearly hasn't the faintest idea about what it takes to care for a child suffering from a mental health ailment. To Joshua Wilder, I would like to say: writing without being properly informed is one thing, but being uneducated about your topic and having the audacity to insult the audience you are presenting to is simply unethical. I would advise Joshua Wilder to further educate himself on the beneficial aspects of drug treatments.

Courtney Bergquist
UMass student

WHERE THE CONDOMS AT?

DEAR EDITOR:

I was just wondering what happened to the University Health Service table that provided condoms to the public in the Campus Center. It was always a delight to walk through those busy hallways and receive a treat of condoms and candy.

It's not fair that the dorm residents get condoms from their RA but the off campus residents would have to go to the UHS to receive the same product. Therefore, UHS should once again begin tabling with those wonderful and safe condoms ... and the candies.

Diego Nascimento
UMass student

IN DEFENSE OF PUBLISHERS

DEAR EDITOR:

The article "Beacon Hill tackles textbook costs," (News, Oct. 3) fails to accurately describe the realities of the textbook market. Publishers understand student concerns about college costs and have responded by offering more textbook and course material options than ever before, including lower-cost options such as abbreviated editions, no-frills editions, custom books and thousands of e-books.

Publishers also go to great lengths to make faculty fully aware of these textbook options and of the corresponding price information. Faculties have access to price and product information through publishing marketing representatives and online resources. A quick Internet search using a textbook's ISBN (International Standard Book Number) or a text's title and author will yield hundreds of price and product information sources. In regards to the "bundling" of textbooks, an overwhelming majority (86 percent) of instructors require or recommend supplemental materials to ensure their students succeed.

Two-thirds of professors (65 percent) say that these supplemental course materials help retain students who might otherwise fail to complete courses or drop out of school, according to a Zogby International study. To meet these educational needs, publishers work closely with faculty to customize learning materials. Still, students already can purchase "bundle" components a la carte directly from publishers' Web sites.

As for new editions, the market not publishers determines when a new revision is necessary. Eighty percent of college instructors say it is important that textbooks used in their courses be as current as possible. Contrary to the image created by your article, publishers are committed to transparency and to finding productive ways to reduce student spending on textbooks.

Stacy S. Skelly
Assistant Director
Higher Education Association of American Publishers

CONSCRIPTION IS NOT SERVICE

DEAR EDITOR:

I see Mr. Brad DeLumen is cheerfully advocating slavery and fascism in his piece in the Collegian. I infer the wonderfully-sounding name of "National Service," DeLumen advocates the first steps towards some of the most shameful movements in history.

Looking up slavery in the dictionary, we find, essentially, that slavers has als one definition the appropriation by force of the products of a person's labor for the benefit of another. In this case, the "community" will benefit from the appropriation of the time and labor of young persons for the benefits of others. And herein we find the key difference between being a volunteer and being a slave. Volunteerism means giving the voluntary spending of your time, effort, money, etc. in the service of others.

It is the fact that it is a choice for each individual to make that creates its value and helps a person's character grow. On the other hand, slavery is taking – taking another person's time, muscle, sinew.

I believe, in my mistake, the idea of forced national servitude – er, service is done by coercion. If one does not do it, one will doubtless be forced to endure deprivation of opportunities. In other words, through the threat of dire consequences, people will be forced to surrender their time, effort, money, etc.

The larger threat, of course, is that such lessons have further, corrosive effects. It is a fundamental principle of our Republic that it is the people – i.e., individuals – that are paramount.

Freedom relies on the idea that government and the states serve the people. Indentured servitude of the type DeLumen advocates teaches the opposite: that the state is paramount, and it is the duty of the individual to submit to the coercive power of the state and subsume their individuality to the "collective good."

It was the idea of the collective good that enabled Hitler's grasp of power. It was the idea of the collective good that gave Stalin and other Communist Socialist dictators across the globe leave to imprison and slaughter over 100 million people in the 20th century. Forced national service would simply create a new generation primed for the idea that the state can command and they must obey. One assumes that a liberty-loving individual like DeLumen would not like living in such a society?

David Hunt
Class of 1990

GETTING WHAT WE PAY FOR

DEAR EDITOR:

I am a little confused as to why I pay thousands of dollars to the University and the quality of education is lacking. My first day in my new major, Building Materials and Wood Technology, I get to my energy efficient homes course (BMWT 211), and the teacher is not there – instead his friend is.

The teacher who was going to teach, and was supposed to be very good, had been moved up in the department. In his place his friend, a contractor who does not have any affiliation with the University, is going to teach the course.

After the first few weeks of class and a test where the teacher was not present and an average score of 50, I have decided I am being cheated.

I very much like the class in that I have taken the teacher gives some demonstrations and shows pictures. When it comes time to do the homework, or studying, Physics you have to go to the book and teach yourself the material. If I have to do the homework the teacher can sit down and grade it. Mastering Physics is a way to avoid grading homework.

I don't care how many students are in the class. For as much as the teachers are getting paid they should greet every person at the door – and grade homework.

Matthew Darnell
UMass student

OCT
11
2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 11, 2007 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Hitting the links with 'Tiger Woods '08'

New features add welcome challenge to virtual golf

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

I'm sitting in front of the television with my roommate, wasting away my life as usual. Two friends then walk into the apartment and yell at us, saying, "Why the hell are you watching golf?"

Only I wasn't watching golf, I was playing it. My friends were watching me play "Tiger Woods '08" on Xbox 360, and at first glance thought they were watching the real PGA Tour. That's how stunning and authentic the graphics are in this game.

Fortunately for gamers shelling out $59.99 for the newest version of Tiger, the game-play is up to par with that assessment, as well.

Better yet, this game finally presents a serious challenge to the videogame golfing veteran. For those who have played previous versions of Tiger, you know how easy they all are. It was routine to shoot in the low 60s – or even in the 50s – virtually every round. This is no longer the case.

Whether you choose to use the analog stick to perform your shots or the old-school 3 click method, this game is no push-over. Even on the default difficulty level you'll often find your ball in the rough, sand trap or out of bounds. And that's a breath of fresh air for someone who wants a challenge.

The old adage, "Drive for show and putt for dough" is certainly applicable in this game. The new putting system is vastly improved, and gives you flexibility in how difficult you want it to be.

For each putt, players read the green by looking at the grid boxes, which provides information about break, speed and elevation. With this data, users place the ball marker on where they wish to aim. They then press the putt preview button, which lets you know where the ball will go based on how you read the green.

The one problem with this method is that it gets too easy after a while, and making 40-foot putts become relatively routine. Just read the break, use putt preview, and make the necessary adjustments to sink the shot.

Once you master the technique, your skills at reading the green get monumentally better, and no longer using putt preview makes the game more difficult and realistic.

The rest of the game is mostly the same as years past. There are a few new courses – namely TPC Boston – and the list of players is relatively low, as usual.

But to counteract that, gamers now have the option of taking a digital photo of themselves, and importing it into the game. The better the camera, the more accurate the visual representation is. The sight of seeing your mug on the screen while trash-talking over the headset while playing online is pretty sweet.

Once you get your face into the game, you can still tweak your appearance to your liking. It gives you a ton of options, so you can do basically anything you want.

Online mode is solid, giving you various options in how you want to utilize it. You can play a round against friends or a stranger, or participate in GamerNet – which enables you to create custom challenges that other online gamers can try to beat.

Regular multiplayer is fantastic, with a bevy of game modes that will provide enough fun to last until next year's game. My personal favorite is the strategic "bingo bango bongo," where you can earn up to three points per hole. Bingo is rewarded to the player who reaches the green first, bango is

See TIGER on page 7

MICHAEL PIETRUSZEWSKI/COLLEGIAN

The improved graphics and enhanced controls of "Tiger Woods '08" provide a welcome challenge for virtual golfers. Players are also able to upload a photo of themselves to create a digital "you" for game play.

Comedian Kelly holds nothing back

Boston stand-up talks life, marriage and being scared

BY RYAN MCASKILL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Hukelau in Chicopee was the sight of two laugh-filled hours of comedy as Medford native Robert Kelly brought his brash style on Saturday night.

Comedian Bill Squire took the stage as the host for the evening and welcomed the crowd. He opened by talking sports, saying he was from Cleveland. Knowing the audience, he brought up the Red Sox and Manny Ramirez's walk-off home run on Friday night.

"Did you see how far he hit that? As soon as he swung he watched it like, 'You see that s.' Then he took like 20 minutes to round the bases."

Squire then went into his routine, starting with the fact that he is fat.

"I have stretch marks or as I like to call them tattoos of flames," he said.

He continued, turning to his childhood. "I was small as a kid though. And there was this one kid who was a real ahole to me. But when high school came I hit a growth spurt and he got leukemia ... so I win."

Early on, the crowd reaction was mixed at best as the alcohol consumption had not taken full effect, causing Squire to remark, "You know this is a comedy show. I tell jokes and you laugh. Everyone seems to be crammed into the 'take it seriously cab.' You need to get into the 'sarcasm bus,' because that's where the party is."

Wrapping up his set, Squire got ready to bring on headliner Robert Kelly, at which point a large portion of the audience made its way to the restroom. Seeing a problem with bringing Kelly on stage to a less then sizable crowd, Squire stalled.

"[Kelly] would kill me if I brought him on stage right now," he said. "There's like seven people here now. So what do you want to talk about?"

After a couple minutes of small talk with a bachelorette party sitting in the front of the room, Squire brought Kelly to the stage.

A 15-year veteran of the comedy circuit, Kelly immediately poked fun at his surroundings.

"Wow, the Hukelau in Chicopee ... this place sucks," he said. "It feels like the place where Bon Jovi got started, doesn't it? It's like a perfect mix of country and ghetto."

He continued on Hukelau, asking, "Are there even any Chinese people working here? All I see are white women. Are they in the back or something?"

Kelly then announced to the crowd that he was getting married on Wednesday and then hushed the quiet applause it received.

See KELLY on page 7

Medford native Robert Kelly brough his 15 years of comedy experience to the stage at Hukelau on Saturday.

Big crimes in the world of fashion

Reece Coppolino

We have always been told that imitation is the sincerest form of flattery, but we must admit that it can lead to some serious frustration. While models strut the new looks for spring 2008, buyers for the world's leading department stores are awaiting the opportunity to turn designer styles into fast fashion. At what point is it appropriate to take legal action?

Fast fashion is a recent trend that is provided by mass-market retailers to attract low-budget fashionistas who admire the up-to-date, expensive labels. Designers are forced to speed up the production of their new styles before knock-offs take their place on the rack. H&M, TopShop and Forever21 are notorious fast fashion retailers who have taken the brunt of legal action against copyright infringement.

The Council of Fashion Designers of America is currently lobbying Congress to extend copyright protection to clothing lines. Last August, nine senators supported the designers' concern with the introduction of a bill. When considering that knockoffs are estimated to represent at least five percent of the $181 billion American apparel market, the council believes that action must be taken quickly to protect original designs.

Laws already exist to protect designer handbags and sunglasses, but when it comes to clothing lines, there is great disagreement when determining whether styles are direct copies or just inspired by a popular trend.

Seema Anand, owner of Simonia Fashions, finds no fault in the production of fast fashion. Simonia Fashions is one of the hundreds of companies which supply mass-market retailers with inexpensive pieces that are "inspired" by designers' runway looks.

"If I see something on Style.com, all I have to do is e-mail the picture to my factory and say, 'I want something similar, or a silhouette made just like this,'" said Anand of the fast fashion business.

Her factory in India can mass produce a knockoff style and have it delivered to department stores months before the designer's original.

There exist positive and negative takes on fast fashion. To designers, knockoff styles are costing their label countless amounts of sales and threaten their credibility. The many months of planning, designing and producing can be quickly disregarded.

On the positive side, some shoppers find nothing wrong with knockoffs and sometimes they unknowingly purchase them. Many shoppers admit that even if they were notified that an item was an imitation, it wouldn't prevent them from buying it. Others would even argue that knockoffs are beneficial in the fashion industry because they encourage designers to continuously invent new styles to keep ahead of the times.

Over 20 designers have filed lawsuits against the ever-popular Forever21. Anna Sui is one of the concerned designers fighting against the clothing chain, claiming it has infringed against her original prints on 26 separate occasions.

"For me, this is not simply about copying. The issue is also timing.

See FASHION on page 7

Forever21 and other department stores have been practicing "fast fashion," in which they put out replica products of top designers.

Cronenberg shows talent in new thriller

'Eastern Promises' provides dark plot, graphic violence

BY KEVIN KOCZWARA
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

If you have seen any of David Cronenberg's movies before, you know what to expect out of "Eastern Promise" in the way of graphic violence. The story, however, is something different than his usual work.

The movie rivals anything Cronenberg has ever done in directing. He really shows his talent and that he should have been a bigger name a long time ago when he was making some of the most frightening and shocking horror movies of all time ("Videodrome," "Scanners" and "The Dead Zone").

Viggo Mortensen ("A History of Violence" and "Lord of the Rings Trilogy") shines in the darkest and most mysterious character of his career. He plays Nikolai, a chauffer to the son of the head of the Russian mob in London. Mortensen is the type of shadowy figure who scares children because he always lurks in the shadows.

His black suit and black leather gloves only hide him more and allow him to blend into the backgrounds of the dark alleyways and restaurants. He is daunting and mysterious. If you need one reason besides the great story and filmmaking to see this movie, it is Mortensen's presence on screen.

Much like Mortensen, Naomi Watts acts so convincingly that she makes viewers' hearts ache with her and stomachs flutter when the tension rises in the film. Her acting is top-of-the-line. She hasn't been this good since her Oscar nominated performance in "21 Grams." She really keeps the audience on edge while she tries to find relatives of a 14-year-old girl who died while giving birth to a child at the beginning of the movie. The only answers are written in Russian in a diary found on the girl. Watts' character needs it translated because it holds the secrets to the dead girl's past.

Watts is powerful on the screen. Her struggles with the mafia, what is good for the motherless child and her own family are the main themes that carry the movie. Mortensen's struggles are more perverse onscreen, but Watts' struggles internally are just as great and almost more realistic to an audience.

The movie opens with 10 minutes of gruesome plot outlines and begins the two main characters' stories. The first scene leads the viewers into the mafia's world of no mercy. The second scene is the childbirth, where the audience meets Watts' character Anna. She is a nurse in the maternity ward where the teenage girl gives birth and then dies. Watts' beautiful face and blonde hair look angelic when she is in the halls and rooms of the hospital. The lights shining down on her from above look like beams of light from a spotlight.

The two opening scenes set the tone to the movie. A warning to anyone who is weak of stomach, the movie sheds plenty of blood and is not ashamed of it. The blood feels excessive at times and the audience may wish that Cronenberg would cut away already but he doesn't. He can't take the audience out of this world of terror and horror. There aren't many killings, if any at all, by gun point, but the deaths in the movie do have some meaning in the world that this story revolves.

The plot does dry out a little at a point in time when story starts to slow down. If it were to keep with the fast pace of the beginning scenes, this would be a movie where viewers don't meet the families and aren't placed into the mob, but rather are rushed and pushed through the story with no emotional connections.

The movie needs to pace out the reckless abandon and bring the viewers into the dark, rainy streets of London. This isn't to say that there is a half hour spent overlooking people talking about nothing. There is no useless banter in the movie. Every action has a purpose and leads the audience somewhere.

See PROMISES on page 7

Solid story pushes film

PROMISES from page 6

The final 20 minutes of the movie are inescapably some of the best in any movie to come out this year. Viggo Mortensen's fight scene may be one of the best ever, and the best of the year. It's also one scene where Cronenberg puts the audience there with Mortensen and never lets up. The ending feels well-deserved and will leave the viewers feeling satisfied and happy.

Viewers love these characters when you are finished going through the mess and turmoil of violence, murder, lies and confusion. They only wish the best for the child and Watts, and understand Mortensen with nothing but compassion.

The only minor problem in the movie is the excess blood, but it is understandable at the same time. The audience can be grossed out by the actions and the noises of blood spurting but it doesn't feel forced. It all feels like it should be there and that if it isn't there then you are lost to what happened.

This isn't a fright fest, but a movie about compassion and human nature. It's a dog-eat-dog world out there, and the business world can be just as ugly as movie violence.

Kevin Koczwara can be reached at kkoczwar@student.umass.edu

EASTERN PROMISES

STARING: VIGGO MORTENSEN AND NAOMI WATTS

A

Viggo Mortensen plays his darkest, most mysterious character to date in 'Eastern Promises.' His character, Nikolai, is the chauffer for the son of the Russian mob in London.

Digital 'you' enhances experience

TIGER from page 6

given to the player with the closest approach shot to the pin, and bongo is awarded to the player with the best score for the hole.

For those more interested in single-player, the PGA Tour career mode gives you everything you need. Your created character starts out with a 5 percent rating in all the categories, and it's your job to win tournaments and boost your player skills. It's time consuming, but both challenging and rewarding.

A huge addition to this year's game is the Shot Confidence, which tracks how you do on every single shot in your entire career. Slice a drive into the rough, and your confidence goes down for your next drive. Hit a great approach shot to the pin, and the next time you line up for an approach, the more accurate you'll likely be.

The sound in the game is good, with the soundtrack featuring good beats. The commentary is engaging, just like in all the other versions.

"Tiger Woods '08" is the best version EA Sports has ever made. The multiplayer and online modes provide months of entertainment, the career mode is deep and the game is visually stunning.

Well, except for your ugly mug, that is.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@student.umass.edu

Kelly brings laughs to Hukelau

KELLY from page 6

"I feel bad for [my fiancee] because she's not getting man. I'm not a man, I'm a 37-year-old dude."

His upcoming marriage provided the set-up for a good portion of his material.

"There are a lot of little things now that you need to adjust to, like sleeping together," he said. "I'm not talking sex, I mean sleeping. Like I sleep naked but with socks on, because if a burglar breaks in I don't want to get splinters. Can you imagine a burglar breaks in and a fat, naked bald man just comes gliding in?"

He talked about their sex life, saying, "When she has an orgasm she pushes my face into the pillow and says 'don't speak.' Great, so if she sees or hears me, she can't orgasm."

Kelly went on to talk about the use of the phrase "I love you."

"We become desensitized to [saying I love you] When I say it to her I want it to f her up. Like my mom said 'I love you' all the time like have a good day, I love you, 'I love you too mom.' But my dad only said it once and it was after my high school graduation. We hugged and he said 'I love you son' and I was fing up for like half a day."

In a broken-down, crying voice, he said: "Oh my god, I love you too, Dad ... why did you have to do this in front of my friends?"

Despite the new material, Kelly did break out a couple of older pieces.

"I hate to be scared, but isn't scaring someone the best feeling in the world? You wait in their closet for like an hour and a half then jump out ... But I hate horror movies because no one in a horror movie gets scared like we do in real life. It's always some white guy and its like 'boo,' 'ahhh, run!' That's bullshit. In real life, if a monster jumped out of your closet, you get down syndrome for like a day, right?"

On that note, Kelly finished his set and hung around onstage selling his CD, signing autographs and taking pictures with anyone who wanted to come up and join him.

Ryan McAskill can be reached at rmcaskil@student.umass.edu

Fast Fashion angers designers

FASHION from page 6

These copies are hitting the market before the original versions do," she argues.

Sui is convinced that she has a fighting chance to protect her label since logos and original prints can be protected under the existing law.

Last March, talented and respected designer Diane Von Furstenberg filed a lawsuit for copyright infringement against Forever21 as well. She claims that the chain had ripped off the design, patterns and colors of her in-demand Ceiser and Aubrey dresses and offered them at significantly lower prices.

June 14, Gwen Stefani, a rather recent fashion designer, also filed a lawsuit against Forever21, arguing that the retail chain stole her design from her Harajuku Lovers clothing line. The lawsuit states that Forever21 is marketing, promoting and selling items that are stamped with a pattern that is "virtually indistinguishable" of her original design. The only noticeable difference between Stefani's design and the knockoff is a small text change from "Harajuku Lovers" to "Forever Love."

Stefani's lawsuit claims that the inconspicuous difference is "confusingly similar" and it is "likely to go unnoticed by a consumer." Stefani's label plead trademark infringement, false destination of origin, dilution and unfair competition against the chain, and sought monetary damages, as well as the chain's profits and gains since the knockoff has caused the originals to lessen in value.

After reviewing the legal battle that is currently taking place in the fashion industry, I can't help but feel a bit hypocritical. Although I admire and respect numerous fashion designers and view much of their work as artistic creations, I'm not too fond of their price tags, nor do I have much access to their labels.

While I can understand why a piece that is constructed out of rare fabrics and embellishments can be quite expensive, a polyester casual dress is still just a polyester casual dress. When a designer logo is the only thing separating an original piece from an "inspired" piece, I have a hard time convincing myself not to buy it. By purchasing an "inspired" piece, I'm aware that I might be taking away from the original designer's profits, but I believe I'm also showing my admiration for their artistic vision by modeling a similar piece.

Reece Coppolino is a Collegian fashion columnist. She can be reached at rcoppoli@student.umass.edu

Designer Anna Sui (dress on left) claimed in her law suit against Forever21 (dress on right) that the copied dresses hit the market before the originals do.

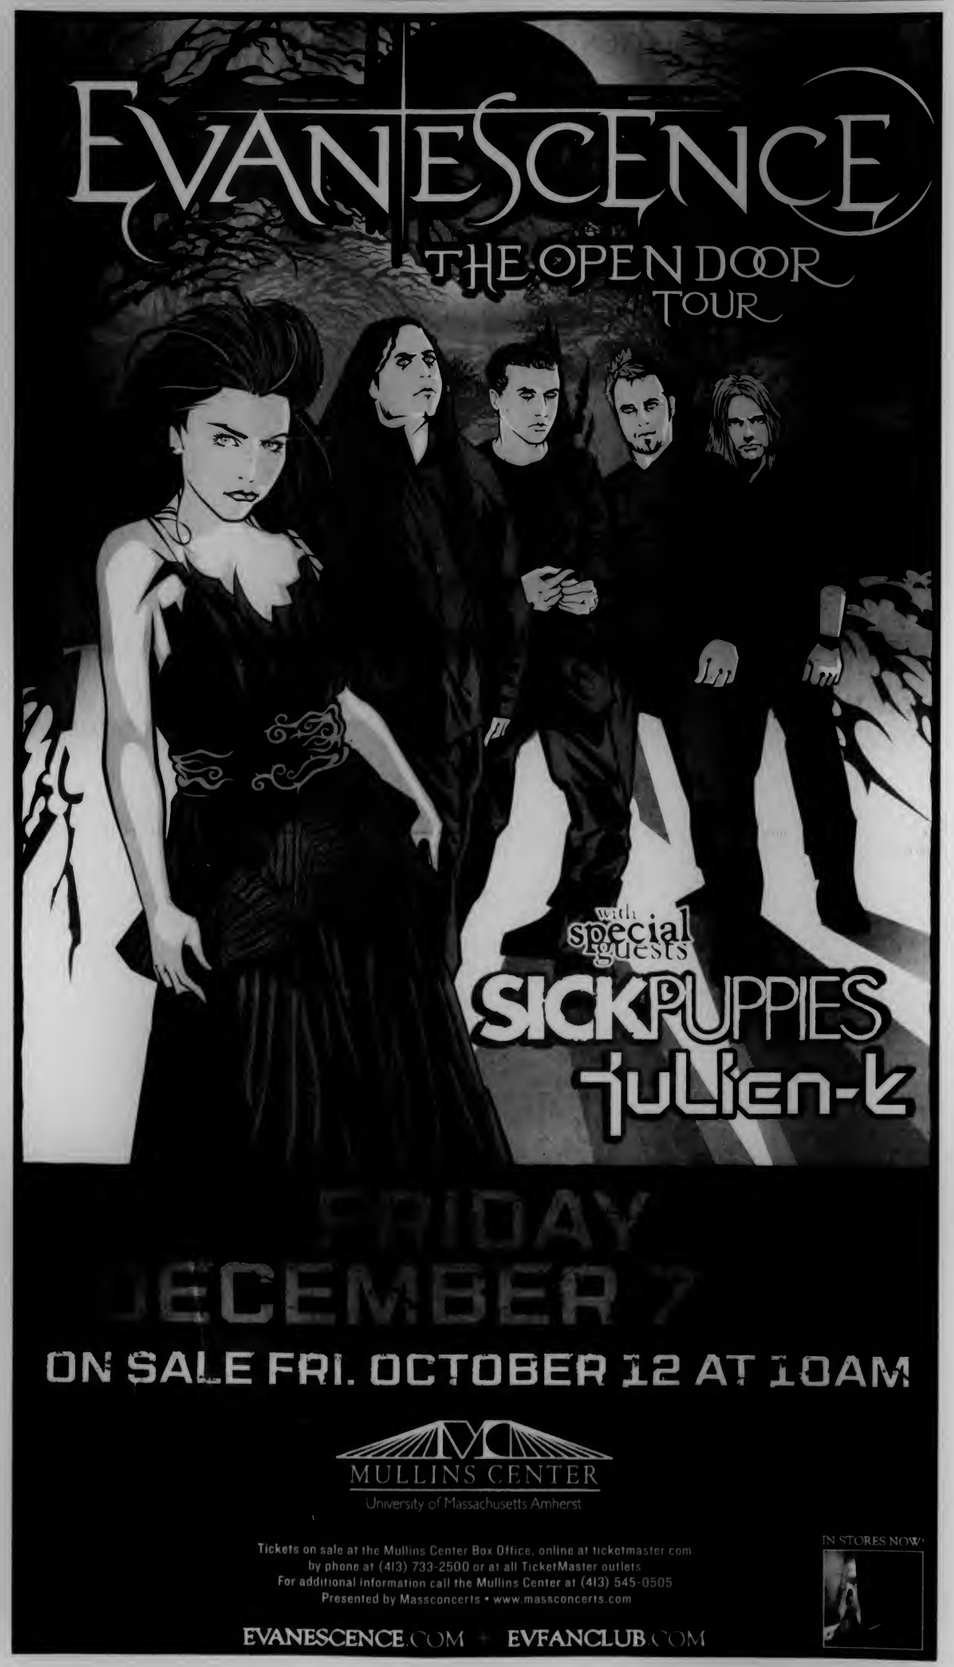
Arts staff meeting Tonight at 7 p.m. in the Campus Center basement. Be there!

FOUR Seasons
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS
WINE SALE 10% OFF 6 BOTTLES* OF WINE EVERYDAY!! MIX & MATCH *REGULAR PRICED 750 ML BOTTLES OF VARIETAL WINES.

Beer		Liquor
Samuel Adams 24 pk btl	$22.99*	Jack Daniels 1.75 liter	$39.99	Pinnacle Vodka 1.75 liter	$19.99
Coronita 7oz 24 pk btl	$17.99*	Tennesse Whiskey 1.75 liter	$38.99	Myer's Platinum Rum 1.75 liter	$18.99
Miller Lite 20 pk btl	$13.99*	Jameson Irish Whiskey 1.75 liter	$29.99	Svedka Vodka 80 1.75 liter	$18.99
Budweiser & Bud Light 20 pk btl	$13.99*	Sauza Gold Tequila 1.75 liter	$29.99	Canadian Club Whisky 1.75 liter	$18.99
Red Stripe Lager 12 pk btl	$11.99*	Stolichnaya Vodka 80 1.75 liter	$29.99	Viking Fjord Vodka 80 1.75 liter	$17.99
Stella Artois Lager 12 pk btl	$11.99*	Beefeater London Dry Gin 1.75 liter	$26.99	Sobieski Polish Vodka 1.75 liter	$16.99
Bass Ale 12 pk btl	$11.99*	Ballantine Blended Scotch Whisky 1.75 liter	$24.99	Denaka Vodka 1.75 liter	$14.99
Heineken & Heineken Light 12 pk btl	$11.99*	Skyy Vodka 80 1.75 liter	$24.99	Ron Rico Vanilla Rum 1.75 liter	$11.99
Miller Chill 12 pk btl	$10.99*	Durango Gold Tequila 1.75 liter	$21.99	Rubinoff Vodka 80 1.75 liter	$9.99
Miller High Life 18 pk btl	$8.99*	Jim Beam Bourbon Whiskey 1.75 liter	$20.99
Landshark Lager 6 pk btl	$6.69*
Sam Adams Summer Ale 6 pk btl	$5.99*

*all beer prices plus deposit



FOUR SEASONS
584-8174
Sale: 10/11 - 10/19
333 Russell St., Rte. 9, Hadley, MA
584-8174 • Mon.-Sat. 9AM-11PM • Sun. Noon-11PM

555 deal
Three Medium One-Topping Pizzas
$5.55 Each!
Domino's Pizza
413 - 256 - 8911
OPEN LATE NIGHT TILL 4 AM!

IN DECIDING WHICH LAW SCHOOL TO ATTEND,
CONSIDER THIS:

Quinnipiac University School of Law ranks among the top [illegible] law schools in [illegible] full-time student LSAT scores (median – 158); admission acceptance rates; student [illegible] and employment rates after graduation. Not to mention, we offer [illegible] $1,000 to full tuition. Before you decide which school to attend, make sure you've seen the facts. To learn more, visit law.quinnipiac.edu, email ladon@quinnipiac.edu or call 1.800.462.1944.

QUINNIPIAC UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF LAW
LAW.QUINNIPIAC.EDU | HAMDEN, CONNECTICUT

OCT 11 2007

UM back in action against dangerous Wildcat team

FOOTBALL from page 1

come injuries well this season, ranking No. 5 of the 12 teams in the CAA in scoring defense. The Wildcats lead the conference in both turnovers forced (17; five more than any other team) and turnover margin (plus-10).

"There's a reason they're 4-2, and it's improved play on both sides of the ball," Brown said.

"They've been very opportunistic. They've given their offense several short fields to operate. They start with the premise that they're going to stop the run first and they go from there."

Villanova hasn't been as strong offensively, ranking eighth in scoring offense (28.7), but its taken advantage of both turnovers and red zone opportunities. Its red zone scoring percentage (94.4) is tops in the conference, with a 17-of-18 conversion rate.

The Wildcats have struggled some on the ground, with a 3.3 yard average per rushing attempt – a figure that ranks them near the bottom in the conference. They have six rushing touchdowns this season, and have allowed 11. Young's versatility (250 rushing yards gained) helps balance their offense.

UMass has won three straight meetings between the schools, evening the all-time series record at 11-11. They met last year at Villanova Stadium, a 31-21 UMass victory in week three following the one-point loss to Navy.

Coen was 21-of-28, for 350 yards and two touchdowns in that matchup, battling back from an early 14-7 deficit in the second quarter. Villanova scored a touchdown just 41 seconds into that game on a 24-yard touchdown run.

Talley knows his team faces a big challenge once again this weekend.

"Everybody knows UMass," he said.

"[They are a] big, fast, strong, and terrific team. Brown's team is always tough, hard-nosed, come at you, and takes no prisoners. We've never beaten UMass at UMass, ever. So it's never been a friendly environment for Villanova."

That challenge will likely be even bigger if Young is unable to go.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@student.umass.edu.

Familiarity keeps top line unchanged

LINE from page 12

Chris Davis and P.J. Fenton, who became the heart of the Mass Attack. The trio represents three of the top four returning scorers from last season (Will Ortiz being the other), and make up the top line for the Minutemen to start the season.

Quirk and Davis played together nearly the entire season (except when Davis was injured), and Fenton essentially split time with the graduated Chris Capraro as the complement to that pair.

"I played with Cory Quirk a lot last year," Davis said. "I think we play well together as far as moving the puck. We're both very fast players, and we read off of each other very well. The addition of P.J. as a scoring threat is great. He's been here for four years, so he knows how to play."

All three players represent the style of play the Minutemen hope to adopt this season and build on from last year – speed, quickness and uncanny playmaking ability.

Last season, UMass coach Don Cahoon shuffled the lines frequently, looking for matchup advantages both internally and against opponents. Cahoon said the same will be true this year, but at least to start out, he's putting his best offensive players together.

"I thought it was important to start the season with one line with a great deal of experience and a feel for one another that's in place," Cahoon said. "Whether I think that's the best line at the end of the day, or the best mix and match, I can't speak to that yet because there are so many kids who are going to grow throughout the season."

The Fenton-Quirk-Davis line may represent the top holdovers from last year's squad, but the team lost four of its top seven scores in graduates Capraro, Anderson, Matheson and Kevin Jarman.

With that much firepower gone, Cahoon's top line should provide the team with a foundation to build off as it moves forward. If nothing else, Quirk, Davis and Fenton will put up a few goals this weekend and give the team some much needed confidence.

UMass may be coming off its best season ever, but with seven players departed and nine newcomers this season, this is not the same team that made it to Rochester, N.Y., back in March.

Last season it was Davis' tremendous speed and Quirk's quickness and stick-handling that made them such a threat, especially on the ice together. Fenton is a great complement to them, and one word can really define what they do on the ice: speed.

"[Davis'] speed matches my speed. We're both pretty fast players," Quirk said. "That's a good element we both have."

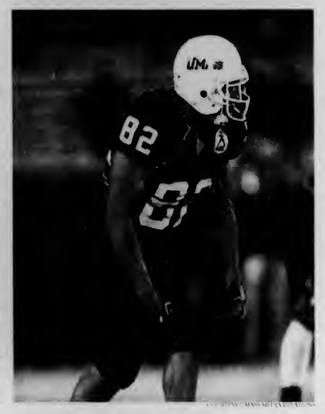
The biggest element to the top line, however, is familiarity on the ice. The luxury of being able to anticipate what your linemates are going to do with the puck is an indispensable edge that cannot be overlooked.

"Just the communication on the ice," Quirk said of having played with Davis and Fenton before. "We know each other's voices, and what we sound like."

Whether Cahoon sticks with the same top line all year or just uses it this weekend at Saint Lawrence and Clarkson, expect the trio of Quirk, Davis and Fenton to be on the stat sheets throughout the 2007-08 season.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu

Live It Up...Go Bowling!
UMASS College Specials...
SPARE TIME
EVERY THURSDAY
Unlimited Bowling ~ Only $12
9pm-Close
50% OFF Open Bowling
Every Monday & Tuesday
9pm-Close
also featuring...Grandstands Bar
Live Bands ~ Every Sat night
Spare Time Northampton
(formerly Northampton Bowl)
525 Pleasant St 584 4830



Listorti still questionable

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts football team got off to one of the best starts in school history in the first month of the 2007 season. With the bye week behind them, the Minutemen return to action against Villanova Saturday.

But there is one Minuteman who has yet to see the field this year. Tight end Brad Listorti entered the season as one of the most highly touted tight ends in the Football Championship Subdivision.

A transfer from Rutgers, Listorti's best game in 2006 (his first season with UMass) was the biggest game of the season. In the NCAA Championship Game, the Milford, Conn., native hit career highs with five receptions for 78 yards and a touchdown.

Redshirt senior Brad Listorti has yet to see the field this season, missing the first five games of 2007 with a back injury.

That was the last time Listorti set foot on a gridiron. Sidelined with a lower back injury, he has spent the first month of the season on the sideline as his teammates push toward another title run.

"I'm really anxious to get back out there," Listorti said. "Just watching these guys and not being able to help them, it's really tough for me right now."

The offense has pressed on without one of their primary pass-catchers. Quarterback Liam Coen has thrown for almost 1,000 yards this season and tossed 11 touchdowns, and backup tight end Ian Jorgensen is a solid blocker and reliable receiver (five catches, 45 yards, one score).

However, what UMass has missed the two tight end sets that worked so well during the Minutemen's championship run last season. Listorti and Jorgensen spent plenty of time on the field together in 2006. Listorti is clearly the bigger threat in the passing game and has more potential to burn a defense vertically, but both in the running game and catching passes, the combo of Listorti and Jorgensen is something UMass has missed so far.

"Playing time was almost 50-50 with me and Brad last year," Jorgensen said. "We did a lot of two tight end sets. He's really more the pass catching guy. He's unbelievably athletic. I'm more of the guy who gets down there in the trenches and blocks. We both like what we do, so we're a good combination."

Without Listorti, UMass coach Don Brown has gone to the double tight end less often during the early part of this season, with third tight end Matt Silver coming in on short-yardage situations to complement Jorgensen.

Brown said Listorti is day-to-day, and will be up to game day. There's a chance Listorti will play against Villanova Saturday, but neither Brown nor Listorti seemed confident of that at practice Wednesday. Once he is able to return, it will certainly give the UMass offense a lift heading into the meat of the conference schedule.

"Any time you get a player back of his caliber, it's a plus for everybody," Brown said. "We've just got to play it out, but we've also got to be smart with his scenario."

One player that would love to see Listorti back on the field sooner rather than later is Coen. The junior signal-caller has spread the ball around this season, with only J.J. Moore (30 catches) and Rasheed Rancher (15) in double-digits for receptions. Getting back a major receiving threat at the tight end position would add another weapon to an already potent offense.

"It adds a whole new dimension, just having two tight ends on the field," Coen said. "[Listorti] is like a receiver to us, and Ian has done a good job in the passing game for us. We haven't had to call on him too much, but every time we do he makes big plays."

That new dimension Coen mentioned is the vertical passing game over the middle of the field. While Jorgensen has reliable hands and is a great option on a third and four, he can't stretch the field with a 20-yard seam route the way Listorti can.

"We ask Brad to stretch the field more than we do with Ian," Coen said. "Ian's better at catching the out routes because he's a big target to see. I've got confidence in both of them."

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu

Clarkson, Saint Lawrence first for UMass

HOCKEY from page 12

Clarkson returns four of its top five scorers from last season, including Dodge, who also serves as team captain. The dynamic center is among the best players in country and recorded a goal and an assist in two games against UMass last season. Many regard him as one of best faceoff men in the nation.

The Minutemen contained Dodge well during the NCAA Tournament win. He managed four shots on goal, but consistent pressure from the UMass defenders and forwards back checking didn't allow him any good looks. The loss of Jon Quick certainly looms as a huge barrier for the defensive unit to overcome in this weekend's game, but Cahoon feels that the experience gained in the defensive pairings will offset the loss of Quick.

"[Having experience defensively] is really helpful if they pay attention to detail," Cahoon said. "If they don't go out and rely on the fact that they've been here for a while and think that because of that they're going to be OK, we'll be fine. If they pay attention to detail and utilize their breadth of experience, we'll be able to play to our strength."

Cahoon hasn't settled on a starting net minder for Friday's game with the Golden Knights, but did say that both sophomore Dan Meyers and freshman Paul Dainton will see playing time. If Meyers starts Friday's game, it will be the second consecutive opener for him. He started against Sacred Heart in last season's first game as Quick was suspended.

UMass's first line will remain unchanged from last season. Senior P.J. Fenton and junior Chris Davis occupy the wings with junior Cory Quirk featuring as the pivot. Quirk established himself as a premier forward in Hockey East last year, scoring 13 goals and handed out 18 assists while finishing second to Chris Capraro who collected 35 points.

In his third at UMass, Quirk will serve as assistant captain to Kostka along Fenton and junior defenseman Duval Leaderer. All of the captains commented that departed captain Matt Anderson set the standard for leadership and that he prepared them all well to continue the program's progress. Even upperclassmen not given a captain spot understand their role and responsibilities.

"As far as getting our program to where we wanted to get it last year, we got it there," Davis said. "As far as staying up there, that's why we're trying to forget about last season. This is a season that we are expecting ourselves to be up there with [Boston College, Maine, New Hampshire and Boston University.]

"We learned a lot last year. As far as the guys returning from last year, we don't like talking about [last season's success] with the guys who came in new. It's up to them, if they want to be there with us then we have to set the tone and we'll get there as a team."

Joe Meloni can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu

Senior defenseman Mike Kostka will serve as team captain this season. Last season he scored three goals and handed out 15 assists.

Natural. Gentle.
Safe. Effective.
• headaches • neck pain
• back pain • sports injuries
• auto injuries • and more...
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractor
Participating provider for HMO's
Student Insurance Blue Cross, GIC
Car Insurance & most others
www.AmherstFamilyChiro.com
Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health
Most insurance accepted
228 Triangle Street
Amherst, MA
(near Bertucci's)
549-1500

Ellio's wants you to Get It here!
-FRIDAY 10/12-
Men's Soccer vs. Dayton 3 p.m.
-SATURDAY 10/13-
UMASS Football vs. Villanova 1 p.m.
Free Ellio's Thursday 10/11
@ The Harp 10:30 p.m.-12:30 a.m.
Ellio's
ADVERTORIAL GET IT.

zanna
shoe sale
4 DAYS ONLY!
Wednesday, October 10 through Saturday, October 13
20%off
all your favorite shoes and boots.
*includes sale table
downtown Amherst

Rudy credits trainer for victory at Xavier

INJURIES from page 12

scored two goals in a win over Xavier.

"She's got that thing taped up like a cast ever since the Duquesne game before halftime," Rudy said. "We've given her two days off, where she can't train or run or do anything."

Also getting hurt in the Duquesne game was junior defender Melissa Toulouse. She suffered a concussion and missed the Friday night game against Dayton.

This season, Toulouse replaced senior Tina Rodriguez as the central defender after she injured her ACL last year. Without Toulouse the defense was thin, but the coaching staff was in no rush to put her back on the field until she was 100 percent.

"You have to deal with that very carefully [because] if you make an error on that rehab that can really hurt individual down the line," Rudy said. "I thought [the trainer] Kathy Boyd and our training group did a great job with that."

Toulouse had four days between the Duquesne game and the next game at Dayton. The day before the game, the training staff and coach Rudy evaluated her and felt she was not ready. After two more days of rest, Toulouse was feeling much better and was given clearance to play against Xavier.

"She's very skillful in [the middle] and when she has the ball she doesn't lose balls very much," Rudy said. "It allowed us to start the attack."

Boyd not only helped Toulouse get back on the field, but also during the Xavier game – where it hit almost 100 degrees on the field – she kept the team hydrated and none of the players suffered cramping.

"I have to give credit to our trainer Kathy Boyd, [she] did a great job at getting our kids hydrated before and during the game," Rudy said about the teams head trainer, who has been at UMass for 18 years. "I think that was a big thing, our kids stayed in there, they didn't get dehydrated. She was just pouring the liquid into them."

With three games this weekend, the Minutewomen are healthier than they were last week. It also helps that the Minutewomen are playing at home during this long stretch. They will play five of their final seven games at Rudd Field.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu.

URI offense will test UMass

SOCCER from page 12

Senior Deb Nelson accumulated seven goals and three assists through the first 12 games, for 17 points.

"I think our coaches just were looking at statistics and not on the quality of the player [in voting for the offensive player of the year]," Rudy said. "She is very, very good. [She is] big, athletic and, boy, can she come at you with speed."

URI's other leading scorer is forward Jessica Babice. A freshman, Babice has racked up 11 points on five goals and one assist. Rudy says she is especially tall for her age and was a good addition for the Rams because she brings a total package of skills to the team.

Almost all of Rhode Island's strength resides in these four players. In fact, the quartet – all a part of the front five – have contributed 22 of the team's 24 goals, 14-of-16 assists, and about 75 percent of the shots on goal.

The Minutewomen look to combat the Rams with talent of their own.

Forward Britt Canfield is coming off a strong game against Xavier, scoring two goals in the 3-1 victory.

The senior captain has six goals and seven assists this year, for a team-leading 19 points. With those numbers, she has 28 goals and 14 assists for 70 points in her collegiate career.

Rudy said Canfield has proven time and again to be the Minutewomen's go-to player. She has breakaway speed that lets her take off with the ball and maneuver seamlessly around defenders. And her ability to pepper goalkeepers with shots from any angle provides her teammates an abundance of rebound chances.

Another forward, sophomore Sydney Stoll, also has six goals. She has added three assists to earn herself 15 points.

"[Her] first year she played like a freshman and sometimes like a sophomore and a junior," Rudy said. "This year I think there is greater understanding of how to play with the players she is with."

One of the other players Rudy mentioned was junior Vanessa Patry. Last year the forward was one of UMass's top scorers, with four goals and three assists for 11 points.

"She is an incredibly valuable player for us because of her intelligence and also her flexibility. We've played Vanessa as a forward, we've played her as a withdrawn center-forward and we've played her as midfield player," Rudy said.

BRIAN FHOGRA/COLLEGIAN

Junior Vanessa Patry's versatility has proved invaluable to the Minutewomen this season following a series injuries to her teammates.

"I think she's better than last year."

UMass is 14-5 all time against the Rams, but Rudy said that may not be indicative of how his players match up today. He said the majority of those victories were before URI began putting in the effort to improve its women's soccer program.

He knows he will need solid performances from all of his players to defeat the Rams and better their A-10 record.

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu.

Swimming, diving take on BU

SWIMMING from page 12

managing their time well so that they can do well academically," Yarworth said. "We're a good old-fashioned blue-collar team and they know what hard work is and they know that the result of hard work will be a championship."

Women's coach Bob Newcomb will enter his 23rd season as the leader of the Minutewomen. His philosophy is that the dual-meet season is a stepping stone toward a goal shared by the men's team – a conference title. The Minutewomen came in second place last season, their best finish in the conference championships since winning the title in 2001.

Senior captains Samantha Demty, Allison Volpe and Colleen McCann lead a young UMass team including 11 freshman and six sophomores. The 11 freshman marks the largest group of freshman ever in the program.

Newcomb believes that the seniors are the heart of the team and that the rest of the athletes have to earn their place on the squad.

"The three captains have done a good job with the senior class as a whole," Newcomb said. "The captains are the ones with the title, but I regard this as the seniors' team. They are the ones that put in the four years and the time."

He believes that the captains have done a good job of getting the team together and setting up a good environment so that the athletes can feel at home, but also know that they have to work as hard as they can when they are asked.

Newcomb prepares his athletes with eight or nine in-water workouts a week. The training regimen usually consists of about 17 hours of in-water training coupled with three hours of running. He believes that the intensity of the workouts have brought his team together.

"You have to have a team atmosphere in order to have success and right now we've got the biggest group that I've ever had in the water here and I think they're blending really well together as a team," Newcomb said. "You could see the unity and [the ability] to help each other through the workouts and there are a lot of things that they do that will help each other get through some of these tough workouts that we have."

The team has set a goal to cut the number of points that Richmond won the A-10 title by in half; secondary goals for the team include beating Army and Fordham.

Mandy Hixon is entering her sixth season as the diving coach of the Maroon and White. From the women's team she leads a diving corps of freshman Anne Fogerty, sophomore Sarah Tomasz and juniors Karen Upperco and Sarah Horstmann.

Divers from the men's team include freshmen John Clark, Adam Duffield, Zach Lichter, sophomore Byron Johnson and leading the men's divers is Rappe, the lone senior.

Hixon believes that the outlook of the team is hard to gauge because she does not yet have a feel for what the four incoming freshman can bring to the team.

"Right now they look like they're going to be good," said Hixon of the freshman. "But it's really early so we have a long way to go."

Hixon put it upon herself to pull out the dedication from her young divers in order to mold them into accomplished collegiate divers.

The Maroon and White will compete in its first meet of the season Saturday at home against Boston University at 1 p.m.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu

Swisher back in fold for UM

By Sam Ehrlich
Collegian Staff

Evan Swisher is back to help the boys to another title.

Swisher, a star on the Massachusetts men's swimming team for the past four years, decided to come back to UMass as an assistant coach to teach what he knows about the sport to the newcomers.

According to coach Russ Yarworth, Swisher will hold individual video sessions, run workouts and help swimmers in areas he excelled in while swimming for the Minutemen.

The idea started with the news that Swisher planned to remain in the area for another year after graduation to work. Yarworth approached him about coaching for a year.

"I wasn't quite sure what my next move would be, and Russ offered me the position and I took it," Swisher said. "A lot of this is just a learning experience for me; it's interesting being on the other side of this and learning how Russ runs the show."

"This is a win/win situation," Yarworth said. "It gives him some funding and us a great part of UMass history and a great assistant."

Swisher holds many school records in his two events, the individual medley and backstroke.

All in all, Swisher has 5-of-18 varsity records for UMass swimming. More importantly, he set the A-10 record last year with a 1:46.69 time in the 200-yard backstroke. The time not only garnered him a prestigious place in the A-10 record books, but also gave him and his school a championship.

Swisher was named the 2007 UMass Swimming Most Valuable Player for his performance and the Most Outstanding Performer at the A-10 Championships.

"I'm pretty up there on the record books," Swisher said. "I think I established myself as a great UMass backstroker and relay swimmer, along with freestyle."

"If you just look at the record books you can see how great his legacy is," Yarworth said. "He's one of the most successful swimmers in our program's history."

Swisher even set records as early as high school, as the former Mount Anthony Union High School captain and letterman. He is the school's record-holder in 50-, 100- and 500-yard freestyles, along with the 100-yard backstroke, 100-yard breaststroke, 100-yard fly and 200-yard individual medley.

However, Swisher knows one thing that only UMass could have taught him – how to win at the collegiate level.

With Swisher in the pool, the Minutemen have been very strong. UMass not only won last year, Swisher's senior year, but in his freshman and sophomore years as well.

In fact, the only time the Minutemen have lost since the 1999-00 season was in 2005-06, Swisher's junior year, when St. Bonaventure took the title.

The recent success has netted the Minuteman to a No. 1 ranking in the A-10 Preseason Coaches' poll.

"Any time I have a motivated and interactive assistant coach it makes our coaching production a lot better," Yarworth said. "He's certainly going to enhance our chances."

UMass swimming and diving certainly seems strong this year, returning 12 championship individual finalists, but Swisher is ready to do anything to help.

Swisher says he looks forward the most to working with the freshmen, especially Max Butler, whom he describes as "the next big backstroker."

"I'm hoping to have him breaking some of my records this year," he said. "I would really like to get the freshman into the UMass attitude."

Sam Ehrlich can be reached at sehrlich@student.umass.edu

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL - W. SPFLD
Special Student Rate
Local-National Placement
Includes Certification
1-800-357-3210
BostonBartender.com

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Insurance Replacement Rates FREE PICK-UP
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
at North Amherst Motors
79 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.potterauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)

UMass Boston Open House 2007
Saturday, October 20th
Begins at 8:30am
• Learn about our vast array of academic programs
• Tour the campus on beautiful Boston Harbor
• Meet professors and students
• Visit apartments just steps from the university
UMASS BOSTON
www.umb.edu/openhouse 617.287.6000

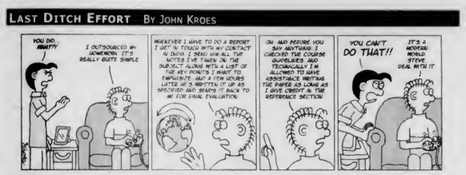
THE FINE ARTS CENTER
LET'S GO GLOBE HOPPING!
CENTER SERIES 07-08 SEASON
Jose Limón Dance Company
Friday, October 12, 8pm, Concert Hall
Hailed as "one of the world's great dance companies," the Jose Limón Dance Company is the keeper of one of the truly great American artistic legacies of the 20th century. The Village Voice writes, "For drama, virtuosity, and grace, there's no finer company."
$35, $25, $15. Five College Students $15, $10, $7. Youth 17 and under $12
Sponsored by El Planeta, Bank of America and WFCR 88.5FM
This performance is made possible by the National Endowment for the Arts American Masterpiece Dance initiative, administered by the New England Foundation for the Arts.
NEA
EL PLANETA Bank of America WFCR AMERICAN MASTERPIECE DANCE
Miguel Zenón Quartet
Thursday, October 18, 7:30 pm, Bowker Auditorium
This dazzling young musician is quickly becoming a central figure in the new Latin jazz movement as he effortlessly blends bebop with Latin jazz. Miguel Zenón is a tour de force in contemporary jazz!
$25, $15. Five College Students $10, $7. Youth 17 and under $12
Sponsored by El Planeta, Bank of America, Open Square, Allison Bartmon and Angier and WEIB 106.3FM
Join us for a free Community Salsa Party at Open Square in Holyoke, Wednesday, October 17th from 7-11pm for some soul cleansing Latin dance music with Combo Sabroso.
EL PLANETA Bank of America
Rosanne Cash: Black Cadillac The Concert
Saturday, October 20, 8pm, Concert Hall
Using the music from Black Cadillac as a roadmap, Cash invites the audience on a stirring trip through a multi-media performance of music, video, and narration of her personal legacy.
$35, $25, $15. Five College Students $15. Youth 17 and under $15
Sponsored by PeoplesBank, Valley Advocate, and 93.9 The River. Come at 7:30pm for a tour of the current exhibition at the University Gallery
EL PLANETA Bank of America
UMass FINE ARTS CENTER
For tickets call or go online to www.fineartscenter.com!

WMUA 91.1 FM ENTERTAINMENT GROUP PRESENTS
VOXTROT plus 1990s The Little Ones
FRI. OCT. 12 • 8:30 PM DOORS 7:30 PM CLUB ROOM
BOUNCING SOULS plus World/Inferno Friendship Society, Modern Life Is War, The Low Budgets
THU. OCT. 18 • 7:00 PM DOORS 6:00 PM BAL ROOM
THE MACHINE America's Premiere Pink Floyd Experience
FRI. OCT. 19 • 8:30 PM DOORS 7:30 PM BAL ROOM
GET BACK TO MUSIC TOUR
LITTLE BROTHER plus Evidence (of Dilated Peoples), Psalm One, The Problemaddicts
FRI. OCT. 19 • 8:30 PM DOORS 7:30 PM CLUB ROOM
Bowery Ballroom 10 PRATT ST. Flashbacks NORTHAMPTON, MA
ALL AGES
PURCHASE TICKETS ON OR BEFORE SHOW NIGHT VISIT OUR WEBSITE OR CALL:
WWW.IRIE.COM or 413-586-8686

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

		2		7		3
	8		7		9
7		9	1
		1	2	6		9
2						6
6		8	7	9
			3	5		2
	1		4		8
3		4		1

QUOTE OF THE DAY



"I spin aphrosims like silk. Crazy, crazy silk."

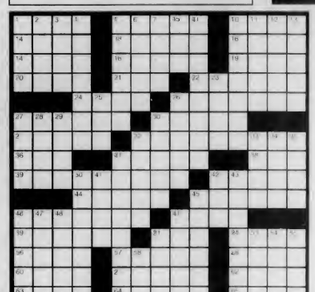
-S.P. Sullivan

ECOLOGY By Jen Fill

LAST DITCH EFFORT By John Kroes

HOW JUPITER GOT ITS RED SPOT By Tyren Barker and Jen Fill

CLASSIC COMICS VOLUME 1: MS PAINT By Mike Audette



ACROSS
1 Fashionable
5 Pooped
10 Jot
14 Old Cairo cash
15 Identical
16 Emetologist's glow
17 Related
18 Baseball teams
19 Mosque prayer leader
20 Arizona city
21 Guillvanni
22 Will contests
24 Auctioneer's closer
26 Hogged the mirror
27 "The Thinker" or "David"
30 Father of an arietis
31 Ger. submarine
32 Smoking tendency
36 Guitar Wozniam
37 Destined
38 Fish eggs
39 Valued highly
42 James Dean film
44 Played over
45 Removes suds
46 Omen
49 Maximum
50 New York lake
51 Employment position
52 Mild expletive
56 Makes a tap
57 Roughly finished
59 PBS series
60 Classify
61 Downy duck
62 ___-in-the-wool
63 Adam's grandson
64 Silvery fish
65 Pouch-like structures

DOWN
1 Chowder chunk
2 Cross-country walk
3 Eye part
4 Game with sour pickers
5 Knot
6 Homeric epic
7 Cheese covering
8 Barely manage
9 Left alone
10 Certain servers
11 Person
12 Fuming
13 Brought to bear
23 Comprehends
25 Not at home
26 Pleated
27 Tuxedo, e.g.
28 Sk.-lift
29 Top-notch
30 Eucharist plate
32 Jeweler's measure
33 Gershwin and Levin
34 Zion
35 Obtains
37 Heat sources
40 Manet and Monet
41 Genin
42 PX patrons
43 Means
45 Penn Warren or Redfield
46 Sherriff's search party
47 Bulbous vegetable
48 Kind of racket
49 Prototype
51 Actor Law
53 Spanish painter
54 With or Avignon
55 June celebrants
58 Periphery

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

illegalcomics@yahoo.com

Seven Oz
EVERY WEDNESDAY
KARAOKE
SHUT UP & DANCE
FRIDAY, 10/12/07
RIVERDEND BAND
SATURDAY, 10/13/07
LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO HAVE A PRIVATE EVENT/PARTY?
CALL 413-530-6996
Route 116, 330 Amherst Rd Sunderland, MA 01375 413-665-8788
Sun-Thurs 11AM-1AM
Fri-Sat 11AM-2AM
Next to Sunderland Bridge

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Learning cursive was important just in case someone steals every computer on Earth.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
A Domino's pizza box is evidence that at some point someone had very few options.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Always tell the truth, even if it directly implicates you as a fan of Sinead O'Connor.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
The phrase "lickety-split" suggests something entirely different than speedy action.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
You are caught in a thicket of emotional thorns and you are completely nude. Ouch!

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Lost is a stupid show because there are no dinosaurs involved in any way. Lame.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You're equal with the giraffe. Forget length, you've got the same number of bones.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Make a love milkshake, you decide on the appropriate (and safe) ingredients.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Acquire moisturizer to soothe the rough patch of dry skin blossoming on your face.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Hire a very short person to feed you grapes and fan you during class.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Get all your friends together and invent a candy corn cereal. People will like that.

Chicago Pizzaria
Free Delivery!
PIZZA - CALZONES - SUBS - WRAPS
SALADS - PASTA - DINNERS
RIBS - SEAFOOD - SLICES
PARTY SIZE PIZZA NOW AVAILABLE!
Now Hiring
Counter/Cashiers and Drivers
HOURS
Sun-Wed: 3pm-2am
Thurs-Sat: 3pm-3am
Order For DELIVERY or PICK-UP
(413) 549-6073
150 Fearing Street
Next to Patterson Dorm
Amherst, MA 01002

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ACTIVITIES

Montreal weekend from $99.00. Complete, motel, transportation and more. Montreal express.net 781-979-9001. Lowest Prices on campus

APT. FOR RENT

Granby Apt. 4 rooms $750.00 a month. Heat/hotwtr included. Call Allen at Eaglecrest. 413-256-3442

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided 1-800-965-6520 Ext. 162

Staff needed for Mullins Center performance Friday, Oct.26th. Approx 2:30-9:30 pm. $10/hr. Contact Matt at workboston@eworksinc.com.

EMPLOYMENT

CAFE HELP PART-TIME nights and weekends must be fast, accurate, efficient and friendly. Apply in person at the woodstar cafe. 60 Masonic St. Northampton.

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail. 545-6837

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes start soon 1-800-U-CAN-MIX www.universitybartending.com. Sign up now.

SALONS AND SPAS

HOLISTIC SALON AND SPA. Awesome upscale 7 point haircuts for female and male www.shearblissamherst.com 413-253-2322

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906,1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org

Concerned About Your Eating? Do you eat too little? Eat too much? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic 577-5101.

SERVICES

TAPESTRY HEALTH. providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling & rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992 27 Pray St., Amherst www.tapestryhealth.org

TRAVEL

*#1 Spring Break Website! 4 & 7 night trips. Low prices guaranteed. Group discounts for 8+. Book 20 people, get 3 free trips! Campus reps needed. www.StudentCity.com or 800-293-1445

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2008 Sell Trips, Earn Cash & Go Free. Call for group discounts. Best Deals Guaranteed! Info/Reservations 800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

Spring Break '08 The New Math: 10+1=10. Book TEN of your friends on our SB '08 packages, the 11th is FREE. Contact STA TRAVEL: Campus Center, Room 224 (413) 256-1261 AMH@statravel.com www.freespringbreak08.com

WANTED

EGG DONORS WANTED. Help make a couple's dream of becoming parents come true by becoming an egg donor. Very generous compensation and expenses paid. Must be a non-smoking female between the ages of 21 and 32. For more info, please visit our website at www.robertnicholsesq.com or contact Julie at 781.551.0600.

OCT 11 2007

Rudy credits trainer for victory at Xavier

INJURIES from page 12

scored two goals in a win over Xavier.

"She's got that thing taped up like a cast ever since the Duquesne game before halftime," Rudy said. "We've given her two days off, where she can't train or run or do anything."

Also getting hurt in the Duquesne game was junior defender Melissa Toulouse. She suffered a concussion and missed the Friday night game against Dayton.

This season, Toulouse replaced senior Tina Rodriguez as the central defender after she injured her ACL last year. Without Toulouse the defense was thin, but the coaching staff was in no rush to put her back on the field until she was 100 percent.

"You have to deal with that very carefully [because] if you make an error on that rehab that can really hurt individual down the line," Rudy said. "I thought [the trainer] Kathy Boyd and our training group did a great job with that."

Toulouse had four days between the Duquesne game and the next game at Dayton. The day before the game, the training staff and coach Rudy evaluated her and felt she was not ready. After two more days of rest, Toulouse was feeling much better and was given clearance to play against Xavier.

"She's very skillful in [the middle] and when she has the ball she doesn't lose balls very much," Rudy said. "It allowed us to start the attack."

Boyd not only helped Toulouse get back on the field, but also during the Xavier game – where it hit almost 100 degrees on the field – she kept the team hydrated and none of the players suffered cramping.

"I have to give credit to our trainer Kathy Boyd, [she] did a great job at getting our kids hydrated before and during the game," Rudy said about the teams head trainer, who has been at UMass for 18 years. "I think that was a big thing, our kids stayed in there, they didn't get dehydrated. She was just pouring the liquid into them."

With three games this weekend, the Minutewomen are healthier than they were last week. It also helps that the Minutewomen are playing at home during this long stretch. They will play five of their final seven games at Rudd Field.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu.

URI offense will test UMass

SOCCER from page 12

Senior Deb Nelson accumulated seven goals and three assists through the first 12 games, for 17 points.

"I think our coaches just were looking at statistics and not on the quality of the player [in voting for the offensive player of the year]," Rudy said. "She is very, very good. [She is] big, athletic and, boy, can she come at you with speed."

URI's other leading scorer is forward Jessica Babice. A freshman, Babice has racked up 11 points on five goals and one assist. Rudy says she is especially tall for her age and was a good addition for the Rams because she brings a total package of skills to the team.

Almost all of Rhode Island's strength resides in these four players. In fact, the quartet – all a part of the front five – have contributed 22 of the team's 24 goals, 14-of-16 assists, and about 75 percent of the shots on goal.

The Minutewomen look to combat the Rams with talent of their own.

Forward Britt Canfield is coming off a strong game against Xavier, scoring two goals in the 3-1 victory.

The senior captain has six goals and seven assists this year, for a team-leading 19 points. With those numbers, she has 28 goals and 14 assists for 70 points in her collegiate career.

Rudy said Canfield has proven time and again to be the Minutewomen's go-to player. She has breakaway speed that lets her take off with the ball and maneuver seamlessly around defenders. And her ability to pepper goalkeepers with shots from any angle provides her teammates an abundance of rebound chances.

Another forward, sophomore Sydney Stoll, also has six goals. She has added three assists to earn herself 15 points.

"[Her] first year she played like a freshman and sometimes like a sophomore and a junior," Rudy said. "This year I think there is greater understanding of how to play with the players she is with."

One of the other players Rudy mentioned was junior Vanessa Patry. Last year the forward was one of UMass's top scorers, with four goals and three assists for 11 points.

"She is an incredibly valuable player for us because of her intelligence and also her flexibility. We've played Vanessa as a forward, we've played her as a withdrawn center-forward and we've played her as midfield player," Rudy said.

BRIAN THEDORA/COLLEGIAN

Junior Vanessa Patry's versatility has proved invaluable to the Minutewomen this season following a series injuries to her teammates.

"I think she's better than last year."

UMass is 14-5 all time against the Rams, but Rudy said that may not be indicative of how his players match up today. He said the majority of those victories were before URI began putting in the effort to improve its women's soccer program.

He knows he will need solid performances from all of his players to defeat the Rams and better their A-10 record.

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu.

Swimming, diving take on BU

SWIMMING from page 12

managing their time well so that they can do well academically," Yarworth said. "We're a good old-fashioned blue-collar team and they know what hard work is and they know that the result of hard work will be a championship."

Women's coach Bob Newcomb will enter his 23rd season as the leader of the Minutewomen. His philosophy is that the dual-meet season is a stepping stone toward a goal shared by the men's team – a conference title. The Minutewomen came in second place last season, their best finish in the conference championships since winning the title in 2001.

Senior captains Samantha Demty, Allison Volpe and Colleen McCann lead a young UMass team including 11 freshman and six sophomores. The 11 freshman marks the largest group of freshman ever in the program.

Newcomb believes that the seniors are the heart of the team and that the rest of the athletes have to earn their place on the squad.

"The three captains have done a good job with the senior class as a whole," Newcomb said. "The captains are the ones with the title, but I regard this as the seniors' team. They are the ones that put in the four years and the time."

He believes that the captains have done a good job of getting the team together and setting up a good environment so that the athletes can feel at home, but also know that they have to work as hard as they can when they are asked.

Newcomb prepares his athletes with eight or nine in-water workouts a week. The training regimen usually consists of about 17 hours of in-water training coupled with three hours of running. He believes that the intensity of the workouts have brought his team together.

"You have to have a team atmosphere in order to have success and right now we've got the biggest group that I've ever had in the water here and I think they're blending really well together as a team," Newcomb said. "You could see the unity and [the ability] to help each other through the workouts and there are a lot of things that they do that will help each other get through some of these tough workouts that we have."

The team has set a goal to cut the number of points that Richmond won the A-10 title by in half; secondary goals for the team include beating Army and Fordham.

Mandy Hixon is entering her sixth season as the diving coach of the Maroon and White. From the women's team she leads a diving corps of freshman Anne Fogerty, sophomore Sarah Tomasz and juniors Karen Upperco and Sarah Horstmann.

Divers from the men's team include freshmen John Clark, Adam Duffield, Zach Lichter, sophomore Byron Johnson and leading the men's divers is Rappe, the lone senior.

Hixon believes that the outlook of the team is hard to gauge because she does not yet have a feel for what the four incoming freshman can bring to the team.

"Right now they look like they're going to be good," said Hixon of the freshman. "But it's really early so we have a long way to go."

Hixon put it upon herself to pull out the dedication from her young divers in order to mold them into accomplished collegiate divers.

The Maroon and White will compete in its first meet of the season Saturday at home against Boston University at 1 p.m.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

Swisher back in fold for UM

By Sam Ehrlich
Collegian Staff

Evan Swisher is back to help the boys to another title.

Swisher, a star on the Massachusetts men's swimming team for the past four years, decided to come back to UMass as an assistant coach to teach what he knows about the sport to the newcomers.

According to coach Russ Yarworth, Swisher will hold individual video sessions, run workouts and help swimmers in areas he excelled in while swimming for the Minutemen.

The idea started with the news that Swisher planned to remain in the area for another year after graduation to work. Yarworth approached him about coaching for a year.

"I wasn't quite sure what my next move would be, and Russ offered me the position and I took it," Swisher said. "A lot of this is just a learning experience for me; it's interesting being on the other side of this and learning how Russ runs the show."

"This is a win/win situation," Yarworth said. "It gives him some funding and us a great part of UMass history and a great assistant."

Swisher holds many school records in his two events, the individual medley and backstroke.

All in all, Swisher has 5-of-18 varsity records for UMass swimming. More importantly, he set the A-10 record last year with a 1:46.69 time in the 200-yard backstroke. The time not only garnered him a prestigious place in the A-10 record books, but also gave him and his school a championship.

Swisher was named the 2007 UMass Swimming Most Valuable Player for his performance and the Most Outstanding Performer at the A-10 Championships.

"I'm pretty up there on the record books," Swisher said. "I think I established myself as a great UMass backstroker and relay swimmer, along with freestyle."

"If you just look at the record books you can see how great his legacy is," Yarworth said. "He's one of the most successful swimmers in our program's history."

Swisher even set records as early as high school, as the former Mount Anthony Union High School captain and letterman. He is the school's record-holder in 50-, 100- and 500-yard freestyles, along with the 100-yard backstroke, 100-yard breaststroke, 100-yard fly and 200-yard individual medley.

However, Swisher knows one thing that only UMass could have taught him – how to win at the collegiate level.

With Swisher in the pool, the Minutemen have been very strong. UMass not only won last year, Swisher's senior year, but in his freshman and sophomore years as well.

In fact, the only time the Minutemen have lost since the 1999-00 season was in 2005-06, Swisher's junior year, when St. Bonaventure took the title. The recent success has netted the Minuteman to a No. 1 ranking in the A-10 Preseason Coaches' poll.

"Any time I have a motivated and interactive assistant coach it makes our coaching production a lot better," Yarworth said. "He's certainly going to enhance our chances."

UMass swimming and diving certainly seems strong this year, returning 12 championship individual finalists, but Swisher is ready to do anything to help.

Swisher says he looks forward the most to working with the freshmen, especially Max Butler, whom he describes as "the next big backstroker."

"I'm hoping to have him breaking some of my records this year," he said. "I would really like to get the freshman into the UMass attitude."

Sam Ehrlich can be reached at sehrlich@student.umass.edu.

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL - W. SPFLD
Special Student Rate
Local-National Placement
Includes Certification
1-800-357-3210
BostonBartender.com

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement

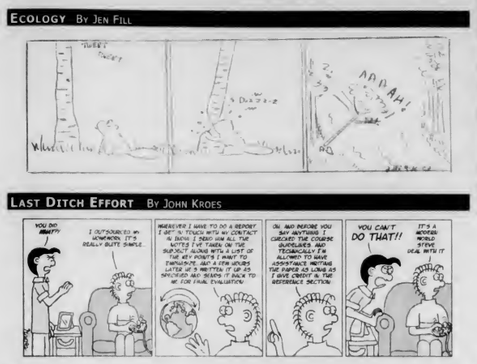
UMass Boston Open House 2007
Saturday, October 20th
Begins at 8:30am
• Learn about our vast array of academic programs
• Tour the campus on beautiful Boston Harbor
• Meet professors and students
• Visit apartments just steps from the university
UMASS BOSTON
www.umb.edu/openhouse 617 287 6000

THE FINE ARTS CENTER
LET'S GO GLOBE HOPPING!
CENTER SERIES 07-08 SEASON
Jose Limón Dance Company
Friday, October 12, 8pm, Concert Hall
Hailed as "one of the world's great dance companies," the Jose Limón Dance Company is the keeper of one of the truly great American artistic legacies of the 20th century. The Village Voice writes, "For drama, virtuosity, and grace, there's no finer company."
$35, $25, $15. Five College Students $15, $10, $7. Youth 17 and under $12
Sponsored by El Planeta, Bank of America and WFCR 88.5FM
This performance is made possible by the National Endowment for the Arts American Masterpiece Dance initiative, administered by the New England Foundation for the Arts.
NEA
EL PLANETA Bank of America WFCR AMERICAN MASTERPIECE DANCE
Miguel Zenón Quartet
Thursday, October 18, 7:30 pm, Bowker Auditorium
This dazzling young musician is quickly becoming a central figure in the new Latin jazz movement as he effortlessly blends bebop with Latin jazz. Miguel Zenón is a tour de force in contemporary jazz!
$25, $15, Five College Students $10, $7, Youth 17 and under $12
Sponsored by El Planeta, Bank of America, Open Square, Allison Bartmon and Angier and WEIB 106.3FM
Join us for a free Community Salsa Party at Open Square in Holyoke, Wednesday, October 17th from 7-11pm for some soul cleansing Latin dance music with Combo Sabroso
EL PLANETA Bank of America
Rosanne Cash: Black Cadillac The Concert
Saturday, October 20, 8pm, Concert Hall
Using the music from Black Cadillac as a roadmap, Cash invites the audience on a stirring trip through a multi-media performance of music, video, and narration of her personal legacy.
$35, $25, $15. Five College Students $15, Youth 17 and under $15
Sponsored by PeoplesBank, Valley Advocate, and 93.9 The River. Come at 7:30pm for a tour of the current exhibition at the University Gallery
EL PLANETA Bank of America
UMass FINE ARTS CENTER
For tickets call or go online to www.fineartscenter.com!

Iron Horse Entertainment Group presents
VOXTROT plus 1990s, The Little Ones
FRI. OCT. 12 • 8:30 PM doors 7:30 PM/Ballroom
BOUNCING SOULS
plus World/Inferno Friendship Society, Modern Life Is War, The Low Budgets
THU. OCT. 18 • 7:00 PM doors 6:00 PM/Ballroom
THE MACHINE
America's Premiere Pink Floyd Experience
FRI. OCT. 19 • 8:30 PM doors 7:30 PM/Ballroom
GET BACK TO MUSIC TOUR
LITTLE BROTHER
plus Evidence (of Dilated Peoples), Psalm One, The Problemaddicts
FRI. OCT. 19 • 8:30 PM doors 7:30 PM/Ballroom
Pearl Street Northampton, MA
10 PEARL ST
TO PURCHASE TICKETS OR FOR MORE INFO VISIT OUR WEBSITE OR CALL
WWW.IHEG.COM or 413-586-8686

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

		2			7	3
	8			7		9
7		9	1
		1	2	6		9
2						6
6		8	7	9
			3	5		2
	1		4		8
3		4		1



Quote of the Day

"I spin aphrosims like silk. Crazy, crazy silk."

-S.P. Sullivan

Ecology By Jen Fill

Last Ditch Effort By John Kroes

How Jupiter Got Its Red Spot By Tyren Barker and Jen Fill

Classic Comics Volume 1: MS Paint By Mike Audette

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Learning cursive was important just in case someone steals every computer on Earth.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
A Domino's pizza box is evidence that at some point someone had very few options.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Always tell the truth, even if it directly implicates you as a fan of Sinead O'Connor.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
The phrase "lickety-split" suggests something entirely different than speedy action.

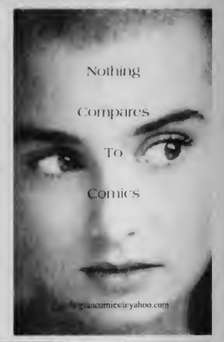
gemini May 21-Jun. 21
You are caught in a thicket of emotional thorns and you are completely nude. Ouch!

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Lost is a stupid show because there are no dinosaurs involved in any way. Lame.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You're equal with the giraffe. Forget length, you've got the same number of bones.

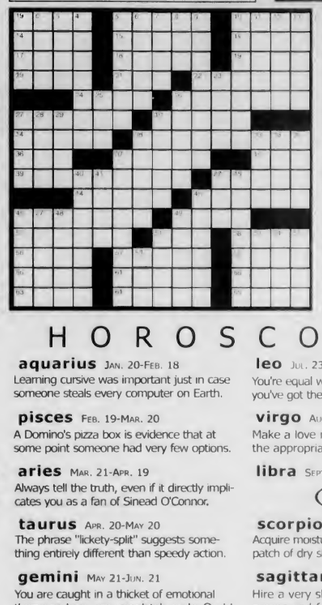
virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Make a love milkshake, you decide on the appropriate (and safe) ingredients.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22



scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Acquire moisturizer to soothe the rough patch of dry skin blossoming on your face.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Hire a very short person to feed you grapes and fan you during class.



capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Get all your friends together and invent a candy corn cereal. People will like that.

Chicago Pizzaria
Free Delivery!
PIZZA · CALZONES · SUBS · WRAPS
SALADS · PASTA · DINNERS
RIBS · SEAFOOD · SLICES
PARTY SIZE PIZZA NOW AVAILABLE!
Now Hiring
Counter/Cashiers and Drivers
HOURS
Sun-Wed: 3pm-2am
Thurs-Sat: 3pm-3am
Order For DELIVERY or PICK-UP
(413) 549-6073
150 Fearing Street
Next to Patterson Dorm
Amherst, MA 01002

Nothing Compares To Comics

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Seven Os
Every Wednesday
Karaoke
Shut Up & Dance
Friday, 10/12/07
Riverdend Band
Saturday, 10/13/07
Looking for a place to have a private event/party?
Call 413-530-6996

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Activities

Montreal weekend from $99.00. Complete, motel, transportation and more. Montreal express.net 781-979-9001. Lowest Prices on campus.

Apt. for Rent

Granby Apt. 4 rooms $750.00 a month. Heat/hotwtr included. Call Allen at Eaglecrest 413-256-3442

Employment

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided 1-800-965-6520 Ext. 162

Staff needed for Mullins Center performance Friday, Oct.26th. Approx 2:30-9:30 pm. $10/hr. Contact Matt at workboston@eworksinc.com.

Employment

CAFE HELP PART-TIME nights and weekends must be fast, accurate, efficient and friendly. Apply in person at the woodstar cafe. 60 Masonic St. Northampton

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Instruction

University Bartending Classes start soon! 1-800-U-CAN-MIX. www.universitybartending.com. Sign up now.

Salons and Spas

HOLISTIC SALON AND SPA. Awesome upscale 7 point haircuts for female and male www.shearblissamherst.com 413-253-2322

Services

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906,1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

Concerned About Your Eating? Do you eat too little? Eat too much? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic: 577-5101

Services

TAPESTRY HEALTH, providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling & rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St., Amherst www.tapestryhealth.org

Travel

#1 Spring Break Website! 4 & 7 night trips. Low prices guaranteed. Group discounts for 8+. Book 20 people, get 3 free trips! Campus reps needed. www.StudentCity.com or 800-293-1445

Travel

Spring Break 2008 Sell Trips, Earn Cash & Go Free. Call for group discounts. Best Deals Guaranteed! Info/Reservations 800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

Spring Break '08. The New Math: 10+1=10. Book TEN of your friends on our SB '08 packages, the 11th is FREE. Contact STA TRAVEL: Campus Center, Room 224 (413) 256-1261 AMH@statravel.com www.freespringbreak08.com

Wanted

EGG DONORS WANTED. Help make a couple's dream of becoming parents come true by becoming an egg donor. Very generous compensation and expenses paid. Must be a non-smoking female between the ages of 21 and 32. For more info, please visit our website at www.mbirthchoices.com or contact Julie at 781-551-0600.

OCT 12 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 11, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Like it never happened

UM starts season with rematch at Clarkson

By Joe Mellone
Collegian Staff

It's difficult for the Massachusetts hockey team not to think about the 2006-07 season entering this weekend. Success aside, UMass finds itself in upstate New York, taking on a pair of top 20 teams on unfamiliar ice.

Last March, in the East Region of the NCAA Tournament, it was Clarkson and Maine. This weekend, as the 2007-08 campaign begins, UMass meets those same Golden Knights on Friday before traveling to Canton, N.Y., for a match with Saint Lawrence on Saturday.

The teams met last weekend in the first game of the college hockey season, the No. 17 Saints (1-0) knocked off No. 7 Clarkson (0-1), 3-2.

After CU forward Nick Dodge put his team up with a goal late in the opening period, SLU scored three straight goals for the win.

UMass took on Clarkson twice last year, playing to a 3-3 tie on Oct. 14 and winning 1-0 in overtime on March 23 to open the NCAA Tournament. The USCHO/CSTV poll ranked the Golden Knights No. 3 when UMass upended them in the NCAA Tournament.

UMass coach Don Cahoon plans to use this weekend to further judge his team after its first full week of practices. The Minutemen played an exhibition game on Sunday, defeating Trois Rivieres, a Canadian college team, 6-0. They know, however, that Clarkson plays at a much higher level than Sunday's opponent.

"They're similar to what they were last year. They're a hard-working team," senior captain Mike Koska said of Clarkson. "They're obviously projected to finish well and will be a solid team all-around. We just have to be prepared to play well and play our game."

See HOCKEY on page 9

Trio back together to lead offensive attack

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

The 2006-07 season was in many ways a transition year for the Massachusetts hockey team. It didn't start from scratch, but in the past two years, some big names had moved on and voids had to be filled.

After the first-ever NCAA Tournament appearance in UMass history, it seemed they had been filled.

Marvin Degon, Matt Anderson, Stephen Werner and Mark Matheson: those were the names you heard when UMass hockey was brought up – the guys who were fighting to bring the Maroon and White to Hockey East prominence.

All three of those players are now long gone, and in their wake rose players like Cory Quirk,

See LINE on page 9

Cory Quirk and the Massachusetts hockey team kick off their 2007-08 season this weekend with a trip to Upstate New York for games with No. 7 Clarkson and No. 17 Saint Lawrence. The Minutemen went 1-0-1 against Clarkson last season, including a 1-0 win in the opening round of the NCAA Tournament.

UMass ready for new year

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts swimming and diving teams return a strong core of experienced athletes as they prepare for the upcoming season.

The 2007-08 Atlantic 10 Preaseason Coaches' Poll has the Minutemen winning the conference and the Minutewomen placing second to Richmond.

The Minutemen boast nine conference titles in the past 12 years and a member of last year's championship team is now on the coaching staff. It is to the team's advantage that one of its own decided to stay with the team and continue helping it strive for success.

UMass men's assistant coach Evan Swisher was a four-year member of the team and was a part of three of the last nine championship teams. Swisher believes that UMass men's coach Russ Yarworth is a very effective and cerebral coach.

"Russ is definitely the best coach that I've ever had as a swimmer," Swisher said. "He's a great motivator and I think he's really gotten a great group of kids who are all really into working hard this year and he's gotten into their heads and they've been working hard. From what I've seen so far, it's one of the best training years that I've ever seen."

Senior captains Zack Priest, R.J. Rappe, A.J. Vozella and John Weaver all provide invaluable experience to the team. The captains have high expectations of the team and of themselves as well.

Weaver and Vozella will have to keep themselves healthy this season, as they both have suffered many setbacks in the past. Last season, groin and back injuries hampered Weaver for most of the season. Last season, Vozella contracted mononucleosis and the flu.

However, even with possible setbacks, the captains remain determined to take on the season's challenges. One challenge in particular is facing St. Bonaventure at the conference championships. Last season the Minutemen defeated the Bonnies, but two years ago, it was the Bonnies who broke UMass's streak of five consecutive conference titles.

Weaver believes that depth, desire and coaching will lead the Maroon and White to its 10th conference title in 13 years.

"I think the kids were very motivated this summer and we've been working very hard, a lot harder than the freshmen have ever worked before, so I'm excited to see some good results," Weaver said. "We have to defend our title. I think we have the kids to do it, the training to do it and the coach to do it."

According to Yarworth, the athletes see the numbers on the conference championship banners and they recognize the program's tradition of excellence.

"We have a self-perpetuating motivational force that really makes my job a lot of fun," Yarworth said.

He believes in the philosophy of combining teaching with coaching. The team has a set goal at the beginning of the season of winning the A-10 championship. Yarworth prepares his team to achieve this goal by training them for the National Collegiate Athletic Association ethical maximum of 20 hours a week.

Yet even as they progress as athletes, Yarworth makes it a point that his athletes achieve success in the classroom. However, while on campus, Yarworth makes sure that his athletes are well-rounded and constantly strive for success.

"The guys have to be organized, they have to be motivated and they have to make sure that they are

See SWIMMING on page 10

Minutewomen take on URI

Rudy prepares team for tough matchup with Rams

Senior forward Britt Canfield and the Minutewomen continue Atlantic 10 play today against Rhode Island at 4 p.m.

By Dominic Poli
Collegian Staff

After splitting Columbus Day weekend with a 2-0 loss to Dayton Friday and a 3-1 win over Xavier Sunday, the Massachusetts women's soccer team welcomes Rhode Island to Rudd Field today at 4 p.m.

The Minutewomen (7-2-1, 2-2 Atlantic 10) got in from Ohio at 1 a.m. Monday and, after getting the day off, have had two days to prepare for the matchup with URI (7-3-2, 2-1-1 A-10), the first of a three-game homestand.

UMass coach Jim Rudy said the focus of this week's practices was working on some of the things he thinks the team must improve on. He said practice has not been particularly strenuous this week so that his players can "taper up" for Thursday's matchup.

"The two times I've seen [the Rams], they were the best attacking team I've seen this year," Rudy said. "They have a front five that just comes at you and they have an unusual system of play that you don't see too much. It's very European."

There is a good reason URI possesses that style of play – three of its players hail from Europe. Senior Thorunn Jonsdottir and junior Dora Larusdottir come from Iceland, while freshman Nelli Ruotsalainen calls Finland home.

Though Ruotsalainen, a defender, has not seen much time, Jonsdottir and Larusdottir (both midfielders) are two of the team's biggest threats.

"Those guys are on a different communication level," Rudy said. "They're very technical. Tactically, they're very smart and they play just real nice combinations. Both of them can shoot."

Jonsdottir has four goals and six assists for 14 points, while Larusdottir has six goals and four assists, for 16.

What Rudy says makes the Rams even more powerful is the fact that neither of the two Icelanders are the team's top scorer.

See SOCCER on page 10

Maroon and White bit by injury bug

Bad gets worse quickly as more players suffer setbacks

By Steve Games
Collegian Staff

Before Atlantic 10 play began, Massachusetts women's soccer coach Jim Rudy said the team was relatively healthy going forward.

Four games into conference play, the Minutewomen are anything but relatively healthy. Injuries and harsh conditions over the last weekend forced coach Rudy to rest starting players, play younger inexperienced players and move people around to different positions.

Against Duquesne last week, the Minutewomen were hit hard with injuries. Over the past weekend the team had to play without key players. Senior midfielder Christina Nunes had a serious knee injury that has ended her career at UMass. Nunes was a solid physical player in the middle of the field for the UMass attack and was slowly working her way back from an MCL sprain that she suffered prior to the season.

Junior forward Vanessa Patry has moved around to replace Nunes in the middle. Normally, Patry features at the forward position; last year she scored four goals and this season she has two goals through 10 games.

"We've had to move Patry around a bunch, either tactically or because of injury," Rudy said. "She may not be getting all the goals she got last year, but she's done a great job at being able to be flexible. She's had to do more moving on the field than any other player that we have."

The Minutewomen's leading scorer, senior forward Britt Canfield, injured her ankle during the Duquesne game. The ankle is still swollen; however, it will only heal if she has more time off. Rudy said it is tough to rest her because they have three games this weekend and Friday and Sunday games for the rest of the season. She proved last Friday and Sunday that she can play with the injury and still be successful. She played all 90 minutes against Dayton and

See INJURIES on page 10

STOLL GOES DOWN AS UMASS FALLS | PAGE 8

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SHOWERS/WIND : HI: 61 LO: 40 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, OCTOBER 12, 2007

Grad students rally for fair contract

Members of the Graduate Employees Organization rallied yesterday at UMass to demand a fair contract, which they have been without since June 30.

By Kaib Huston
Collegian Staff

The Graduate Employees Organization (GEO) at the University of Massachusetts held a rally yesterday to demand a fair contract after 10 months of unsuccessful negotiations.

The union has four main contract demands: a fee freeze and rollback, the elimination of a proposal to cut healthcare, increased financial support for childcare and transparent use of diversity funding.

"We are the people that make UMass work. We teach a large percentage of the courses on this campus," said GEO vice president Aaron Winslow. "It's a show of force on our part, to show that we have the numbers and that we have solidarity."

GEO members have been without a contract since June 30, when the last three-year contract expired. Graduate student fees have risen 12e percent in the past five years, and make up about 10 percent of the average GEO member's stipend, according to Winslow.

"We have to let the administration know that enough is enough," said Jessica Montagna, a GEO member studying social justice education. "It's getting to the point where they're not listening to [our] agreements."

More than 100 people – students, the rally outside of Whitmore Administration Building, including three students pushing strollers and a protester in a rat costume with a sign reading "I Miss Admin" pinned to its front.

After picketing outside, protesters filed into the building to sign a petition in the Chancellor's Office. Call-and-response shouts of "What do we want? Contract!" rang loudly through the halls of Whitmore for over 10 minutes.

"It's really shameful that the students have to convince the administration to provide childcare and diversity funding," said GEO member Jeff Napolitano at the rally. "Why should students have to hold the administration accountable for these things?"

The rally was a response to 10 months of stonewalled negotiations with a University bargaining committee, which includes Provost Charlene Seymour, Dean of Graduate Students John Mullin and labor relations specialist Susan Chinman.

Mullin was hesitant to respond since negotiations are still taking place, but said the bargaining committee is working hard to come to an accommodation.

"I think that everybody's been giving a bit, and we're closer than we've been in a long time," he said. "I am confident that pretty soon we're going to be coming to an agreement."

Seymour and Chinman could not be reached for comment.

Although previous contracts have been three-year contracts, the GEO put forward a one-year contract

See CONTRACT on page 2

Activists protest potential Iran war

By S.P. Sullivan
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON – The term "Burma-Shave" might not strike as resonant a chord for most students as it would for their parents, but for local activist groups "Burma-Shave" is as powerful now as it was in the 1960s.

The Amherst chapter of the Raging Grannies, Physicians for Social Responsibility, American Friends Service Committee, Northampton Committee to Stop the War, the Pioneer Valley Coalition Against Secrecy and Torture and the Western Massachusetts Inter-Faith Peace Coalition, lined up along the Calvin Coolidge Bridge from 7-9 a.m. and 4-6 p.m. yesterday to demonstrate in protest against "the threat of a new war" with Iran.

"There's a lot of talk that the administration is going to attack Iran supposedly because of atomic weapons," said Nicky Jones, a local physician, "but probably primarily because it gives them a political advantage. They can say, 'anybody who opposes this move supports the terrorist state because they have nuclear weapons.'"

Roughly two-dozen demonstrators lined up during periods of heavy traffic, flew in classic "Burma-Shave" style.

"Burma-Shave," Jones explained, was a brand of shaving cream known in the 1950s and 60s for its creative advertising, which employed sequential signs painted with their slogan as an advertising gimmick.

The protestors painted these sequential signs with anti-war slogans such as "No War with Iran" and "Bring Troops Home Now," and terminated with the telephone number of Congress, encouraging passing motorists to phone their representatives in protest.

"This is just to let people know that this is the wrong thing to do," said Jones.

The picketers met a substantial response from passing motorists, many of whom honked or waved in support of the demonstration.

"We're trying to raise people's consciousness," said Marty Nathan, M.D., an organizer of the event and a member of the Physicians for Social Responsibility. "You go to classes, people go to work, there is a much bigger world out there, and we wanted to insinuate this looming possibility – this looming disaster – into people's daily thoughts as they were driving to work, and ask them to do something."

The picketers felt it was important to hold a demonstration before any actual military action was taken, drawing parallels between the possibility of war with Iran and the current war in Iraq.

See PROTEST on page 2

Students take stand for Burma

Support for the current Burmese struggle was found at UMass as a small group of undergraduate activists rallied while educating the community about the conflict yesterday (see reaction on page 3).

$12 mil. donated to CDH

By Kristen Healy
Collegian Correspondent

NORTHAMPTON – Cooley Dickinson Hospital (CDH) is wrapping up their Caring for the Future campaign after raising $12,261,931 – with only a $10.8 million goal in mind.

The hospital also received a $900,000 challenge grant from The Kresge Foundation. In the history of Massachusetts hospitals, this grant was the fifth-highest Kresge grant ever awarded.

The grant given to CDH follows behind such hospitals as Boston Medical Center, Massachusetts General Hospital, Boston Children's Hospital, and the Dana Farber Cancer Institute.

Caring for the Future, the largest locally-based fundraiser in Hampshire County, aimed to raise money for a 100,000-square-foot surgery and patient building, and to further modernize the hospital, according to the CDH Web site.

The campaign co-chair, William J. Stapleton, was pleased with the outcome of the campaign and with the generosity of all the donors.

"Businesses, organizations, and individuals have been giving to secure not only the success of this campaign, but also

See HOSPITAL on page 2

Streaking into Atlantic 10 action

Minutemen look to stay hot against conference rival Dayton

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

After battling regional rivals on the field for the past six weeks, the Massachusetts men's soccer team now has to change its focus toward a new season – Atlantic 10 play. With only the top six teams qualifying for the conference's season-ending tournament, each A-10 match is valued at a high level.

The Minutemen (5-4-1) began their quest to return to the tournament for the first time since the 2005 season with home matches against Dayton (6-1-2, 1 Friday and Xavier (4-6-0) Sunday.

Although every team's record up to this point becomes mostly irrelevant, momentum from the non-conference season is still a factor.

The Minutemen carry a three-game winning streak into this weekend with victories over Hartford, Boston University and Northeastern all within the past three weeks.

"I think we're playing well and it's a good time to be playing well," UMass coach Sam Koch said. "But everyone's [record] goes back to 0-0."

That in effect is good news for the Maroon and White since Dayton blitzed through its non-conference schedule, suffering only one loss. The team the league's coaches selected to finish seventh has already equaled its win total from last season.

We always battle with them. The last couple of years, we've had some great games," Koch said.

Part of that can be attributed to the fact that the Flyers play a style of defensive soccer similar to the Minutemen. Dayton boasts the A-10's best scoring defense, allowing an average of 0.84 goals per game – UMass ranks third at 0.88.

See M. SOCCER on page 6

Kenny Cook and the Minutemen begin the Atlantic 10 conference portion of their schedule today when they take on the Flyers of Dayton. A-10 action continues Sunday with matchup against Xavier.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 28

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Marion
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
COMICS EDITOR Adam Stagin
EDITORIAL EDITOR Sean Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ryan McAskill
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Teresa Reilly
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Will McGuinness
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Michael King
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenswaike
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS OPERATED INDEPENDENTLY FROM THE UNIVERSITY ADMINISTRATION. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE COLLEGIAN BECAME AN ASSOC. PRESS MEMBER IN 1907. THE COLLEGIAN CHANGED ITS NAME TO THE COLLEGIAN IN 1934 AND THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IN 1958. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN AWARDED FIRST PLACE FOR GENERAL EXCELLENCE SINCE JUNE 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL 413-545-3500 OR TWEET @ M-F 9A.M. AND 3:30P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jeremy Rice

COPY EDITOR
Amber Vaillancourt

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

GEO rally voices demands

CONTRACT from page 1

proposal at the last bargaining session on Oct. 4 in a break with past precedent. However, they have yet to settle.

"They are continually bargaining at a slow pace. They are trying to wear us down," said Winslow.

A main tenet of GEO's demands is a fee freeze and subsequent rollback. Without this, said organizers, it doesn't matter what wage increase they receive since the Board of Trustees can raise their fees at any time.

"It's absurd for us to sign a contract and in reality have no idea how much we'll be making," said Chris Hamilton, a GEO organizer.

GEO members also criticized the University's spending priorities.

"They've got the cash. They call it 'New Dirt,'" said communications graduate student Chris Boulton at the rally, eliciting laughter from picketers. "We want a shining, sparkling example of what a public university can be – not glass and brick, but the people."

At the rally, GEO members called for more diversity support and transparency.

Although the organization won $800,000 for diversity funding in its last contract, members say they aren't being informed where that money is going.

Members said the money is being used for diversity fellowships in fields which bring money to the University while dismantling fellowships in social sciences and humanities.

In addition, the University has proposed to eliminate a current cap on co-pays, which several graduate students said attracted them to UMass.

"It's a big reason why a lot of people come here – the benefits, fair pay," said graduate student April Stroud, as she pushed her four-and-a-half-month-old baby in a stroller.

The GEO also wants an increase in childcare accessibility and affordability.

Currently, the on-campus childcare center has long waiting lists, is housed in "temporary" buildings and has mold problems, according to a GEO flier. A voucher program for off-campus childcare only meets about 25 percent of need. The university is proposing an increase to cover about 50 percent.

The GEO represents over 2,500 graduate student employees at UMass Amherst. It is affiliated with UAW Local 2322, which represents 3,600 workers in higher education, early childhood education, and health and human services in Western Massachusetts.

"[The lack of a contract] is something that harms the entire university community, not just graduate students," Winslow said. "[It] affects how people are able to do their job when they have to devote a lot of their attention to securing a good contract in the future."

Dean Mullin could not be reached for comment after the rally.

Katie Huston can be reached at khuston@student.umass.edu.

A protester dressed in a rat costume with a "UMass Admin" nametag rallied with graduate students yesterday to demand a fair contract.

Caring for the Future a success for Cooley Dickinson Hospital

HOSPITAL from page 1

the success of Cooley Dickinson Hospital," he said.

When the campaign ended, CEO and acting president Carol M. Smith gathered and thanked all the employees, donors, physicians and volunteers last Wednesday.

"Our community, both locally and abroad, has stepped up to help Cooley Dickinson meet and surpass our goal, and we are extremely grateful," she said.

The campaign excepted donations ranging from 10 dollars to over $1.5 million. Both the nurses and the physicians surpassed their estimated donation goals by a total of $367,000.

Although many of the donations were from locals, gifts were also received from California, Maine, New York and Switzerland.

A donation of one million dollars by Mike and Lisa Kittredge went towards the new Surgery Center, named in honor of the Kittredges. The center will be able to provide state-of-the-art facilities and technology in the hopes of attracting new surgical talent as well as keep the current surgical staff up to date.

"We truly believe that the real strength of a community has to come from within the community," the Kittredges said to CDH. "We've been inspired by the good work being done at Cooley Dickinson. We sincerely hope that our gift will inspire other community members to give as well."

Other donations went toward developing the new North Building, a four-story, 116,000 square foot building that opened in April 2007.

Aside from construction projects, the money will go toward improvements in current programs at CDH. These programs include Radiology, Cardiology, Oncology, the emergency department, the midwife childbirth program, and the Pediatric Hospitalist program.

Donations were received from a variety of people and organizations. CDH Physicians, Employees, the Board of Trustees and Auxiliary made up nearly three million dollars of the overall sum.

Other donations of $400,000 or more were given by the Easthampton Savings Bank, the Florence Savings Bank, and individuals such as Mike and Lisa Kittredge, and the AEC Trust and the Cofrin Family.

There were also other generous donations given by local families and companies in and around Hampshire County.

Kristen Heath can be reached at kkheath@student.umass.edu.

UMass to benefit from new bond bill

BY BEN WILLIAMS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Legislation filed by Governor Deval Patrick called for more than $1 billion in bonds over the next 10 years for the five University of Massachusetts campuses.

According to the Governor's Office, nearly $300 million of the bonds is set aside for specific projects at the Amherst campus.

"We commend the governor for his continued strong support for UMass and his understanding of the University's capital needs," said President Jack M. Wilson, who called the announcement "an important step in meeting our capital needs."

Projects include: $85 million for a new academic classroom building, $100 million for a laboratory science building, and $12.6 million in repairs to Machmer hall, $41.2 million for Lederle Graduate Research Center, and $51.3 million for Morrill Science Center.

The $426.8 million not earmarked for specific projects on the five campuses will be used to "address emergency capital investment needs and new capital investment priorities that will emerge over the next 10 years."

"This administration is committed to providing our students the highest quality public education possible so that they are prepared to compete with their peers across the country and throughout the world," Patrick said. "If we ask our students to put forth their best effort to succeed then we must be willing to invest in the tools to help them – their laboratories, their classrooms and their libraries."

This is the fist major bond bill for higher education since a $618 million package passed in 1995.

The Board of Higher Education also plans to eliminate its requirement for campuses to provide matching funds for state capital dollars.

University officials have also committed $187.5 million over the next five years. That's 50 cents in addition to every dollar of the state's planned, five-year, $375 million investment.

The bill grants $125 million for the Boston campus, $57.1 million for Dartmouth, $49 million for Lowell and $52 million for Worcester.

The bill includes another $1 billion for the nine state colleges and 15 community colleges.

Ben Williams can be reached at bwilliam@student.umass.edu

Local activist groups protest U.S.'s possible war with Iran

PROTEST from page 1

"We have all come to know what a mistake, what a disaster the war in Iraq has been," said demonstrator Norma Akamatsu. "And it seems like we're just about ready to make the same mistake all over again – and we will – in Iran. We're just trying to call attention to the possibility or likelihood that we're going to again take illegal military action."

The Bush administration has announced no formal plans to take military action against Iran, but vice president Dick Cheney told reporters this past February that "all options are still on the table."

"The Kyl-Lieberman amendment that was passed in the Senate [on September 25th] is basically the first step in granting the president power to do in Iran what he's done in Iraq," said demonstrator Dusty Miller.

The passing of the measure, as well as a similar measure in the House, caused Nathan and members of the other organizations to take action.

"It started out with the rationale that it was to stop their nuclear program and now it's switched to being an extension of the war in Iraq," said Nathan. "This should sound familiar to all of us because his shifting rationalizations for the war in Iraq had a very similar pattern to them"

While the picketers acknowledged that there was little likelihood the Bush administration would take notice of two dozen or so protestors in the Pioneer Valley, they hoped displaying the phone number of Congress would incite a few passers-by to make themselves heard.

"I'll have to go home and call my Congressman," said demonstrator Carolyn Ikach.

SP Sullivan can be reached at spsullivan@student.umass.edu.

Rally against genocide in Burma

The Burmese struggle for democracy found its way to the University of Massachusetts, as activists rallied to demonstrate their support for fellow students halfway around the world.

Sara Belanger

Red arm bands adorned the small group of undergraduate activists outside the Student Union building as they educated the UMass community on the atrocities occurring in Burma. According to senior Tiffany Yee, "The red arm bands are being worn to show support to the Burmese monks – red being the color of their traditional robes."

In 1962, Burma, a country situated between India and China had its government seized by a military junta. Under strict military control over the past four decades, any anti-government protests have been met with violent suppression.

The Burmese people live their lives in fear. Their's is a reality in which thugs are hired to assassinate political opponents. A reality where the peoples' democratically elected leader, Aung San Suu Kyi has been locked away under house arrest by the junta since 1990. It is an area where tyranny runs rampant and a person's only defense against its government's cruel use of brutality is silence.

Burma has been called Southeast Asia's Darfur, a forgotten genocide. The country's population is made up of 135 distinct ethnic groups. One such group, the Karen, have seen over 3,000 of their villages burned to the ground. Over 100,000 people have been displaced due to the vicious and inhumane actions of the military junta. Some have found solace in Thai refugee camps. Others, scattered throughout the jungle, hide in fear of being found by soldiers, whose mission it is to kill.

Women are being raped, children murdered and execution follows close behind men who are forced into labor camps.

Women are being raped, children murdered and execution follows close behind for men who are forced into labor camps. Villages are destroyed by fire, while the lives of the weak and disabled are at the mercy of the flames which they are unable to escape.

In 1996 an instance was recorded in which four Burmese women were savagely murdered by government soldiers. "After raping them they murdered the two women who were pregnant by stomping on their bellies. They then killed the other two by driving sharpened bamboo sticks through them."

August of this year saw a 500 percent increase in gas and oil prices in Burma. This increase in cost directly benefited the military, giving civil servants a pay raise. Outraged, thousands of students were joined by Buddhist monks who banded together in anti-government protests. On September 24, led by 20,000 monks, 100,000 people assembled in an attempted peaceful demonstration. Protesters were met with military opposition as the military opened fire into the crowd.

The numbers of deaths have not been calculated and thousands of monks are still missing. During this frightful scene injured protesters were thrown into crematories, still alive, burning to death, an image even Dante would find disturbing.

Bloodshed, sadistic and cruel, seems to be standard today in Burma, one of the least democratic nations in the world. While some may think the college-aged demographic apathetic, Yee, along with freshman Dadon Ngodup, MASSPIRG Vice Chair Samantha Molina, president of Asian Americans for Political Awareness Joong Kim and sophomore Don Lippincott assembled to champion for human rights in Burma.

In Yee's words, "I am standing here today wearing red in support of the tens of thousands of monks who peacefully fought for their countries freedom. I am standing here today in support of students just like me in Burma who are continuing to fight for their freedom."

A Burmese student recently quoted in the New York Times eloquently stated "We have no leader, we have no arms. But one day we will remove this government. They are shooting at us and we will die. But we will not die in vain."

Sarah Belanger is a UMass student. She can be reached at sbelange@student.umass.edu

Faith in science

I am a computer science major. Of the top-twenty most cited computer science research institutions in the world, four are not American. Of those four, two reside in a single specific country. This very specific country's Institute of Technology possesses the largest computer science faculty in the world.

Eli Gottlieb

Much, if not most, of the electronic technology we use in our times now comes from China and Japan. My Macbook Pro came stamped with, "Designed by Apple in California, Made in China". Yet Intel researched, designed, and developed the Core 2 Duo processor in that Macbook Pro in a very specific country other than China.

America Online did not invent its Instant Messenger program singlehandedly. They bought the protocol they would eventually revise to create AIM's protocol, a still-used protocol named ICQ, from the company Mirabilis in a very specific country, founded by four teenagers who invented the ICQ protocol.

The computer programming language PHP was invented by two men in a very specific country who went on to found Zend Technologies. A very specific country has the highest number of PhD holders per capita in the world, and its people still don't feel satisfied with their education system. A team of computer engineers in a very specific country found a fun, independent software-only way to unlock the Apple iPhone, enabling support for their local language.

Their unlocking method I hear, works with the latest iPhone software that makes other unlocked phones useful only as bricks. I bet you can't guess which country I've told you about. They might make headlines in the New York Times for the most inconsequential of policy changes, but apparently making our computers run only deserves occasional blurbs deep in the Tuesday Science and Technology section.

Science does not care who discovers, and technology can bring peace to the world.

I figured it out? That country is the State of Israel. And yet when we hear about Israel, we only hear about politics. We hear about bills and wars and bullets, but not about computer chips or protocols or programming languages.

It depresses me to even hear about politics in my Modern Hebrew class. My teacher sometimes resorts to asking me to shout, "Shut up with the politics!" to avoid debating the Israeli-Arab conflict with a student when she wants to teach.

When a British academics' union proposed boycotting Israeli universities, I opposed it not only because I believe Israel doesn't deserve another boycott (every Arab country already boycotts all Israeli goods) but because I believe that the ensuing duplication of scientific effort can only hurt humanity at large.

Maybe if the Arab nations would lift their boycotts, they could use Israeli technology to improve the lives of their people (though that would leave them with less for which to blame Israel). I know that Israeli technology companies and universities would absolutely adore larger markets for the products they pour such gargantuan efforts into developing.

I think something better can exist. Science does not care who discovers, and technology can bring peace to the world. When I read a request for programming help written in horrible English by a Pakistani man, it never occurs to me not to help him because his country doesn't like (both of) mine.

I see him as a fellow technologist who needs to make his machine work, and I have something very like an obligation to aid him with whatever knowledge I can give.

I treat posts from Egyptian and even Palestinian expatriate technologists the same way. Coders who care more about TCP/IP than about religious rulings have no reason to care from which nation other coders come, because, after all, a machine that doesn't boot in Tel Aviv poses just as interesting a problem to solve as the same machine still not booting in Ramallah.

Hopefully, even the Middle East can some day find peace in providing the world with its finest minds. I find it quite hard to believe anyone could ever want to bomb the place where they get their neatest gadgets.

Eli Gottlieb is a UMass student. He can be reached at egottlie@student.umass.edu.

Solving America's problems first

One quick question: why is Darfur called genocide, but Iraq is not? The answer to this question can be found in the culture of passivity and docility in the United States. Even if there is no explicit instruction given to the masses directing them towards inaction, in effect, this is precisely the message that the population gets from the media and from the education system as well.

Bruce Lerner

Everyone is taught that their voice is ineffective and that the only way they can affirm their self-worth is by consuming instead of creating. Naturally, this leads people to shy away from their responsibility as citizens of the most powerful state on the planet. Therefore, they tend to ignore the actions of their own country while screaming outrage at other countries' human rights violations, such as in Darfur.

Undoubtedly, any ill feelings about human rights abuses, no matter who commits them, are justified. Humans should not treat other humans in the manner that certain governments or groups do. There is, however, more to this simplistic understanding of the world, where any human rights abuse is viewed as fair game for criticizing.

The problem is that this mode of thinking does not acknowledge the nation-state as a viable player in politics, and focuses only on individual actions. Like it or not, and if not, understandably so, people in democracies such as the U.S. do bear responsibility for their country's actions.

That means that if the U.S. decides to go to war, and an illegal war at that, the average citizen is responsible for this without any possibility of evading the burden of such a decision.

It is quite unfortunate that numerous groups in the country do not realize the impracticality of trying to advocate for human rights while focusing on other countries' crimes and ignoring those for which they are directly capable of acting on. In other words, it is much easier to criticize others than it is to criticize oneself.

Undoubtedly, any ill feelings about human rights abuses, no matter who commits them, are justified.

Does that mean that people should forget about something like the Darfur crisis completely? No, there are tenuous connections to the U.S. and thus the topic should receive some minor acknowledgement. Past this, every decent person's efforts should be completely engaged in ending the latest in a winding string of human rights atrocities that the U.S. has committed, with no excuses.

The reasons for focusing on the human rights violations of the U.S. as opposed to those of other countries are twofold. One, if a person is committed to defending human rights, that person must choose the most effective actions to achieve that goal. Two, one has to make moral decisions by thinking about the consequences of one's speech and actions.

In certain cases, criticizing another country will give justification for one's own country to cause greater human rights violations, even if that was not the intended effect of the well-meaning criticizer.

Examples can be found for each of the above mentioned principles. For the first example, focusing on Darfur while the U.S. has killed more than one million Iraqis does not make logical sense, if one's goal is to minimize innocent people getting killed. This is because an American citizen has much more say in what his government does than in what the government of China does. This should be very obvious.

For the second principle, Iran will serve as a good example. One must understand that, at this point, criticizing Iran's human rights violations will not serve to better the Iranians who suffer under any brutal policies.

This is because any criticism of this nation will only be used to achieve the government's goals in that region, i.e., complete domination of the Middle East. Even though the criticism may be legitimate in itself, it is illegitimate to make the criticism knowing what the consequences will be.

In this case, with enough support from U.S. citizens voicing opposition to Iran's human rights violations, the U.S. will feel comfortable employing massive sanctions on the country, causing many innocent people to suffer. Or they will simply rain bombs on major cities. These are not the optimal scenarios, and therefore honest people must make choices about who they make charges against.

The U.S. is by the far the leader in global terrorism. It has the most resources and a greatly concentrated distribution of power which acts on the behalf of a tiny minority.

As Martin Luther King Jr. said, during the war in Indochina, the U.S. is "the greatest purveyor of violence in the world today." Regardless of the virtues which do exist in the country, the U.S. remains one of the most terrible, if not the most terrible, international terrorist groups that has ever existed, both in terms of foreign and domestic affairs.

This is simply garnered from the record of its interventions and quelling of uprisings from groups like American Indians. These realizations should not stifle people from acting, but should serve as ripe apples to be picked from the tree of knowledge.

With this knowledge, people can really start to put their efforts to preventing human rights abuses right from the comfort of their own country and know that they are doing the best that they possibly can. Deviating from logic and focusing on other people's problems is both ineffective and immoral, especially in the freest country that exists.

Bruce Lerner is an office administrator. He can be reached at blerner@student.umass.edu

Racism on both ends of Jena 6 controversy

Dear Editor,

A young white man does something obnoxious and offensive and self-appointed cadres of vigilantes take it upon themselves to pummel punishment into the perceived perpetrator. Arguably the young man got just about what he deserved, and heaven forbid that the authorities actually punish the perpetrators because they were justified in what they did.

Wrong. There are some things that are simply wrong and the fact that you might agree with the motives of the perpetrators doesn't make them any less wrong.

I said it two decades ago and I say it again: there is something inherently wrong and more than a little bit scary about mob justice. The very concept of having civil rights is that unpopular people need not fear the mob and that we do not live under the Atyranny of the majority.

Hanging a noose in a tree is truly obnoxious. As is burning the American flag, both of which are constitutionally protected acts of symbolic speech. Popular speech doesn't need protecting, it is the most vile and offensive of thoughts that we must protect if the concept of free speech is to exist. It is the price we pay for freedom and our lives in this free country.

You don't have to like Justin Barker and his buddies, you are free to call them every name in the book. But you do not have any right to try to kill them lest you want them to try to kill you in return. This is what true liberals speak of when they talk about the A middle ceasing to hold and the very real example of this was the German Weimar Republic where things got so bad that Adolph Hitler actually won a fair election in the 1930s.

Beating up Baker and then demanding impunity for those who did it is the sort of thing that the Klan used to do. It may offend a few to say this, but there is really no difference between the mobs who went into Durham demanding the punishment of the three white lacrosse players and the mobs that used to demand the punishment of equally innocent black men.

There is really no difference between the mobs demanding the release of the Jena Six and the mobs that used to demand the release of various members of the Klan who did things like kill little girls attending choir practice in Birmingham. Guilty men should go to jail and innocent men go free, this should be independent of race.

Anyone remember the case of the so-called A Scottsboro Boys and what happened there and then? Anyone remember the A Freedom Riders and what was done to them? Some things are inherently wrong. They were wrong then and are equally wrong now.

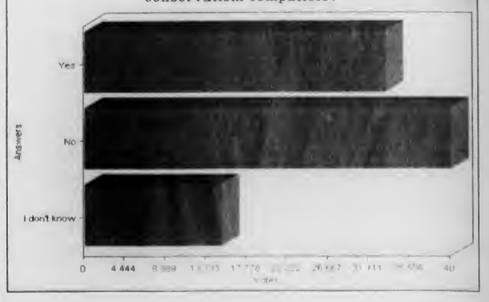
Six kids pounding on one, knocking him unconscious, and then repeatedly kicking him in the head. That is attempted murder; a reasonable person can conclude that this is the sort of thing likely to kill someone. And even if the hospital can save his life, it doesn't make it any less repulsive.

It is like the people who blow up abortion clinics. No matter how much you hate abortion, it is still wrong. And much like those who value life detest abortion, clinic bombers, it is the duty of those who value civility to detest violent racial bigots of all colors, including the Jena Six. They allegedly committed a hate crime, attacking another human being simply because of his race. That is inherently wrong and, if found guilty after a fair trial they should be punished.

I know an Orthodox Jewish lawyer who once got a cadre of Nazis' sit-in' jail. He did it not because he particularly liked them (for they be) but because it was the right thing to do. Because there are issues of right and wrong that supercede the fact that those wronged are of race people. The great experiment of western liberalism is inherently fragile and all it takes is for people to start believing that violence is an acceptable means to advocate political change for us to go down the way of the Weimar Republic.

And never forget that Mr. Lynch and his mobs were chasing Loyalists during the American Revolution and that the term A lynching arose out of a very different national tragedy.

Ed Cutting
UMass Graduate Student



For the record:

Yesterday the Collegian ran a staff editorial which included a factual error. Brian Marquis, the UMass student whose lawsuit against the University for its poor grading policy was struck down by the District Court, is not appealing to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the First Circuit. He may re-file his complaint to the University in January under a different legal theory, and plans to bring his contract claim against the University to the State Court.

DAILY COLLEGIAN READER POLL RESULTS

The recent speech by conservative activist Phyllis Schlafly has sparked dialogue about feminism.

Are feminism and conservatism compatible?

OCT 12 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 12, 2007 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Kushner candid at Fine Arts Center

Playwright discusses lifetime of fame, success in lecture

BY KERI LETOURNEAU
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Award-winning playwright Tony Kushner, 51, spoke candidly about his life as an artist and the power of the theater in a lecture held on Tuesday in the Fine Arts Center.

"Theater is a platform for discussion," he said. "It's an art form that's energized by worldification that resists becoming an object. That's why I love it so much."

More than 500 people packed into the Rand Theater for the presentation entitled, "A Conversation with Tony Kushner." Professor of Dramaturgy Paul Walsh moderated the event and did not spare Kushner the difficult questions.

Kushner grew up in Louisiana, a place where he said intolerance ran rampant, especially towards a Jewish gay man. "I have fairly clear memories of being gay since I was six," Kushner told Richard Stayton in the Los Angeles Times. "I knew that I felt slightly different than most of the boys I was growing up with. By the time I was eleven there was no doubt. But I was completely in the closet."

He continued to keep his sexuality a secret when he moved to New York in 1974 where he underwent psychotherapy in hopes of becoming a heterosexual. He finally came to terms with his sexual orientation as an undergraduate at Columbia University where he completed a Bachelor of Arts in English literature and studied directing at New York University where he graduated in 1984.

Kushner experimented with different kinds of plays before writing his Pulitzer Prize-winning, "Angels in America: A Gay Fantasia on National Themes," in 1993. A grueling seven-hour play in two separate parts; "Angels in America" explores what it was like to be gay and affected by AIDS in the 1980s. It also won two Tony awards.

In 2003 the play became a miniseries on HBO which included stars Meryl Streep and Al Pacino and won 11 Emmy awards, including one for Kushner's screenplay.

Kushner's desire to be a "popular entertainer" reflects his penchant for political activism. "Writing is really hard. It actually causes pain but I do it anyway," he said, "The act of creation is always an attempt to communicate with someone. I can't write plays without politics."

Kushner has learned to delve into different mediums to reach as many people as possible. HBO's "Angels in America" debuted with 4.2 million U.S. viewers. In the 10 years since it won him the Pulitzer, he has never had as big an audience and now "Angels" is available for a whole new generation.

"Television is a medium of talking heads similar to theater. I'm actually pretty comfortable with it," he said.

Kushner has also lent his talents to film, garnering an Academy Award nomination for his screenplay for Steven Spielberg's "Munich." His subsequent writings, including "Homebody/Kabul" about a British woman's disappearance in Afghanistan, and "Caroline, or Change," a semi-autobiographical musical set in Louisiana during the Civil Rights Movement, have continued to spark both controversy and acclaim.

Though his successes have been great, Kushner is still acutely aware of the world beyond Hollywood's golden gates, a world full of escalating violence and hatred that leaves no one unaffected.

"I'm scared to death these days," he said, "I'm trying to find reasons to be hopeful but all I feel is a sense of gravity – a sense of despair."

He does not believe celebrity has changed him much. Indeed, his ample modesty is unfounded but genuine. It seems as merely a side-effect in his steps toward social awareness and understanding.

"We learn because everything we do is slightly more difficult than we are able to do," he said, "Mastery of a difficult thing becomes its own reward."

Keri Letourneau can be reached at kletourn@student.umass.edu

Tony Kushner has been honored with many awards, including Tonys, Emmys, a Pulitzer, and an Oscar. He spoke at the Fine Arts Center on Tuesday about his life as an entertainer and an activist.

Cupcakes, comedy, and music

Northampton enjoys return of Jon Coulton

BY BRAD GIGUERE
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Last Thursday marked the return of Jonathan Coulton to the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton. Coulton, a folk rock singer-songwriter, seemed excited to play at the Music Hall for the second time, using its cozy, intimate atmosphere to play a fantastic performance and connect with his devoted, eager fans. Because Coulton was originally from Colchester, Conn., a number of fans in the audience were also family members and hometown friends, further amplifying the relaxed, fun nature of the concert.

Opening for Coulton was the musical comedy duo Paul and Storm kicking off the show with "Opening Band," a great song detailing the hardships of being an opening act, and the frustrations that come with not being the headliner. The song was firmly tongue-in-cheek as Paul and Storm and Jonathan Coulton have been friends and touring partners for years.

Immediately afterwards, they launched into "Your Town," a mockery of any band that claims that every town is their favorite to play in. Many of the duo's songs were less than a minute long, consisting of one-shot jokes that they played in rapid succession. These songs were musical impersonations like "If James Taylor Were on Fire" or "If Bob Dylan Were Hiding at the Bottom of a Well," and the extremely amusing fake radio jingles for Dominoes Pizza, Olive Garden, and Necco Wafers.

Paul and Storm acted more like a comedy routine than a band, playing their micro-songs like jokes and filling the space between with teasing and audience participation.

Fans were encouraged to try and win what Paul and Storm called "fabulous prizes," which were actually Hostess snack cakes. Fans would win by yelling out insults or clever retorts to the band's banter. The production resembled a midnight viewing of the Rocky Horror Picture Show, unsurprising after one fan admitted that the group she came with was indeed a Rocky Horror cast.

Paul and Storm finished their set with "The Captain's Wife's Lament," a sea shanty that invited the audience to scream like pirates during the verses. This turned the crowd into a hollering frenzy as Paul and Storm finished their set.

Jonathan Coulton took the stage immediately following Paul and Storm, starting with "The Future Soon," a ballad

See CUPCAKES on page 5

Jonathan Coulton with Paul and Storm provided desert during their show, tossing Hostess cupcakes to the fans for being witty. They entertained with a mix of originals and covers.

Disappointing debut for Kai Brown

BY STEVEN STAFFORD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The long tradition of Powerpop has given the music world such acts as Big Star, the La's, and the Marvelous 3. Though a trend that ebbs and flows, Powerpop just won't go away, and why should it? Everybody likes catchy melodies, harmonies and driving rhythms. The only problem is that it's been done so many times that it's hard to keep it fresh.

Aussie Kai Brown's voice is good enough on his debut album "Better Now," but not much more than that. At times he sounds like someone doing karaoke at a college bar, but at other times his songs sound like background music for Gilmore Girls episodes. So, when he is not mediocre, he is boringly good. At his best, his tone sounds like Noel Gallagher of Oasis fame.

His lyrics are bland and revisit a number of themes all too common in the history of pop music: just look at the track-listing. "Everyday," "Always," "Can't Live Without." Had the lyrics been clever, cute, or even funny, they would have saved the album from its hackneyed fatigue, but alas, they are simple and not exactly scholarly. In other words, "Better Now" sounds like an album that Ron Sexsmith would write if he had to do it in one day.

"Can't Live Without," for example seems to be just one part repeated over and over, as Brown keeps asking "What's it all about?" but never sings us back an answer. Thanks, Kai. As is often the case on this CD, it seems like Brown found one part that was kind of catchy and was so proud of himself that he decided to beat us over the head with it.

"Money and Love" will be a favorite for any country fan, containing a healthy dose of guitar whine, layers of string

See DEBUT on page 5

Kai Brown produces no original ideas on his debut album, "Better Now." His voice has potential, but as of now, not more than that.

Up-and-comer to play at Pearl Street

BY SKYE MCINTYRE
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Matt Nathanson is the kind of artist whose seemingly painstakingly-crafted lyrics bring the listener to a point where the heart is on the verge of breaking, and then in an instant, there is laughter at his transition from an overwhelming power ballad to a mocking rendition of Asia's "Heat of the Moment."

One of few musicians who can seamlessly intertwine his set list with a stand-up comedy act, Nathanson's skills will be on display Monday night at the Pearl Street Nightclub in Northampton.

The 34-year-old Massachusetts native is currently on tour promoting his latest album "Some Mad Hope," a 12-track dive released under Vanguard Records which takes the listener on an emotional journey through song. It touches on everything from recalling love lost on tracks "Bulletproof Weeks," and "Still," to espousing on the thrills of being young on "To the Beat of Our Noisy hearts."

Most, if not all, of Nathanson's lyrics can be interpreted as having to do with relationships, yet his tone and depth of description, combined with the changing tempo of each song is what makes each track unique and worth listening to.

As the discography states on his official Web site mattnathanson.com, "Some Mad Hope" is "a song cycle of sorts that chronicles the search for a genuine connection, touching on the sensually electric moments as well as the darker frustrations of sifting through the wreckage in hopes of finding redemption at the end of the day."

His music would not yet be considered mainstream. Spins of his current and first single "Car Crash" off of "Some Mad Hope" have been on the rise, however, likely thanks to a recently completed whirlwind media tour which brought him to radio stations across the country for interviews and intimate acoustic performances, showcasing the new material.

If you haven't yet had the infectious melody or catchy chorus of "Car Crash" streaming through your head, you may recognize his cover of "Laid" from the closing credits of the movie "American Pie," or his song "I Saw" from 2003's "Beneath These Fireworks," which was featured on the television show "Scrubs."

After attending Pitzer College in Claremont, Calif., in the early 90s, Lexington-born Nathanson settled in San Francisco, then went on to release seven albums between 1993 this past August.

That stretch included one live album, "At the Point," and was recorded at a show in Pittsburgh and released in the spring of 2006. This all happened while Nathanson criss-crossed the U.S. playing countless shows and rapidly build-

See NATIVE on page 5

Matt Nathanson, whose music has been in movies, on TV, and recently on the radio, will play at Pearl Street on Monday night.

Coulton mixes things up at the Iron Horse

Comedy was prevalent at Jonathan Coulton's show last Thursday, but it was broken up by more serious, meaninful songs. The audience enjoyed it all, and the performers played off the crowd through the night.

CUPCAKES from page 4

about a broken-hearted teenager imagining the future in which he commands a powerful robotic army. The song was a perfect representation of the bizarre and amusing style that Coulton uses in his songs. He writes music that is simultaneously smart, satirical, and funny, but does without forcing a laugh.

He followed with "Shop Vac," a song about the nightmare of suburbia, and "Skullcrusher Mountain," a fan favorite about a super villain's attempt to woo a woman he's kidnapped. He encouraged the crowd to sing the last chorus of "Skullcrusher Mountain," and afterwards admitted that he started that trend the last time he was in Northampton because he was originally too sick to finish the song.

Halfway through his set, Coulton invited Paul and Storm back up to the stage to help perform some of his songs. They provided back-up vocals for "Code Monkey" and "Baby Got Back," a folksy version of Sir Mix-a-Lot's hit song that was also the first single that brought Jonathan Coulton substantial fame on the internet.

The three continued to reward the vocal crowd members with more snack cakes before continuing with "Creepy Doll" and "I Feel Fantastic," a song he wrote for Popular Science magazine.

Coulton continued by himself for few more songs before finishing with "Re Your Brains," a great song that makes the audience sing along like a mob of zombies.

Afterwards, Paul and Storm joined Coulton on stage for a small encore, playing "First of May" and a cover of "Sweet Caroline," receiving huge applause and laughter from the crowd.

Both bands played extremely well, performing the fan's favorites and even taking requests from the audience. Paul and Storm's playful back and forth with the crowd was always entertaining and it gave the concert a fun atmosphere. Coulton expertly mixed the funny with the serious by alternating the humorous songs he is more known for with work that has dark, more realistic themes.

The only disappointment of the night was how brief the concert was; another band was scheduled later that night, forcing Coulton to shorten his set and limit his encore performance. He later discussed on his Web site his regrets for the short show, writing, "[It's] hard to cram in so much rocking into so small a window of time." Hopefully next time Coulton will have more time to perform for his fans, serenading them with songs about robots and giant squid.

Brad Giguere can be reached at brg@student.umass.edu

Debut CD offers no innovation

DEBUT from page 4

textures and a surprising key change in the bridge. But even this is cliché nowadays, bringing to mind Fountains of Wayne if they weren't as awesome as they are.

"Everyday" sounds like a song that you would hear in Southwest, played by a shirtless undergrad that really likes Dave Matthews and just learned his first few guitar chords.

Brown throws away a chance to write something meaningful on "Believe Again," but instead churns out a lukewarm repetitive track like the rest of the CD. In perhaps another failed attempt to be deep and introspective, Brown moans "I just want to love, I don't want to hate" on the repetitive "See Through Me." Despite the song's better production, it does not stand out because it is, like everything else here, just poorly written.

Brown even has the gall to sing a song called "Always." At this point in history, that should just be illegal. It's understood to be in poor taste, but it seems that no one, not even his producer let Brown know this.

So is it just bad production? Maybe. And for this reason, don't give up on Kai Brown yet. As the music industry has learned the hard way, great artists rarely do their best work the first time. If Brown is given enough time and the right collaborators, he might make some great music, despite his weak debut.

KAI BROWN

BETTER NOW

HOW NOW BROWN COW RECORDS

2/5

"Better Now" is formulaic Powerpop, too derivative to be worth one's while. All it does is remind the listener to put on their Rentals' CDs after. Having a bad voice is not always fatal in the music industry (see 50 Cent, Bob Dylan, Kanye West, John Lennon) but being boring can be.

This is an example of music that most American listeners over the age of 14 will not forgive. In short, he sounds like a friend of a friend who everyone says "is totally gonna get signed!" Except, this guy actually did.

If you're going to do the good-looking-white-guy-with-an-acoustic-guitar-and-rough-voice thing, you need to be unique. You simply cannot afford to play around with the same old boring chords and lyrics.

There is a finite amount of high school girls willing to spend their allowance on that kind of music, so you need to stand out. In the music industry, it is never enough to simply be good.

Your only fighting chance is being uniquely good, or so good that you're above reproach. Kai Brown has not achieved either one in his short career, but if he did, he could be gigantically popular in the United States and abroad.

Steven Stafford can be reached at sstaffor@student.umass.edu

Kai Brown's already-been-heard style hurts his debut album. With contrived lyrics and melodies found throughout the CD's 10 tracks, Brown needs more than a good voice to make a career in the music industry.

Mass. native to showcase talent

NATIVE from page 4

ing a dedicated fan-base.

"At the Point" includes four tracks of dialogue alone, much of which is comprised of witty banter with audience members and anecdotal stories which Nathanson uses to connect and build a level of comfort with his crowd. Leaving one of his performances is much like walking away from a conversation with a best friend – you feel better for just having been there.

Nathanson's style has been described as folk, rock, and pop, yet unlike similar artists, he sets himself apart because of his complete transparency. Simply put, he almost tricks you in the way he comes off as a goofy older brother, but then you remember what an incredibly talented musician he is. A large part of his appeal is that he doesn't take himself seriously, and that he manages to be humble, yet remarkably outgoing.

Though armed with only his voice and a 12-string guitar (as the majority of his shows are solo and acoustic), he has an uncanny ability to get you lost in his lyrics, such is the case with "Sooner Surrender," where he croons, "I made a mess of things, the stops and in betweens they weigh me down, you got someone new singing you your songs now." Again listeners are lost in "All We Are," in which the last verse reads "and in the end the words don't matter cause in the end, nothing stays the same and in the end, the dreams just scatter and fall like rain."

The Web site Alternative Addiction called "Some Mad Hope," "his most solid release yet," going on to say "he takes risks, pushes himself to places he's never been before ... but he doesn't forget his strengths."

AbsolutePunk.net said "he's a diamond in the rough ready to hit it big." Nathanson will showcase his "solid release" in Northampton next week.

Visit his Myspace page (myspace.com/mattnathanson) and check out videos of his live performances with a quick YouTube search to get an idea of his sound. Better yet, catch him in person this Monday at the eclectic Pearl Street Nightclub at 7 p.m.

Usually playing acoustically, Matt Nathanson combines stand-up with strong music and lyrics.

Is Music kinda your thing? Why not write about it! Arts@DailyCollegian.com

555 deal
Three Medium One-Topping Pizzas
$5.55 Each!
Domino's Pizza
413 - 256 - 8911
OPEN LATE NIGHT TILL 4 AM!

UPGRADE YOUR GEAR APPAREL & OUTERWEAR
eastern mountain sports
UPGRADE YOUR GEAR
UP TO 20% OFF
Everything in the store*
SALE October 18-21
Eastern Mountain Sports will donate % of the proceeds of ... to The Conservation Alliance and the Access Fund. For more information about these organizations please visit www.conservationalliance.com and www.accessfund.org
The Conservation Alliance
ACCESS FUND
EASTERN MOUNTAIN SPORTS

OCT 12 2007

Inexperienced runners ready for Albany

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts cross country teams will compete tomorrow in the Albany Invitational. This will be the final meet before the Maroon and White gear up to compete in the Atlantic 10 Conference Championship in Philadelphia, Pa.

Both teams will use this meet to rest their top runners and get their younger runners more experience. This will be a very spectator-friendly course, as the athletes will be running around the various playing fields on the Albany campus. The course itself is not the most difficult that the athletes have faced this season, so the injury risk is lower.

UMass men's coach Ken O'Brien plans to rest the runners that typically finish in the top five of races.

"This meet gives us a chance to build up the necessary level of experience for many of our backup runners who we do count on for the remainder of this season," O'Brien said. "This is an opportunity where you try to give experience to some of the kids who have been occupying roles as providing depth for the team."

This meet will include some of the best men's teams in the Northeast, including Albany, Connecticut, New Hampshire and Northeastern.

Men's A-10 Rookie of the Week Kris Carle believes that the younger members of the team are more than ready to prove their worth.

"We have plenty of guys that are willing to step up," Carle said. "We have a pretty deep team and we're happy about that."

Excluding athletes who are out for the season, the Minutewomen will have the entire team available for the Invitational, something that the team has rarely been able to have this season.

The only two returning athletes from last year's top-five finishers at the Invitational are senior co-captains Christina DeRosa and Amber Sayer. One athlete was lost to graduation and the other two are pursuing other interests.

UMass women's coach Julie LaFreniere believes the athletes that have suffered injuries will use this race to regain their bearings and get ready just in time for the conference championship.

"I think this week will be important for us," LaFreniere said. "It will give me an opportunity to see how every one responds to a fresh race after either being ill or out [due to injury]."

To prepare for the meet, the team is concentrating on running distance at a harder pace in order to develop an overall faster speed. Due to frequent losses on the team, this week has been the team's first workout of increased difficulty in some time.

A concern with the women's team has been their ability to get the rest of the athletes to keep up with the front-runners on the team. Another concern is the increased pace of the workouts. But with the new overall health of the team should help the Minutewomen in improving in those areas.

Women's A-10 Rookie of the Week Lauren Stocker believes that the Minutewomen will have to rebound from their 26th place finish at the New England Championship last weekend.

"I think we definitely have something to prove," Stocker said. "Because we were missing three out of our top five last week, people might think that we're kind of a weak team but we definitely aren't. Once we have a healthy top five and even six and seven, we'll definitely do better in the next meet."

The women's race starts at 11:15 a.m. and the men begin at 12:15 Saturday.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

Hawks, Owls next for Minutewomen force this season. She's the leading scorer in the A-10, ranking first in goals (11), goals per game (0.67), points (28), points per game (1.80), shots (85) and game winning goals (4).

FIELD HOCKEY from page 8

Lokey registered a hat trick against Saint Louis in her last game and was named the A-10 Co-Player of the Week.

The Minutewomen have scored in bunches, as well. Cher King, the captain of the offense, is back at full strength and has led the offense to six goals in two games.

Lauren Gillespie has played well recently, scoring three goals over the last four games after being shut out in the previous nine games. Her presence off the bench has been a solid asset to the team.

The Maroon and White hope its newfound offensive resurgence can continue this weekend, because coming home with a 4-0 record in the conference would be a huge boost to the team's chances to make the A-10 tournament.

One major issue the Minutewomen must overcome is their poor play on the road. The Minutewomen have a 5-1 record when the play in the comfort of Garber Field, but are 2-5 on the road this year. The team must find a way to solve its road woes in order to achieve the team's stated goal of making the A-10 tournament finals.

The Hawks (6-6, 1-1 A-10) have scored 17 goals this season and are likely to have a tough time putting points up against the Minutewomen, because they lack a dominant goal-scorer.

Last season the Minutewomen lost to both teams at home, but this year they will have a chance to get their revenge on the road. If they can go 2-0 this weekend, the team will almost assuredly make the A-10 tournament.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

UM loses Stoll, game

W. SOCCER from page 8

10 minutes before the half. Senior forward Deb Nelson kicked the ball up over two UMass defenders and too high for the 5-foot, 10-inch senior goalkeeper Kristin Walker to make the save.

Earlier in the half another injury hit the Minutewomen when Meghan Gould collided heads with a Rhode Island defender. She got up on her own and played through the first half. The training staff evaluated her at halftime and she did not return to the game, suffering a concussion. Rudy said with a week off before the next game, they hope she will be ready to practice on Monday.

Down 1-0, the Minutewomen did all their scoring right before halftime. When Stoll went down, sophomore forward Christina Adams replaced her.

Adams picked up the team by scoring her second goal of the season. She received a pass in the box and took the shot, but the defender blocked her attempt. The ball went right back to Adams, and this time she put a little air under it as she hit the ball over the keeper's head.

"We missed [Stoll], but I thought Adams did a nice job in reserve," Rudy said.

Junior forward Vanessa Patry scored the go-ahead goal with 21 seconds left in the first. Patry went around her defender in the box and hit it past the goalkeeper on the right side.

Without starters Stoll and Gould, UMass struggled to keep up with the top team in the A-10. To start the second half, freshman Therese Smith took a shot for the right flank, but Fede made a tremendous save by tipping the ball over the net. It was one of the better chances the Minutewomen had at increasing the lead.

At 71:23, Rhode Island tied the game at 2-2 with a goal from junior midfielder Dora Larusdottir. She came down the left flank and kicked it straight in past Walker for her seventh goal of the season.

The best chance UMass had was late in the game with 3:48 left, when Ashley Hamel tried to break the tie, just missing the net wide to the right.

Jenny Roehrig and the Minutewomen fell to Rhode Island, 3-2, yesterday at Rudd Field after losing two players to injury.

"Eventually they locked us down, they got a grasp on us," Rudy said about the Rams defense. "I was really hoping we could kick one loose and get going."

Rhode Island set up for a corner kick 2:24 into overtime. The ball knocked off a couple players before sophomore defenseman Amanda Thomas scored the game-winner. This is the Minutewomen's third loss in their last four games.

"Now we're a little soft on the attack," Rudy said. "We have to get look at it again and take two days of rest and look at it again. [We'll] re-tread it and hopefully build something that works for us."

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu.

Corner kicks continue to be a problem

CORNERS from page 8

collarbone early in the game and is out for the year. Gould collided heads with a URI player while jumping to make a header and suffered a concussion. She will likely be out a couple of days.

Rudy said the injuries are hindering progress on defending corner kicks because he can't figure out who his "primary jumpers," are or the players who lurk close to the goal on corners and try to use their height to out-jump opponents.

Nunes, Rodriguez and Gould were the Minutewomen's primary jumpers, but their injuries have forced the roles to swap. Rudy said it seems like every time someone gets hurt and a teammate replaces her, the replacement gets hurt.

"You can control your training; you can control your systems of play and all that. But you can't control your injuries," he said. "We haven't been able to get the same set in there all the time.

"That's been the big issue. We've had to change that so many times," he continued. "We just can't get that continuity."

It is especially frustrating for the players, who yesterday saw a 2-1 lead become an overtime loss in the blink of an eye.

"I think we're going to have to do something [about corner kicks]. Now that we have a lot of time [the next game is Oct. 19,] it's going to be able to get us settled," said Walker, who mentioned that the team will likely go man-to-man on corners now.

She said going man-to-man would help the team a lot because the Minutewomen will be able to stick to defending one opponent only and not have the assignment change with the positioning of opposing players, like it does under their zone defense.

Rudy said he will give his team two days off to rest their bodies before grinding them down with very physical practices. Though defending corners won't be the main focus of practice this week, he did say UMass will spend time working hard on the part of the game that has proven such a quagmire.

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu.

Minutemen begin Atlantic 10 action

M. SOCCER from page 1

But Koch likes the way his team matches up with the Flyers, especially in the midfield.

"Offensively, they're very effective and quick," he said. "Where I think they struggle sometimes is in the transition from offense to defense – and that's what we can take advantage of. They're getting the results, so I feel we're going to have to play our best to beat them."

Last season the Minutemen outlasted Dayton in Ohio, scoring the game's only goal in overtime. But last year's squad, laden with upperclassmen, is now younger but not necessarily less experienced.

"Teams can be young in age and old in experience," Koch said. "But the fact that this is their first conference game on the road will make it more difficult for them."

Contrary to Dayton's results, Xavier struggled to maintain consistent play on offense through their non-conference schedule. The team scored an average of three goals in its four victories and two goals in the six losses.

"Scoring the first goal in this game is going to be crucial – you don't want to be behind," Koch said. "If we can get a goal on them and have them chase the game, then it's a good situation for us. The key here will be to make sure that we defend well as a unit and don't let them get the first goal."

The Musketeers scored first against UMass in 2006 and rode their two first-period goals and the strong play of goalkeeper Adam Sokolowski to a shutout victory. Sokolowski, now a junior, has struggled in net this season – allowing 12 goals in eight starts, after seeing action in two games last year.

Xavier also leads the conference in shots per game. Though the stat is highly susceptible to human bias (the scorer, usually a home official, determines what qualifies as a shot), it reveals that a team has many scoring chances.

But it doesn't reveal the quality of each opportunity, as in Xavier's case. The team takes nearly 16 shots per game, but is averaging 1.5 goals. The large disparity between shots and goals also suggests that the Musketeers are not taking advantage of their opportunities.

Koch projects his starting lineup and rotation to be the same as the past few games.

"Stuart Amick has done a good job filling in on his slot and then Arikian's done a good job in the middle," Koch said. "We're playing well with that group and you don't want to try to fix something that's not broken. Tony [Bassett] did a great job coming off the bench and helping the team against Hartford. He has a little different role right now."

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu.

Offense peaking at right time for UMass

MELONI from page 8

are 3-0, they've outscored their opponents, 4-0, and Simmons has returned to the form that earned him the school record for shutouts in a season.

The Minutemen didn't see any positives following the loss to the Crimson, but it's hard to believe that Amick's goal didn't create a confidence they simply did not have before that.

In that game, missed offensive chances resulted in players yelling at each other and a palpable sense of disappointment. The most glaring being a miss by Mark DeSantis who basically became a nonfactor after failing to convert.

You can only be reassured of your ability to score so many times after failure before you start to doubt yourself. The only thing that can end a scoreless drought is goals.

"We know we can score. We've been having some problems lately," sophomore Bryan Hogan said on Sept. 22. "We get opportunities

I think we had 17 shots today. We're going to get the chances; it's just a matter of putting them away."

But again, that one goal is oftentimes the product of nothing more than a chance bounce in the right direction.

And the Minutemen can thank Mark DeSantis for that bounce. A taller Northeastern defender appeared ready to easily head the ball back into the midfield, but DeSantis timed his leap and nodded the ball into an open left flank. A perfectly executed cross, from Ben Arikian, and header, from Bryan Hogan, later and the Minutemen had a 1-0 lead.

They haven't trailed since, winning 1-0 games over Boston University and a talented Hartford team.

Now with conference play approaching and Dayton (Friday) and Xavier (Sunday) flying in for weekend dates at Rudd Field, the Minutemen must keep it going. Bassett is back in the lineup and Amick's emergence gives the Minutemen a huge offensive threat. Who starts will probably depend on the opponent.

"[Bassett] came off the bench and Stu Amick has done a great job of filling in on his slot," Koch said. "Other players have done a good job of filling in. We're playing well with that group and you don't want to fix something that's not broken."

The three non-conference wins certainly got the Minutemen headed where they need to be. Their players are all healthy and at their best. They have no excuses and with two home games to kickoff conference play, they are where they want to be.

There's really no reason for them not to get where they want to go.

Joe Meloni is a Collegian Editor. He can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu.

19 PLUS EVERY SATURDAY
SKYPLEX
3 Clubs Going Completely Wild!!!
19 Plus: $15.00 21 Plus: $5.00 | Present this ad to the cashier and receive $5.00 off before 11:00 pm
GAME ON!
WATCH THE REDSOX PLAYOFF GAMES ON GIGANTIC WIDE SCREENS TV'S WHILE YOU PARTY AT THE SKYPLEX!!
Friday October 19, 7pm
Saturday October 13, 8pm
Thursday October 18, 8pm
Saturday October 20, TBD
SkyPlex 10 Stearns Square Springfield, MA (413) 827-9000 www.SkyPlex.us

SPECIAL SECOND FRIDAY OCTOBER 12 4-8PM FREE!
William Kentridge Prints
Poetic Science
Bookworks by Daniel E. Kelm
September 28, 2007 through January 6, 2008
October 12, 2007 through February 10, 2008
SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART
WWW.SMITH.EDU/ARTMUSEUM

amherst cinema
FRI 10/12-THU 10/18
SNEAK PREVIEW! INTO THE WILD Sun. Oct. 14 - 2:00
Tickets available FREE at the BOX OFFICE
The King Of Kong: A Fistful of Quarters
F, SA, M-TH: 3:00 7:30 9:15
SU: 7:30 9:15
OPENS FRI 10/12
Baby-friendly show! 10/16 3:00
THE DEVIL CAME ON HORSEBACK OPENS FRI 10/12
2:45 4:45 7:15 "...demands to be seen..." NY Times
IN THE VALLEY OF ELAH
2:00 4:30 7:00
2 DAYS IN PARIS 5:15 9:00
DEATH AT A FUNERAL 9:30
28 AMITY ST. DOWNTOWN AMHERST
413-253-2847
www.AmherstCinema.org

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

1	6					9	2
		5	6	4	3	8
8								3
		8	7		6	9
		9	4		8	7
5								9
		2	3	9	1	6
9	4						2	7

ACROSS
1 Not as risky
6 Hearty drink
11 Hold the title to 14 ___ Boothe Luce
15 Lower than
16 King of chart
17 Fighting battles
18 Expansion
20 Title conferred by a pope
22 Musical works
23 Mild expletive
24 Cultural values
26 Cold War missile
29 Mata maker
31 Apollo's mother
34 Beta Kappa
35 Rescuer
36 Synchronized
38 Home of the Buccaneers
40 Kibbutz
42 Chicago hub
43 Narcotic
45 Manufacturer
47 A-Team member
48 "Little" Dickens girl
49 Scenic view
51 Florida islands
52 ET for one
54 Fork prong
56 Seraglio
58 Having many uses
63 Unenigmal
65 Abandoned oar
66 Up to now
67 Little biters
68 Separate from others
69 Indefinite amount
70 Soothsayers
71 Shares for awhile

DOWN
1 Corn game
2 Type of saxophone
3 Bathtub for one
4 One end of a pencil
5 Fix up to sell again
6 Predicament
7 Biblical preposition
8 Loved deeply
9 Marshy land
10 Nile
11 Ali Baba's magic command
12 Political faction
13 New Jersey cagers
19 Dough
21 Ready for action
25 Barroom sip-got
26 "The Jungle" author Sinclair
27 Silhouette
28 Resemblance
30 Goes fast
32 Robe cloth
35 Stovepipe or topper
37 Weeding tool
39 Straw bed
41 Four-poster pad
44 "All About ___"
46 Speaker's platform
50 Ask over
51 Water boiler
53 Muslim priests
55 Adenoidal
56 Howdy!
57 End of grace
59 Always
60 Branding rod
61 Find a pitch
62 Peeper's
64 Dead heat

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"I went to a funeral recently, and they handed out Kleenex before the funeral. Which I thought was cocky."

-Mike Birbiglia

ECOLOGY By Jen Fill

LAST DITCH EFFORT By John Kroes

THE NEURON AND THE ASTROCYTE By Tyren Barker

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Sour Patch Kids are so good that kids don't mind eating mini-versions of themselves.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Bruce Springsteen uses the exact same drum beat in every song. Ya, I said it.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Slick your hair back and pucker your lips repeatedly. Now you are a slippery fish.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Reformat your communication hard drive by becoming a mime.

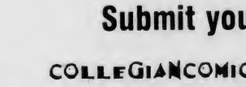
gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Claude Monet may have painted pretty pictures, but you are a pretty picture.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Add flare to your weekend wardrobe by wearing a Roman army helmet at all times.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
On a body as beautiful as yours, a tattoo would be a tragic act of vandalism.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
If cows could speak we'd probably find out that they are very angry with their lives.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Amuse people with where you have been, impress them with where you are going.



scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Not only is Tony Danza not the boss, he hasn't been employed in 12 years.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
For a good time call 911 and have a rave amidst all the vivacious lighting.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
This paper will self-destruct in 6 seconds. Drop it, start screaming, and run very fast.

Comics make dolphins happy...
don't you care about dolphins?
Submit your comics!
collegiancomics@yahoo.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

Which is Webdings for

Submit your comics

COLLEGIANCOMICS@YAHOO.COM

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ACTIVITIES

Montreal weekend from $99.00. Complete, motel, transportation and more. Montreal express.net 781-979-9001. Lowest Prices on campus.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Free! Ride to Church & back in Dwight Chapel Van. Be at Haigis Mall @ 10:00am or Converse Hall @ 10:20am Sundays. www.dwightchapel.org See you there!

APT. FOR RENT

Granby Apt. 4 rooms. $750.00 a month. Heat/hotwtr included. Call Allen at Eaglecrest. 413-256-3442

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext. 162

Waitstaff/cooks experienced. Fully part-time. Must be able to do 2 week day lunches. Apply Judies Amherst.

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes start soon. 1-800-U-CAN-MIX. www.universitybartending.com. Sign up now.

SALONS AND SPAS

HOLISTIC SALON AND SPA. Natural smooth body sugaring (wax). www.shearblissamherst.com 413-253-2322

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906,1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org

Concerned About Your Eating? Do you eat too little? Eat too much? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic. 577-5101.

SERVICES

TAPESTRY HEALTH. providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling & rapid testing. STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St., Amherst www.tapestryhealth.org

TRAVEL

*#1 Spring Break Website! 4 & 7 night trips. Low prices guaranteed. Group discounts for 8+. Book 20 people, get 3 free trips! Campus reps needed www.StudentCity.com or 800-293-1445

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2008 Sell Trips, Earn Cash & Go Free. Call for group discounts. Best Deals Guaranteed! Info/Reservations. 800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

Spring Break '08 The New Math: 10+1=10. Book TEN of your friends on our SB '08 packages, the 11th is FREE. Contact STA TRAVEL: Campus Center, Room 224 (413) 256-1261 AMH@statravel.com www.freespringbreak08.com

OCT 15 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 12, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass down, two out

Sophomore forward and team-leading goal scorer Sydney Stoll walks off Rudd Field after breaking her collarbone in the first half of yesterday's 3–2 loss to Rhode Island; she will miss the remainder of the season. Fellow sophomore Meghan Gould also left the game in the first half after colliding with an opposing player and sustaining a concussion.

Minutewomen lose overtime game, Stoll, Gould against URI

BY STEVE GAMES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It seems easier for the Massachusetts women's soccer team to score goals than it is keeping players on the field.

Rhode Island (8-3-2, 3-1 Atlantic 10) beat the Minutewomen, 3-2, in overtime on a cold and dark afternoon at Rudd Field. The Minutewomen (7-3-1, 2-3 A-10) received more bad news when they found out that sophomore Sydney Stoll, who left the game with an injury, will miss the rest of the season with a broken collarbone.

Stoll had a breakaway opportunity at the goal 20 minutes into the first half. As she sprinted ahead for the shot, URI goalkeeper Jackie Tede slid under her feet and forced her to go airborne. Stoll flew a couple feet in a diving motion, landing on her right shoulder and forcing her out of the game. She returned to the sideline wearing a sling with an ice pack wrapped on her shoulder.

UMass	2
URI	3

With Stoll's season over, the Minutewomen have lost one of their top goal-scorers. Stoll was tied with senior Britt Canfield for the team-lead with six goals.

"I keep telling my kids you are who you put on the field and you can't make too many excuses," UMass coach Jim Rudy said. "It would have been nice to have everyone [because] they didn't have an answer for Sid, she was tearing them up."

Rhode Island went on the scoreboard first when the Rams got the ball deep into the UMass territory.

See W. SOCCER on page 6

Corner kick proves costly

BY DOMENIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

UMass coach Jim Rudy has been saying it all season.

The biggest weakness of the Massachusetts women's soccer team is defending against corner kicks. The Minutewomen got a cruel example of that yesterday as Rhode Island handed them a 3-2 off an overtime corner kick yesterday, at Rudd Field.

Less than three minutes into overtime, URI's Amanda Thomas lined up on the right side to take a corner. The ensuing kick sailed toward the UMass net. Players from both teams leaped into the air, desperate for the ball. It went straight to Rams forward Dora Lamadeitre, who tapped it past goalkeeper Kristin Walker for the Minutewomen's third loss of the season.

"I'll have to take a look at that one [on video]. That one was different than all of them [in the past]," Rudy said. "We were doing a little shifting around, trying to get people into places that make sense, but when you play against a team that's good in the air like that it's hard."

He said a large part of the corner kick problem has been injuries.

Senior Christina Nunes and Tina Rodriguez have likely played their final collegiate games after knee injuries sidelined them for the season. Nunes badly hurt her MCL in a game several weeks ago and re-aggravated the injury against Duquesne Sept. 30, while Rodriguez has not seen action since tearing her ACL halfway through the 2006 season. And this list is growing.

Yesterday two Minutewomen – sophomores Sydney Stoll and Meghan Gould – came out with injuries. Stoll, who tapped it past goalkeeper Kristin Walker for the Minutewomen's third loss of the season, went down with a broken

See CORNERS on page 6

A-10 schedule in full swing

UM hits road for two conference matchups

BY SCOTT FELDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Atlantic 10 schedule rolls into high gear as the Massachusetts field hockey team travels to Philadelphia, Pa., to face off against Temple today and St. Joseph's on Sunday.

The Minutewomen (7-6, 2-0 A-10) are starting strong this season in conference play. Last weekend they defeated West Chester, 4-0, and La Salle, 2-0, to jump out to a perfect start in the conference. UMass coach Justine Sowry's first year has already improved from last season, when the Minutewomen managed three conference wins all season en route to a 6-14 overall record.

The Minutewomen performed well in all facets of the game against their previous two opponents. Senior goaltender Becky Letourneau and freshman back Jamie Bourazeris had outstanding performances. Letourneau notched back-to-back shutouts and Bourazeris scored a goal in each game while playing great defense. Bourazeris was named the A-10 Rookie of the Week for her efforts.

UMass hopes its shutout streak will continue against Temple. The Owls (10-5, 1-1 A-10) are likely to present a serious challenge to the Minutewomen's shutout streak.

The Minutewomen will count on their talented defensive backfield to shut down the Owl attack. Seniors Erin O'Brien, Kristina DeRosario and Bourazeris form one of the best backfields in the A-10. They have held opposing squads to an average of 1.14 goals per game, and registered five shutouts this season.

They will have to be at their best today, as Temple forward Alli Lokey has been a dominant offensive

See FIELD HOCKEY on page 6

Junior forward Kaelyn Orlando and the Minutewomen travel to Philadelphia this weekend for a pair of Atlantic 10 matchups. They are 2-0 this season in the conference.

'O' hits stride at right time

Joe Meloni

One isn't much more than zero.

A one-goal win rarely seems decisive at all and even the series of events leading to the opportunity can be nothing more than a lucky break – a ball bouncing awkwardly to an open player or a mishandled lob into the box can create the type of chance that changes the game.

Massachusetts men's soccer coach Sam Koch and his team learned that last season.

For three weeks in 2006, everything went right. Freshmen positioned themselves like experienced seniors, weakly hit shots sailed past goalkeepers and Zack Simmons was essentially unbeatable in net.

Consecutive losses to Vermont and New Hampshire changed all that and as Atlantic 10 play began, the Minutemen were at their worst. With a 3-0 loss to La Salle, two days after a 3-0 loss to George Washington, came the nadir of what began as such a promising season.

The hangover continued in 2007, a 1-0 loss to Maine kicked the season off and a series of tough losses followed. Inevitably, frustration set in and appeared to climax when a Doug Rappaport free kick sailed over the goal at the end of 2-1 loss at Harvard on Sept. 16, just days after a 1-0 loss to a poor Siena team.

"We had the ball on [Siena's] end for the whole half," junior Prince Ifeosu said. "They get once chance and they score. We had all of these chances and we just can't finish. I don't know what else we can do."

Things needed to change. Injuries became a problem around this time. Senior defender Trevor Singer missed time with an undisclosed injury and junior midfielder Tom Bassett suffered a knee injury in a 2-1 loss at Siena. The loss of Bassett certainly wasn't something Koch welcomed.

But the Bassett injury forced Koch to tamper with his lineup. Sophomore Mark DeSantis moved back into the midfield, creating an opening on the left side of the UMass front line.

Enter Stuart Amick.

His goal in the 80th minute against Harvard transformed a previously out of sorts UMass offense into a frenzied attack. The bench erupted as Amick slid the ball past Harvard's Adam Hahn. Rappaport's free kick miss sank the bench, but Amick's goal changed everything.

Since then, the Minutemen

See MELONI on page 6

FIVE IN A ROW FOR THE MEN'S SOCCER TEAM | PAGE 10

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

PARTLY CLOUDY : HI: 60 LO: 40 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM MONDAY, OCTOBER 15, 2007

Former student attacks suitemates

Sean Savena, a resident of McNamara residence hall on campus, was assaulted Friday by his suitemate with an aluminum baseball bat.

BY WILL MCGUINNESS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A former University of Massachusetts student, Murtaza "Mokie" Hanan Qutab, has been charged with assault with attempt to murder, armed home invasion, two accounts of assault and battery and larceny, and is expected to be arraigned in Eastern Hampshire District Court this morning.

Reports conclude that Qutab, 20, of Holden, MA, formerly a resident of the sixth floor of McNamara residence hall in Sylvan, broke into a suite and assaulted two former suitemates. Wearing a mask, gloves and a large jacket, Qutab struck Sean Savena in the face with an aluminum bat three times. Suitemate James Barabe attempted to separate the two. During the physical altercation that followed, Barabe sustained a cut to his right arm that was described by Barabe as being 1 ½ inches long and ¼ of an inch deep.

"While we were fighting, I told Sean to run. He made it down the stairs and tried to crawl into the cluster office." It was there where Savena received aid from an EMT on scene.

According to Barabe, Qutab took Barabe's phone because he believed he would use it to call the police. "I said that I wouldn't and threw the phone to him. He pretty much let me go after that," Barabe said.

"He was a quiet kid," Barabe said of Qutab, who lived in a single room that was part of his suite. "He generally kept to himself, was interested in DJing, and even gave lessons. He was a generally cool kid."

Days later, Barabe still cannot fathom why Qutab attacked the two. Qutab was also described as an "unstable character" who was uninterested in his studies and frequently mentioned dropping out of UMass in the weeks before his withdrawing from the school.

Savena was transported by an Amherst Fire Department ambulance to Bay State Hospital in Springfield, Mass. Barabe was transported in the same way to Cooley Dickenson Hospital in Northampton, where he was treated and released.

Witness P.J. Stanley, a Collegian photographer, added, "What was surprising to me was the assault happened on the sixth floor. From the amount of blood on the lobby floor, it looked like [the assault] happened there." He added that Qutab seemed like an unstable person who was disinterested in his studies and that Qutab frequently mentioned dropping out prior to his withdrawal from the University.

According to UMass Director of News and Information Ed Blaguszewski, Belchertown police stopped the car of a fleeing Qutab on route nine after a McNamara building maintenance worker reported Qutab's Massachusetts license plate to police. The victim reported that two laptops, a cell phone and an iPod were taken from the room after the incident.

Following the assault, a warning was issued to all students by Blaguszewski

See ASSAULT on page 3

Governor Patrick to improve UMass

BY JENNIFER BURGEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In a recent proposal, Massachusetts Governor Deval Patrick states he will spend $2 billion over the next ten years to renovate buildings as well as build new research facilities.

The Governor hopes to accomplish this at UMass, as well as community and public colleges statewide. The Public Higher Education Network of Massachusetts strongly supports Patrick's proposal. PHENOM was founded around the same time as the governor's election, due to their belief that the support for higher education would finally prevail with Patrick's support.

According to PHENOM member Ferd Wulkan, "PHENOM is based on five principles: affordability, better funding, sufficient hiring and increased democracy, meaning, how colleges are governed), as well as respecting union contract."

PHENOM believes that Patrick will aid in the success of all five of these principles. Therefore, to make sure that the governor's proposal gets carried out, on Oct. 26 PHENOM is hosting a second Higher Education Summit at Framingham State College.

Wulkan commented that the Summit is at the top of PHENOM's legislative agenda. It will also aid in the success of the governor's proposal by mobilizing the grassroots of its organization to contact and meet with its legislatures.

PHENOM is very excited about the governor's bill and believes it will only prove to increase the awareness of public higher education.

"This proposal is essential not only because our campuses are in bad shape and struggling with basic maintenance, but also because capital needs are such a drain on school budgets and a main factor in the rise in the cost of a college education," said Student Trustee Alex Kulenovic.

Since the improvement of campus facilities is a top priority of PHENOM's coalition, they are going to do as much as possible to make sure that Governor Patrick's proposal becomes a reality.

PHENOM is a coalition of faculty, students, alumni, staff and others in the surrounding area colleges including UMass and community and state universities.

Jennifer Bergen can be reached at jbergen@student.umass.edu

Minutemen win thriller in overtime | Page 10

Moving to 5-0 in conference play, the Minutewomen defeated Villanova on Saturday, 12–24, in four overtime periods. Redshirt senior running back Matt Lawrence rushed for 106 yards, including an 11-yard touchdown run in the last overtime that proved to be the eventual game winner.

Textbook theft rises

BY SETH VALERI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

On Oct. 2, a bill appeared before the Joint Committee of Higher Education that would regulate the production and pricing of textbooks.

The number of textbook thefts across campuses nationwide continues to rise.

With students paying an average of $900 a year for textbooks, it comes as no surprise that textbooks have now become one of the most valuable commodities in college. This has not gone unnoticed, neither by students nor by Massachusetts representatives.

After a favorable hearing in front of the Joint Committee, a bill to regulate the price of textbooks might be heard in the House as early as the end of this month. This might give state students particular help, but it forecasts a freeze in the publishing industry's unfair business practices.

Representative Steven M. Walsh of Ware drafted the bill titled the "An Relative to the Production and Pricing of Textbooks" (H.01200), after his constituents at North Shore Community College voiced their concern over the issue.

Walsh that once kids and parents start paying, the bills already big," said Walsh. "It's really big burden."

The bill Walsh is proposing would require publishers to disclose information on textbooks and estimates of how their products will perform in the market. Another important clause in the bill would make packaged bundles, such as CD's and force publishers to offer good

See TEXTBOOK on page 7

No financial aid for drug violators

BY JOE STAHL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Federal drug policies are hindering students chances of receiving financial aid, which is raising questions from state legislators and students as to why these policies still exist.

According to the FBI's Uniform Crime Report, 829,625 people were arrested for marijuana violations in 2006. Out of those people, 88 percent were charged with marijuana possession only. Meanwhile, NORML.org says 18-24 year-olds comprised about 40 percent of all drug arrests in 2002.

The majority of people who are convicted of a marijuana violation are charged with one of the lesser offenses, and a large percentage of those convicted fall into the college age group.

One of the processes of obtaining financial aid from the government is to complete the FAFSA form, which is required from every student. In recent years, the integrity of this form has been questioned, due to its "vague biased-ness," said University of Massachusetts Financial Aid Services Director Kenneth Burnham.

For example, question 31 asks, "Have you been convicted for the possession or sale of illegal drugs for an offense that occurred while you were receiving federal student aid?"

See FAFSA on page 3

University chancellor search in progress

BY CAITLIN QUIRK
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts chancellor search committee will meet for the second time on Oct. 23.

The meeting, which will take place at 3 p.m. on the 26th floor of the W.E.B. Du Bois Library in the new college formed in finding a new chancellor for UMass Amherst campus.

"I am confident we will find a world class leader for the campus," said search committee co-Chairman, UMass Board of Trustee member and alumna Jennifer L. Breen.

The search committee consists of a 25-person panel that includes alumni, trustees, faculty members and business leaders. Faculty committee members were chosen from nominations made by the faculty and University governance.

Board of Trustees member Ruth Thompson is the only student serving on the search committee. "I will be the liaison between the Board of Trustees and the student community, because of my position on the Board," said Thompson, whose only negative feeling was that the number of student on the Board so far is one.

We believe that the search is moving at a very good pace and look forward to building on the strong momentum that was established at the committee's kick-off meeting," she said.

At the first meeting, which was on Sept. 26 in Amherst, Breen appointed alumna and President of the UMass Alumni Association Kathleen Mitchell as vice chairman of the search committee.

The search committee unanimously agreed to have a national executive search firm during the chancellor search screening. Keystone Higher Education Search firm was hired by the Board of Trustees to help find the next leader of the University.

Thompson said that UMass needs a leader who can address the issues of the University by communicating the importance of the campus to the state and to the nation. "We need to make sure that we are creative in our approach to budgets, funds and how we spend money," said Thompson. "We need a chancellor who is creative in finding means to supplement funding for the campus and the system."

Thompson said that she is looking for a chancellor who will work with all of the different constituencies on campus, including the student body.

"We have also a very good research system, and I hope that the next chancellor will continue to support the research projects such as

See CHANCELLOR on page 3

OCT 15 2007

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

► Amy's no ugly betty.*

pwc.tv/ch2

The Firm now playing on Channel 2.

*connectedthinking

©2007 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP a Delaware limited liability partnership or as the context requires the PricewaterhouseCoopers global network or other member firms of the network, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. "connectedthinking" is a trademark of PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (US). We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer

Assault occurs on campus

ASSAULT from page 1

via e-mail, which explained the information known at the time. Following Qutab's arrest, Blagusewski sent another e-mail explaining that Qutab had been stopped.

In an unrelated event, UMPD officials announced they have closed the investigation of two stabbings, which occurred outside of the Student Union during the early morning hours of Sept. 30. UMass football player Johnny Evans was stabbed in the left buttocks and another was cut in the arm.

"Because we continued to have very uncooperative victims, it's highly unlikely that the two suspects, who are both UMass students, would be charged with a crime," Police Chief Barbara O'Connor said. "We've done as much as we can with what information we have."

P.J. Stanley contributed to this article.

Will McGuinness can be reached at wmcguinn@gmail.com

STANLEY/COLLEGIAN

The assault at McNamara Hall marks the second incident this month to involve injuries of UMass students.

Siren to test today

Today at 11 a.m., the University of Massachusetts campus will host a demonstration of their new outdoor campus warning system.

The system test will start in lot 40 near Boyden gymnasium and subsequently move to other campus locations.

Provided by Federal Signal Safety and Security Systems of University Park, Ill., the tests will be demonstrated from their company truck, which will emit siren sounds and warning strobe lights and the public will be able to hear public address announcements.

The company plans to install the units permanently on campus in the near future, which will look like a bank of speakers mounted on tall poles or buildings.

The warning system is activated to alert people outdoors. The alarm will activate in instances of severe weather, criminal activity, large chemical spills or other emergency situations.

Kate Olesin

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 29

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
COPIES EDITOR Adam Staigin
EDITORIAL EDITOR Sean Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsiey Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ryan McAskill
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Teresa Redly
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melisa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Will McGuinness
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Sudsbury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Michael King
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenswaike
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Evan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS ACADEMIC YEAR EXCEPT DURING VACATIONS AND EXAMINATION PERIODS. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY OWNED, OPERATING ON SOMETHING RESEMBLING A SHOESTRING BUDGET. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BECAME AN ASSOCIATED COLLEGIATE PRESS MEMBER IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914, AND THE BI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1966. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN WAS AWARDED ITS FIRST PULITZER PRIZE IN 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL MARSIEY WHOOTEN AT 413-545-3500 EXT. 3.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nicholas Belanger

COPY EDITOR
Greg McCarthy

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

MA pushes new bill

TEXTBOOKS from page 1

year is false and the number is closer to $625. But most of the AAP's rebuttal focuses on individual textbooks rather than the industry's overall practices. In fact, their Web site actually contradicts them; once every month, the AAP releases a statement about increased textbook prices and sales.

Massachusetts is not the only state to push a bill like this. In the past three years, 300 bills have been introduced across the country, some have had success, and some have not. So far, Walsh is hopeful.

"I think we have a good chance of success," said Walsh, pointing out the higher turnover at the hearing.

Part of the success is because of student support. At the Joint Committee hearing over 50 students from across the state came to show their support. The issue has become a grassroots movement, spurring the 18-25 age group to action. Anything that prompts this demographic into action, said Walsh, is exceptional.

The organization at the forefront of student mobilization and involvement is MassPIRG, a charter that is especially active at UMass. Bliss Requa-Trautz, coordinator for the textbook campaign on campus, said that MassPIRG is already moving on to the next step of informing professors of the new legislative changes.

"A great amount of responsibility will be placed upon our professors to make decisions that are beneficial for their students," said Requa-Trautz.

With hopes running high on the outcome of this bill, plans are being made for the future. MassPIRG has already launched www.campusbookswap.org, a site that allows students to exchange books. Another initiative that they intend to start is Open Textbooks, a service that gives students free access to texts written by faculty members.

For her part, Zomer is looking forward to seeing HB1200 pass. Connecticut has already gone forth with reform; in her mind, it's only a matter of time before Massachusetts follows.

"Even college presidents have written in support to the Higher Education Committee," she said. "There is a strong consensus that we need to do something about this. And we will."

Sruthi Vaillur can be reached at svallur@student.umass.edu

Drug offenders financially hurt

FAFSA from page 1

As a result of this question, an estimated 175,000 students convicted of certain drug offenses are denied federal financial aid for college each year.

State House Representative for Massachusetts Barney Frank has become outspoken on the opposition of the FAFSA.

"The law is unfair and discriminatory, because it only causes difficulties for lower income students," Frank said. "While I don't condone illegal drug use, I disagree with the idea of using the federal financial aid system to punish people who have been convicted of relatively minor drug convictions."

The opposition felt by Frank is shared with Burnham.

"Anything that gets in the way of students obtaining the aid they need, we do not promote or support it," Burnham said. "All that the University can do is just abide by the regulations set by the federal government."

When asked if there were strong possibilities for a change in the FAFSA, Burnham replied "It appears now that question thirty-one will stand, unless there is a change in administration."

Not only are political figures and highly positioned people finding flaws with the current FAFSA, students are also banning together in the hopes of making some changes. Groups such as Students for a Sensible Drug Policy are making worthy attempts to amend the radical policies.

For being a student ran organization, SSDP has reached significant goals with their amount of knowledge and their nationwide support. They have managed to mobilize student activists to reform campuses and local and state drug policies.

Recently, SSDP budged Congress to scale back the Higher Education Act Aid Elimination Penalty, which prevents students with drug convictions from receiving financial aid. The lobby helped make it possible for students who are convicted of a marijuana violation while taking time off from college to still receive financial aid.

Chapters affiliated with SSDP are growing across the nation. SSDP is constantly campaigning. It encourages individual or group support everywhere. Currently, there is no SSDP chapter at UMass.

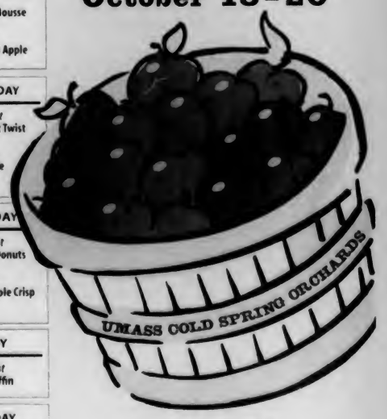
Jane Stahl can be reached at jstahl@student.umass.edu

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1809 and snap a photo, then send it to news@dailycollegian.com

MONDAY OCT 15
Breakfast
Apple Coffee Cake
Dinner
Apple Upside Down Cake

TUESDAY
Breakfast Apple Pancakes
Lunch Apple Mousse
Dinner
Baked Stuffed Apple

WEDNESDAY
Breakfast
Apple/Apricot Twist
Dinner
Apple Pie



THURSDAY
Breakfast
Apple Cider Donuts
Dinner
Sour Cream Apple Crisp

FRIDAY
Breakfast
Apple Muffin

SATURDAY
Brunch
Apple Fritters
Apple Knobby
Dinner
Apple Cheese Cake

Fresh, local apple cider will be available all week, too!

Apple Harvest
October 15–20

All DCs

DINING SERVICES UMass Amherst
2007 Grand Prize Winner
Be A Local Hero
Food Management
University of Massachusetts Cold Spring Orchard

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, OCTOBER 15, 2007

"We have a natural right to make use of our pens as of our tongue, at our peril, risk and hazard." - Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The dark side of the golden years

Katy Bruck

America, much to the dread of many conservatives, is no longer a nation of the nuclear family. Increasingly, people are growing up in complex and diverse living situations. With real estate prices sky-rocketing and financing becoming more treacherous by the day, more and more people are living with extended families, including grandparents. I myself have been lucky enough to have lived with both my maternal grandparents for many years, and they played a large part in my growing up. I consider my life undeniably enriched by their involvement in it, and am aware of how much their generation has contributed to society. This same view is not often shared by everyone, however, particularly when it comes to health care.

Long term care facilities (nursing homes) are some of the most under-funded, under-staffed and generally unpleasant in the American health care system. My grandparents are lucky enough to have a large extended family that's cared for them as they have aged, but for those who have no willing family care, nursing homes are the only option. The expense of such facilities limits one's options. And unfortunately, the options grow fewer and less appealing if you happen to be gay.

In last week's New York Times, an article about the kind of discrimination and abuse that elderly gay people experience in nursing homes caught my eye. Working in a hospital, I see everyday the kind of impatience and occasional rudeness that can stem from under-staffing and stress. But, as any nurse or doctor will tell you, conditions in nursing homes can be tenfold worse than hospital conditions. And so often it's the elderly, who require the most frequent and intimate care, that bear the brunt of this redirected hostility. The idea that what is already uncomfortable and humiliating for most elderly people is even worse if that person is gay is horrifying to me – but not surprising.

The N.Y Times article tells the story of one particular gay woman who, upon sitting in a group of people making homophobic comments and jokes, had the courage to speak up. The results were reportedly instantaneous. She reported feeling like "a pariah," and became increasingly isolated. The depression that came as a result caused her physical condition to deteriorate, and she was lucky enough to be moved to one of the few facilities that actually caters to the gay and lesbian elderly. Despite what she had to go through to be moved, she was fortunate. The majority of the time, when such discrimination occurs among patients, the gay or lesbian individual is often moved to more isolated wards, typically where patients with more severe forms of dementia or Alzheimer's are housed.

Ignorance and intolerance are already aspects of aging that many people have to contend with.

Anyone who has had any experience working with the elderly (or who can imagine themselves in their situation for a moment) understands the constant threat of depression and isolation that already faces these individuals. For many people of our grandparents' generation, the idea of being a burden on society or a financial drain on their family is repulsive. For those who don't have family left, particularly widows and widowers, isolation alone often leads to severe depression and sometimes suicide. Suicide rates are actually highest among the elderly population in America. They represent 13% of the population, and 19% of all suicides.

If you compound the already present factors of depression and isolation with the kind of discrimination and abuse many elderly gay people face, the issue of their treatment becomes even more urgent.

Though a new, younger generation of gay men and lesbians is taking up the cause of spreading awareness and improving the care their older counterparts' experience, California is the only state in the nation that recognizes by law the unique situation facing the gay and lesbian elderly. It requires specific (but limited) training be administered to those who work with the gay elderly and provides state financing for projects and coalitions that are working to open gay senior centers and other special programs. But what about the other 49 states?

According to the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force, there are 30 million gay and lesbian elders in America today, and that number is expected to double in 30 years. This current generation of gay and lesbian individuals is still struggling with the same self-imposed stigmas of the era they grew up in, preferring to silently slide into obscurity than fear the treatment they might face if they are open with their health care providers. This is compounded by our so called 'modern' understanding of homosexuality, and the myths of its consequences. Home health aids are often cited for doing things like refusing to take off surgical gloves when caring for an openly gay patient, for fear of HIV infection (even when no symptoms are apparent). Ignorance and intolerance are already aspects of aging that many people have to contend with. Many young people today, if they are unfortunate enough not to have their grandparents in their lives everyday, forget about this segment of the population. We grumble about the future of Social Security and take up causes that affect us or those of our age, but what about the people who paved the way for us? However sad it might make us, perhaps it's time we gave a little thought to what it's like to grow old in a society that is often so damaging to those who are different.

Katy Bruck is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at kbruck@student.umass.edu.

Some students have no class

Brad DeFlumeri

Why is it that liberal college students must generally dress so poorly? Why can't this generation find and appreciate the value in looking sharp, clean-cut and professional, as their eventual employers will undoubtedly demand of them? I dress respectably – slacks and a collared shirt – whenever possible. To me, this is the decent thing to do in the lecture hall of an academic professional who takes his craft very seriously. In response to my "dressing up" I am confronted with myriad stares, snickers and questions, many along the lines of: "who made you dress like that, or why are you dressed like that - what is your agenda?" These questions often emanate from shabby, shoeless, shower-less and generally detestable hippies who have no conception of what it would be like to go to a job interview, much less serve in the military. And this is where the culture gap or generational gap or sacrifice gap is most evident.

My time in the United States Navy instilled in me the value and necessity of always looking one's best; indeed, it consistently impressed upon me the importance of looking sharp and alert and their inextricable link to professionalism and competence – or at least the perception thereof. Yet at the same time we see this division of respect for authority, for formality, for officialdom actually breaking down along ideological lines on so many college campuses. At UMass and so many other schools, leftist and anti-war students routinely walk around barefoot, unclean and in a state that generally evokes revulsion. However, it is these very same students who are quick to question why I am "always so dressed up," as if I was ordered to do so by a vast right-wing corporate-military industrial complex conspiracy. Looking and feeling good is indeed fundamentally antithetical to liberalism in the sense that dressing up is viewed as pandering to corporate elites or kowtowing to an ordered authoritarianism. But it is past time that the hippies wake up, smell the hookah, and realize that their barefoot ways will not be tolerated by future employees or even graduate school interview officials. To be sure, if there is one immutable product produced by our culture it is the notion that looking good – dressing well in particular – is synonymous with financial success and educational achievement. This may very well be an undesirable reality of an over-materialistic culture, but it cannot be denied that ours is a society that assigns a high esteem to the beautification of everything.

It is past time that the hippies wake up, smell the hookah and realize that their barefoot ways will not be tolerated.

But this liberal refusal to embrace conformity in the form of dressing well in college has other causes, too. Specifically, liberals view professionalism of any kind – dress, manner, regulations – as anathema simply because it conflicts with their deranged little world view that glorifies harmonious equality, equal achievement outcomes and mediocrity for all. With these things in mind, then, the typical hippie would argue that dressing up can only be thought of as embracing a conspiratorial, exploitative and overtly evil and racist capitalist structure. According to these hippies, the causative links between looking official and exploiting the poor, under-served victims in our society are clear and compelling.

What's important here is not what looking professional is truly synonymous with – probably ambition and little else – but the more overarching message that the hippies' grungy appearance sends: just as liberalism and socialism hold that because we can't all win financially in a free-market capitalist society we should therefore socialize the costs and benefits of all competitive phenomena, so too do these dirty hippies contend that since we can't all wear Armani, then we should all dress as barefoot bums. And from this convoluted logic it would also follow that since the rich earn more money than the poor, the government should compel the rich to subsidize the poor through that favorite technique of liberals – taxation.

These sentiments are absurd, reject traditional American values and are completely inconsistent with the reality that every college graduate will face when he or she leaves planet UMass and ventures out into the real world, especially corporate America.

Brad DeFlumeri is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bdeflume@student.umass.edu.

Abusing the 'ol first amendment

Stephanie McPherson

One week ago, on Monday Oct. 8, Ann Coulter, best-selling author, was on the CNBC talk show The Big Idea, hosted by Donny Deutsch. The talk eventually rolled around to Coulter's dream world – and her response was shocking.

She said, "It would look like New York City during the [2004] Republican National Convention… people were happy. They're Christian. They're tolerant. They defend America." Deutsch, sure he must have misunderstood Coulter, asked, "It would be better if we were all Christian?" Coulter answered with a resounding "Yes."

Through the interview, she continued to say that Jews should be "perfected" into Christians. That Christianity is a "fast track."

The fact that she had the audacity to say things like that on national TV, and to say it with an air of firm belief, makes me think that she doesn't truly believe it. She can't truly believe it. But she said it. Which is scary! Because regardless of whether or not she believes that Jews should be perfected (as she extended her idea to Israel and to Jews across the world), there are people who would agree.

Intolerance is such a prevalent condition in America. We are supposed to be the home of the free – a country settled specifically to find freedom from religious persecution. The document that details our country's creation explicitly states that "all men are created equal." That is not the case. In fact, America has frequently flown directly in the face of the sentiment. The American economy was built on the enslavement of other human beings. New nationalities to America, during a time when the United States was advertised as an accepting melting pot, were discriminated against, the intolerance shown in signs on storefronts with phrases like "Irish need not apply."

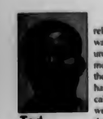
You would think that as time progressed, the United States would catch on the fact that we aren't upholding our own constitution. There is homophobia, Anti-Semitism and racism in every degree. Xenophobia is running rampant. But we're America. So things like this shouldn't happen here. So many people turn a blind eye.

But another question comes up. Are people actually ignoring these issues, or are they just ignorant enough to think, as a CNN reporter said, that Ann Coulter is just a crazy aunt that they'd rather ignore?

Thank you, Ann Coulter, for representing a population of intolerant people. Your ideas are refreshingly antiquated and offensive.

Sure, people get upset every time Ann Coulter comes up with a new racial slur or anti-Semitic comment, but has anyone tried to stop her? News stations are still interviewing her, even though she has a history of angering the general population whenever she makes a TV appearance.

Ira Forman, the executive director of the Nation Jewish Democratic Council said in an interview with CBSNews.com, "While Ann Coulter has freedom of speech, news outlets should exercise their freedom to use better judgment. Just as media outlets don't invite those who believe that Martians walk the earth to frequently comment on science stories, it's time they stop inviting Ann Coulter to comment on politics."



Forman has a valid and strong point. Why is she continuously invited to speak? It must be for ratings. There is no other explanation. But the fact that the networks exploit Coulter's outrageous comments to get more viewers and more publicity is almost as bad as Coulter saying these things herself.

If we continue down this path of intolerance, the consequences are frightening to think about. The Crusades, most of World War II and a large portion of today's Iraq War have been fought because of conflicting beliefs. Billions of people have been murdered because of conflicting beliefs. And now, with the threat of nuclear weapons, here's a new thought. If we enter a nuclear war because of conflicting beliefs, do people realize that there is nowhere else to go? We can't inhabit the moon or Mars. If we destroy this world, there is no other. Then where are we? Probably still hating, but hating in a nuclear winter. Yeah, that'd be worth it.

So thank you, Ann Coulter, for representing a population of intolerant people. Your ideas are refreshingly antiquated and offensive. Thank you for spreading your ignorance about "religious theology and interfaith issues," as put by the Anti-Defamation League in a statement condemning Coulter. I'm glad our nation has a celebrity like you to emulate.

Stephanie McPherson is a Collegian editor. She can be reached at smcpherson@student.umass.edu.

While they shout, who's listening?

Ted Rogers

I follow world politics pretty religiously. One story I've been watching in particular is the civil unrest going on in Burma. Burma's monks, the cornerstone of civility in the small country's military regime, have been launching peaceful political protests over the past couple of weeks. It's weird though. The first thought that comes into my mind really isn't a political one. It tends to be more along the lines of, "man…I bet those guys smell a whole lot better than our protesters here."

I'm sorry if you've already heard the joke about the unpresentable UMass hippie, but let's be honest. Some stereotypes are there because they're absolutely true. It seems like every protest, rally and verb-in I've been to have been mostly populated by people who look like they were in an experiment involving soap deprivation, clothes that are vintage for a definite reason and a vindictive nose-piercer.

Most of you are probably asking yourselves why this matters to me. After all, freedom of expression is just as important as freedom of speech. And if a white dude with dreadlocks has something important to say about global warming, or anything else, for that matter, who should I be to trash talk him?

I guess my problem is that when that guy with the tie-dye – or the girl who looks like she had her eyebrow attacked by a stapler – gets up and starts speaking, I'm usually in complete concurrence with them. Yet at the same time, I'm worldly enough to know that no one is going to listen to them. Put it this way – Do you think if Martin Luther King Junior wore the same horrible shirt everyday, he'd have garnered a reasonable amount of respect from everybody? Or, do you think there'd be all that many Catholics if the Pope had a giant septum ring? I'm the first one to admit that categorizing people on the basis of their fashion choices is a fairly rotten ideal, but on the other hand, it happens.

Do you recall any recent protests that have significantly swayed government policy?

And honestly, I think the implications go a bit further than that "liberal activists look kind of scruffy." I mean, do you recall any recent protests that have significantly swayed government policy? I'd be willing to make a bet that the White House takes one look at the people there and laughs it off as a "vocal minority."

To give an example, in September of 2005 there was a protest outside the White House with over 500,000 people in attendance. It was mainly over the war in Iraq, but somehow there was enough space for global warming people, marijuana reformers and pro-choice activists to have their space as well. Oh, and Jello Biafra of "Dead Kennedys" fame hosted it. I guess nothing says "America wants a new course in a liberal direction" like having a singer from a terrible punk band MC your gig.

The reason I mention this protest in particular is because I was invited to go to it. Even though I really hadn't formed my political ideology yet, it seemed like a waste of time. That, and the girl whom invited me said the main drawing point was, and I quote, "there's going to be a bunch of good weed there." Now, I'm not going to claim to be an expert on what makes a protest have an impact on a political machine. But I will say that it probably does not behoove you to take an enormous bong rip between coming up with new chants on how George Bush should be impeached. Just a thought.

Needless to say, this protest really didn't have the desired effect. The meat grinder in the middle-east is still churning, the globe is still getting warmer. As far as I'm aware, the right for a woman to choose is still deadlocked with the rights of the unborn. And marijuana? Illegal as ever. On a pleasant side note, the girl who invited me had a fun time, especially when the all-night rock concert started.

So, the next time you read about some various cause being encroached upon by a heartless political machine, don't just blame the guys in charge. You know that old saying, "with friends like that, who needs enemies?" Well, it's more than a little true.

I'm not saying that when you protest a wrong, you need to dress up as a Buddhist monk, or even like one of those suspiciously well-groomed young Republican types. But, here's the thing: if there is a cause for you worthy enough to give up some of your free time to express your feelings, than it's worth doing it in a serious manner. Next time you try to show the world what cause you support, enjoy yourself, act smart and don't leave your dignity back in your room.

Ted Rogers is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at twrogers@student.umass.edu.

DAILY COLLEGIAN READER POLL

A lecture at the New Africa House this Wednesday will present the idea of free higher education. Is it a good one?

☐ Yes ☐ No ☐ Maybe

Cast your vote online at www.dailycollegian.com!

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, OCTOBER 15, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Herter hosts life experiences turned artwork

Pieces by UMass professor shown in on-campus gallery

University of Massachusetts professor Hanlyn Davies takes life experiences and turns them into art. He is showcasing his work, from paintings to photographs to lithographic prints, in Herter Art Gallery until November 10.

BY ANDREA MURRAY
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

UMass faculty member and fine artist Hanlyn Davies' work of 35 years was celebrated at the opening of his show "Inside Out: Works by Hanlyn Davies, 1972–2007" at Herter Art Gallery on Thursday Oct. 11.

The gallery was packed with a variety of art aficionados including art students, Davies' peers and friends and the general student body. Davies stood out from the crowd dressed in a cornflower blue jacket, green shirt and black slacks. Friends and fans alike showered him with compliments and praise for his work, which consisted of large-scale paintings, offset lithographs, handmade paper and photographic prints.

"Right now my focus is on painting," he said. "However, I am thinking that I would like to do some more prints – some offset lithography and some digital prints."

Davies has been a Fine Arts Department faculty member in painting at the UMass since 1970. He was born in 1942 in Wales, United Kingdom. He studied at Swansea University in the U.K. and at Yale for Art and Architecture. He has been involved with art since he was very young and even won a national U.K. art competition at the age of 16. His prize was a weekend trip to the Woburn Abbey, the ancestral home of the Duke of Bedford. The Duke's art collection, which included works by Rembrandt and Canaletto, left a profound effect on Davies. He has received numerous fellowship awards and other awards such as UMass Distinguished Teaching Award. He has exhibited extensively in the USA, Europe and Asia.

Personal experience has proved to be important for Davies. "For the most part my personal experiences, places where I have lived, events in my life and things that I think about are what inspire me," he said. "I hope to convey a view of my world to my audience," he continued during an interview the day after the exhibit opened.

The exhibit was divided into three rooms – one for his paintings, one for his offset lithographs and one that housed both his paper making works and his photography. Davies' subject matter appears to be happened upon, and then molded into what he wishes, whether it be with a camera, a printing press, acrylics and oils or a paper maker.

His hand-made paper works, the "Private Beaches" collection, played with different textures and colors. What is most interesting about this series is that they were all made of debris that he had found on a beach, which he then put into hand-made paper.

Davies' photographs in this room focused on discarded objects such as piles of compost. He celebrates the rich hues and varying textures of the generally looked over subject. Rotting fruit never looked so good; the beauty of the varying colors in the stages of rotting are zoomed in on and can be appreciated from the safe distance of a photograph. A few other photos such as "March 19th (Hanlyn Davies and his Father)" played with double exposures and showed glimpses into Davies' personal life.

In the next room his paintings draw eyes in with exquisite use of rich tones. Most of the paintings in this room are of a significant size, around 82" in height. His works "Hryneg Lights Calennig," (2007), and "Parallax Landseer (And How He Was Led Astray)," (1987-90), display a mastery of technique, color exploration and attention to detail.

There are more lithographic prints than anything else in the exhibit and they fill an entire room. They include several variations on his work with rubber bands. "Black Jumbo," (1976), is a dizzying display of varied sizes, shapes and colors of rubber bands that overlap and build to fill the entire picture. Others, such as "Hip Hop," (1976), move away from overwhelming textures and ideas, and instead lean more toward showing simplicity and parallel harmonious worlds. Davies says these prints were controversial in the 1970s and '80s and stirred debate in the art world.

"There were questions as to their validity as 'fine art' prints because they were made in commercial printing establishments on high speed printing presses, and, as such, smacked of commercial mass' reproduction; a word that was anathema to the very notion of the hand-crafted, limited edition fine art print," he said.

"It was of course self-serving, misplaced snobbery, on the part of those dealers, artists, educators, who were self-protective of their own territory," he added. "These days this is not an issue."

The retrospective of his work runs until Friday Nov. 10.

Andrea Murray can be reached at akmurray@student.umass.edu.

UM grad reflects on time at Amherst and life as musician

UMass graduate Adam Ajiala followed his dreams of becoming a musician, forming the Yonder Mountain String Band.

BY LAUREN MODESTTI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Adam Ajiala (pronounced "age-ala"), has proven that you can find a career path outside of your major. Having graduated from the University of Massachusetts Amherst 16 years ago with a degree in Forestry, Ajiala has found himself playing guitar for Colorado's popular jamgrass band, Yonder Mountain String Band.

"[During] the second half of my sophomore year I was still without a major," Ajiala said. "I kind of feel like I was rushed to go to college." He went on to say that his parents had a large influence on his collegiate beginning and attending was the only way they would keep him "under their wing."

Ajiala grew up in a town just outside of Worcester, called Sterling, and attended Wachussett High School. He began playing the electric guitar in 1986, when he was just 13 years old. Back then, his main influences were in punk and hardcore groups like Black Flag, the Dead Kennedy's and The Descendants. In high school, he began to listen to heavy metal groups like Metallica and Slayer. He finally picked up an acoustic guitar when he was 17 and began to partake in alternative extra-curricular activities that expanded his musical interest to Led Zeppelin, Jimi Hendrix and the Grateful Dead.

Ajiala recalls an incident with a good friend of his, when he received his acceptance letter to UMass.

"I didn't want to go because [my friend] wasn't going," he said, adding that they were being very philosophical at that moment, or as philosophical as they could have been. "And when he got in his [car] I asked him what he was going to do and he said 'I'm going to live in the woods,' and I was like 'yeah!'"

"I was pretty young for eighteen," he said. "[But] I thought I was an adult." Ajiala said that most teenagers believe they're more mature than they really are at that age. "I was in school and had no clue what I wanted to study. I met a couple dudes who were in Natural Resources – and I was big into backpacking, hiking and just being outside, so I thought maybe I [would] study what's involved with that," he said.

Ajiala added that he was going to go in a completely different direction in life.

"I was basically molded by my parents," he said, explaining that he had considered joining the Air Force after high school, only years before Desert Storm.

Ajiala recalled that while he lived on campus, he resided in Central's renowned Van Meter hall, where he met some of his best friends, who were "in the same boat" as him. He talked about his time spent at The Spoke in Amherst Center and Antonio's on what is now referred to as "Club Sidewalk." He also referred to the Campus Center as the "Death Star" because "you could always picture the Millenium Falcon landing and it wouldn't look weird."

"I had a great time," he said. "It was a great school. I bet it's not all that different. When I was young it was voted the party school…my main memories are having fun with the people I met. I saw cool music like Quicksand, Rage Against the Machine and Phish. There was a lot of good music and a lot of good partying."

"It's so weird getting older," Ajiala said. "You don't feel any different except that you have more life experience and are more charismatic."

A career in forestry was quickly dismissed after he had a couple major knee injuries and was unable to do the strenuous

See STRINGS on page 8

Canada represented

Ruffians and Caribou entertain at Iron Horse

BY ALEX HOUSBECK
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Oct. 4 found two Canadian bands in top musical form at the Iron Horse in Northampton. Born Ruffians played an inspired set of creative pop before Caribou upped the ante with a percussive set of music and visuals, a treat for the eyes, the ears and the musical brain.

The show was the second of the night at the Iron Horse – Brooklyn songwriter Jonathan Coulton had performed at seven o'clock. As such, doors didn't open until 10:15, leaving the small crowd outside buzzing in anticipation for nearly an hour. Upon entry, most of the attendees sat down at the tables crowded at the back of the club or on the second-story balcony, leaving the dance floor empty.

Toronto band Born Ruffians took the stage just before eleven o'clock. The three band mates didn't look much older than the college-aged crowd and they brought to the stage a gloriously youthful energy.

Guitarist and lead vocalist Luke Lalonde belted out the opening line off the title track off their upcoming album, "Red, Yellow and Blue," and drummer Steven Hamelin and bassist Mitch Deyoster soon followed suit, forming an a cappella round. Their voices didn't quite mesh, each off key by just a hair, but when the drums kicked in, these vocal imperfections added a likeable roughness to the band's sound.

Hamelin and Deyoster quickly locked into each other's pulse and formed an impressive rhythm section. It wasn't only the bass and drums, though – their voices were as much a part of the beat as their instruments. Responding to Lalonde's calls, their shouts and whoops provided a fitting backdrop for the lead singer's vocals. Lalonde's voice was one part Ivey Tarfot Animal Collective and one part Dave Longstreth for The Dirty Projectors, containing the expressive howl of the former and the agility of the latter.

A few songs into the set, a crowd member with a beer in his hand – likely not his first of the night – ran to the front of the stage and ordered the crowd to "stand up and rock out." Ten or so attendees obliged, partially filling the dance floor. It didn't seem to be enough, however – after the next song, he turned around a declared "I'd like to see more participation this time."

"This is amazing," commented Lalonde. "We don't need banter or charisma of any kind. This song's for you – well, I guess the whole set's for you."

As Born Ruffians' set progressed, their musical aptitude became more and more evident as songs accelerated and decelerated, time signatures changed and harmonicas were broken out. Coming to their last song, the band announced that Caribou would soon be taking the stage. "Good things come in pairs," shouted an audience member. "Positive heckling," remarked an amused Lalonde.

The band's set, full of new songs, was an impressive collection of inspired, youthful rock. It was an indication that the audience should be excited for "Red, Yellow and Blue," arriving in early 2008.

Exactly an hour after the start of Born Ruffians' set, Caribou took the stage with a literal bang. Without a sound check of any kind, Dan Snaith (mastermind

See CARIBOU on page 6

Canadian-based bands Caribou and Born Ruffians showed off their musical skills at the Iron Horse on Thursday, October 4. Each band put on a great show and got the audience involved.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, OCTOBER 15, 2007

"We have a natural right to make use of our pens as of our tongue, at our peril, risk and hazard." - Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The dark side of the golden years

Katy Bruck

America, much to the dread of many conservatives, is no longer a nation of the nuclear family. Increasingly, people are growing up in complex and diverse living situations. With real estate prices sky-rocketing and financing becoming more treacherous by the day, more and more people are living with extended families, including grandparents. I myself have been lucky enough to have lived with both my maternal grandparents for many years, and they played a large part in my growing up. I consider my life undeniably enriched by their involvement in it, and am aware of how much their generation has contributed to society. This same view is not often shared by everyone, however, particularly when it comes to health care.

Long term care facilities (nursing homes) are some of the most under-funded, under-staffed and generally unpleasant in the American health care system. My grandparents are lucky enough to have a large extended family that's cared for them as they have aged, but for those who have no willing family care, nursing homes are the only option. The expense of such facilities limits one's options. And unfortunately, the options grow fewer and less appealing if you happen to be gay.

In last week's New York Times, an article about the kind of discrimination and abuse that elderly gay people experience in nursing homes caught my eye. Working in a hospital, I see everyday the kind of impatience and occasional rudeness that can stem from under-staffing and stress. But, as any nurse or doctor will tell you, conditions in nursing homes can be tenfold worse than hospital conditions. And so often it's the elderly, who require the most frequent and intimate care, that bear the brunt of this redirected hostility. The idea that what is already uncomfortable and humiliating for most elderly people is even worse if that person is gay is horrifying to me – but not surprising.

The N.Y Times article tells the story of one particular gay woman who, upon sitting in a group of people making homophobic comments and jokes, had the courage to speak up. The results were reportedly instantaneous. She reported feeling like "a pariah," and became increasingly isolated. The depression that came as a result caused her physical condition to deteriorate, and she was lucky enough to be moved to one of the few facilities that actually caters to the gay and lesbian elderly. Despite what she had to go through to be moved, she was fortunate. The majority of the time, when such discrimination occurs among patients, the gay or lesbian individual is often moved to more isolated wards, typically where patients with more severe forms of dementia or Alzheimer's are housed.

Ignorance and intolerance are already aspects of aging that many people have to contend with.

Anyone who has had any experience working with the elderly (or who can imagine themselves in their situation for a moment) understands the constant threat of depression and isolation that already faces these individuals. For many people of our grandparents' generation, the idea of being a burden on society or a financial drain on their family is repulsive. For those who don't have family left, particularly widows and widowers, isolation alone often leads to severe depression and sometimes suicide. Suicide rates are actually highest among the elderly population in America. They represent 13% of the population, and 19% of all suicides.

If you compound the already present factors of depression and isolation with the kind of discrimination and abuse many elderly gay people face, the issue of their treatment becomes even more urgent.

Though a new, younger generation of gay men and lesbians is taking up the cause of spreading awareness and improving the care their older counterparts' experience, California is the only state in the nation that recognizes by law the unique situation facing the gay and lesbian elderly. It requires specific (but limited) training be administered to those who work with the gay elderly and provides state financing for projects and coalitions that are working to open gay senior centers and other special programs. But what about the other 49 states?

According to the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force, there are 30 million gay and lesbian elders in America today, and that number is expected to double in 30 years. This current generation of gay and lesbian individuals is still struggling with the same self-imposed stigmas of the era they grew up in, preferring to silently slide into obscurity than fear the treatment they might face if they are open with their health care providers. This is compounded by our so called 'modern' understanding of homosexuality, and the myths of its consequences. Home health aids are often cited for doing things like refusing to take off surgical gloves when caring for an openly gay patient, for fear of HIV infection (even when no symptoms are apparent). Ignorance and intolerance are already aspects of aging that many people have to contend with. Many young people today, if they are unfortunate enough not to have their grandparents in their lives everyday, forget about this segment of the population. We grumble about the future of Social Security and take up causes that affect us or those of our age, but what about the people who paved the way for us? However sad it might make us, perhaps it's time we gave a little thought to what it's like to grow old in a society that is often so damaging to those who are different.

Katy Bruck is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at kbruck@student.umass.edu.

Some students have no class

Brad DeFlumeri

Why is it that liberal college students must generally dress so poorly? Why can't this generation find and appreciate the value in looking sharp, clean-cut and professional, as their eventual employers will undoubtedly demand of them? I dress respectably – slacks and a collared shirt – whenever possible. To me, this is the decent thing to do in the lecture hall of an academic professional who takes his craft very seriously. In response to my "dressing up" I am confronted with myriad stares, snickers and questions, many along the lines of: "who made you dress like that, or why are you dressed like that - what is your agenda?" These questions often emanate from shabby, shoeless, shower-less and generally detestable hippies who have no conception of what it would be like to go to a job interview, much less serve in the military. And this is where the culture gap or generational gap or sacrifice gap is most evident.

My time in the United States Navy instilled in me the value and necessity of always looking one's best; indeed, it consistently impressed upon me the importance of looking sharp and alert and their inextricable link to professionalism and competence – or at least the perception thereof. Yet at the same time we see this division of respect for authority, for formality, for officialdom actually breaking down along ideological lines on so many college campuses. At UMass and so many other schools, leftist and anti-war students routinely walk around barefoot, unclean and in a state that generally evokes revulsion. However, it is these very same students who are quick to question why I am "always so dressed up," as if I was ordered to do so by a vast right-wing corporate-military industrial complex conspiracy. Looking and feeling good is indeed fundamentally antithetical to liberalism in the sense that dressing up is viewed as pandering to corporate elites or kowtowing to an ordered authoritarianism. But it is past time that the hippies wake up, smell the hookah, and realize that their barefoot ways will not be tolerated by future employees or even graduate school interview officials. To be sure, if there is one immutable product produced by our culture it is the notion that looking good – dressing well in particular – is synonymous with financial success and educational achievement. This may very well be an undesirable reality of an over-materialistic culture, but it cannot be denied that ours is a society that assigns a high esteem to the beautification of everything.

It is past time that the hippies wake up, smell the hookah and realize that their barefoot ways will not be tolerated.

But this liberal refusal to embrace conformity in the form of dressing well in college has other causes, too. Specifically, liberals view professionalism of any kind – dress, manner, regulations – as anathema simply because it conflicts with their deranged little world view that glorifies harmonious equality, equal achievement outcomes and mediocrity for all. With these things in mind, then, the typical hippie would argue that dressing up can only be thought of as embracing a conspiratorial, exploitative and overtly evil and racist capitalist structure. According to these hippies, the causative links between looking official and exploiting the poor, under-served victims in our society are clear and compelling.

What's important here is not what looking professional is truly synonymous with – probably ambition and little else – but the more overarching message that the hippies' grungy appearance sends: just as liberalism and socialism hold that because we can't all win financially in a free-market capitalist society we should therefore socialize the costs and benefits of all competitive phenomena, so too do these dirty hippies contend that since we can't all wear Armani, then we should all dress as barefoot bums. And from this convoluted logic it would also follow that since the rich earn more money than the poor, the government should compel the rich to subsidize the poor through that favorite technique of liberals – taxation.

These sentiments are absurd, reject traditional American values and are completely inconsistent with the reality that every college graduate will face when he or she leaves planet UMass and ventures out into the real world, especially corporate America.

Brad DeFlumeri is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bdeflume@student.umass.edu.

Abusing the 'ol first amendment

Stephanie McPherson

One week ago, on Monday Oct. 8, Ann Coulter, best-selling author, was on the CNBC talk show The Big Idea, hosted by Donny Deutsch. The talk eventually rolled around to Coulter's dream world – and her response was shocking.

She said, "It would look like New York City during the [2004] Republican National Convention… people were happy. They're Christian. They're tolerant. They defend America." Deutsch, sure he must have misunderstood Coulter, asked, "It would be better if we were all Christian?" Coulter answered with a resounding "Yes."

Through the interview, she continued to say that Jews should be "perfected" into Christians. That Christianity is a "fast track."

The fact that she had the audacity to say things like that on national TV, and to say it with an air of firm belief, makes me think that she doesn't truly believe it. She can't truly believe it. But she said it. Which is scary! Because regardless of whether or not she believes that Jews should be perfected (as she extended her idea to Israel and to Jews across the world), there are people who would agree.

Intolerance is such a prevalent condition in America. We are supposed to be the home of the free – a country settled specifically to find freedom from religious persecution. The document that details our country's creation explicitly states that "all men are created equal." That is not the case. In fact, America has frequently flown directly in the face of the sentiment. The American economy was built on the enslavement of other human beings. New nationalities to America, during a time when the United States was advertised as an accepting melting pot, were discriminated against, the intolerance shown in signs on storefronts with phrases like "Irish need not apply."

You would think that as time progressed, the United States would catch on the fact that we aren't upholding our own constitution. There is homophobia, Anti-Semitism and racism in every degree. Xenophobia is running rampant. But we're America. So things like this shouldn't happen here. So many people turn a blind eye.

But another question comes up. Are people actually ignoring these issues, or are they just ignorant enough to think, as a CNN reporter said, that Ann Coulter is just a crazy aunt that they'd rather ignore?

Thank you, Ann Coulter, for representing a population of intolerant people. Your ideas are refreshingly antiquated and offensive.

She wouldn't be saying these things if there wasn't a subset of the American population who felt the same way. If she truly was just the "crazy aunt" who said crazy things that people could just brush off, she wouldn't ignite the controversy that she does. That she has such an effect on American society proves that her comments pull some weight and should be taken seriously.

Sure, people get upset every time Ann Coulter comes up with a new racial slur or anti-Semitic comment, but has anyone tried to stop her? News stations are still interviewing her, even though she has a history of angering the general population whenever she makes a TV appearance.

Ira Forman, the executive director of the Nation Jewish Democratic Council said in an interview with CBSNews.com, "While Ann Coulter has freedom of speech, news outlets should exercise their freedom to use better judgment…Just as media outlets don't invite those who believe that Martians walk the earth to frequently comment on science stories, it's time they stop inviting Ann Coulter to comment on politics."

Forman has a valid and strong point. Why is she continuously invited to speak? It must be for ratings. There is no other explanation. But the fact that the networks exploit Coulter's outrageous comments to get more viewers and more publicity is almost as bad as Coulter saying these things herself.

If we continue down this path of intolerance, the consequences are frightening to think about. The Crusades, most of World War II and a large portion of today's Iraq War have been fought because of conflicting beliefs. Billions of people have been murdered because of conflicting beliefs. And now, with the threat of nuclear weapons, here's a new thought. If we enter a nuclear war because of conflicting beliefs, do people realize that there is nowhere else to go? We can't inhabit the moon or Mars. If we destroy this world, there is no other. Then where are we? Probably still hating, but hating in a nuclear winter. Yeah, that'd be worth it.

So thank you, Ann Coulter, for representing a population of intolerant people. Your ideas are refreshingly antiquated and offensive. Thank you for spreading your ignorance about "religious theology and interfaith issues," as put by the Anti-Defamation League in a statement condemning Coulter. I'm glad our nation has a celebrity like you to emulate.

Stephanie McPherson is a Collegian editor. She can be reached at smcpher@student.umass.edu.

While they shout, who's listening?

Ted Rogers

I follow world politics pretty religiously. One story I've been watching in particular is the civil unrest going on in Burma. Burma's monks, the cornerstone of civility in the small country's military regime, have been launching peaceful political protests over the past couple of weeks. It's weird though. The first thought that comes into my mind really isn't a political one. It tends to be more along the lines of, "man…I bet those guys smell a whole lot better than our protestors here."

I'm sorry if you've already heard the joke about the unpresentable UMass hippie, but let's be honest. Some stereotypes are there because they're absolutely true. It seems like every protest, rally and verb-in I've been to have been mostly populated by people who look like they were in an experiment involving soap deprivation, clothes that are vintage for a definite reason and a vindictive nose-piercer.

Most of you are probably asking yourselves why this matters to me. After all, freedom of expression is just as important as freedom of speech. And if a white dude with dreadlocks has something important to say about global warming, or anything else, for that matter, who should I be to trash talk him?

I guess my problem is that when that guy with the tie-dye – or the girl who looks like she had her eyebrow attacked by a stapler – gets up and starts speaking, I'm usually in complete concurrence with them. Yet at the same time, I'm worldly enough to know that no one is going to listen to them. Put it this way – Do you think if Martin Luther King Junior wore the same horrible shirt everyday, he'd have garnered a reasonable amount of respect from everybody? Or, do you think there'd be all that many Catholics if the Pope had a giant septum ring? I'm the first one to admit that categorizing people on the basis of their fashion choices is a fairly rotten ideal, but on the other hand, it happens.

Do you recall any recent protests that have significantly swayed government policy?

And honestly, I think the implications go a bit further than that "liberal activists look kind of scruffy." I mean, do you recall any recent protests that have significantly swayed government policy? I'd be willing to make a bet that the White House takes one look at the people there and laughs it off as a "vocal minority".

To give an example, in September of 2005 there was a protest outside the White House with over 500,000 people in attendance. It was mainly over the war in Iraq, but somehow there was enough space for global warming people, marijuana reformers and pro-choice activists to have their space as well. Oh, and Jello Biafra of "Dead Kennedys" fame hosted it. I guess nothing says "America wants a new course in a liberal direction" like having a singer from a terrible punk band MC your gig.

The reason I mention this protest in particular is because I was invited to go to it. Even though I really hadn't formed my political ideology yet, it seemed like a waste of time. That, and the girl whom invited me said the main drawing point was, and I quote, "there's going to be a bunch of good weed there." Now, I'm not going to claim to be an expert on what makes a protest have an impact on a political machine. But I will say that it probably does not behoove you to take an enormous bong rip between coming up with new chants on how George Bush should be impeached. Just a thought.

Needless to say, this protest really didn't have the desired effect. The meat grinder in the middle-east is still churning, the globe is still getting warmer. As far as I'm aware, the right for a woman to choose is still deadlocked with the rights of the unborn. And marijuana? Illegal as ever. On a pleasant side note, the girl who invited me had a fun time, especially when the all-night rock concert started.

So, the next time you read about some various cause being encroached upon by a heartless political machine, don't just blame the guys in charge. You know that old saying, "with friends like that, who needs enemies?" Well, it's more than a little true.

I'm not saying that when you protest a wrong, you need to dress up as a Buddhist monk, or even like one of those suspiciously well-groomed young Republican types. But, here's the thing: if there is a cause for you worthy enough to give up some of your free time to express your feelings, than it's worth doing it in a serious manner. Next time you try to show the world what cause you support, enjoy yourself, act smart and don't leave your dignity back in your room.

Ted Rogers is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at twrogers@student.umass.edu.

DAILY COLLEGIAN READER POLL

A lecture at the New Africa House this Wednesday will present the idea of free higher education. Is it a good one?

☐ Yes ☐ No ☐ Maybe

Cast your vote online at www.dailycollegian.com!

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, OCTOBER 15, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Herter hosts life experiences turned artwork

Pieces by UMass professor shown in on-campus gallery

University of Massachusetts professor Hanlyn Davies takes life experiences and turns them into art. He is showcasing his work, from paintings to photographs to lithographic prints, in Herter Art Gallery until November 10.

By Andrea Murray
Collegian Correspondent

UMass faculty member and fine artist Hanlyn Davies' work of 35 years was celebrated at the opening of his show "Inside Out: Works by Hanlyn Davies, 1972–2007" at Herter Art Gallery on Thursday Oct. 11.

The gallery was packed with a variety of art aficionados including art students, Davies' peers and friends and the general student body. Davies stood out from the crowd dressed in a cornflower blue jacket, green shirt and black slacks. Friends and fans alike showered him with compliments and praise for his work, which consisted of large-scale paintings, offset lithographs, handmade paper and photographic prints.

"Right now my focus is on painting," he said. "However, I am thinking that I would like to do some more prints – some offset lithography and some digital prints."

Davies has been a Fine Arts Department faculty member in painting at the UMass since 1970. He was born in 1942 in Wales, United Kingdom. He studied at Swansea University in the U.K. and at Yale for Art and Architecture. He has been involved with art since he was very young and even won a national U.K. art competition at the age of 16. His prize was a weekend trip to the Woburn Abbey, the ancestral home of the Duke of Bedford. The Duke's art collection, which included works by Rembrandt and Canaletto, left a profound effect on Davies. He has received numerous fellowship awards and other awards such as UMass Distinguished Teaching Award. He has exhibited extensively in the USA, Europe and Asia.

Personal experience has proved to be important for Davies. "For the most part my personal experiences, places where I have lived, events in my life and things that I think about are what inspire me," he said. "I hope to convey a view of my world to my audience," he continued during an interview the day after the exhibit opened.

The exhibit was divided into three rooms – one for his paintings, one for his offset lithographs and one that housed both his paper making works and his photography. Davies' subject matter appears to be happened upon, and then molded into what he wishes, whether it be with a camera, a printing press, acrylics and oils or a paper maker.

His hand-made paper works, the "Private Beaches" collection, played with different textures and colors. What is most interesting about this series is that they were all made of debris that he had found on a beach, which he then put into hand-made paper.

Davies' photographs in this room focused on discarded objects such as piles of compost. He celebrates the rich hues and varying textures of the generally looked over subject. Rotting fruit never looked so good; the beauty of the varying colors in the stages of rotting are zoomed in on and can be appreciated from the safe distance of a photograph. A few other photos such as "March 1st (Hanlyn Davies and his Father)" played with double exposures and showed glimpses into Davies' personal life.

In the next room his paintings draw eyes in with exquisite use of rich tones. Most of the paintings in this room are of a significant size, around 82" in height. His works "Byrneg Lights Calennig," (2007), and "Parallax Landseer I And How He Was Led Astray I," (1987-98), display a mastery of technique, color exploration and attention to detail.

There are more lithographic prints than anything else in the exhibit and they fill an entire room. They include several variations on his work with rubber bands. "Black Jumble," (1976), is a dizzying display of varied sizes, shapes and colors of rubber bands that overlap and build to fill the entire picture. Others, such as "Hip Hop," (1976), move away from overwhelming textures and ideas, and instead lean more toward showing simplicity and parallel harmonious worlds. Davies says these prints were controversial in the 1970s and '80s and stirred debate in the art world.

"There were questions as to their validity as 'fine art' prints because they were made in commercial printing establishments on high speed printing presses, and, as such, smacked of commercial mass' reproduction; a word that was anathema to the very notion of the hand-crafted, limited edition fine art print," he said.

"It was of course self-serving, misplaced snobbery, on the part of those dealers, artists, educators, who were self-protective of their own territory," he added. "These days this is not an issue."

The retrospective of his work runs until Friday Nov. 10.

Andrea Murray can be reached at akmurray@student.umass.edu

UM grad reflects on time at Amherst and life as musician

UMass graduate Adam Ajala followed his dreams of becoming a musician, forming the Yonder Mountain String Band.

By Lauren Modestte
Collegian Staff

Adam Ajala, (pronounced "age-ala"), has proven that you can find a career path outside of your major. Having graduated from the University of Massachusetts Amherst 16 years ago with a degree in Forestry, Ajala has found himself playing guitar for Colorado's popular jamgrass band, Yonder Mountain String Band.

"[During] the second half of my sophomore year I was still without a major," Ajala said. "I kind of feel like I was rushed to go to college." He went on to say that his parents had a large influence on his collegiate beginning and attending was the only way they would keep him "under their wing."

Ajala grew up in a town just outside of Worcester, called Sterling, and attended Wachussett High School. He began playing the electric guitar in 1986, when he was just 13 years old. Back then, his main influences were in punk and hardcore groups like Black Flag, the Dead Kennedy's and The Descendants. In high school, he began to listen to heavy metal groups like Metallica and Slayer. He finally picked up an acoustic guitar when he was 17 and began to partake in alternative extra-curricular activities that expanded his musical interest to Led Zeppelin, Jimi Hendrix and the Grateful Dead.

Ajala recalls an incident with a good friend of his, when he received his acceptance letter to UMass.

"I didn't want to go because [my friend] wasn't going," he said, adding that they were being very philosophical at that moment, or as philosophical as they could have been. "And when he got in his [car] I asked him what he was going to do and he said 'I'm going to live in the woods,' and I was like 'yeah!'"

"I was pretty young for eighteen," he said. "[but] I thought I was an adult." Ajala said that most teenagers believe they're more mature than they really are at that age. "I was in school and had no clue what I wanted to study. I met a couple dudes who were in Natural Resources and I was big into backpacking, hiking and just being outside, so I thought maybe I [would] study what's involved with that," he said.

Ajala added that he was going to go in a completely different direction in life.

"I was basically molded by my parents," he said, explaining that he had considered joining the Air Force after high school, only years before Desert Storm.

Ajala recalled that while he lived on campus, he resided in Central's renowned Van Meter hall, where he met some of his best friends, who were "in the same boat" as him. He talked about his time spent at The Spoke in Amherst Center and Antonio's on what is now referred to as "Club Sidewalk." He also referred to the Campus Center as the "Death Star," because "you could always picture the Millennium Falcon landing and it wouldn't look weird."

"I had a great time," he said. "It was a great school. I bet it's not all that different. When I was young it was voted the party school…my main memories are having fun with the people I met. I saw cool music like Quicksand, Rage Against the Machine and Phish…There was a lot of good music and a lot of good partying."

"It's so weird getting older," Ajala said. "You don't feel any different except that you have more life experience and are more charismatic."

A career in forestry was quickly dismissed after he had a couple major knee injuries and was unable to do the strenuous

See STRINGS on page 6

Canada represented

Ruffians and Caribou entertain at Iron Horse

By Alex Hornstock
Collegian Staff

Oct. 4 found two Canadian bands in top musical form at the Iron Horse in Northampton. Born Ruffians played an inspired set of creative pop before Caribou upped the ante with a percussive set of music and visuals, a treat for the eyes, the ears and the musical brain.

The show was the second of the night at the Iron Horse. Brooklyn songwriter Jonathan Coulton had performed at seven o'clock. As such, doors didn't open until 10:15, leaving the small crowd outside buzzing in anticipation for nearly an hour. Upon entry, most of the attendees sat down at the tables crowded at the back of the club or on the second-story balcony, leaving the dance floor empty.

Toronto band Born Ruffians took the stage just before eleven o'clock. The three band mates didn't look much older than the college-aged crowd and they brought to the stage a joyously youthful energy.

Guitarist and lead vocalist Luke Lalonde belted out the opening line off the title track off their upcoming album, "Red, Yellow and Blue," and drummer Steven Hamelin and bassist Mitch Deboisr soon followed suit, forming an a cappella round. Their voices didn't quite mesh, each off key by just a hair, but when the drums kicked in, these vocal imperfections added a likeable roughness to the band's sound.

Hamelin and Deboisr quickly locked into each other's pulse and formed an impressive rhythm section. It wasn't only the bass and drums, though – their voices were as much a part of the beat as their instruments. Responding to Lalonde's calls, their shouts and whoops provided a fitting backdrop for the lead singer's vocals. Lalonde's voice was one part Joey Jarrett of Animal Collective and one part Dave Longstreth of The Dirty Projectors, containing the expressive howl of the former and the agility of the latter.

A few songs into the set, a crowd member with a beer in his hand – likely not his first of the night – ran to the front of the stage and ordered the crowd to "stand up and rock out." Ten or so attendees obliged, partially filling the dance floor. It didn't seem to be enough, however – after the next song he turned around a declared "I'd like to see more participation this time."

"This is amazing," commented Lalonde. "We don't need banter or charisma of any kind. This song's for you – well, I guess the whole set's for you."

As Born Ruffians' set progressed, their musical aptitude became more and more evident as songs accelerated and decelerated, time signatures changed and harmonicas were broken out. Coming to their last song, the band announced that Caribou would soon be taking the stage. "Good things come in pairs," shouted an audience member. "Positive heckling," remarked an amused Lalonde.

The band's set, full of new songs, was an impressive collection of inspired, youthful rock. It was an indicator that the audience should be excited for "Red, Yellow and Blue," arriving in early 2008.

Exactly an hour after the start of Born Ruffians' set, Caribou took the stage with a literal bang. Without a sound check of any kind, Dan Snaith masterminid

See CARIBOU on page 6

Canadian-based bands Caribou and Born Ruffians showed off their musical skills at the Iron Horse on Thursday, October 4. Each band put on a great show and got the audience involved.

OCT 15 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, OCTOBER 15, 2007

"We have a natural right to make use of our pens as of our tongue, at our peril, risk and hazard." - Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The dark side of the golden years

Katy Bruck

America, much to the dread of many conservatives, is no longer a nation of the nuclear family. Increasingly, people are growing up in complex and diverse living situations. With real estate prices sky-rocketing and financing becoming more treacherous by the day, more and more people are living with extended families, including grandparents. I myself have been lucky enough to have lived with both my maternal grandparents for many years, and they played a large part in my growing up. I consider my life undeniably enriched by their involvement in it, and am aware of how much their generation has contributed to society. This same view is not often shared by everyone, however, particularly when it comes to health care.

Long term care facilities (nursing homes) are some of the most under-funded, under-staffed and generally unpleasant in the American health care system. My grandparents are lucky enough to have a large extended family that's cared for them as they have aged, but for those who have no wilfing family care, nursing homes are the only option. The expense of such facilities limits one's options. And unfortunately, the options grow fewer and less appealing if you happen to be gay.

In last week's New York Times, an article about the kind of discrimination and abuse that elderly gay people experience in nursing homes caught my eye. Working in a hospital, I see everyday the kind of impatience and occasional rudeness that can stem from under-staffing and stress. But, as any nurse or doctor will tell you, conditions in nursing homes can be tenfold worse than hospital conditions. And so often it's the elderly, who require the most frequent and intimate care, that bear the brunt of this redirected hostility. The idea that what is already uncomfortable and humiliating for most elderly people is even worse if that person is gay is horrifying to me – but not surprising.

The N.Y Times article tells the story of one particular gay woman who, upon sitting in a group of people making homophobic comments and jokes, had the courage to speak up. The results were reportedly instantaneous. She reported feeling like "a pariah," and became increasingly isolated. The depression that came as a result caused her physical condition to deteriorate, and she was lucky enough to be moved to one of the few facilities that actually caters to the gay and lesbian elderly. Despite what she had to go through to be moved, she was fortunate. The majority of the time, when such discrimination occurs among patients, the gay or lesbian individual is often moved to more isolated wards, typically where patients with more severe forms of dementia or Alzheimer's are housed.

Ignorance and intolerance are already aspects of aging that many people have to contend with.

Anyone who has had any experience working with the elderly (or who can imagine themselves in their situation for a moment) understands the constant threat of depression and isolation that already faces these individuals. For many people of our grandparents' generation, the idea of being a burden on society or a financial drain on their family is repulsive. For those who don't have family left, particularly widows and widowers, isolation alone often leads to severe depression and sometimes suicide. Suicide rates are actually highest among the elderly population in America. They represent 13% of the population, and 19% of all suicides.

If you compound the already present factors of depression and isolation with the kind of discrimination and abuse many elderly gay people face, the issue of their treatment becomes even more urgent.

Though a new, younger generation of gay men and lesbians is taking up the cause of spreading awareness and improving the care their older counterparts' experience, California is the only state in the nation that recognizes by law the unique situation facing the gay and lesbian elderly. It requires specific (but limited) training be administered to those who work with the gay elderly and provides state financing for projects and coalitions that are working to open gay senior centers and other special programs. But what about the other 49 states?

According to the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force, there are 30 million gay and lesbian elders in America today, and that number is expected to double in 30 years. This current generation of gay and lesbian individuals is still struggling with the same self-imposed stigmas of the era they grew up in, preferring to silently slide into obscurity than fear the treatment they might face if they are open with their health care providers. This is compounded by our so called 'modern' understanding of homosexuality, and the myths of its consequences. Home health aids are often cited for doing things like refusing to take off surgical gloves when caring for an openly gay patient, for fear of HIV infection (even when no symptoms are apparent). Ignorance and intolerance are already aspects of aging that many people have to contend with. Many young people today, if they are unfortunate enough not to have their grandparents in their lives everyday, forget about this segment of the population. We grumble about the future of Social Security and take up causes that affect us or those of our age, but what about the people who paved the way for us? However sad it might make us, perhaps it's time we gave a little thought to what it's like to grow old in a society that is often so damaging to those who are different.

Katy Bruck is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at kbruck@student.umass.edu

Some students have no class

Brad DeFlumeri

Why is it that liberal college students must generally dress so poorly? Why can't this generation find and appreciate the value in looking sharp, clean-cut and professional, as their eventual employers will undoubtedly demand of them? I dress respectably – slacks and a collared shirt – whenever possible. To me, this is the decent thing to do in the lecture hall of an academic professional who takes his craft very seriously. In response to my "dressing up" I am confronted with myriad stares, snickers and questions, many along the lines of: "who made you dress like that, or why are you dressed like that - what is your agenda?" These questions often emanate from shabby, shoeless, shower-less and generally detestable hippies who have no conception of what it would be like to go to a job interview, much less serve in the military. And this is where the culture gap or generational gap or sacrifice gap is most evident.

My time in the United States Navy instilled in me the value and necessity of always looking one's best; indeed, it consistently impressed upon me the importance of looking sharp and alert and their inextricable link to professionalism and competence – or at least the perception thereof. Yet at the same time we see this division of respect for authority, for formality, for officialdom actually breaking down along ideological lines on so many college campuses. At UMass and so many other schools, leftist and anti-war students routinely walk around barefoot, unclean and in a state that generally evokes revulsion. However, it is these very same students who are quick to question why I am "always so dressed up," as if I was ordered to do so by a vast right-wing corporate-military industrial complex conspiracy.

Looking and feeling good is indeed fundamentally antithetical to liberalism in the sense that dressing up is viewed as pandering to corporate elites or kowtowing to an ordered authoritarianism. But it is past time that the hippies wake up, smell the hookah, and realize that their barefoot ways will not be tolerated by future employees or even graduate school interview officials. To be sure, if there is one immutable product produced by our culture it is the notion that looking good – dressing well in particular – is synonymous with financial success and educational achievement. This may very well be an undesirable reality of an over-materialistic culture, but it cannot be denied that ours is a society that assigns a high esteem to the beautification of everything.

It is past time that the hippies wake up, smell the hookah and realize that their barefoot ways will not be tolerated.

But this liberal refusal to embrace conformity in the form of dressing well in college has other causes, too. Specifically, liberals view professionalism of any kind – dress, manner, regulations – as anathema simply because it conflicts with their deranged little world view that glorifies harmonious equality, equal achievement outcomes and mediocrity for all. With these things in mind, then, the typical hippie would argue that dressing up can only be thought of as embracing a conspiratorial, exploitative and overtly evil and racist capitalist structure. According to these hippies, the causative links between looking official and exploiting the poor, under-served victims in our society are clear and compelling.

What's important here is not what looking professional is truly synonymous with – probably ambition and little else – but the more overarching message that the hippies' grungy appearance sends: just as liberalism and socialism hold that because we can't all win financially in a free-market capitalist society we should therefore socialize the costs and benefits of all competitive phenomena, so too do these dirty hippies contend that since we can't all wear Armani, then we should all dress as barefoot hums. And from this convoluted logic it would also follow that since the rich earn more money than the poor, the government should compel the rich to subsidize the poor through that favorite technique of liberals – taxation.

These sentiments are absurd, reject traditional American values and are completely inconsistent with the reality that every college graduate will face when he or she leaves planet UMass and ventures out into the real world, especially corporate America.

Brad DeFlumeri is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bdeflume a student umas edu

Abusing the 'ol first amendment

Stephanie McPherson

One week ago, on Monday Oct. 8, Ann Coulter, best-selling author, was on the CNBC talk show The Big Idea, hosted by Donny Deutsch. The talk eventually rolled around to Coulter's dream world – and her response was shocking.

She said, "It would look like New York City during the [2004] Republican National Convention… people were happy. They're Christian. They're tolerant. They defend America." Deutsch, sure he must have misunderstood Coulter, asked, "It would be better if we were all Christian?" Coulter answered with a resounding "Yes."

Through the interview, she continued to say that Jews should be "perfected" into Christians. That Christianity is a "fast track."

The fact that she had the audacity to say things like that on national TV, and to say it with an air of firm belief, makes me think that she doesn't truly believe it. She can't truly believe it. But she said it. Which is scary! Because regardless of whether or not she believes that Jews should be perfected (as she extended her idea to Israel and to Jews across the world), there are people who would agree.

Intolerance is such a prevalent condition in America. We are supposed to be the home of the free – a country settled specifically to find freedom from religious persecution. The document that details our country's creation explicitly states that "all men are created equal." That is not the case. In fact, America has frequently flown directly in the face of the sentiment. The American economy was built on the enslavement of other human beings. New nationalities to America, during a time when the United States was advertised as an accepting melting pot, were discriminated against, the intolerance shown in signs on storefronts with phrases like "Irish need not apply."

Thank you, Ann Coulter, for representing a population of intolerant people. Your ideas are refreshingly antiquated and offensive.

You would think that as time progressed, the United States would catch on the fact that we aren't upholding our own constitution. There is homophobia, Anti-Semitism and racism in every degree. Xenophobia is running rampant. But we're America. So things like this shouldn't happen here. So many people turn a blind eye.

But another question comes up. Are people actually ignoring these issues, or are they just ignorant enough to think, as a CNN reporter said, that Ann Coulter is just a crazy aunt that they'd rather ignore?

She wouldn't be saying these things if there wasn't a subset of the American population who felt the same way. If she truly was just the "crazy aunt" who said crazy things that people could just brush off, she wouldn't ignite the controversy that she does. That she has such an effect on American society proves that her comments pull some weight and should be taken seriously.

Sure, people get upset every time Ann Coulter comes up with a new racial slur or anti-Semitic comment, but has anyone tried to stop her? News stations are still interviewing her, even though she has a history of angering the general population whenever she makes a TV appearance.

Ira Forman, the executive director of the Nation Jewish Democratic Council said in an interview with CBSNews.com, "While Ann Coulter has freedom of speech, news outlets should exercise their freedom to use better judgment…Just as media outlets don't invite those who believe that Martians walk the earth to frequently comment on science stories, it's time they stop inviting Ann Coulter to comment on politics."

Forman has a valid and strong point. Why is she continuously invited to speak? It must be for ratings. There is no other explanation. But the fact that the networks exploit Coulter's outrageous comments to get more viewers and more publicity is almost as bad as Coulter saying these things herself.

If we continue down this path of intolerance, the consequences are frightening to think about. The Crusades, most of World War II and a large portion of today's Iraq War have been fought because of conflicting beliefs. Billions of people have been murdered because of conflicting beliefs. And now, with the threat of nuclear weapons, here's a new thought. If we enter a nuclear war because of conflicting beliefs, do people realize that there is nowhere else to go? We can't inhabit the moon or Mars. If we destroy this world, there is no other. Then where are we? Probably still hating, but hating in a nuclear winter. Yeah, that'd be worth it.

So thank you, Ann Coulter, for representing a population of intolerant people. Your ideas are refreshingly antiquated and offensive. Thank you for spreading your ignorance about "religious theology and interfaith issues," as put by the Anti-Defamation League in a statement condemning Coulter. I'm glad our nation has a celebrity like you to emulate.

Stephanie McPherson is a Collegian editor. She can be reached at smcpher a student umass edu.

While they shout, who's listening?

Ted Rogers

I follow world politics pretty religiously. One story I've been watching in particular is the civil unrest going on in Burma. Burma's monks, the cornerstone of civility in the small country's military regime, have been launching peaceful political protests over the past couple of weeks. It's weird though. The first thought that comes into my mind really isn't a political one. It tends to be more along the lines of, "man…I bet those guys smell a whole lot better than our protestors here."

I'm sorry if you've already heard the joke about the unpresentable UMass hippie, but let's be honest. Some stereotypes are there because they're absolutely true. It seems like every protest, rally and verb-in I've been to have been mostly populated by people who look like they were in an experiment involving soap deprivation, clothes that are vintage for a definite reason and a vindictive nose-piercer.

Most of you are probably asking yourselves why this matters to me. After all, freedom of expression is just as important as freedom of speech. And if a white dude with dreadlocks has something important to say about global warming, or anything else, for that matter, who should I be to trash talk him?

I guess my problem is that when that guy with the tie-dye – or the girl who looks like she had her eyebrow attacked by a stapler – gets up and starts speaking, I'm usually in complete concurrence with them. Yet at the same time, I'm worldly enough to know that no one is going to listen to them. Put it this way – Do you think if Martin Luther King Junior wore the same horrible shirt everyday, he'd have garnered a reasonable amount of respect from everybody? Or, do you think there'd be all that many Catholics if the Pope had a giant septum ring? I'm the first one to admit that categorizing people on the basis of their fashion choices is a fairly rotten ideal, but on the other hand, it happens.

Do you recall any recent protests that have significantly swayed government policy?

And honestly, I think the implications go a bit further than that "liberal activists look kind of scruffy." I mean, do you recall any recent protests that have significantly swayed government policy? I'd be willing to make a bet that the White House takes one look at the people there and laughs it off as a "vocal minority".

To give an example, in September of 2005 there was a protest outside the White House with over 500,000 people in attendance. It was mainly over the war in Iraq, but somehow there was enough space for global warming people, marijuana reformers and pro-choice activists to have their space as well. Oh, and Jello Biafra of "Dead Kennedys" fame hosted it. I guess nothing says "America wants a new course in a liberal direction" like having a singer from a terrible punk band MC your gig.

The reason I mention this protest in particular is because I was invited to go to it. Even though I really hadn't formed my political ideology yet, it seemed like a waste of time. That, and the girl whom invited me said the main drawing point was, and I quote, "there's going to be a bunch of good weed there." Now, I'm not going to claim to be an expert on what makes a protest have an impact on a political machine. But I will say that it probably does not behoove you to take an enormous bong rip between coming up with new chants on how George Bush should be impeached. Just a thought.

Needless to say, this protest really didn't have the desired effect. The meat grinder in the middle-east is still churning, the globe is still getting warmer. As far as I'm aware, the right for a woman to choose is still deadlocked with the rights of the unborn. And marijuana? Illegal as ever. On a pleasant side note, the girl who invited me had a fun time, especially when the all-night rock concert started.

So, the next time you read about some various cause being encroached upon by a heartless political machine, don't just blame the guys in charge. You know that old saying, "with friends like that, who needs enemies?" Well, it's more than a little true.

I'm not saying that when you protest a wrong, you need to dress up as a Buddhist monk, or even like one of those suspiciously well-groomed young Republican types. But, here's the thing: if there is a cause for you worthy enough to give up some of your free time to express your feelings, than it's worth doing it in a serious manner. Next time you try to show the world what cause you support, enjoy yourself, act smart and don't leave your dignity back in your room.

Ted Rogers is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at twrogers a student umass edu.

DAILY COLLEGIAN READER POLL

A lecture at the New Africa House this Wednesday will present the idea of free higher education. Is it a good one?

☐ Yes ☐ No ☐ Maybe

Cast your vote online at www.dailycollegian.com!

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, OCTOBER 15, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Herter hosts life experiences turned artwork

Pieces by UMass professor shown in on-campus gallery

University of Massachusetts professor Hanlyn Davies takes life experiences and turns them into art. He is showcasing his work, from paintings to photographs to lithographic prints, in Herter Art Gallery until November 10.

BY ANDREA MURRAY
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

UMass faculty member and fine artist Hanlyn Davies' work of 35 years was celebrated at the opening of his show "Inside Out: Works by Hanlyn Davies, 1972-2007" at Herter Art Gallery on Thursday Oct. 11.

The gallery was packed with a variety of art aficionados including art students, Davies' peers and friends and the general student body. Davies stood out from the crowd dressed in a cornflower blue jacket, green shirt and black slacks. Friends and fans alike showered him with compliments and praise for his work, which consisted of large-scale paintings, offset lithographs, handmade paper and photographic prints.

"Right now my focus is on painting," he said. "However, I am thinking that I would like to do some more prints – some offset lithography and some digital prints."

Davies has been a Fine Arts Department faculty member in painting at the UMass since 1970. He was born in 1942 in Wales, United Kingdom. He studied at Swansea University in the U.K. and at Yale for Art and Architecture. He has been involved with art since he was very young and even won a national U.K. art competition at the age of 16. His prize was a weekend trip to the Woburn Abbey, the ancestral home of the Duke of Bedford. The Duke's art collection, which included works by Rembrandt and Canaletto, left a profound effect on Davies. He has received numerous fellowship awards and other awards such as UMass Distinguished Teaching Award. He has exhibited extensively in the USA, Europe and Asia.

Personal experience has proved to be important for Davies. "For the most part my personal experiences, places where I have lived, events in my life and things that I think about are what inspire me," he said. "I hope to convey a view of my world to my audience," he continued during an interview the day after the exhibit opened.

The exhibit was divided into three rooms – one for his paintings, one for his offset lithographs and one that housed both his paper making works and his photography. Davies' subject matter appears to be happened upon, and then molded into what he wishes, whether it be with a camera, a printing press, acrylics and oils or a paper maker.

His hand-made paper works, the "Private Beaches" collection, played with different textures and colors. What is most interesting about this series is that they were all made of debris that he had found on a beach, which he then put into hand-made paper.

Davies' photographs in this room focused on discarded objects such as piles of compost. He celebrates the rich hues and varying textures of the generally looked over subject. Rotting fruit never looked so good; the beauty of the varying colors in the stages of rotting are zoomed in on and can be appreciated from the safe distance of a photograph. A few other photos such as "March 19[(Hanlyn Davies and his Father)" played with double exposures and showed glimpses into Davies' personal life.

In the next room his paintings draw eyes in with exquisite use of rich tones. Most of the paintings in this room are of a significant size, around 82" in height. His works "Hryniec Lights Calennig," (2007), and "Parallax Landseer I And How He Was Led Astray I," (1987-90), display a mastery of technique, color exploration and attention to detail.

There are more lithographic prints than anything else in the exhibit and they fill an entire room. They include several variations on his work with rubber bands. "Black Jumble," (1976), is a dizzying display of varied sizes, shapes and colors of rubber bands that overlap and build to fill the entire picture. Others, such as "Flip Flop," (1976), move away from overwhelming textures and ideas, and instead lean more toward showing simplicity and parallel harmonious worlds. Davies says these prints were controversial in the 1970s and '80s and stirred debate in the art world.

"There were questions as to their validity as 'fine art' prints because they were made in commercial printing establishments on high speed printing presses; and, as such, smacked of commercial mass' reproduction; a word that was anathema to the very notion of the hand-crafted, limited edition fine art print," he said.

"It was of course self-serving, misplaced snobbery, on the part of those dealers, artists, educators, who were self-protective of their own territory," he added. "These days this is not an issue."

The retrospective of his work runs until Friday Nov. 10.

Andrea Murray can be reached at akmurray a student umass edu.

UM grad reflects on time at Amherst and life as musician

UMass graduate Adam Ajala followed his dreams of becoming a musician, forming the Yonder Mountain String Band.

BY LAUREN MODESTE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Adam Ajala, (pronounced "age-ala"), has proven that you can find a career path outside of your major. Having graduated from the University of Massachusetts Amherst 16 years ago with a degree in Forestry, Ajala has found himself playing guitar for Colorado's popular jamgrass band, Yonder Mountain String Band.

"[During] the second half of my sophomore year I was still without a major," Ajala said. "I kind of feel like I was rushed to go to college." He went on to say that his parents had a large influence on his collegiate beginning and attending was the only way they would keep him "under their wing."

Ajala grew up in a town just outside of Worcester, called Sterling, and attended Wachussett High School. He began playing the electric guitar in 1986, when he was just 13 years old. Back then, his main influences were in punk and hardcore groups like Black Flag, the Dead Kennedy's and The Descendants. In high school, he began to listen to heavy metal groups like Metallica and Slayer. He finally picked up an acoustic guitar when he was 17 and began to partake in alternative extra-curricular activities that expanded his musical interest to Led Zeppelin, Jimi Hendrix and the Grateful Dead.

Ajala recalls an incident with a good friend of his, when he received his acceptance letter to UMass.

"I didn't want to go because [my friend] wasn't going," he said, adding that they were being very philosophical at that moment, or as philosophical as they could have been. "And when he got in his [car] I asked him what he was going to do and he said 'I'm going to live in the woods,' and I was like 'yeah!'"

"I was pretty young for eighteen," he said. "[but] I thought I was an adult." Ajala said that most teenagers believe they're more mature than they really are at that age. "I was in school and had no clue what I wanted to study. I met a couple dudes who were in Natural Resources and I was big into backpacking, hiking and just being outside, so I thought maybe I [would] study what's involved with that," he said.

Ajala added that he was going to go in a completely different direction in life.

"I was basically molded by my parents," he said, explaining that he had considered joining the Air Force after high school, only years before Desert Storm.

Ajala recalled that while he lived on campus, he resided in Central's renowned Van Meter hall, where he met some of his best friends, who were "in the same boat" as him. He talked about his time spent at the Spoke in Amherst Center and Antonio's on what is now referred to as "Club Sidewalk." He also referred to the Campus Center as the "Death Star," because "you could always picture the Millenium Falcon landing and it wouldn't look weird."

"I had a great time," he said. "It was a great school. I bet it's not all that different. When I was young it was voted the party school…my main memories are having fun with the people I met. I saw cool music like Quicksand, Rage Against the Machine and Phish…There was a lot of good music and a lot of good partying."

"It's so weird getting older," Ajala said. "You don't feel any different except that you have more life experience and are more charismatic."

A career in forestry was quickly dismissed after he had a couple major knee injuries and was unable to do the strenuous

See STRINGS on page 6

Canada represented

Ruffians and Caribou entertain at Iron Horse

BY ALEX HORNSTOCK
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Oct. 4 found two Canadian bands on top musical form at the Iron Horse in Northampton. Born Ruffians played an inspired set of creative pop before Caribou topped the ante with a percussive set of music and visuals, a treat for the eyes, the ears and the musical brain.

The show was the second of the night at the Iron Horse. Brooklyn songwriter Jonathan Coulton had performed at seven o'clock. As such, doors didn't open until 10:15, leaving the small crowd outside buzzing in anticipation for nearly an hour. Upon entry, most of the attendees sat down at the tables crowded at the back of the club or on the second-story balcony, leaving the dance floor empty.

Toronto band Born Ruffians took the stage just before eleven o'clock. The three band mates didn't look much older than the college-aged crowd and they brought to the stage a joyously youthful energy.

Guitarist and lead vocalist Luke Lalonde belted out the opening line off the title track off their upcoming album, "Red, Yellow and Blue," and drummer Steven Hamelin and bassist Mitch Deboisier soon followed suit, forming an a cappella round. Their voices didn't quite mesh; each off key by just a hair, but when the drums kicked in, these vocal imperfections added a likeable roughness to the band's sound.

Hamelin and Deboisier quickly locked into each other's pulse and formed an impressive rhythm section. It wasn't only the bass and drums though – their voices were as much a part of the beat as their instruments. Responding to Lalonde's calls, their shouts and whoops provided a fitting backdrop for the lead singer's vocals. Lalonde's voice was one part Ayes Tare of Animal Collective and one part Dave Longstreth of The Dirty Projectors, containing the expressive howl of the former and the agility of the latter.

A few songs into the set, a crowd member with a beer in his hand likely not his first of the night – ran to the front of the stage and ordered the crowd to "stand up and rock out." Ten or so attendees obliged, partially filling the dance floor. It didn't seem to be enough, however – after the next song he turned around a declared "I'd like to see more participation this time."

"This is amazing," commented Lalonde. "We don't need banter or charisma of any kind. This song's for you – well, I guess the whole set's for you."

As Born Ruffians' set progressed, their musical aptitude became more and more evident as songs accelerated and decelerated, time signatures changed and harmonicas were broken out. Coming to their last song, the band announced that Caribou would soon be taking the stage. "Good things come in pairs," shouted an audience member. "Positive heckling," remarked an amused Lalonde.

The band's set, full of new songs, was an impressive collection of inspired, youthful rock. It was an indicator that the audience should be excited for "Red, Yellow and Blue," arriving in early 2008.

Exactly an hour after the start of Born Ruffians' set, Caribou took the stage with a literal bang. Without a sound check of any kind, Dan Snaith unsentimind

See CARIBOU on page 6

Canadian-based bands Caribou and Born Ruffians showed off their musical skills at the Iron Horse on Thursday, October 4. Each band put on a great show and got the audience involved.

OCT 15 2007

OCT
15
2007

Massachusetts native returns to Northeast

Yonder String Mountain Band was formed by Adam Aijala after his move to Colorado. The group, considered "jamgrass" or "newgrass" rather than bluegrass, has released six CD's and formed their own record label.

STRINGS page 5

work. He did, however, mention that he hated all of the jobs he had before forming Yonder Mountain String Band.

Aijala moved to Nederland, CO after graduating because he had heard about the great music scene in Boulder. He quickly realized the stories were true. After moving, he started to concentrate on playing guitar for at least five hours a day. Eventually, he met fellow band mates Dave Johnston, banjo, and Jeff Austin, mandolin, with Ben Kauffman, standup bass, at Club Verve. They formed Yonder Mountain String Band in 1998 and began the wild journey of becoming rock stars.

Since then, they have released six studio recordings, formed their own label (Frog Pads Record Label), played at many festivals and toured with other bands, including Umphrey's Mcgee.

"The Northeast is the hardest place to crack," Aijala said. "Northampton does better for us than Boston." He said that if there isn't a good turn out at the Boston show on Thursday Oct. 18, they probably won't return to the area. They usually sell between one and two thousand tickets all over the country, and the Northeast has been incredibly difficult.

Aijala finished off the conversation saying that he doesn't consider Yonder Mountain String Band to be a bluegrass band.

"Visually we look like a bluegrass band but sonically, we're not," he said. Other sources have dubbed Yonder as "jamgrass" or "newgrass."

"If you don't listen to bluegrass, we're bluegrass. We have bluegrass instrumentation…we're kind of bastard children of bluegrass. I don't know, we're Yonder Mountain, we don't sound like anyone else," he said.

Lauren Modisette can be reached at lmodiset@student.umass.edu.

Caribou showcases range of musical talents at Noho show behind the Caribou moniker) and drummer Brad Weber attacked the two drum sets on stage, catching most of the still-chatting audience off guard. After a minute of synchronized drumming, a drone announced the beginning of "Sandy," the second song off Snaith's new album "Andorra."

CARIBOU from page 5

While the delicate pop harmonies of the recorded song were still there, faithfully recreated by Snaith and bassist Andy Lloyd, the song was transformed into a driving practice in percussion. Coupled with swirling patterns projected onto the band, the song was an exciting indication of what the rest of the set would be like.

After equally explosive renditions of "After Hours," another new track, and "Skunks," a highlight from Snaith's second album, "Up In Flames," the band launched into "Bijoux." Already, Snaith had played drums, guitar and sang lead vocals, and now he hopped onto glockenspiel before taking out a melodica.

Throughout the set he remained intently focused on whatever instrument he played, breaking out in smiles only between songs. It was fascinating to watch him jump from job to job, equally talented on every instrument he picked up. His return to the drum set was always a treat, however, as the intense unity with Weber made for a rhythm section unmatched in power or skill in any other live show.

"Bees," a song off 2005's "The Milk of Human Kindness," was a standout in Caribou's set. With a simple guitar riff and chugging rhythm, it wouldn't be tough to imagine the track coming from Neu! or another classic krautrock band. With a passing yellow street line projected over the band, they honed in on the groove and never let go, relishing in the song's simple rhythm.

"Melody Day," however, was the highlight of the night. Caribou's best song to date, the band successfully recreated it with all the epic orchestration of the studio version. Snaith again manned drums and vocals, and the explosion of sound after the song's false ending was the most powerful moment of the evening.

The set ended as abruptly as it had started, with the sudden conclusion to "Barnowl" off "The Milk of Human Kindness." Though the crowd responded enthusiastically, there was no encore, and none was needed – the set was a cohesive, contained collection of propelled music that required no coda. Snaith successfully turned his beautiful, often complex studio recordings into exhilarating live pieces, fleshed out by his talented band and his own impressive musical abilities.

Alex Hornbeck can be reached at ahornbec@student.umass.edu

Caribou performed songs off of a mix of albums at the show on October 4. The audience was entertained with instruments ranging from drums to glockenspiel to melodica.

WE HAVE EVERYTHING YOU NEED INCLUDING
STORE HOURS 7 DAYS A WEEK!

Monday - Thursday	8:30 am	-	6:00 pm
Friday	8:30 am	-	5:00 pm
Saturday	11:00 am	-	5:00 pm
Sunday	12:00 pm	-	5:00 pm

UMass Amherst University of Massachusetts
University Store and Textbook Annex
Amherst Campus Center • 413-545-2619 efollett.com ONLINE. ON CAMPUS.

Big plays seal UM win

FOOTBALL from page 10

fumbled on third down on the ensuing possession, negating what would have resulted in a 34-yard field goal attempt by Koeppin for the victory.

Lawrence bounced back in the second overtime, scoring on a 4-yard touchdown run after Coen's 15-yard pass to Moore. But the game would head to another overtime, as Whitney capped off his 26 yards rushing on the drive on a 9-yard touchdown run. The game came close to ending on Whitney's second carry of the overtime, as Hatchell popped the ball loose – but it came right back into the hands of the Villanova signal-caller.

In the following overtime the teams traded field goals, with Villanova connecting first from 41 yards out and UMass afterward from 23 yards.

UMass wasted little time in the fourth overtime session. Coen hit Michael Omar for 14 yards and Lawrence ran it in the rest of the way for his second touchdown after regulation. Coen and Moore hooked up for the two point conversion, giving the Minutemen an 8-point lead.

Villanova appeared to be in some trouble on third down and long, but Whitney – just as he did for much of the game – scrambled in the pocket and escaped for a 15-yard gain. After a 1-yard run by Phil Atkinson, Whitney threw two incompletions, setting up a fourth-and-goal at the UMass 7-yard line.

After buying time with his legs, Whitney threw the ball up to the left side of the end zone, looking for Ridley. The 6-foot-4 Ridley leaped up high in the air and extended his arms – looking to haul in the high pass from Whitney. With Hatchell and Jeremy Miles all over him, the ball slipped through the hands of Ridley and fell to the ground.

"Well, obviously it was an outstanding game," Villanova coach Andy Talley said. "It was probably as good an effort in 23 years at Villanova as we've ever had."

The overtime periods – full of big plays and big-time excitement – was vastly different to the action in the first half. UMass had no success on offense in the first half, accumulating just five first downs and going 1-for-6 on third down conversions. The closest it came to scoring was on a 45-yard field goal that was blocked by Osayi Osunde in the second quarter.

Villanova place-kicker Joe Marcoux connected on field goals from 37 and 27 yards out, giving the Wildcats a 6-0 lead entering the half. The strong running of tailback Matt Dicken (35 carries, 172 yards) helped set up the field goals.

UMass took the lead on a long drive in the third quarter, converting twice on fourth downs – with the second conversion resulting in a 13-yard touchdown pass to a wide open Ian Jorgensen. The Minutemen first gambled on fourth down (4th and 1) on their own 32-yard line, gaining four yards on a screen pass to Moore. The touchdown came on a fourth-and-four at the 13-yard line.

The Wildcats took the lead again six minutes into the fourth quarter, when Whitney hit tight end Matthew Sherry for an 18-yard score. The two hooked up again for the two-point conversion, giving Villanova the 14-7 lead. Coen's touchdown to Sanford with 2:09 remaining set the game up for overtime.

Game Notes

The Wildcats played without starting quarterback Antwon Young, who injured his left knee last weekend … Saturday's contest marked the first-career start for Whitney … Villanova completed one pass (4 yards) in the first half … Whitney threw for 134 yards and gained 83 yards rushing … Coen went 21-of-34 passing for 355 yards and two TD's … Rasheed Rancher made numerous big plays, gaining a career-high 155 yards on eight receptions … Moore had 7 catches for 138 yards.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@student.umass.edu.

Writer offers solution for OT

RICE from page 10

On the other side of this debate is the National Football League's overtime procedure. Flip the coin, pick a side; first one to score wins. Seems pretty simple, right? Well, it is – perhaps too simple. Many critics argue that it's not a fair policy because it gives the winner of the coin toss a heavy advantage.

My answer to them has always been, "I guess so." In my mind, if you can't stop them on their first possession in overtime, you don't deserve to win anyway.

But there is some validity to that argument. The biggest example came on a Thanksgiving Day 1998, in a game between the Detroit Lions and Pittsburgh Steelers. Jerome Bettis called tails on the overtime coin toss. The referee mistakenly heard heads, awarded the Lions the ball and Detroit scored on that opening possession. Pittsburgh lost because of the coin toss.

Well if neither solution works for anyone, how about we find some common ground somewhere in the middle.

The college-style shootout just isn't efficient (can you imagine if soccer counted shootout goals toward the final score? You'd see 8-7 final scores for a European football match). And yet sudden-death overtime has its faults because you have no chance to respond to a score. In fact, sudden-death may be better-suited for hockey, where possession is a much less rigid concept.

My solution is simple. If the score is tied after four quarters, toss the coin and kick the ball off. If the first team scores, kick it off again and see if the second team scores. If not, Team 1 wins. If Team 2 scores as well, do it again.

If Team 1 fails to score, they punt the ball (or Team 2 takes it from the spot of any possible turnover) and Team 2 takes it the other way. One possible alternate plan would be to kickoff at the start of every possession not just the first, but that's still simply not how football is supposed to be played.

Having to start with a kickoff instead of at the opponent's 25-yard line makes it harder to score and should make for fewer quadruple-overtime games that go on longer than necessary. And giving teams a chance to respond to a score makes it a more fair choice than sudden death.

Here's how the UMass-Villanova game would have played out. UMass won the coin toss and as always, deferred the honors and took the ball second, so Villanova would take the opening kickoff.

If they failed to score, UMass would get the ball back and if they scored, the game would be over. If not, they would punt and both teams would get one more possession.

That sounds much more like a real football game to me. I've also heard it suggested that the teams start back at the 40-yard line instead of the 25, while keeping the current shootout style. However, the half-court football concept still doesn't sit well with me. When you begin your drive in field goal range, you might as well sit deep in your seat or cold metal bleacher, because you're going to be there for a while.

If anyone has a better suggestion, I'm all ears, even if the NFL and NCAA aren't. I just hope we don't reach a stalemate. I'm not sure how we would ever resolve that one.

Jeremy Rice is a Collegian Columnist. He can be reached at jcremyr@student.umass.edu.

Pair provides unique dynamic in center

CENTER BACKS from page 10

Cook and Brown are a perpetual factor on corner and free kicks in the offensive third. Since the defenders are two of the tallest players on the team, they effectively use their size in front of the net to field headers and jockey for position.

Though the pair has struggled to convert on set pieces this season, along with the rest of the team, Cook scored off of a throw-in against Hartford on Oct. 6. Under normal circumstances, either Cook or Brown joins the forwards in front of the net, while the other remains in a defensive position.

The chemistry between the two players cannot be understated. Since the pair has played together in the center for the past three seasons, they've developed a good feel for each other's position on the field.

"We've played so many games together, we just know how to get each other to focus on the game and to be in position," Cook said after Friday's win over Dayton. "We just understand each other a lot."

While Brown is more reserved on the field, Cook is one of the team's vocal leaders in all parts of the field. Even when Cook is not helping in the offensive zone, the captain can be heard directing his teammates into position for corner and free kick attempts.

"We work well together. He's a lot more vocal than I am and he helps the team out by being the big presence," Brown said.

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu.

Mark DeSantis scores twice against UD

MEN'S SOCCER from page 10

Hogan controlled the ball with his chest and quickly shot it toward Sokolowski, who made the initial save. The ball rolled loose and Hogan gathered the rebound, dribbled around the grounded goalkeeper and tucked it into the right side of the goal. It was his third goal of the season and the assist was the first point of the year for Cirillo.

The Minutemen controlled the pace throughout the match despite the play of Xavier. UMass plays a strong physical style, which caused problems for the opposing forwards, who rely mostly on finesse and ball skills. At times, the physicality became overwhelming for a few XU players as they blatantly flopped after seemingly clean tackles from UMass players.

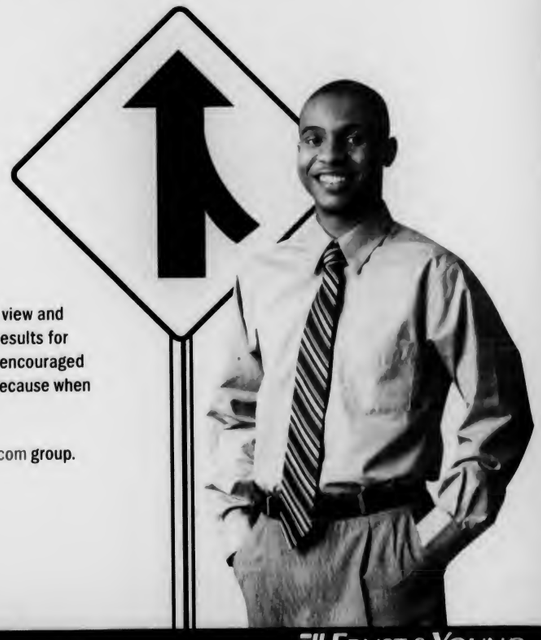
One such instance resulted in the game's first booking. Junior midfielder Mike DeSantis perfectly timed a tackle of Xavier leading scorer El-Hadji Dieng. The freshman, however, tripped over the ball and grabbed his leg. The referee immediately pulled a yellow card from his pocket. Dieng quickly rose from the ground following the play and showed no signs of injury, despite spending a considerable amount of time on the ground.

The physical play continued and resulted in Xavier's lone scoring opportunity of the second half – which it didn't waste. Immediately after checking into the game, sophomore Ricardo Sutherland dribbled into the UMass penalty area, where sophomore Dan Lepone tried to dispossess him, but missed the ball and tripped Sutherland. The referee immediately pointed to the penalty mark, thus awarding the Musketeers a penalty kick.

Sutherland lined the penalty kick to the left of redshirt junior goalkeeper Zack Simmons to tie the game.

Amick's tally came five minutes later. Sophomore Mark DeSantis won a 50-50 ball and waited for a streaking Amick to break toward the goal. He flipped the ball over his left shoulder into an open left flank. Amick gathered it and crossed into the center. Sokolowski tried to cut it off, but missed the ball, allowing it to deflect off the defender and into the goal.

Mark DeSantis was also a catalyst in the Minutemen's win over Dayton. He scored the first and second goals of his career before freshman Ben Arikian added the first goal of his career in the 80th minute.



"It felt great," Mark DeSantis said of scoring the first goal of his career. "I just try to work hard for my teammates and I hope they keep coming."

DeSantis' first goal was a product of a halftime adjustment. Assistant coach Jon Davy told the UMass forwards that the Flyer defenders were giving them a lot of space to work with. So after receiving a pass from Hogan about 20 yards from the goal, DeSantis waited for the defender to commit before turning and sending a shot over the shoulder of the Dayton goalkeeper.

Joe Meloni can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu.

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)

Different perspectives. One goal.

Bringing together people with different points of view and backgrounds is the surest way to deliver quality results for our clients. That's why at Ernst & Young you'll be encouraged to speak up and make your unique contribution. Because when you grow and succeed, so do we.

Visit us at ey.com/us/careers and our Facebook.com group.

FORTUNE 100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR 2007
#25 on the list.

Audit • Tax • Transaction Advisory Services
ERNST & YOUNG
Quality In Everything We Do
© 2007 Ernst & Young LLP

Terriers best UMass squads

Sprinters excel in freestyle events, divers strong on boards

By Miki Gelsbuster
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's and women's swimming and diving teams suffered their first defeat at the hands of the Boston University Terriers in their season-opening dual meet Saturday. The men's team lost 124-119, while the women's team lost by a score of 143-100.

Sophomore Juan Molitere led the way for the Minutemen, as he earned first place finishes in both the 50-yard freestyle and the 100-yard freestyle. Freshman Max Butler finished first in the 200-yard individual medley and senior captain Zack Priest finished first in the 200-yard butterfly.

The meet started for the men with the 400-yard medley relay and trouble began early when Priest left the platform early in transition, causing his relay team to be disqualified.

The Maroon and White took first place in six events out of a possible 13. The two teams kept the score close throughout the entire meet, as UMass had seven second-place finishes and three third-place finishes. Meanwhile, the Terriers had four second-place finishes and eight third-place finishes.

The Minutemen still had a chance to win up until the 200-yard breaststroke. However, BU scored 15 points in the race, putting them ahead for good. UMass was only able to muster a second-place finish by freshman Brian Schmidt.

The Minutemen ended the meet well, taking first and second place in the 400-yard freestyle relay.

According to UMass men's coach Russ Yarworth, the team squandered several opportunities to put points on the board because of costly mistakes. Yarworth believes that the team needs to work on turn dynamics in distance races so his swimmers can have a better push off of the wall.

The coach believes that although his athletes performed with exceptional intensity, this meet meant something different for both teams.

"Our goal is to win a championship at the end of the season," Yarworth said. "If we learn from those mistakes and don't make them, then we become a better team."

Senior R.J. Rappe was the lone factor for the Minutemen in diving. Rappe was the only UMass diver to place in the top three in either the one or three-meter dive. He won the one-meter dive and placed second in the three-meter.

The meet was not as close for the Minutewomen.

Junior Cecelia Jenkins notched the only individual victory for the team. Jenkins earned first place in the 50-yard freestyle. Senior captain Allison Volpe took third place and freshman Jennifer Cornveau took fourth.

The Maroon and White also swept in the women's 400-yard freestyle relay. Jenkins was in the winning lane, as was Volpe.

Junior Christa Narus finished second in the 200-yard freestyle and also in the 500-yard freestyle.

The 200-yard backstroke was also a good race for the Minutewomen, as they took second, third and fourth place. In that race, the Maroon and White were led by sophomore Elizabeth Walsh.

UMass women's coach Bob Newcomb noted that after this meet, he saw that he needs to change the team's weekly training regimen. The distance swimmers will now undergo their usual workouts at a higher level of intensity. The stroke swimmers (backstroke, breaststroke and butterfly) will have altered training as well.

Newcomb is pleased with the team's overall effort and suggested that BU beat his team outright, not due to a lack of effort. He prefers to look towards the future.

"It's not how we're swimming on Oct. 13," Newcomb said. "It's about how we're swimming in February. This is a real good opportunity to see where we are and move on from there."

The divers for the Minutewomen were significant contributors to how the team fared as well.

Junior Karen Upperco earned second place in both the one and three-meter diving events. Junior Sarah Horstmann took fourth in the one-meter and third in the three-meter.

UMass diving coach Mandy Hixon was pleased by the progress that the divers showed at this meet. Hixon intended to use this meet as a checkpoint to determine her divers' progress in terms of honing their skills. She was not disappointed with the result.

"I thought they did well," Hixon said. "Our young divers are coming along and the veterans did a nice job. We had tough competition today and we did pretty well."

UMass will face BU again in November at the Boston University Terrier Invitational. The Maroon and White will compete next against Stony Brook on Friday in its second home meet of the season.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

Goals at a premium

Minutewomen struggle on offense, salvage one A-10 win

By Justin McGrail
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts field hockey team split its two games this weekend. It beat St. Joseph's 1-0, on Sunday and lost to Temple, 2-1, on Friday.

The Minutewomen will continue conference play this weekend. They are traveling to St. Louis to take on the Billikens and are hosting the Richmond Spiders on Sunday, which is Senior Day for UMass field hockey.

Sophomore Christina Rodgers scored her first career goal to give UMass the victory against the Hawks. Both UMass (8-7, 3-1 Atlantic 10) and St. Joseph's (7-7, 2-2 A-10) were in a defensive struggle for most of the first half but UMass was awarded a free hit and it capitalized.

UMass	1
St. Joe's	0
UMass	1
Temple	2

After the free hit, Katelyn Orlando shot the ball, but her attempt was blocked by a defender. Rodgers was there and used a reverse stick move to beat Hawk goalkeeper Rebecca Cunfer for the only score of the game.

Reserve players played a key role against the Hawks. In addition to Rodgers' goal, junior Lauren Gillespie and freshman Katie Kelly contributed in the UMass win. The three had five of the Minutewomen's seven shots on goal.

The defense did the rest of the work for UMass, while only allowing two shots on goal – both of which Senior Becky Letourneau saved. The team also neutralized three consecutive penalty corners from the Hawks.

UMass also made Cunfer work. The Maroon and White either got shot on net directly from a penalty corner, or were able to hit multiple shots at a time. The shut-out of Temple (12-5, 3-1 A-10) is the third out of the first four conference games the Minutewomen have played.

Letourneau improved her record to 4-5 on the season and has four shut-outs. She has started the last four games for the Minutewomen and they have a 3-1 record. UMass had the advantage in shots, 7-2, but was outnumbered in penalty corners, 7-4. The latest win puts the Maroon and White in a three-way tie for first in the division with Richmond and Temple.

UMass opened its weekend at Temple and lost a competitive game. Kasey Ruth scored with less than three minutes left in the game to put the Minutewomen away. The first half of the game was scoreless, but Temple struck first when Kasey Ruth was alone on a breakaway and beat Letourneau for her first goal of the game.

The Minutewomen tied things up when they were awarded a penalty corner. The ball was inserted to Sophomore Cher King, who put a shot on net that Kelly tipped past Temple goalie Erin Hanshue for her third goal of the year. King's assist gave her three for the year and she leads the team with 17 points.

Temple was awarded a penalty corner and Letourneau saved the initial shot from Ashley Bird. Ruth was there to pick up the rebound and bounced the ball off of Letourneau's pads, into the net for the game-winner.

Both teams had six shots and seven penalty corners. King and Kelly each fired three shots at Hanshue.

Justin McGrail can be reached at jwmcgrai@student.umass.edu

DeRosa takes first at Albany Invitational

By Melissa Turtinen
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts cross country teams had an outstanding weekend with senior Christina DeRosa taking first place at Albany Invitational.

The men's team finished third out of 26 teams, while the women finished fourth out of 29 squads.

"I was pleased with the meet," men's coach Ken O'Brien said. "The team responded well with making some improvements in the way we competed last week. We ran a little better as a team and individuals. We ran really well."

Both squads' next meet will be the Atlantic 10 Championships on Oct. 27 at Belmont Plateau in Philadelphia.

The men's team was led by junior Peter Fortunato, who took 18th individually with a time of 25 minutes, 51.7 seconds. This was Fortunato's second career cross country race; he normally runs the middle-distance in track and field.

The rest of the Minutemen's top five finished out with sophomore Nicolai Naranjo (20th), junior Josh Boone (29th), junior Matthew Weissinger (39th) and freshman Scott Vander Molen (46th).

"For 85 or 90 percent of the runners it was their best time of the year," O'Brien said. "That breeds confidence."

The Minutewomen were led by DeRosa, who had a personal best time and set a course record with 17:21. This was her second event win of her career, first for a cross country race.

DeRosa averaged a 5:36 mile throughout the race, 10 seconds less than what she has been running, according to women's coach Julie LaFreniere.

"Christina DeRosa ran the best race of her collegiate career," LaFreniere said. "She stepped up to very stiff competition."

According to LaFreniere, at the end of the race DeRosa tends to get "outkicked" if she is running with another person.

"I could see [DeRosa and a Brown runner] coming with one fourth of a mile to go – they were neck and neck. That's usually when she can't shift down and run a whole lot faster, she didn't allow that to happen yesterday," said LaFreniere. "She told me that she saw that ribbon and said I just wanted to break that tape. I was presently surprised that she was able to open up a small gap [between her and the runner from Brown]."

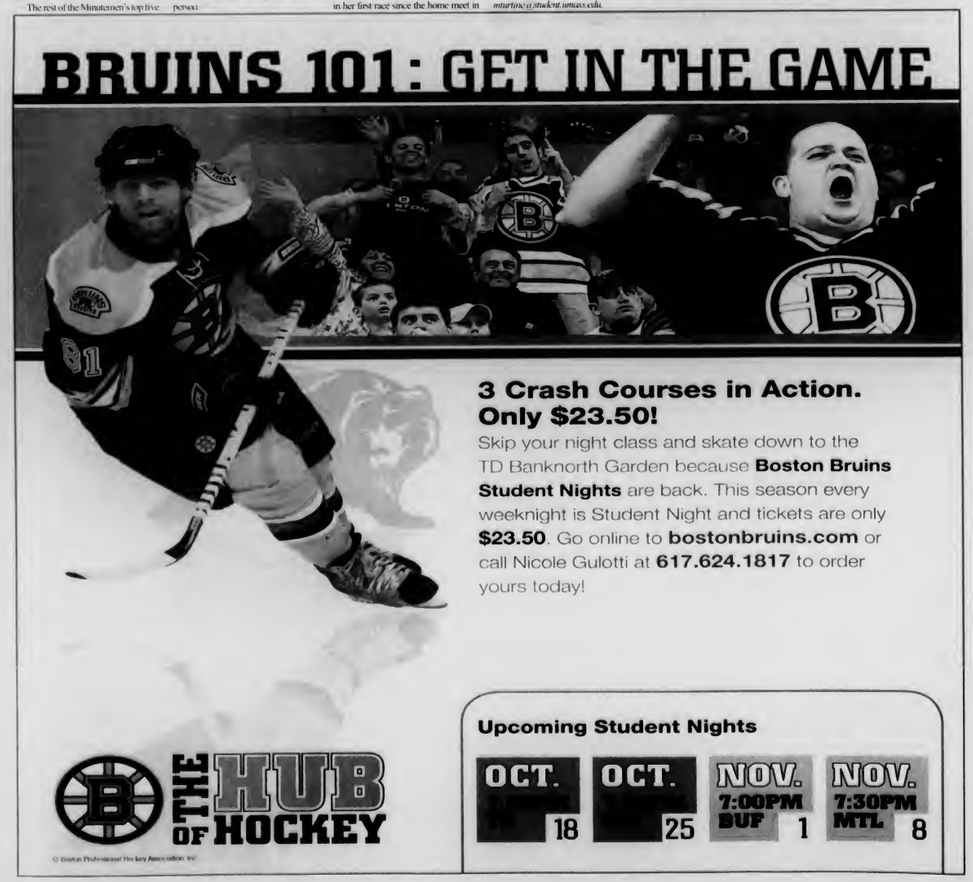
The rest of the women finished close behind with red shirted freshman Shiyi Zan finishing second for the Minutewomen and taking 17th. Zan has been ill with a respiratory virus.

"She isn't 100 percent but she ran quite well," LaFreniere said.

Freshman Lauren Stocker finished in 18th place with the same time as Zan. She set a personal record and ran the best race of her collegiate career, according to LaFreniere.

Senior Amber Sayer took 28th place in her first race since the home meet in September.

Gina Perno finished at 77th and LaFreniere said she had never run that fast in her life.



"They are getting right where they need to be," LaFreniere said. "I think they redeemed themselves from last weekend's performance. I couldn't be happier. "I think, when you have 5 out of 6 of your top runners setting personal records they are doing the right thing."

LaFreniere believes that this meet has really helped the team prepare for the upcoming Atlantic 10 Championships.

"I think [Saturday's meet] has given positive feedback, especially to the freshman, that all of their hard work this fall has paid off. I think it's given them confidence," LaFreniere said. "I'm looking forward to this week's amount of work. The athletes have to tighten their screws mentally and they are excited for the rest of the season. It put a spark in the team."

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtine@student.umass.edu.

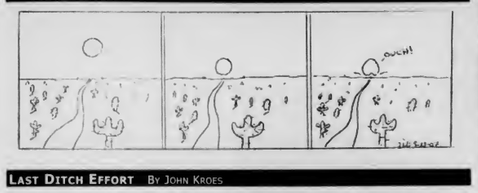
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN SPORTS.BLOGSPOT.COM

OH SO SWEET.
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Free Delivery to UMass Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

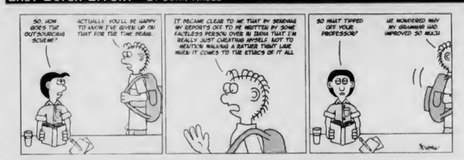
1	6						9	2
		5	6	4	3	8
8								3
		8	7		6	9
		9	4		8	7
5								9
		2	3	9	1	6
9	4						2	7

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!



WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

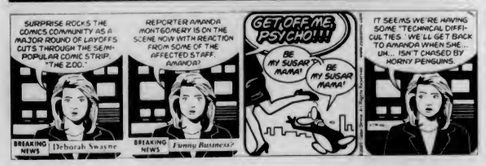
Quote of the Day



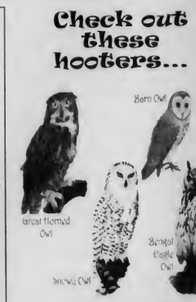
"I tried being reasonable, I didn't like it."

-Clinton Eastwood Jr.

Ecology By Jen Fill



Last Ditch Effort By John Kroes



Hydrophobia By Tyren Barker and Yang Song

The Zoo By Gabe Strine

Check out these hooters...

Submit your comics!
collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Submit a flavor to Ben and Jerry's using Floam or Gak as the primary ingredient.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Like your playful fish symbol, you go round and round chasin' tail.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
The expressive accessories accentuate your exceptional need for acceptance.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Gone with the wind... gaseous emission of undigested corn beef from last night.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Don't be so binary with your selection of ice cream at the DC. Choose swirl.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
It is unfortunate that your roommate found you curled up naked in a ball on your floor.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Your best friend might be the lovechild of Pebbles Flintstone and Elroy Jetson.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Calculate if your collection of Tamagotchi pets affects your carbon footprint.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Mama ya' dead wrong for having them pants on...its gonna be really warm today.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Replace one of your appendages with a bionic one. Be the future in the present!

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Change your happy alone-time shirt before you wear it out to a party with a black light.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
It's not a good idea to use Teflon as a topping for any food product.

Shorty i can see you ain't lonely handful of comics
that you want to read...

collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Activities

Montreal weekend from $99.00. Complete. motel, transportation and more. Montreal express.net 781-979-9001. Lowest Prices on campus.

Apartment for Rent

Granby Apt. 4 rooms. $750.00 a month. Heat/ hotwtr included. Call Allen at Eaglecrest. 413-256-3442

Employment

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext. 162

Employment

Staff needed for Mullins Center performance Friday, Oct.26th. Approx. 2:30-9:30 pm. $10/hr. Contact Matt at workboston@eworksinc.com.

CAFE HELP PART-TIME nights and weekends must be fast, accurate, efficient and friendly. Apply in person at the woodstar cafe. 60 Masonic St. Northampton.

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Instruction

University Bartending Classes start soon. 1-800-U-CAN-MIX. www.universitybartending.com. Sign up now.

Salon & Spa

HOLISTIC SALON AND SPA. Awesome upscale 7 point haircuts for female and male www.shearblissamherst.com 413-253-2322

Services

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906,1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

Services

Concerned About Your Eating? Do you eat too little? Eat too much? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic: 577-5101.

TAPESTRY HEALTH. providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling & rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St., Amherst www.tapestryhealth.org

Travel

*#1 Spring Break Website! 4 & 7 night trips. Low prices guaranteed. Group discounts for 8+. Book 20 people, get 3 free trips! Campus reps needed. www.StudentCity.com or 800-293-1445.

Spring Break '08 The New Math: 10+1=10. Book TEN of your friends on our SB '08 packages, the 11th is FREE. Contact STA TRAVEL: Campus Center, Room 224 (413) 256-1261 AMH@statravel.com www.freespring-break08.com

Travel

Spring Break 2008 Sell Trips, Earn Cash & Go Free. Call for group discounts. Best Deals Guaranteed! Info/ Reservations. 800-648-4849 www.ststravel.com

Wanted

EGG DONORS WANTED. Help make a couple's dream of becoming parents come true by becoming an egg donor. Very generous compensation and expenses paid. Must be a non-smoking female between the ages of 21 and 32. For more info, please visit our website at www.robertnicholsesq.com or contact Julie at 781-551-0600.

OCT 15 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, OCTOBER 15, 2007 — SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Holding on for the win

UMass outlasts Cats in four OT periods

By Eli Rosenwaike
Collegian Staff

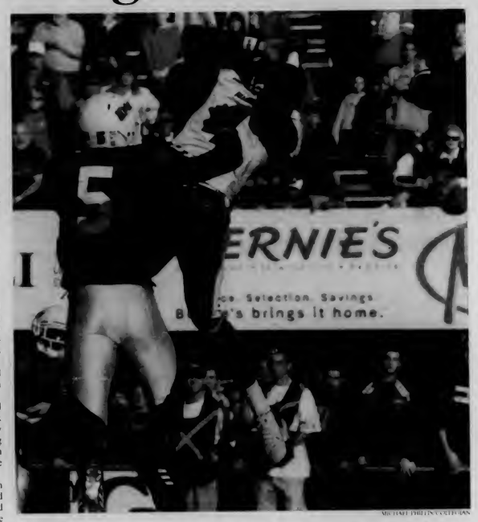
If Chris Koepplin had connected on the 48-yard field goal attempt at the end of regulation, it would have been an exciting ending to a good game.

But little did the 16,174 fans in attendance know, when the attempt hit the left upright and fell to the ground, it would lead to a great game and an even better ending.

The Massachusetts football team escaped McGuirk Stadium with a thrilling, quadruple overtime victory, 32-24, over Villanova on Saturday. The marathon game ended when Villanova's fourth-and-goal pass went through the hands of receiver Anton Ridley in the end zone, causing the UMass sideline to erupt and storm onto the field.

UMass	32
Villanova	24

"I can't remember being involved in a game with that much excitement," UMass coach Don Brown said. "It was a great football game. It was a dogfight."



Much of that excitement came in the four overtimes and in the final few minutes of regulation, when the Minutemen tied the score at 14-14 on a 17-yard touchdown pass from Liam Coen to Joe Sanford. The big play came a few plays earlier, when offensive lineman Sean Calicchio recovered Coen's fumble after he was sacked by Jerence Thomas.

After a three-and-out by the Wildcats, UMass got the ball back with 20 seconds remaining, and Coen hit J.J. Moore for a 30-yard strike to the Villanova 26-yard line.

Without a timeout, the Minutemen (5-1, 3-0 Colonial Athletic Association) quickly spiked the ball to stop the clock with 12 seconds remaining. UMass failed to get the next play off in time and was called for a delay of game penalty, bringing the ball back five yards. After an incomplete pass, Koepplin missed his attempt to win the game from 48 yards out as time expired, forcing overtime.

The Minutemen appeared to have control of the game in the first overtime when linebacker Jason Hatchell intercepted Wildcat (4-3, 2-2 CAA) quarterback Chris Whitney in the end zone off a tipped pass. But UMass tailback Matt Lawrence

See FOOTBALL on page 7

MICHAEL DIETZ/COLLEGIAN

UMass safety Jeromy Miles disrupts Villanova wide receiver Anton Ridley in the end zone on the final play of the game, preserving the 32-24 victory in four overtimes for the Minutemen at McGuirk Stadium Saturday.

NCAA should change overtime procedure

Jeremy Rice

It was a historic game for the Massachusetts football team. Four overtime periods and a heaping pile of offense later, the resilient Minutemen survived the Villanova Wildcats and moved to 5-1 on the season.

But how did they get there? Well, the two teams took turns starting 25 yards from the end zone, and scored repeatedly until someone finally missed. Tied 14-14 at the end of regulation, UMass came out victorious by the score of 32-24.

Doesn't exactly look like a low-scoring defensive affair after those four extra frames does it?

And there's the rub. This is no way to determine the winner of a hard-fought game between two well-matched opponents.

Neither team scored in the first overtime. They exchanged touchdowns in the second and field goals in the third before UMass finished off Villanova with Matt Lawrence's second touchdown of the game (both in extra time).

By the scoreboard, UMass won the game. But after four periods of half-court football, what was won?

Saturday's game tied for the longest in UMass history. The Minutemen played a four-overtime game in 1987 at Richmond, which the Spiders won, 52-51. Talk about running up the score after the fact.

That fact of the matter is, it dilutes the game itself. When more points are scored in overtime than in regulation (or in the case of Saturday's game, the exact same amount of points), something is wrong.

"Somebody asked me in our overtime game with Maine, 'What do you think the difference is?' You know what the difference is? Luck," Villanova coach Andy Talley said following the loss to UMass. "When you take a team into an overtime game, you can throw the records out, you can throw the stats out. It comes down to being lucky."

See RICE on page 7

Winning streak goes to five

Minutemen take weekend pair to begin Atlantic 10 season

By Joe Meloni
Collegian Staff

Kenny Cook, captain of the Massachusetts men's soccer team, enjoyed his team's three-game winning streak. But the senior center back understood that nothing really mattered before this weekend – when Atlantic 10 play began.

That winning streak now stands at five.

The Minutemen (7-4-0, 2-0 A-10) defeated Xavier, 2-1, yesterday and cruised to a 3-0 win over Dayton on Friday. The wins mark the first time UMass began conference play at 2-0 since 2002 when it started the season at 4-0.

"This is a huge weekend for us, we're really excited," Cook said. "If you look at our schedule, we have the two toughest games of the A-10 season next weekend in Saint Louis and Charlotte. So these are the games we need to win. Games aren't easy to win in conference play."

UMass	2
Xavier	1

UMass	1
Dayton	0

Sophomore Bryan Hogan handles the ball in yesterday's victory against Xavier. The forward scored the first goal of the Minutemen's 2-1 win.

Cook certainly wasn't wrong about the upcoming weekend. The Minutemen travel to Saint Louis (6-1-3, 2-0 A-10) which sat at No. 18 in last week's NSCAA/adidas poll. Two days later, a date with Charlotte awaits UMass. The 49ers (6-5-0, 1-1 A-10) host to St. Bonaventure yesterday to end a four-game winning streak.

The offensive struggles experienced in the season's infancy are now mere memories for the Minutemen, who didn't waste any chances on Sunday and haven't since their last loss, on Sept. 16 at Harvard.

Freshman Stuart Arnick received credit for the game-winning goal after it deflected off a Xavier defender. Initially, Bryan Hogan received credit for the goal, which would have been his second of the game, his 56th minute tally gave UMass a 1-0 lead.

Xavier goalkeeper Adam Sokolowski rolled the ball to his left back. Sokolowski hesitated and senior forward Greg Cirillo, anticipating the throw, took off to intercept the ball and arrived with the Musketeer defender. After a brief struggle for the ball, it bounced toward the end line and Cirillo took possession.

"I saw Greg go down the sideline and I wasn't sure if he was going to cross it early or take it to the end line and cross it late," Hogan said. "He crossed one in and I just tried to get there."

See MEN'S SOCCER on page 7

Center backs provide versatile play for UM

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

They're defenders by name, but redshirt junior Chris Brown and senior Kenny Cook are much more than that for the Massachusetts men's soccer team. The box score won't reflect their impact on the game. However, when you notice the pair playing in front of the net in the offensive zone, it becomes evident that the impact is felt all over the field.

The Minutemen began their conference schedule with a pair of wins this weekend, due in large part to the play of the two center backs in all three parts of the field.

But Cook and Brown excel the most in the defensive third – a fact that the scoreboard reflected in each of the last five games. In that stretch, UMass has only allowed one goal – and none in regulation.

Cook and Brown patrol the center of the field for the Minutemen with an aggressive style, causing turnovers and preventing dangerous chances for the opposition.

However, their aggressive play doesn't translate into dangerous slide tackles and fouls in the center. Instead they make smart plays with their feet, and occasionally their heads.

Perhaps the best example occurred early in the second half in yesterday's victory over Xavier. Brown intercepted a pass with the side of his foot and knocked it into the air. He then directed the ball off of his head upfield to a UMass midfielder.

These simple defensive plays not only keep the ball away from the UMass goal, but they also spark the Minuteman counterattack. Any change in possession in the midfield can potentially lead to an offensive opportunity – something that Cook and Brown constantly provide the UMass forwards.

But doing so is no easy task.

"As a center back, it's all about positioning, you have to read the play and try to anticipate where the ball is going," Cook said.

A key part of the UM defense, senior center back Kenny Cook fights for position against Dayton on Friday.

The two players excel in stifling chances and making redshirt junior goalkeeper Zack Simmons' job as easy as possible.

Yet when the ball reaches the far end of the pitch, it's not simply an opportunity for defenders to catch their breath. UMass coach Sam Koch expects his two center backs to play a prominent role on offense.

"They're two of our bigger players, so I definitely have them as targets on the end of our set pieces," Koch said. "They're defensive players, but they have offensive skills."

See CENTER BACKS on page 7

Mass Attack splits on early trip north

Freshmen make impact, while goalies share starting duties

By Joe Meloni
Collegian Staff

Brian Keane's first-career goal lifted the Massachusetts hockey team over No. 12 Saint Lawrence, 3-1, Saturday. The Minutemen also dropped a 2-1 overtime decision at No. 13 Clarkson in their season opener on Friday.

The win over the Saints gives UMass a 3-1 lead in the all-time series while the loss to the Golden Knights was the first ever for the Minutemen, who are now 3-1-1 against CU.

UMass is off until next weekend when it takes on UMass Lowell and Connecticut. The match with UML is the first Hockey East game of the season for the Minutemen.

In the second period of Saturday's game, junior center Cory Quirk entered the Saint Lawrence zone on the right wing looking for an open teammate. He spotted Keane streaking into the high slot and sent the puck through a defender and onto the stick of the freshman. Keane gathered the puck and sent it past SLU 11-2-0) goaltender Tim Kain to give the Minutemen a 2-1 advantage.

The Minutemen (1-1-1) took a 1-0 lead at the 17:12 mark of the first period when Alex Berry beat Kain. Just 22 second later, the Saints tied the game when Casey Parenteau beat sophomore Dan Meyers.

Meyers made 22 saves in his first start of the season and earned his first victory and the third of his career. 13 of the saves came in the final period with the Saints desperate to tie the game.

UMass	3
SLU	1

UMass	1
Clarkson	2

Sophomore defenseman Martin Nolet went off for tripping at the 3:02 mark of the third period, giving SLU a chance to even the score. Not only did the Saints fail to capitalize on the power play, they allowed the Minutemen to extend their advantage as Chris Davis scored the second short-handed goal of his career, the first came against Boston University during his freshman season.

Sophomore Will Ortiz failed to convert on a penalty shot earlier in the period with the score still tied, 1-1.

The Minutemen received an equally impressive goaltending performance in Friday's loss to Clarkson. Freshman Paul Dainton made 31 saves before Golden Knight junior Dan Tuttle took a pass from senior captain Nick Dodge in the left faceoff circle and fired it over his left shoulder to give CU the win.

Sophomore defenseman Justin Braun scored the Minutemen's first goal of the season when he put a rebound past CU goaltender David Leggio. Quirk received an assist on the play.

Nick Dodge tied the game less than a minute into the third period. Officials sent UMass senior defenseman Mike Kostka off on a hooking minor with seven seconds left in the period.

Dodge and David Cayer rushed into the UMass zone and Dodge finished, beating Dainton and tying the score.

UMass didn't test Leggio very much; the senior made 18 saves on UMass's 19 shots. The Minutemen committed five penalties in the game, including one late in the third period that put them a man down in a tie game with less than four minutes remaining.

Davis went off for two minutes for hitting after the whistle. The Golden Knights didn't convert on the opportunity, but it cost the Minutemen precious energy late in the game.

Joe Meloni can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu

Cage of Madness

Event kicks off season for fans

Let the practice begin. The Massachusetts men's and women's basketball teams officially began their 2007-08 seasons at Midnight Madness, Friday night. The event, held at the Curry Hicks Cage, featured entertainment for the 3,174 fans in attendance, as well as a chance to catch their first glimpse of each squad.

The women's team competed in a three-point contest, while the men participated in a slam-dunk contest and a scrimmage.

"There were a lot of things our fans could have been doing tonight," UMass coach Travis Ford said. "I think overall it was a successful night. We were obviously very sloppy [during the scrimmage], but I like some things I saw."

Ford described the Minutemen as, "A different basketball team than previous years," and also promised that his squad will attempt a significant number of three point baskets this season.

The Minutemen rotated players into a 20 minute scrimmage that featured a fast pace and a lot of shooting.

With seven freshman and four new players sitting out this season, there are a lot of new faces on the roster. The event allowed all 15 eligible players (and transfer Anthony Gurley) to get exposure on the court.

"I think it was important for us to get our young kids out in front of everybody so they can get to know the fans and that the fans can get to know them," Ford said.

Similar events are held around the country, serving as a symbolic beginning to the basketball season and also as a representation of when teams can officially begin practice.

—Michael King

SPRINGSTEEN RELEASES 'MAGIC' | PAGE 4

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SUNNY : HI: 62 LO: 42 — WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM — TUESDAY, OCTOBER 16, 2007

Campus tests out new siren

By Kate Olesin
Collegian Staff

Loud sirens and flashing strobe lights could appear in the near future as the University of Massachusetts' new warning system.

Yesterday, a test of Federal Signal Safety and Security Systems' outdoor campus warning system was conducted between 11 a.m. and 1:30 p.m. throughout the UMass campus. The test was performed with a truck, which erected a set of speakers with a hydraulic arm, flashed lights and, according to UMass students, emitted an assortment of sounds.

"I was coming up from my car and was on the corner of Southwest by the low-rises when I heard a variety of sounds," said UMass junior and commuter student Sean Carrow who heard the test coming from the power plant at around 11:45 a.m. "I heard the words 'all clear' two or three times, but I couldn't really hear [the test] that well."

Ed Blaguszewski, director of the Office of News and Information, who spent the afternoon with Federal Signal while they performed the tests, said that this is the first company UMass has looked into to set up this kind of a warning system.

"I think it gave a sense of the potential of the tool, and it did reach pretty widely in many ways," he said.

Although the test occurred with the company's traveling demonstration truck, the company typically installs speaker banks on buildings or tall poles, which would be placed in specific locations throughout campus.

Blaguszewski said the

See SIREN on page 2

West Bank lecture set for Thursday

By Danielle Kahn
Collegian Staff

A lecture on the West Bank is set to take place Thursday night at the University of Massachusetts. Yoav Efinevsky of Faculty for Israeli-Palestinian Peace hopes that this lecture will educate people on the village of Bil'in.

"The story of Bil'in should be known because it's a special village. It lost 50 percent of its land to Israel for settlements and security fences that surround these settlements. But for the past three years, the people in this village have conducted a nonviolent resistance."

Although the wall and settlements are deemed illegal on a national level, the villagers of Bil'in have decided to cooperate with International and Israeli government and protest the occupancy of their land.

Since the establishment of the West Bank after World War II, there has been violent conflict over this territory. The land has been claimed by both Israelis and Arabs. It has been cut into sections and annexed unofficially into other countries. Its history contains numerous wars and conflicts, some of which continue today.

In 1949, the border line known as the Green Line for the West Bank between Israel and Jordan was established. In 1942, fighting led the annexation of the West Bank by Jordan, but this was never officially recognized by most countries. In 1967, the result of the Six Day War left Israel occupying the West Bank. This resulted in an uprising from the Palestinian occupants because they did not agree with many of Israel's ideas and U.S. They were upset that Palestinian land was being given to Israelis. In 1997, more conflict started over who had possession of Jerusalem when Israel started to build a settlement between the West Bank and East Jerusalem. Since then, there has been much conflict over the land.

UMass student Amy Kent spent two months in Palestine with the Faculty for Israeli-Palestinian Peace working in a patient refugee camp.

"It's a really beautiful country with a lot of really good, generous people," she said. "They are restricted because the West Bank is militarily occupied by Israel with barriers and separating walls."

Kent explained how this affects the people. "It's economically choking them because they can't move from one place to another without a permit, so they can't sell their goods. And there are so many water shortages and droughts because they can't have control over their water supplies," Kent added. "It's not a sad place, there are still parties and soccer games and things."

Danielle Kahn can be reached at dkahn@student.umass.edu

The University of Massachusetts Campus Anti-War Network is sponsoring the exhibit "Eyes Wide Open," displaying over 150 pairs of boots of fallen New England soldiers on the Student Union lawn this week.

Gay/lesbian book collection donated

By Josh Walovitch
Collegian Correspondent

On National Coming Out Day last Tuesday, the Gittings-Lahusen gay and lesbian book collection was donated to the Department of Special Collections and University Archives in the W.E.B. Du Bois Library.

The collection contains approximately 1,000 titles dating from the late 1920s to the present day and represents a lifetime of collecting by two important gay rights activists, Barbara Gittings and her life partner, Kay Tobin Lahusen.

During the past 40 years, Gittings has been considered part of the reason why there has been a fundamental shift in thinking toward gay rights and the gay community. She organized the first gay rights protest at the White House in 1965, helped end the medical classification of homosexuality as a mental disorder and started the New York chapter of the Daughters of Bilitis (First Lesbian Society).

This priceless collection was brought to the University of Massachusetts with the help of Anne L. Moore, Robert S. Cox and their friendship with Kay Tobin Lahusen. The Du Bois Library was a perfect fit for these books considering the large gay community present in both Amherst and Northampton.

Gittings began collecting the books following her coming out during her freshman year at Northwestern University in an effort to find as much material to help her understand her gay identity. Within this collection there is a great number of varied writings such as books by gay authors, gay-themed books by straight authors, personal accounts of gay experiences, sociological writings on gays, positive as well as negative writings about the gay community and several issues of The Ladder (a magazine published from 1956-1972) edited by Barbara Gittings.

The collection is home to the winner of the first Gay Book Award, "A Place for Us," a novel by Isabel Miller written in 1969. The books encourage a strong understanding of these diverse experiences that gay individuals have had with social change and the varied perspectives and

See BOOKS on page 2

Author speaks on campus of book and terrorism

By Eden Univer
Collegian Staff

Jessica Stern, author of the book "Terror in the Name of God," lectured yesterday evening in the Bowker Auditorium at the University of Massachusetts.

Stern's book was chosen as this semester's dean's book as part of the Dean's Book program at Commonwealth College, the honors college at UMass.

In her book, Stern studies and personally interviews terrorists in hopes of determining why they kill.

To begin her lecture, Stern answered a question she is frequently asked: why do terrorists speak with her? Stern outlined a few reasons why this might be, suggesting that they wanted to get a broader audience and hoped that she could provide that through her work, that they were seeking forgiveness, and they wanted to get across a message. She noted that in every case "they were trying to use me and I was very aware of that."

She also found that being a woman often made terrorists consider her "unthreatening and dumb" which she found to be "a great personal advantage." Stern holds a bachelors degree from Barnard College, a Masters degree from MIT, and a Doctorate degree from Harvard University.

Stern then explained many risk factors for a terrorist, dividing these factors into global, national, group and individual factors. She focused mainly on factors that affect people globally. Poverty, lack of education, lack of democracy and U.S. foreign policy were several that were examined.

Next, Stern turned to the importance of the internet in the spread of terrorism. She found that it allows for the kind of inspirational leaders who are involved with terrorism today to reach a greater audience. Also, according to Stern, the internet provides an outlet for "leaderless resistance" and "facilitates self-radicalism."

One thing that Stern specifically wanted to emphasize was the idea of humiliation and how that contributes to the creation of a terrorist, especially within youth.

Since writing her book, Stern explained that she studied Muslim youth groups in Germany and the United Kingdom. She found "the idea of Jihad is spreading like gangster rap," although Stern is quick to note that this does not imply that terrorism is not a very serious and dangerous subject.

She explained that within these youth groups it was considered a "cool idea to claim to be pro-Jihad and to know something about Jihad." To her dismay, this thought process was encountered even on elementary school playgrounds.

Stern finally turned her attention to the current U.S. occupation of Iraq. According to Stern, the main thing that the U.S. is doing wrong in this situation is ignoring the factors that enable terrorists to gather new recruits.

"We will not do well in this so-called war on terrorism," said Stern, "until we start thinking more about the flow of new recruits and a little less about the stock."

Stern explained that she was opposed to the Iraq war in the first place because she was concerned that it would be used to mobilize new recruits.

Eden Univer can be reached at univer@student.umass.edu

Author Jessica Stern speaks at Bowker Auditorium last night as part of the Dean's Book program lecture. Stern, author of "Terror in the Name of God," spoke mainly on the spread of terrorism in Muslim youth.

Scientists fight for seafood

By Nick Bush
Collegian Staff

Last Wednesday, four University of Massachusetts scientists signed a coalition letter demanding increased conservation of New England's oceans.

The scientists, Dr. John J. Finn, Dr. Anne R. Griffin, Dr. Guy Lanza and Dr. Boyd Kynard, all signed the letter addressed to William Hogarth, the head of the National Marine Fisheries Service and the New England Fishery Management Council which demands an end to overfishing.

The coalition, sponsored by the public interest group Environment Massachusetts, consists of over 60 individuals and groups, including 17 scientists from six Massachusetts universities, 11 environmental groups and various religious leaders and student organizations.

Last week, Environment Massachusetts released a distressing report on the state of fisheries of New England, warning that more than 44 percent of all federally managed fish stocks are depleted.

According to the group, many common fish stocks that were identified as overfished in 2001 remain on the current list, including cod, flounder and haddock. Over the past two decades, the New England cod fishery has decreased from 60

See FISH on page 2

OCT 16 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 30

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
COMICS EDITOR Adam Stajgin
EDITORIAL EDITOR Sean Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marwa Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ryan McAskill
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Teresa Reilly
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Will McGuinness
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Michael King
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenswaike
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCIENCE IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL 413-545-3500 BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Will McGuinness

COPY EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

OCT 16 2007

Warning system tested yesterday

SIREN from page 1

University aims to use the system to warn outdoor pedestrians, students and visitors about potential community threats and severe weather alerts. The system would have pre-recorded messages that would be played to tell those outdoors if a threat was imminent and what to do in the situation.

"What people [who have used the system] tell us is that for the purposes that it's designed for: weather alerts, but then in the other character it would be imminent danger tied to what happened at Virginia Tech," he said. "We really haven't studied those scripts, but it would be focused and specific without going on and on."

But, according to Blaguszewski, the placement of the system still has a few kinks.

The test truck could only carry three sets of speakers, while the system normally installed by the company has about six sets, which Blaguszewski said diminished the sound.

The test moved around campus to experiment in three locations. The first test was conducted on Mullins Way, so the siren would project over the athletic fields. The truck then moved on to lot 49, adjacent to Van Meter Hall, and finally to what Blaguszewski called the "heart of campus," behind the Student Union and Stockbridge Hall area.

The Stockbridge Hall area is where the warning system ran into the most problems.

"It's a heavily traveled area and has a lot of large buildings," he said. "We conducted that test and what we found was that one of the people that we had posted nearby at Lederle ... couldn't really hear things very well because the buildings absorb some of the sound."

Because of this, Blaguszewski said the University has asked Federal Signal to redraft their proposal to include four different speaker locations instead of three and reposition them in different areas.

Most students who heard the warning system test said the announcement was hard to hear or the truck itself was simply too far away to hear clearly.

"Well, the guy's voice was difficult to hear," said senior and North resident Liz Oler, who heard the test while walking to class at 1 p.m. "There was a computerized voice and a siren sound."

When students were polled as to whether they heard the test at 12:30 p.m., most students said they hadn't heard the siren at all.

"I thought it was going to be really loud, blaring and disruptive while I was in class," said Nicole Cameron who didn't hear the test.

However, most students agreed that installing the devices would be a good way to inform students who don't have direct access to technology about what is happening on campus.

"I don't think e-mail is quick enough," said junior and Orchard Hill resident, Jess Rogean. "I think it's worth the money to put the sirens in."

Others disagreed as they considered the cost.

"I think it's unnecessary," said junior Tim Rogacz. "What sort of things would it warn me for? A flood? I think it's a waste of money."

As for a price, Blaguszewski said the implementation of the technology is in such early stages that price has not been heavily considered. He added that UMass is still exploring other vendors.

"If we decide to invest in a system of this type [the money] will be from the University's funds since this would be something we decide is important to do," he said.

Currently, UMass, with a state grant, is working on a text messaging alert system, which Blaguszewski says will be implemented within the next few months. Also, there is a system of voicemail and e-mail which is sent out to University employees who proceed to inform students about topics of concern. Mass e-mails are also sent out to student accounts when a serious community threat occurs.

Kate Olesin can be reached at kolesin@student.umass.edu.

Letter signed to stop overfishing

FISH from page 1

million pounds in 1986 to 12 million in 2006.

Similar overfishing trends exist around the world, and it is estimated that if the management of oceans isn't changed, the majority of the world's fish stocks will be commercially extinct in the next 40 years.

"I think we are faced with a very serious problem," said Dr. Guy Lanza, one of four signers from the University of Massachusetts. "Overfishing requires new ideas and discussion. The depopulation of marine ecosystems is a global concern, and one that thus far has been dealt with in a chaotic and piecemeal manner. Letters like this one to the [New England Fishery Management Council] are a step in the right direction. We need to rethink everything."

"Overfishing is quite concerning to me," said Lanza. "This is another example of humans' overextending our marine resources and at the same time destroying the habitat. We are burning the candle at both ends."

The news is not all bad, however. Scientists predict that if the cod stock is rebuilt over time, it could yield more than 100 million pounds on a sustainable yearly basis, compared with the only 12 million pounds caught this year. Recently, the New England Fishery Management Council, which controls all fishing in federal waters off of Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Maine and Connecticut, has begun to propose new catch limits and management rules, which aim to begin correcting past eras of overfishing, particularly of herring in the Gulf of Maine.

"To date, the fisheries councils nationwide, and particularly here in New England, have not done a good job at protecting our fisheries," said Peg Harrington. Harrington, a representative from the National Environmental Trust's "Conserve Our Ocean Legacy," was also a signatory to the coalition letter.

"We need independent science to set the rules for fisheries, and we need to start holding the decision makers accountable for what happens to our oceans."

Nick Bush can be reached at nbush@student.umass.edu.

Library gets new collection

BOOKS from page 1

approaches they have adopted in pursing it.

The head of the Special Collections and University Archives, Robert S. Cox, admires Gittings and the steps she took to fight for the equality of gays in society.

"Barbara Gittings is a legend in Philadelphia as well as in the gay community," he said. Cox also suggested the gay rights struggle "is part of a much larger struggle for social equality and social justice."

"Fighting for one in isolation does not get at the root problem. All of these social issues are related and must be addressed as a whole," he said.

"Through analyzing and studying the literature, historians and activists hope to learn more about what strategies have worked in the past in the struggle for gay equality. By looking to the past, they hope to learn from prior mistakes so that they may plan more effectively in the current and future struggle for gay equality."

The department of Special Collections and University Archives is in discussion with other groups and individuals in the Commonwealth to obtain other records and physical accounts of gay experience. So far, as informed by Cox, "the likelihood of acquiring more documents to add to the archives looks promising."

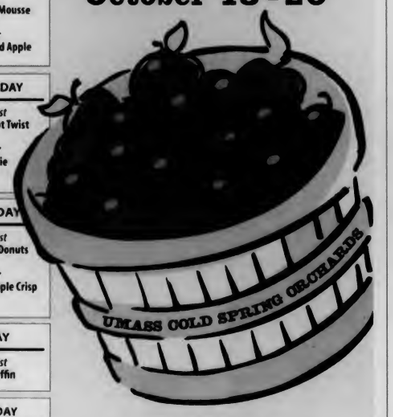
Josh Walovitch can be reached at jwalovit@gmail.com.

Write for News!
news@dailycollegian.com

MONDAY OCT 15
Breakfast
Apple Coffee Cake
Dinner
Apple Upside Down Cake

TUESDAY
Breakfast Apple Pancakes
Lunch Apple Mousse
Dinner
Baked Stuffed Apple

WEDNESDAY
Breakfast
Apple/Apricot Twist
Dinner
Apple Pie



THURSDAY
Breakfast
Apple Cider Donuts
Dinner
Sour Cream Apple Crisp

FRIDAY
Breakfast
Apple Muffin

SATURDAY
Brunch
Apple Fritters
Apple Knobby
Dinner
Apple Cheese Cake

Fresh, local apple cider will be available all week, too!

Apple Harvest
October 15–20

All DCs

DINING SERVICES
UMassAmherst
2007 Grand Prize Winner
Be A Local Hero
Buy Locally Grown
FoodManagement's BEST CONCEPTS
University of Massachusetts Cold Spring Orchard

iLearn. iTouch. iLive.

at DHMC... IWIN

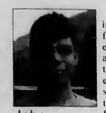
Every New Graduate nurse hired between now and September 1, 2008 receives an iPod touch.

• Academic Medical Center
• Student loan forgiveness of up to $10,000
• Graduate Nurse Residency Program

life works here.

DARTMOUTH-HITCHCOCK MEDICAL CENTER
Lebanon New Hampshire

www.newgradnursing.com



THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 16, 2007

"It were best that we not all think alike; it is difference of opinion that makes horseraces."
–Mark Twain

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Moderating foreign policy

John Gruenenfelder

The Iran issue has been gaining momentum recently, but the frightening aspect is that our government might take pre-emptive action against Iran's nuclear facilities. Our administration's hardliners and Iran's hardliners almost seem to be in lockstep. At the same time, a voice of sanity is coming forth from the same administration, namely Condoleezza Rice and the State Department.

Obviously, Iran is far from blameless and seems to relish in its ability to aggravate the West. In particular, President Ahmadinejad, an otherwise intelligent person, can hardly say anything that is not either foolish or inflammatory on the international stage. Iran also has a dismal human and political rights record.

None of these are reasons to go to war, of course. The current issue is over Iran's nuclear ambitions. Hawks in our government feel that the danger is imminent enough to warrant an air strike. Some even consider a change in leadership a "viable policy option," according to a New York Times article.

As guardians of democracy, it would be in bad form if we were to make good on policy ambitions and effect a change in Iran's leadership given that Ahmadinejad was elected by popular vote. The available candidates are firmly controlled by the party; but even from a smaller pool, he was still elected by the people.

Besides, the last time we decided Iran needed new leadership, the situation definitely did not change for the better. It's also important to remember that Iran's supreme leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei has, as his title suggests, supreme authority over domestic and foreign policy as well as the armed forces. When a state governor here says something with internationally inflammatory appeal, we generally don't worry about an embargo.

I worry that the hawks are taken with the view that Iran is just a larger Iraq with a different majority religion and, if necessary, could be toppled as easily as Iraq. The reality is that for all of its problems and political repression, Iran has an active middle class that is steadily growing. As they grow in number, middle-class Iranians are going to crave more governmental power. Signs of this struggle are already present.

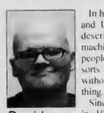
We have over 150,000 soldiers right next to Iran; and if they wanted to hurt our country, the first stop would be Iraq.

A strike against Iran would only inflame the people. A repressed middle class does not mean they lack nationalism. Any bombings, even if limited to nuclear sites, could very well set off a much larger conflict. Iranian sovereignty would be violated, and the people would likely clamor for retaliation, a feeling Ahmadinejad would probably help to encourage.

We have over 150,000 soldiers right next to Iran, and if they wanted to hurt our country, the first stop would be Iraq. Such a conflict would devastate Iran. Iraq and our military. We are in no position to begin another fight, and we shouldn't fool ourselves into thinking that Iran will sit idly by while we bomb its nuclear facilities.

Fortunately, the administration has another faction within itself. Secretary Rice is again facing off against Cheney's hawks. And with the recent diplomatic successes in North Korea, Rice's side will hopefully have enough sway to stop any short-sighted attacks.

North Korea is far worse off than Iran and is run by somebody far less stable than anybody in power in Iran, but consistent negotiation and sanctions eventually led them to change. There can be compromise without needing to flex any military muscle.



Negotiation with Iran may not be as easy since they are not as isolated internationally, and they actually have something we want (hint: it comes in barrels). But there's no reason not to try, and diplomacy does not mean ending sanctions and embargoes. California's governor just signed into law a bill to divest the two largest U.S. pension funds from any Iranian investments and investments in any company doing business with Iran.

Iran's economy is not in such dire straits. Money talks, and economic sanctions can have a very substantial impact given time and similar commitments from other nations. They also give our diplomats a very important bargaining chip.

Iran has its fair share of problems, and we've got genuine grievances with them in any number of areas. So far, none of it warrants military action. The bar for a military campaign should be much higher than recent U.S. foreign policy has put it. Hopefully, the recent successes of the State Department are a sign that our handling of world affairs is heading in a better, less confrontational direction.

John Gruenenfelder is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jgruenen@student.umass.edu.

A final solution

David Murray

In his book, "Anarchy, State and Utopia," Robert Nozick describes an "experience machine," a device that allows people to believe they have all sorts of fantastic experiences without actually doing anything.

Since the idea's publishing in 1974, philosophers have asked those attending their lectures whether or not such a machine, which provides false happiness, would be preferable to real life. At first, nobody seemed to want to trade in his or her life for this Matrix-esque fantasy, but more people are deciding that, given the opportunity, they would trade in real life for this perfect, although false existence.

For many people, life just isn't cutting it. Depression is on the rise. The World Health Organization predicts that, by the year 2020, clinical depression will be the second leading cause of disability worldwide. This is obviously a problem.

The world was brought out of the Great Depression by World War II. People needed a cause to work for; and for the Allied Powers, that cause was destroying fascism.

We need such a cause. Our lives need reason. Without meaning in our lives, society will continue to stagnate; the world will be overrun with uselessness. These will be the people we revere, the people who exemplify our society – worthless Paris Hiltons who are famous for nothing and contribute nothing.

We need a cause. We need our own struggle. To bring us out of our "great depression," we need our own world war. We need World War Z.

World War Z is the war of mankind against zombies, the walking dead. Zombies crave human flesh, and will stop at nothing to consume it. Victims of zombie bites soon fall into a ghoulish condition. Zombies are savage, terrifying beasts, and they are our only hope out of this stagnation in which we are entrenched.

Imagine a scenario in which you are late for class. You have a paper to hand in, and you haven't finished it. You need to ask your professor for an extension, and you know he's not going to be happy. This is getting you depressed.

As you prepare yourself for your professor's haranguing, you hear a soft, guttural moan coming from the side of the road. As you turn to look, it gets louder, and now you can see where it's coming from. A human corpse walks towards you, arms outstretched, wounds festering.

You are no longer depressed – you are looking for a weapon, and a way to escape. You feel a rush as you are, for the first time, fighting to stay alive. And, as an added bonus, you don't have to do that paper anymore.

World War Z is the war of mankind against zombies, the walking dead.

Why zombies? Why not pick one of any number of other causes to get behind? The simple reason is that we need conflict. Humans rest at the top of the food chain; we have no natural enemies. Because of this inner desire to compete, we often fight amongst ourselves.

Rather than continue this self-slaughter, we must set aside our differences, and join together to battle another foe, the zombie menace.

Some may say that, like all other wars, World War Z is immoral because it forces man to commit murder. This is not true. Zombies, though once humans like you and me, cease to be human when they become undead.

Furthermore, they exist in a realm between life and death, from which they can never return. Is it still murder to kill that which is no longer truly alive?

I realize that some of you might think that I sound like a madman. This is unfortunate but unavoidable. In this war, there will have to be martyrs, but I am willing to assume that position. I will allow myself to become a veritable supervillain in order to bring about our salvation. I will also be enlisting the help of others willing to make the sacrifice – likeminded scientists, necromancers and voodoo sorcerers, ready to help reanimate these monstrosities.

We may be responsible for the deaths of many who are bitten by zombies and forced to join the undead ranks. This will be a heavy cross to bear, but it will be worth it to rejuvenate mankind. At the very least, we'll be helping to curb overpopulation.

Some may describe World War Z as the zombie "apocalypse." This is a gross exaggeration. World War Z, humanity's final struggle against the zombie-kind, does not mean the end of the world. Not so long as we don't let them win.

David Murray is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dmurray@student.umass.edu.

Nobel committee chooses poorly

Greg Collins

The conferring of the Nobel Peace Prize to Al Gore last week epitomizes how people continue to be fooled by political leaders who claim to promote causes in the name of saving civilization.

Gore, along with the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, was awarded "for their efforts to build up and disseminate greater knowledge about man-made climate change, and to lay the foundations for the measures that are needed to counteract such change," according to the award's selectors.

Contrast these words with the message of Alfred Nobel in his will, who explained that the prize's purpose was to recognize those who have "conferred the greatest benefit on mankind." The reasoning behind the selection of Gore was not consistent with this ideal because the policies he supports would hurt mankind more than benefit it.

One clear distinction needs to be emphasized when discussing global warming. Those skeptical of activists like Gore and MassPIRG do not deny that global warming exists or even that particular temperatures nowadays are higher than those at the turn of the 20th century. In fact, they do not even dismiss the possibility that human activity is partly the reason why these temperatures have risen.

But the issue is the extent to which this human activity is responsible for this rise, and whether anything should be done to combat global warming through government mandates. Coming to conclusions about the former can be left to scientists, but the latter needs to be scrutinized by all people.

One of the main goals pushed by activists is to reduce the amount of carbon emissions produced by factories. What if we applied this reasoning to the Industrial Revolution, in which widespread capitalism enabled manufacturing, trade and agricultural advances to expand in Western Europe around the turn of the 19th century? In this situation, global warming activists would have preferred to prevent businesses from developing products if the carbon emissions produced by factories exceeded an amount determined by environmentalists.

This current progress would have been stifled if China and India had adhered to the provisions of the Kyoto Protocol.

If this were the case, the unintended consequence would have been that many of the industrialized products would not have reached the general public, rich or poor, so quickly. Specifically, poor people would have had a harder time accumulating wealth if government mandates had limited what individuals and businesses could produce.

The changing economic structures in China and India are more contemporary examples that illustrate how limited government confers a benefit greater to mankind than expansive governments enforcing carbon emission caps. The rapid rise of people out of poverty in these two countries signals a distinct departure from their past socioeconomic conditions in which individuals were mired in destitution under their respective governments' control of markets. This current progress would have been stifled if China and India had adhered to the provisions of the Kyoto Protocol, the international treaty calling for caps on greenhouse gases supported by Gore during the Clinton Administration.

Although political freedom is still a pressing issue in China, the fact that it passed legislation this year further guaranteeing property rights suggests that their nation is advancing in the right direction. If one defines bettering mankind as empowering people to rise out of its impoverished conditions to live free of government coercion, then Gore cannot be considered someone who has promoted this goal. In fact, it would be more accurate to say that he has supported policies that encourage governments to undermine humanity's march towards liberty.

Some people will argue that while Gore did not directly promote world peace or better mankind, he highlighted an issue that, if overlooked, could lead to conditions that would cause the end of civilization.

Such reasoning is emblematic of the cyclical opinions of the environmental community claiming to raise awareness of this possibility. Science Magazine claimed in 1975 that a prolonged ice age is very realistic, while Newsweek expressed similar concerns over global cooling around the same time. This cycle is important not because it shows the unpredictability of global temperature patterns but instead reveals how the thinking inherent in the minds of environmental activists from today and yesterday encourage policies intended to "do something" about an issue which more accurately could be depicted as being counterproductive towards bettering humanity.

More appropriate choices for the Nobel Peace Prize would have been the Iraqi National Police, a group admirably struggling to secure an unstable country, Wajeha al-Huwaider and Fawzia al-Eyouni, female activists heroically pushing for basic rights in Saudi Arabia, or Liberty in North Korea, an effort to assist refugees escape to free nations.

Contrary to the opinions of global warming activists and Nobel Peace Prize judges, these individuals – by advancing democracy, freedom and peace – have conferred a greater benefit to mankind than Gore will ever think of doing. Because the aforementioned people do not have the luxury of making widely disseminated PowerPoint presentations or organizing worldwide concerts, it is up to future Nobel Peace Prize judges and humanity as a whole, to recognize the genuine promoters of a better mankind.

Greg Collins is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu.

Knowing when to drop the F-bomb

Devon Courtney

Disclaimer – All expletives and crude language have been replaced with similar acceptable words, by request of the editor. Still, feel free to replace the odd-fitting words with profanities of your own as you read along.

Everybody swears. I've done it, you probably do, and it's difficult to refute this simply by strolling around the campus. The truth is, swearing is considered largely acceptable in our generation. It's considered okay to curse on television with the intensity of expletives increasing by the hour every evening. 50 years ago, that was just a crude unreality that nobody hoped for.

George Carlin's comedic "7 Words You Can't Say on Television" routine is completely antiquated after 10 o'clock every night. We've all heard the cookie-cutter lines from any modern-day cop drama. You flip on the television and you'll hear something like "Shingles! The flipping district attorney was the guilty one all along! That bastervac!"

Or instead of watching television, you could probably go do some field research. After a careful listen, you might hear a slightly intoxicated student at a typical UMass party exclaim, "shut the funk tuh, you pile of skittles!" The response would go something like, "maybe if you weren't such a mother-loving Chinese dentist!"

I'm a tad curious as to why profanities are so commonplace. There are more than enough words in the English language to convey any kind of feeling or expression someone can have, so what could the motivation to swear possibly be?

At the far end of the obscenity spectrum, there are groups of kids who walk by me all the time with mouths like truck drivers betting at a horse track. Because of them, profanities are being cheapened for those of us who choose to swear merely on occasion. Every time I run into another student who is ruining it by swearing his head off with his group of swooped-for-high-school friends, I want to repeatedly slam a dictionary closed on his face.

When I swear, I want it to be meaningful. My personal motivation for profanity usage is emotional overload, and on rare occasions, that does happen. When I decide that I'm at the point where I need to drop a 10-megaton f-bomb on everyone within earshot, I want raised eyebrows at the very least.

We shouldn't be so desensitized to profanity that it can easily slip under the radar at any old time

We shouldn't be so desensitized to profanity that it can easily slip under the radar at any old time. It shouldn't be hanging out in clusters in every spoken sentence, interspersing and replacing words at random. There is absolutely no justification for an expletive being a second-string substitute for any or every noun, verb, adjective or pronoun on the planet.

The media has a great responsibility. Many of us have been buzzing about the Rocky Mountain Collegian's recent assertion to fame. Editor David McSwane, who is among those being held responsible for the profane publication, was one of the managing editors who let "Taser This, Humboldt!" be published in the editorial section. The fact of the matter is that profanity is all over the place, and it is now beginning to reduce the professionalism of news publications. It's not difficult to get a point across without swearing. I've been doing it throughout this whole article.

Swearing can't inform, and it dramatically reduces the credibility and respect of a news publication. Tactfulness, responsibility and some semblance of an intelligent argument would have fared so much better. It's a shame that something so stupid and blatantly representative of our lowbrow culture ran as a headline.

There's a certain level of professionalism we journalists strive for. Whether it's communicating an effective story, performing thorough research or presenting ourselves tactfully, the respect we've sought for these diligent tasks has all been blown to shitake mushrooms.

Nothing screams thoughtlessness or unprofessionalism like a bold-faced expletive. Would you ever swear casually at a job interview? Would you ever be sitting down to Thanksgiving dinner and say to grandma "Hey Mitch, can you pass the mother-loving mashed potatoes?"

In this generation, we are torn between an overexposure to obscenities in the media and the values we were brought up with at home. Profanity has been around for as long as spoken language, but our generation has a particular knack for using it. If it can now appear in news publications, where else will it soon be able to go?

Instead of being exclusively on late-night television and cable subscriptions, profanity might soon find its way onto the likes of Nickelodeon or PBS. Can you imagine an episode of Sesame Street where Big Bird calls Cookie Monster a "fat-fucking turd" for eating so much?

There's enough creative language flying around just in my own scope of hearing, and I don't want to see it in the news. Just as much as the anchor of your cable news broadcast shouldn't be using invectives on the air, you shouldn't have to open your college newspaper and see the queen mother of all curses. This isn't about free speech. This is about a journalistic obligation to the public, and they owe us better.

Devon Courtney is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dcourtney@student.umass.edu.

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: 413-545-3699

Mail: Letters to the Editor, 113 Campus Center, Amherst, MA 01003

YOU SHOULD DRAW EDITORIAL CARTOONS PLEASE send an e-mail to editorial@dailycollegian.com

OCT 16 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, OCTOBER16, 2007 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Band's new album is priceless

Buy Radiohead's CD online for an undetermined price

BY STEVEN STAFFORD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

College kids like free stuff, especially when it comes to music. Radiohead, no doubt aware of this, finally released an album that you don't have to steal to get for free. The irony of this situation is that Radiohead is one of the few popular acts who actually deserve to be paid for their contributions to the canon. Yes, it is even worth giving a fake address and name to download it from their blinding prism-splashed website, not that college kids ever had a problem giving out fake addresses and names. I mean, look at all those kids with the shirts that say "College" on them.

Radiohead is one of the most critically-acclaimed bands of all time. While this means that there is no shortage of pressure on them, it is a relief to say that they have delivered on the hype once again, producing a sleek, powerful and complex disc on par with anything released prior.

The CD continues the band's excellence at producing ambient music that isn't boring: five-minute songs that feel two-minutes long and energetic rock that still manages to be too intelligent even for its pretentious listeners. Intricate as always, the band puts down myriad layers of sounds on top of each other, stacking up instruments that you don't even notice the first few times. While there aren't many pop hooks, with the exception of "All I Need," the CD manages to pull off such an astounding level of coolness that being able to hum along is irrelevant. Besides, no one can ever really tell what Thom Yorke is falsetto-mumbling about.

The leadoff track, "15 Step," is almost too much to handle at first. Everything is so busy that many listeners may need to pause it every 30 seconds to take a breath. The song contains a Kid A-like, manic mix of real and fake drum samples and sound effects, and alternative sounds throughout the piece – from tremolo to echo, from pitch shifting to reverb. Definitely crank the bass for this one.

"Bodysnatchers" is another toe-tapping, rock-out track, energetic and containing Led Zeppelin-level stereo guitar surround: acoustics, roomy electrics, filthy grunge effects and good-old garage distortion. This song is Radiohead – complicated, perhaps a bit arrogant, but it rocks out like few others on the air in 2007.

Maybe just to mess with us all, the band places the haunting standout "Nude" right after this. This track is a trip, prominently featuring backward and forward vocals, backward and forward guitars and some of Jonny's backward and forward strings. Thom Yorke gives his best vocal performance of the whole album, recalling OK Computer's tone – that nightmarish, creeping, yet somehow beautiful feeling. The backup vocals sound like electric organs.

"Weird Fishes/Arpeggi" also stands out, a hypnotically repetitive track. The band seduces the listener with remarkable complex textural contrast; for example, putting clanking wind chimes over a deep and low bass line.

"All I Need" continues the theme of achingly beautiful desperation, wind chimes, gloomy bass and electric piano. Like many of the band's best

See RADIOHEAD on page 5

Radiohead stays up to their high standards on their new album, "In Rainbow." The songs are upbeat and energetic.

RADIOHEAD
"IN RAINBOW"
CAPITOL RECORDS
4/5

Springsteen remains misjudged by critics

BY DAVE MASTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With the release of Springsteen's album "Magic", the E Street Band has reunited for the first time in four years. It's been a long time coming. Somewhere between the release of "Devils and Dust" and the Pete Seeger tribute, it seemed that the glory days for Springsteen and the E Street Band were over. But rest assured, "Magic" offers more than just youthful conciliation.

It offers antipatriotic sentiments, according to critics.

Since "Born in the USA" had 'U-S-A' in the title President Reagan thought that the song was patriotic, and used it for his political campaign. This is just another example of Springsteen's music being misunderstood.

"That's just the language of the day," said Springsteen in an interview with 60 Minutes last Sunday regarding antipatriotic sentiments, "the modus operandi for anybody who doesn't like somebody." Actually, Springsteen is practicing the American Constitution very patriotically.

He added, "It's unpatriotic at any given moment to sit back and let things pass that are damaging to some place that you love so dearly and that has given me so much."

In fact, damaging things are passed by everyday in America, according to Springsteen: "When people think of the Unites States' identity, they don't think of torture; they don't think of illegal wiretapping; they don't think of voter suppression; they don't think of no habeas corpus". "Those are things that are anti-American," he said.

"Living in the Future" is "10th Avenue Freeze-out" incarnate. But instead of taking the city by charge with Bigman Clarence Clemmons, the city takes Bruce by charge. "I opened up my heart to you/It got all damaged and undone/ My ship Liberty sailed away/On a bloody red horizon." The song provokes things considered anti-American, such as the absence of liberty and privacy.

Springsteen does not let anything damaging pass with "Magic." He aims to unveil truth and to Windex the dirty, blood-soaked surfaces of American minds. This album is an artistic success and a political success. When people say it is antipatriotic, another truth

See SPRINGSTEEN on page 5

Bruce Springsteen has been called unpatriotic by critics in years passed but remains true on his album "Magic."

'The Price is Right' re-appeared with Drew Carey instead of Bob Barker

BY VERNE GAY
NEWSDAY

I am almost certainly the worst judge in the world of "The Price is Right." Don't watch. Never have. Never will.

This high-tallutin' TV critic would much rather watch the Shakespearean-like drama "Lost" or "Battlestar Gallactica" (maybe "Desperate Housewives," too). Mention "The Price is Right," and my nose goes up in the air ... "I wouldn't be caught dead!"

To snobs like me, "Price" fairly screams "I'm outta work ... indigent ... or ... 92-years old." This is the most peculiar form of television-kitsch married to insanely-stoked acquisitiveness. "Price" is a pure distillate of TV commercialism. Where's room for humor in this formula?

And God forbid a host who is cynical, or snotty, or dismissive, or sarcastic. Bob Barker went down well for a million years (in TV terms) because he was the perfect automaton, a true believer in the cult that is "Price." Believe, or guess right, and you too shall win that all expenses-paid trip to Las Vegas!

And so here is Drew Carey, who started this morning: Solid, block-like, he fills the screen with good humor, a black suit, horn-rimmed glasses, and a certain angularity that brings to mind SpongeBob Squarepants. He's not a fluid mover, but a deliberative one. He's not Bob Barker either – but that's not the idea.

He reminds me of those guys who come on stage to certify the results of the Oscars. He's like an accountant, or a car salesman, or a friendly stockbroker. "COME ON DOWN!!! You could keep the four thousand!!! ... You gonna go!!! ... Eight thousand dollars!!! ... Only two items left!!!"

Yes, he's big on exclamation points too. Drew doesn't like to leave things flat. He likes to pick up the most mundane "Price is Rightian" phrase, pump it up full of air, then send this balloon of hype and hooey floating over the studio audience, and out across the airwaves, to that invisible studio audience in the heartland.

He seems to talk a lot more than Bob did (not that I ever watched, mind you). He doesn't like open aural spaces – he likes to keep things moving along too. "There's a show to do," he might say to an indecisive contestant. He tells some guy to keep spinning the wheel ... "that's a do-over ... that's a do-over." He likes to repeat stuff.

You wonder as you watch Drew: Is this what a fairly successful TV career comes to? It seems like a strange, almost bizarre endpoint. Fine for Barker, because that's all he ever seemed to do. But for Drew? One can't think of "Price" as a stepping stone, say, to a big-screen career, or perhaps another sitcom. This is it. The end. The "All-you'll-ever-do-and-all-you'll-ever-want-to-do." The host that evinces just the slightest hint of careerism is the soon-to-be-dead host. This is it. There is no exit.

How will Drew, a smart, creative guy, keep his sanity intact over the next four decades?

That's between him and his therapist. But after the first day of the beginning of the rest of his life, I'd say Drew will be a successful "Price is Right" host.

Not that I'll ever watch again to prove that.

After Bob Barker left the set the show's producers decided to give "The Price is Right" a make-over. A new set design welcomed in Drew Carey this past Monday on CBS.

Useful information about perspiration

BY MADELEINE MARR
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

Perspiration is something most of us are pretty aware of. The average person has 2.6 million sweat glands in the skin. The fluid excreted from the pores is mostly made up of water and sodium chloride, the main constituent of table salt. People have been known to gush up to one liter an hour.

Betcha didn't know: Two types of sweat glands exist. Eccrine (sudoriferous) glands, used for body temperature regulation, are seen mostly on the palms, soles and the forehead. Apocrine (odoriferous) glands are mostly present in the armpits and scalp. The yellowish sweat they excrete contains proteins and fatty acids, causing stains. The odor is caused by bacteria fermenting in a hot environment such as an armpit.

Stemming the flow: Antiperspirants (classified as drugs by the FDA) are basically astringents. Their main active ingredient is an aluminum-based compound that forms a temporary plug within the sweat duct. Rumors have circulated that aluminum causes breast cancer and Alzheimer's, but the medical community denies this.

Another alternative: Deodorants, classified as over-the-counter cosmetics by the FDA, are different from antiperspirants. They are usually alcohol based and work by killing the bacteria that causes odor. If you aren't crazy about applying foreign substances to your skin, think about plain old talcum powder and showering as often as you can.

Embarrassing condition: Hyperhydrosis, or excessive sweating, usually occurs on the palms or armpits and isn't caused by emotional or physical activity. Possible causes include hormonal imbalances, overactive thyroid and certain foods or medications. Of late, Botox injections have been used to disable sweat glands with success.

Rowe gets his hands dirty

Mike Rowe hosts the Discovery Chanel's hit show "Dirty Jobs." The show chronicles everyday American citizens and the disgusting jobs they do.

BY LUAINE LEE
MCCLATCHY-TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

PASADENA, Calif. Before he became the victim of Discovery Channel's "Dirty Jobs," host Mike Rowe had scores of odd jobs. None of them, it turns out, put a single hair out of place.

He was a magazine telemarketer in college, the graveyard host pitching fake diamonds on QVC, the lone in-flight entertainment on American Airlines, an opera singer, an actor, emcee on a short-lived game show, narrator and the subject in several Tylenol commercials.

His plan, he says, was to take part in shows that were destined to fail. "Dirty Jobs" was a grave miscalculation.

"My career in this business had been a deliberate attempt to stay under the radar. I try to associate myself with projects that either fail or don't take a lot of time – do a good job, not be responsible for their failure, and move on to the next one and have six months off. Fundamentally I'm lazy," he says over lunch at a restaurant.

"This just went wrong. I didn't think it would get the reaction it did and once it did, the network just kept ordering them."

The network has ordered 150 of them and Rowe will be celebrating that event on Oct. 23 with a two-hour special featuring 10 of the best and grubbiest co-workers Rowe has encountered.

Whether he's wading in mucky slime, dredging out cesspools or laboring in a mineshaft, Rowe conceived the idea for the show as a tribute to his father and grandfather.

"My grandfather was an electrician and a plumber and an architect and a mason, not trained in any of those things. He was just one of those weird guys that was born hard-wired with that ability. He could fix anything, anywhere; he built the house I was born in without a blue print.

My dad, on the other hand, doesn't have any of those natural abilities. He was a schoolteacher, but he was the perfect apprentice – strong and patient. And when my grandfather had a stroke and wasn't able to do all the things he did as a young man, my father was there to basically be his arms. My earliest memories growing up were of my grandfather and my father working as this sort of apprentice team solving problems, no matter how dirty or disgusting. It's still mysterious to me because they would vanish and come back filthy and whatever the thing was would be fixed."

Rowe says he always wanted to do a TV show that celebrated those abilities. "To point a camera at people who would never have a camera pointed at them, to just pay an honest tribute," he says.

"I think TV does a very bad job of portraying the common worker. They either inflate them into heroes, which they're not, or reduce them to punch lines, which they're not. So the thought with 'Dirty Jobs' was: 'What if I just do the work and try to keep up and had an unscripted conversation during the job? What would that look like?' I think maybe the biggest reason the show has worked is that the viewer knows we're not cheating."

Rowe, who grew up near Baltimore, Md., stuttered badly as a kid. He was encouraged to sing and recite lines as a way of overcoming his handicap. "In 1989 I was a very serious annoying actor with long hair and a beard and doing 'Shakespeare in the Park' and restoration comedy and singing in the National Opera," he says.

"I was serious about that sort of thing in New York and D.C. and I lost a bet one day during intermission of this opera called 'Der Ring des Nibelungen,' or 'The Ring Cycle' ... I'm dressed as a Viking during intermission, having a beer across the street. And the bartender was watching QVC. This started a conversation about the decline of civilization ... turns out he's auditioning the next day and he bets me I can't get a callback. So I crash the audition. Not only do I get a callback, I get an offer on the spot. So I take it because I thought it would be nice to earn some money for a change."

He stayed at QVC for three years and three years later was hired by the Discovery Channel to preside over a romantic travel show. "It was the opposite of 'Dirty Jobs' ... me and a pretty girl creating the illusion of romance in far-off places in five-star hotels," he chuckles.

Ten years of more odd jobs passed before Rowe, 45, donned his dungarees for "Dirty Jobs."

I married, he's been with the same woman for "a long time" who runs a database marketing company in San Francisco. "She's as mystified by my world as I am hers," he muses.

Rowe thinks that many desk-bound workers are dissatisfied with their hygienic jobs. "I think there are millions of people who just feel disconnected. How do you know when your day's over if it doesn't look any different than when you started? 'Dirty Jobs' is a very, very simple show with some very big themes. Even though the face of work has changed dramatically in this country, there still exists [the underlying awareness to] the work ethic) that your granddad had. That, when we can find it and put it on TV, that's really cool."

On Oct. 23, "Dirty Jobs" will celebrate its 150th show with a two-hour special with the 10 grubbiest jobs.

Radiohead starts new trends musically and economically songs, such as "Airbag" and "Exit Music," it slowly builds to a noisy crescendo thanks to dynamic drumming. Amazingly, the band manages to capture melancholy on wax again, this time dramatically moving to a climax – a situation worsening, rather than empty despair. Rather than a whimper, this is a wail.

RADIOHEAD from page 4

"Faust Arp" will remind the listener of the Beatles' song "Julia," with its Bends-era digitally multi-tracked acoustic guitar rhythm. Rather than a stripped-down, minimalist track, Jonny Greenwood sweetens it with at least a quartet's worth of strings.

"Reckoner" exemplifies the album's tendency toward complex polyrhythm and sweet harmonies, just as "House of Cards" exemplifies its emphasis on guitar riffs. Though the band generally shies away from distortion pedals, they don't need them. They rock just as hard as the zillions of overdrive-loving acts out there.

All you really need to know is that this album somehow finds a way to be energetic, ambient, pensive and complex all at once. It ends with a whisper. "Videotape," which is somehow appropriate and powerful. The reverb-drenched piano compliments the lyrics, which look back on the narrator's life with mixed feelings. The drums, astoundingly, begin nearly off-beat but find their way on beat in a complex polyrhythmic pattern. Thom Yorke multi-tracks his voice in a way that nearly makes it sound like a choir "at the pearly gates," as he sings. This song, like the rest of the disc, requires many more listens.

It is hard to ever say that a given album doesn't have any bad songs or any filler tracks, but this is one that has something meritorious on every number. This CD may be the best deal of any album ever released – optional payment for a stunningly good collection of songs. It is for this reason that this is probably the most important album of 2007, even more than Kanye West's "Graduation." Now that's something worth talking about.

Steven Stafford can be reached at sstaffor@student.umass.edu

Springsteen touches on lack of liberties and freedoms

"Radio Nowhere" attempts to re-awaken American listeners who have tuned out. Bruce Springsteen also talks of crimes and political issues.

SPRINGSTEEN from page 4

is unveiled, the fact Americans are really to point the finger at anyone but themselves, even at the Boss.

"Your Own Worst Enemy," track four doesn't point fingers, but points out driving guilt. A man committed a crime and fled from the scene. He has become his own worst enemy, trying to hide himself from well himself. Springsteen sings, "The times they got too clear/So you removed all the mirrors." Oddly enough, this song sounds like an ode to the president, as the last line of it is, "Your flag it flew so high it drifted into the sky."

Springsteen's musical approach throughout all of his work is to "try and chart the distance between American ideals and American reality." Even though some say his most recent work is said to be antipatriotic, the American ideal was started in opposition to the government, dating back to the Boston Tea Party and the American Revolution. But the reality of today disables governmental opposition, and Springsteen is living proof. "It's like we've reached a point where we are so intent on protecting ourselves," he continues, "that we are willing to destroy the best parts of ourselves to do so."

The opening track and single "Radio Nowhere" flirts with American identity. Springsteen sings, "Is there anybody alive out there?" No one is listening to the radio, an American emblem, as transmissions only "bounce off a satellite," not being absorbed by listeners. The Boss deeply wants to make a connection and reawaken listeners, but his cause may be lost, as the title suggests. Hopefully the Boss's broadcast is heard over the drone of today because it is awesome. It echoes the sound of The Ramones with driving lead riffs and pounding drums. At age fifty-eight, the Boss still knows how to rock.

"Magic" is more than just a musical and political statement by the Boss. It unveils the reality of America through caricatures of American life. Each song on the album presents a reality in which the characters struggle to maintain ideals. In the end, this album will question anyone who loves America the Beautiful, America the Free and America the Brave. For this reason, it is seen as unpatriotic, and for this reason it is patriotic.

Dave Master can be reached at dmaster@student.umass.edu

BRUCE SPRINGSTEEN
"MAGIC"
SONY RECORDS
4/5

2 X Tuesday
Domino's Pizza
Buy Any Large Pizza...
Get One FREE Delivered!
Domino's Pizza®
413 - 256 - 8911

Results you can feel.
• headaches • neck pain
• back pain • sports injuries
• auto injuries • carpal tunnel
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractor
Participating provider for HMO's student insurance: Blue Cross, GIC, Fallon insurance & most others
www.AmherstFamilyChiro.com
Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health
228 Triangle Street
Amherst, MA
(near Bertucci's)
549-1500

Landers leads Spiders, sets record in win

Black Bears winless in CAA

By Mike Connors
Collegian Staff

For the second time in 2007, James Madison quarterback Rodney Landers was named the Colonial Athletic Association's Offensive Player of the Week.

CAA Football

Between his passing and rushing yards, Landers amassed 402 total yards of offense for the Dukes (6-1, 4-0 CAA) in their 44-27 win at Rhode Island (1-5, 0-3 CAA). He threw for three touchdowns and accounted for more than two-thirds of the JMU offensive attack.

"Rodney is a heck of a player," JMU coach Mickey Matthews said in this week's CAA teleconference. "He's like all the quarterbacks that are hard to defend – he can run and throw. He makes really good decisions. He threw the ball very well, he ran it very effectively. Any time you run this kind offense, you're going to miss some reads from time to time, any quarterback does, but I think his decision making is improving."

Landers' has completed 81-of-108 pass attempts going back to Sept. 1 against North Carolina. Since throwing two interceptions in that game, Landers has thrown nine touchdowns with no interceptions. The No. 9 Dukes have won all six of these games.

Hofstra's Gian Villante was awarded the CAA Defensive Player of the Week for his efforts against Towson.

The senior linebacker made eight tackles, including one for loss and also broke up two passes for the undefeated Pride (6-0, 3-0 CAA); Hofstra is ranked No. 10 in the Sports Network Football Championship Subdivision poll.

The Tigers (3-4, 1-4 CAA) came into Saturday averaging 320 offensive yards per game but were held to 193 in the 20-3 loss.

Quarterback Sean Schaefer threw for a career-low 123 yards and was intercepted twice.

"Certainly, we still need to make improvements in different areas," Hofstra coach Dave Cohen said, "but I think they're continuing to go in that direction of becoming a good defense. I think another few games like that, and they will be a good defense."

Maine drops fifth straight

Coupled with their inability to stop opposing offenses, the Black Bears's brutal early-season schedule has contributed to their current five-game losing streak. They have not won since defeating Monmouth in their season opener on Sept. 1.

Jhamal Fluellen's 206 rushing yards and two touchdowns from quarterback Adam Farkes to wide receiver Landis Williams weren't enough to prevent Maine (1-5, 0-4 CAA) from dropping its most recent contest to William & Mary, 21-20.

"We had a good start to the football game, which had been a concern for us in our previous two games against UMass and Hofstra," Maine coach Jack Cosgrove said. "We got out into a lead; but unfortunately, we didn't protect that lead and didn't finish the football game. William & Mary really did a great job of making some statement plays."

Maine's primary offensive nemesis this week was the Tribe's freshman wide receiver Cameron Dohse.

His 123 receiving yards and two touchdowns were good enough to earn Dohse CAA Rookie of the Week honors, as well as making him the first W & M player this season to score two touchdowns.

With the exception of the Monmouth win, Maine has yet to prevent an opponent from scoring at least 21 points.

They have given up 38 points three times this year; however, they did have another near victory when they lost 24-17 in overtime against Villanova on Sept. 15.

The Black Bears have yet to win a conference game this season, but they still have four chances to do so. Future road tests include trips to New Hampshire and Northeastern, but they still have potential home wins against fellow cellar-dwellers Towson and Rhode Island.

Santos sits out again

UNH quarterback Ricky Santos missed this weekend's game with Division III opponent Iona, but backup R.J. Toman got the job done in a 49-21 Wildcat victory.

"Ricky wanted to go, but watching him do some things out there on the field on Friday, we just knew he wasn't ready to go," UNH coach Sean McDonnell said. "He was obviously disappointed he couldn't play. Saturday, he was tremendous. He was like another coach for us on the field with all the guys, especially with R.J."

"He's still not throwing the ball a whole lot with that arm yet, but he's doing some good things," McDonnell later continued. "He was out there flying around, and it looks like there will be a good shot for him to play this Saturday."

The No. 11 Wildcats (4-2, 1-2 CAA) steamrolled the Gaels, but will face much stiffer competition this weekend when they travel to Hempstead, N.Y., to take on undefeated Hofstra. Toman has thrown four touchdowns and no interceptions in the two games he's played this season, but the Wildcats could use Santos' experience against a Hofstra team that's only allowed 16 points in its past two games.

Cuff leads way for Hens

The Blue Hens's Omar Cuff carried the offensive load with 39 carries for 200 yards and two touchdowns in a 30-20 victory over Northeastern. The senior, who is a candidate for the Walter Payton Award, also caught an early fourth quarter 25-yard touchdown pass that broke a 20-20 tie and proved to be the eventual score.

"Just going into the third quarter I said, 'Listen, you're tippy toeing,'" Delaware coach K.C. Keeler said about comments he made to Cuff. "I said 'You have to run reckless.' His response to me was, 'Give me the rock.' And I said, 'Don't worry, we'll give you the rock.'"

Cuff leads the nation with 21 points of offense on average per game. Moving his way up the Delaware (6-1, 4-1 CAA) record books, Cuff tied the UD single-season record with 24 touchdowns, which is quite an accomplishment considering the team still has four regular-season games remaining.

With his 200 yards, Cuff also passed Chuck Hall for second all-time on the Delaware rushing yards list; Cuff now has 3,282 yards for his career.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu

James Madison quarterback Rodney Landers won CAA Offensive Player of the Week for 408 total yards of offense on Saturday.

Colonial Athletic Association Standings

– North Division –

Team	CAA Record	Overall Record	PA	PF
Hofstra	3-0	6-0	188	98
Massachusetts	3-0	5-1	195	115
New Hampshire	1-2	4-2	246	203
Rhode Island	0-3	1-5	139	202
Northeastern	0-3	1-5	100	169
Maine	0-4	1-5	78	173

– South Division –

Team	CAA Record	Overall Record	PA	PF
James Madison	4-0	6-1	245	136
Delaware	4-1	6-1	257	123
Richmond	2-1	4-2	219	130
William & Mary	2-2	4-3	217	255
Villanova	2-2	4-3	196	173
Towson	1-4	3-4	116	162

DoRosario leads UM defense

Field Hockey from page 6

Letourneau made the save off the initial shot, but Ruth was there to bang the rebound off the goalie's pads. The Maroon and White rebounded and came back to post a shutout against a physical St. Joseph's team.

The player that stood out the most to Sowry was defensive captain Kristina DoRosario.

Sowry commented that her play was exceptional along with the other two backs', Erin O'Brien and Bourazeris. Together the three have posted a league-leading six shutouts this season ... Sophomore forward Christine Rodgers netted her first-career goal against St. Joseph's. It came late in the first half when she corralled the rebound off Katelyn Orlando's free hit and put it past the goalkeeper. Her goal would be the eventual game-winner ... The Minutewomen are 3-1 in A-10 for the first time since 2005. They currently share the lead with Temple and Richmond, the team they finished second place to in 2005.

Justin McGrail can be reached at jwmcgrail@student.umass.edu

Senior defender Kristina DoRosario's performance over the weekend drew praise from UMass coach Justine Sowry. The defensive captain leads a defense that has recorded six shutouts in 2007.

University Health Services

Support and Therapy Group Meetings • Fall, 2007

GRADUATE STUDENT INTERPERSONAL THERAPY GROUP
Start date and time TBA

"FIRSTS" GO TO COLLEGE
Thursdays, 2 – 3 p.m. beginning Oct. 22
For undergraduate and graduate students who are the first in their families to attend college.

KEEPING IT TOGETHER – HEARTS AND MINDS
Two separate sessions - Thursdays, Oct. 25 and Nov. 15, 4 – 5 p.m.
A seminar focused on self-care in the face of college stress and mood changes.

LIVING WITH LOSS
Sessions start Monday, Oct. 22
A support group for students dealing with the loss of a loved one.

LIVING WITH MEDICAL ILLNESS
Start date and time TBA
A support group for those dealing with chronic medical illness that affects daily functioning.

Pre-registration is required for all groups. Call 545-2337 or come to Mental Health Services, 127 Hills North, Monday–Friday, 8 a.m.–5 p.m.

Caldwell scores first-career goal in victory over Xavier

Soccer from page 6

Meghan Gould leapt for a ball in the air. While going up to get it she collided with a URI player who was also trying to get to the ball. The two fell to ground and were tended to by team trainers.

Gould walked it off and remained in the game. Several minutes later, however, Rudy removed her and put in a substitute.

Gould, who notched her first collegiate point with an assist a few weeks ago, was seen on the sidelines performing a sight test with UMass trainer Kathy Boyd. After the game it was revealed that Gould suffered a concussion. It is unclear how long she will be out.

Junior defender Melissa Toulouse also suffered a concussion against Duquesne Sept. 30 when she was struck in the face with a kicked ball. She missed the next game against Dayton on Oct. 5 but was back in action starting Sunday, Oct. 7 against Xavier.

Caldwell scores

Goals for defenders are few and far between. But in the Minutewomen's 3-1 win over Xavier on Oct. 7, after three seasons of helping anchor the UMass defense, Caldwell got her chance when she recorded the first goal of her career.

In the 43rd minute, the senior intercepted a clearing pass and shot it from the outside box. The ball flew into the net over Fede's head.

"It was like textbook," UMass coach Jim Rudy said. "It was a beautiful goal. She can shoot. We know she can shoot from the outside, and she's had some nice opportunities. She went long-range against Duquesne and hit the crossbar with that.

"We know she's a good long-range shooter. And that's why we keep her deep when we're attacking corners."

Caldwell now has one goal and three assists as a Minutewoman.

Not so sweet

UMass has had a 28-29 home record in the last seven years. After going 5-3 at home in 2001, it had three seasons of losing home records, going 2-6 in 2002, 2-5 in 2003 and 4-5 in 2004. The Minutewomen then started to get a little more comfortable. They went 5-4 in 2005, 5-4 in 2006 and are 3-2 this season.

Despite the below-.500 record for the last seven years, Rudy says his players are more comfortable playing at home. He said it helps to have the crowd donning maroon and white clothing and playing on a familiar field while friends and family cheer from the stands ... As of Oct. 11, Canfield was eighth in the country in assists per game this season with seven in 10 matchups (0.7 average). Kelly Isleib (Utah), averaging one per game, was the national leader ... As of Oct. 11, the Minutewomen were 51st in the nation in scoring, averaging two goals a game. The team's goals-against average of 0.88 was 78th in the nation ... Canfield was 20th in the country in offense, averaging 1.9 points per game. She was also 59th in goals (0.6 average), and eighth in assists, with 0.7. Stoll is 53rd in points per game (1.5) and tied with Canfield with an average of 0.6 goals per game.

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu.

UMass women's soccer coach Jim Rudy and the Minutewomen are 2-3 in their first five Atlantic 10 games of the season.

Welcome to the week of...

CLINT EASTWOOD!

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

		6	8		9	1
5	9						2	3
		9	5		4	2
6								5
		1	9		6	3
4	2						8	1
		3	2		1	6

Quote of the Day

"I have a very strict gun control policy: if there's a gun around, I want to be in control of it."

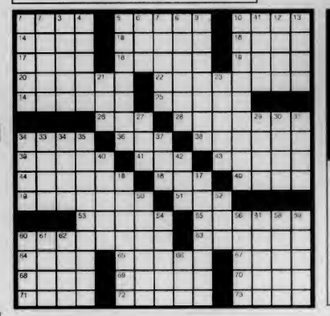
-Clint Eastwood

Ecology By Jen Fill

Jeff, Gote and Goat By Grant Cerulo

www.people.umass.edu/gcerulo/JGG

Titter Treat By Jen Fill



Invisible Ghosts Eating Marshmallows on a Puffy White Cloud By A.V. Waters

ACROSS
1 Collar stiffener
5 Put on
10 Good fortune
14 Schlep
15 Chances to play
16 Eyeball impolitely
17 Grace ending
18 Monastery VIP
19 "Rule Pole ..."
20 More organized
22 Missing link
24 Gin and lime cocktail
25 Variety show
26 Chest bone
28 Lacking energy
32 Alpert or Caen
36 Catch red-handed
38 Actress Sobieski
39 Zodiac sign
41 German article
43 City near Casablanca
44 Play of "Goodfellas"
46 Hi- graphics
48 Swamplands
49 Active
51 I figured it out!
53 Tilts
55 Floating fleet
60 Herbal drink
63 Raised
64 Word of honor
65 Door hardware
67 Silicate mineral
68 Queue
69 Church table
70 Stream of moonlight
71 Drumbeat
72 Cuffs
73 ... podrida

DOWN
1 Comic actor Arnold
2 Maines of "My Cousin Vinny"
3 Mr. T's outfit
4 Streisand film
5 Take up
6 Bath locale
7 Shady bower
8 Dwarflike creatures
9 Of summer
10 Like some notebooks
11 Unsightly fruit?
12 Commercial award
13 Peachy follower
21 Always, to Keats
23 Outstanding!
27 Naughty
29 German river
30 Young or Penn
31 Tennis units
32 Angelic aura
33 ... go bragh!
34 Wild profusion
35 Pennsylvania city
37 Saloon
40 Dutch painter
42 Black or Red, e.g.
45 Christie and others
47 Altruistic lot
50 Playwright Eugene
52 Exist
54 Citius
56 Latin American dance
57 Sprite in "The Tempest"
58 Transfer image
59 Battlestar Galactica character
60 Game for Woods
61 Horizontal barrier
62 Sicilian volcano
66 Disparity

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Today's page brought to you by...

Clint's exceptionally pointy chin and his hilarious tendency to squint his eyes.

So precious!

Submit your comics!

collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Submit your classifieds!

(413) 545-3500

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Never act like Kevin Costner or you'll wind up dancing underwater with a wolf.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Both mushrooms and clouds are mad they got caught up in the nuclear arms race.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Your breath smells like peaches which isn't necessarily bad, but it's odd fo' sho.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Build a balance beam routine into your day but there's no need to wear a leotard.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
You are a human pinata, so sweet that you deserve a beating.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
After it rains you should try to actually read a rainbow, but don't take my word for it.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You're so good that you can eat cotton candy without even getting a little bit sticky.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Your sunglasses take up 75% of your face and suggest that you might be a vampire.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Wear old school roller blade wrist guards in case you fall down a flight of stairs.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Pita pockets always rip and never hold anything. That's why they aren't used in pants.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
I know it feels good to fit in, but is it really worth being called "skid-mark Sam"?

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Has anyone actually gotten a Coke from jinxing someone? Get on that right now.

If you talk you can sing,
if you can write you can draw.

collegiancomics@yahoo.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Activities

Montreal weekend from $99.00. Complete, motel, transportation and more. Montreal express.net 781-979-9001. Lowest Prices on campus.

Apartment for Rent

Granby Apt. 4 rooms. $750.00 a month. Heat/hotwtr included. Call Allen at Eaglecrest. 413-256-3442

Employment

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext. 162

Staff needed for Mullins Center performance Friday, Oct.26th. Approx. 2:30-9:30 pm. $10/hr. Contact Matt at workbos-ton@eworksinc.com.

CAFE HELP PART-TIME nights and weekends must be fast, accurate, efficient and friendly. Apply in person at the wood-star cafe. 60 Masonic St. Northampton.

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Nursing home companion in Sunderland $15/hr. 4 hrs per week. Elder experience desired. 413-539-0820

Instruction

University Bartending Classes start soon. 1-800-U-CAN-MIX. www.universitybartending.com. Sign up now.

Salon & Spa

HOLISTIC SALON AND SPA. Beautiful organic hair color! Foils, Hi, Low, party, etc. www.shearblissamherst.com 413-253-2322

Services

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906,1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

Concerned About Your Eating? Do you eat too little? Eat too much? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic: 577-5101.

TAPESTRY HEALTH, providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling & rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St., Amherst www.tapestryhealth.org

Travel

*#1 Spring Break Website! 4 & 7 night trips. Low prices guaranteed. Group discounts for 8+. Book 20 people, get 3 free trips! Campus reps needed. www.StudentCity.com or 800-293-1445.

Spring Break '08 The New Math: 10+1=10. Book TEN of your friends on our SB '08 packages, the 11th is FREE. Contact STA TRAVEL: Campus Center, Room 224 (413) 256-1261 AMH@statravel.com www.freespringbreak08.com

Wanted

EGG DONORS WANTED. Help make a couple's dream of becoming parents come true by becoming an egg donor. Very generous compensation and expenses paid. Must be a non-smoking female between the ages of 21 and 32. For more info, please visit our website at www.robertnicholsesq.com or contact Julie at 781-551-0600.

EGG DONORS NEEDED $15,000 (PLUS ALL EXPENSES) We are seeking women who are attractive, under the age of 29. SAT 1300+ (math+verbal), physically fit and maintaining a healthy lifestyle. If you have a desire to help an infertile family and would like more info please contact us. Email: darlene@aperfectmatch.com www.aperfectmatch.com 1-800-264-8828

OCT 16 2007

OCT 17 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 16, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Sophomore Christina Adams scored a goal and had an assist in the Minutewomen's 3-2 loss to Rhode Island on Thursday. Adams entered the game following an injury to fellow sophomore forward Sydney Stoll.

Loss to URI evens overtime mark since '01

Walker sees positives in tough loss to A-10 foe Rhode Island

BY DOMENIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The pain the Massachusetts women's soccer team felt after its heartbreaking 3-2 double-overtime loss to Rhode Island on Thursday was one no team wants to get acquainted with.

Fortunately for the Minutewomen, it was the first time they suffered an overtime loss in over a year. The last game they lost in OT had been on Sept. 22, 2006, when they fell 1-0 in another double-overtime contest, this one against Vermont.

UMass is 6-6-2 in overtime matchups since 2001 and have gone into double-overtime eight times, with a record of 1-5-2.

The Minutewomen, who had been down 1-0, worked the score to 2-2 before heading to overtime. Less than three minutes into OT, however, URI's Amanda Thomas tapped a ball into the lower left corner off a corner kick by teammate Dora Larusdottir.

Games that extend into extra periods are frustrating for the players, especially when they amount to notches in the loss column.

"The result stinks, and it's going to come back to haunt," said redshirt senior goalkeeper Kristin Walker. "Overall, it was a positive for us to come back off of 1-0."

ADAMS STEPS IN

When sophomore forward Sydney Stoll went down with a broken collarbone in the 20th minute of Thursday's game, classmate Cristina Adams came off the bench to take her spot. Adams, a forward, scored one goal and one assist in her playing time prior to that.

About 23 minutes after subbing into the game, Adams took a cross from senior defender Kaelyn Caldwell. Adams' initial shot was blocked by URI goalkeeper Jackie Fede, but the follow-up sailed just over Fede's, for Adams' second goal of the season.

UMass Soccer

But Adams wasn't done yet.

Just over a minute later, she helped her team take the lead when she, along with senior captain Britt Canfield, assisted in Vanessa Patry's goal. Patry, a junior forward, sent a ball past Fede in the bottom right corner.

"Just to know that people can come off the bench like Adams and score and be positive and just keep the game going, it's great," Walker said.

Senior captain Jenny Roehrig agrees.

"She's kept her head up. Even though she doesn't start yet I tell her, 'When you come in you got to give it your all,'" she said. "Times like these are when you need her, and she's turned out to do well."

GOULD SUFFERS CONCUSSION

In the first half of Thursday's game, sophomore forward

See SOCCER on page 6

Kelly shines for UM

Freshman forward excels as reserve for Minutewomen

BY JUSTIN MCGRAIL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Whether she plays a reserve role or gets the starting nod, freshman Katie Kelly continues to make an impact whenever she is on the field.

In last Sunday's game against Saint Joseph's, she came off the bench and got right into the action, accounting for three of the team's seven shots on Hawks' goalkeeper Rebecca Cunfer.

She was part of the starting lineup in last Friday's contest at Temple. Again, she rifled three shots against the Temple goalkeeper, but this time one of them found the back of the net. Kelly's goal came in an area of the game that UMass coach Justine Sowry wants the team to continue improving on, penalty corners.

Her goal came early in the second half of Friday's game. The ball was inserted to Cher King who rifled a shot at Owls' goalkeeper Frin Hanshue. Hanshue made the save, but Kelly was there to put the rebound into the back of the cage. Kelly's three goals are tied for second on the team with last week's A-10 Rookie of the Week Jamie Bourazeris and last season's leading scorer Lauren Gillespie. She is also tied for the lead in game-winning goals with King.

UMass Field Hockey

TOUGH PLAYING SURFACE

This past weekend's doubleheader presented a new challenge for the Minutewomen. It wasn't the physicality of either teams or the offensive schemes that each team presented, it was the surface of the fields that both games were played on.

UMass coach Justine Sowry said that the turf was harder and bouncier than what the Minutewomen were used to. As a result, the team failed to pass the ball the way they have all season.

Despite that, Sowry noted that junior midfielder Mary Shea stood out because of her hard-working mindset on the field. But the Maroon and White focused and put up two goals in two games.

DEFENSE BOUNCES BACK

After two shutouts in the opening weekend of A-10 play, the Minutewomen defense let up two goals against Temple. The first was on a breakaway by Kasey Ruth. She was 1-on-1 with Becky Letourneau and beat her for the first score of the game. Ruth scored the game-winner with less than three minutes left off a penalty corner.

See FIELD HOCKEY on page 6

Freshman forward Katie Kelly is second on the Minutewomen in goals this season with three. She is also second on the team with seven points although she has started only six games this season.

Junior midfielder Kyle Patterson scored a goal in Saint Louis' 1-0 win over St. Bonaventure on Friday.

Billikens win pair to kick off A-10 play

BY SAM EHRLICH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

All season long, Saint Louis never needed to justify its national rankings to anyone.

This weekend, the Billikens proved it to the most important of their opponents – the Atlantic 10.

Goalkeeper Ross Kaufmann was solid once again for No. 18 SLU, as it recorded two straight 1-0 shutouts to start A-10.

The sophomore saved two and four shots against St. Bonaventure and Duquesne in a strong overall effort by the Saint Louis defense. Behind Kauffmann, the 6-1-3 Billikens have five shutouts on the season.

Despite the lack of goals, Saint Louis dominated both games on the offensive side of the ball, outscoring both teams by a combined total of 26-17.

Late goals decided both games for the Billikens with reigning A-10 Player of the Week Kyle Patterson icing the game for Saint Louis on Friday and sophomore midfielder Scott Wisniewski turning the trick on Sunday.

Saint Louis is now 16-1-3 all-time in Atlantic 10 regular season play. It will next host Massachusetts on Friday.

As for the Bonnies and the Dukes, the losses drop them to 4-4-1 and 3-5-3 overall, respectively. They are both now 1-1 in Atlantic 10 play, as both teams beat Charlotte, Duquesne on Friday and St. Bonaventure on Sunday.

WOEFUL RAMS EXPLODE

Sometimes all you need when you can't seem to win is an offensive explosion.

This certainly proved true for Fordham in its Atlantic 10 opener, as the Rams took out their anger from an eight-game winless streak on La Salle, destroying the Explorers, 4-1. Senior captain Kevin Meyer led the Ram attack, recording a hat trick.

A-10 Soccer

Ironically, the Explorers scored first, but it proved to be the last straw for Meyer and the Rams' offense, as they answered with four consecutive goals to end the contest.

La Salle has struggled this season, as the loss moves it to 2-7-1 overall, including a 0-1 start in conference play. The Explorers will try to take their frustration out on Dayton Friday.

The hat trick was the second for a Fordham player this season, as senior Dean Stanic also achieved the feat in the season opener against Marist.

The Rams now have a 2-5-3 overall record and are 1-0 in Atlantic 10 play.

SPIDERS CAN'T CRACK GW

No one can say that Richmond didn't make a valiant effort against 7-4-0 George Washington, but effort wasn't enough in the 1-0 overtime loss.

GW goalkeeper Matt Scheer outdueled Spider star Eric Sciocchetti, as the two teams battled through regulation before Greg McKay won the game for the Colonials in the 98th minute.

Scheer, a redshirt junior, made a career-high five saves for his second career shutout while his Richmond counterpart posted seven saves and the one lone goal.

The shutout would have been Sciocchetti's 13th career shutout and would have tied him for fifth all-time for Richmond goalkeepers.

George Washington's win was a rare lack of power for its offense, which had scored 23 goals through its first 10 games. They didn't have a bad game, outshooting the Spiders 12-9 and recording eight shots on goal, but Sciocchetti was almost too much for them.

Led by their volatile offensive attack, the 7-4 Colonials rank ninth in the NSCAA/Adidas Middle Atlantic Regional rankings, while the 3-7-1 Spiders are now 0-1-1 in conference play after the loss and a draw with Rhode Island on Friday.

NOTES

Both teams will travel to Philadelphia this weekend to take on Saint Joseph's and Temple … The Philadelphia programs battled it out Saturday in an ugly game that saw 41 fouls and a yellow card for each side. SJU forward Patrick Duddy took advantage of a late Temple mistake to beat the now 4-5-1 Owls, 1-0, and boost his team to a 2-6-1 record. It was the first conference game for either team … Despite a 6-1-2 non-conference start, Dayton can't seem to continue the momentum in Atlantic 10 play, losing to UMass and URI this weekend to drop to 6-3-2 overall and 0-2 in conference games. Before entering the A-10 season, the Flyers had not been beaten in five games.

Sam Ehrlich can be reached at sehrlich@student.umass.edu.

COLLEGIAN SPORTS ATHLETE OF THE WEEK | PAGE 8

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

PARTLY CLOUDY : HI: 70 LO: 51 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 17, 2007

No first aid kit slows first response

Suspect pleads innocent

The former University of Massachusetts student who allegedly assaulted his former suitemates Friday afternoon appeared in court yesterday.

Murtaza "Mokie" Hanan Qutab, 20, pleaded innocent to two charges of assault with intent to murder, two charges of assault and battery with a deadly weapon and two charges of larceny from a building.

Arraigned in Eastern Hampshire District Court yesterday, Qutab is accused of hitting his former roommate in the face three times with an aluminum baseball bat and cutting another in the right hand with a knife.

According to University spokesman Ed Blaguszewski, the assailant left the scene with two laptops, two cell phones and an IPod.

-Will McGuinness

The McNamara cluster office was not equipped with either a first aid kit or rubber gloves when Barabe and Saxena were attacked.

BY WILL MCGUINNESS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

University of Massachusetts junior Nellie Stevens said the only difference between a controlled scene and the hectic confusion in the McNamara lobby after resident Sean Saxena approached the cluster office covered in blood was a pair of rubber gloves.

Saxena, a resident on the sixth floor of the Sylvan Residential Area dormitory, was struck in the head with an aluminum baseball bat three times. According to eyewitness accounts, he was attacked by former suitemate, Murtaza "Mokie" Hanan Qutab, 20, of Holden, Mass.

When he staggered downstairs, he found no first aid supplies in the cluster office.

According to fellow suitemate James Barabe, a man entered Saxena's room unannounced dressed in a large jacket, gloves, and a mask. After the attacker hit Saxena, Barabe said he tried to intervene but was cut in the right arm in the ensuing scuffle.

Barabe said he told Saxena to run for help while he was wrestling the attacker. According to UMass freshman P.J. Stanley, a trail of blood was left from the sixth floor to the lobby of McNamara where Saxena sought aid from the building's cluster office.

Nellie Stevens was about to leave the building to walk to class but noticed the scene at the office's desk.

"The cluster office counter was completely covered in blood. I was in shock and I said, 'Oh my gosh.' No one was doing anything," Stevens said.

Trained in situations similar to the scene in the lobby of McNamara as a certified professional rescuer who plans to attend medical school, Stevens made sure the police were called then took control of the situation.

"I asked the girl behind the counter for a first aid kit

See FIRST AID on page 2

James Barabe, shown here receiving medical aid, was one of two students injured in last Friday's assault.

UMass not in line with necktie fad

Students ignore resurgence of classic fashion statement

BY LEIF WALCUTT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

As a revamped necktie style sweeps the fashion industry, most University of Massachusetts students are choked by the trend.

"There's a certain sanctity that a tie carries," said 21-year-old senior Loren Halman.

Halman, who said he hasn't worn a tie in two years, feels a tie's presence should be reserved for only certain occasions.

"Worn in social occasions, it doesn't carry the same weight as in formal ones," he said.

A recent New York Times style article has pronounced the necktie as no longer being out in the cold in the fashion world. The NDP Group, which tracks clothing sales and trends, found that tie sales to men between the ages 18 and 34 had increased more than 13 percent from March 2006 to March 2007.

Wearing the necktie of today differs from the "power ties" of the past. The new style is worn in casual situations, skinnier and more "low-key" than older-style ties. Young celebrities like Justin Timberlake and Elijah Wood flaunt the style.

"It's the trend of the season," said Jillian Savone, who works at the Holyoke H&M clothing retailer. She said ties were part of the '80s style, which is also having a comeback.

"They sell out very quickly," she said.

Savone also said store patrons

See NECKTIE on page 2

UHS staff to attend national conference

UM professionals will share drug and alcohol programs

Two health services employees have been invited to make presentations on motivational interventions and online alcohol programs.

BY LISA DEBENEDICTIS AND SHRUTI SEHGAL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A presentation on substance prevention methods will be given at a national Department of Education meeting by University of Massachusetts Health Educator April McNally, M.P.H., and Prevention Specialist Diane Fedorchak, M.Ed.

The conference, to be held in Omaha, Nebraska, this weekend, aims to examine issues surrounding alcohol, drug abuse, and violence on college campuses and their communities.

"This is the meeting to go to if you are involved in drug and alcohol prevention in schools," said Fedorchak.

Fedorchak, Director of the Brief Alcohol Screening and Intervention for College Students (BASICS) program, will be co-presenting "Basics of Brief Motivational Interviewing" at the seminar.

"My presentation is going to discuss motivational interviewing and brief motivational interventions for alcohol and substance abuse," Fedorchak said.

Along with Fedorchak, McNally will be amongst three experts leading a discussion on the examinations of "The Ins and Outs of Online Alcohol Education Tools."

"[McNally] will be discussing how to use online alcohol programs and how they fit into comprehensive programs in col

See UHS on page 2

Gargano urges students to act responsibly

BY CORY GREENFIELD
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

With the baseball playoffs and football season underway, Vice Chancellor Michael Gargano expects University of Massachusetts students to refrain from rioting this year.

Gargano is trying to make students aware of the consequences of any future rioting on campus. Late last month he sent students and faculty an e-mail outlining the conduct and behavior expected of UMass students during and following this year's major sporting events.

Gargano wrote that the results of previous campus incidents, such as the Red Sox riots in 2003 and 2004, and last year's riot following the loss of the UMass football team in the Division I-AA championship game, are lasting and that the reputation of the school has suffered as a result.

The e-mail also gave a link to a Web site that has information about responsible fan behavior specifically directed at UMass students.

The Web site, entitled "Responsible Fan Behavior at UMass Amherst," explains the consequences of nationwide college binge drinking complete with statistics on health, student assaults, both physical and sexual, and the number of "unintentional" injuries that occur due to drinking.

The Web site also reiterates the section of the student code of conduct on rioting. It states, "Students who participate in riotous behavior or fail to disperse when ordered will be sanctioned under the Code of Student Conduct. These sanctions ranged from University probation up to and including immediate expulsion from the University."

The Web site offers examples of what the University considers "acceptable fan behavior," like watching the games with friends at the Blue Wall Café, staying in your room, or watching the game in residence hall common areas.

The Web site also addresses questions students may have in regards to what would be considered rioting. Anything involving the use of fire, the destruction of property, intentionally disobeying police officers, or the throwing of items with an intention to injure fall under what is considered riotous activity.

Ways for students to protect themselves from getting in trouble should another riot occur can also be found at the Web site. If students are caught in the middle of a riot they are advised to follow police direction and leave the scene as soon as possible, telling other students to walk away and not toward the rioting.

During December's riot following the 28-17 UMass loss to Appalachia State, 11 students were arrested, with more arrests made during the following investigation. Thousands of dollars of damage were caused to campus buildings during the incident.

Rioting is not new for U.S. colleges; they have occurred at the University of New Hampshire, Penn State, the University of Oregon and also at the University of Colorado in recent years. Gargano has said he intends to uphold order on campus this year to keep UMass students safe and under control.

Vice Chancellor Michael Gargano is encouraging students to avoid participating in events like last December's riots during this year's playoff season.

Faculty heads to Sturbridge

BY HOLLY STADLER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

University of Massachusetts faculty members, along with more than 900 educators statewide, will attend a major conference today focusing on preparing students for science, technology, engineering and math (STEM) careers.

The conference, "2007 STEM Summit B: Accelerating Forward," is to be held in Sturbridge and will include educators ranging from the preschool level to higher education. Community and business leaders will attend, as well as local public officials.

The summit will begin at 9 a.m. and feature several speakers, including former U.S. Congressman and new UMass Lowell Chancellor Martin T. Meehan, who will be introduced by UMass President Jack Wilson. Dana Mohler-Faria, president of Bridgewater State College and education advisor for Gov. Deval Patrick, and Johanne Kaplan, vice president of research at Genzyme Corporation, are also set to speak.

According to Bill Wright of the UMass Public Information Department, workshops will be held throughout the day until 4 p.m. and will concentrate on accelerating successful student preparation for careers in the STEM network.

"This is an annual event and this will be our fourth year," said Wright. "The timing for the conference is excellent due to the science and technology engineering portion of the MCAS, in which the results were announced this month."

See STEM on page 2

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 18

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3499 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
COPIES EDITOR Adam Staigin
EDITORIAL EDITOR Sean Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Ben Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ryan McAskill
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Teresa Reilly
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Gerber
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Will McGuinness
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Michael King
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenswaike
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 2:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Katie Huston

COPY EDITOR
Domenic Poli

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1809 and snap a photo with your cell phone, then send it to news@dailycollegian.com

Samaritan unable to help victim

FIRST AID from page 1

but she said there was none. There were no rubber gloves either but she said she thought there were some in Cashin [a residence hall adjacent to McNamara]. I had her look while I stayed with [Saxena]," Stevens said.

Stevens said Saxena was already on the floor when she went to attend to him.

"He looked like he had been shot in the chest. He lost a lot of blood and kept asking, 'Am I going to be okay?' If I had a pair of gloves, I could have checked the rest of his body," she said. "I know [Barabe] was cut in the hand, but I had no way of checking for any other injuries." Because there were no gloves, Stevens had no answer to his repeated question.

"There was one other person just standing next to him staring," she added.

In "complete and utter shock" herself, Stevens tried to help Saxena as much as she could without coming into contact with his blood.

"He said that he didn't know who hit him. His eyes were closed the whole time, which made me nervous. He tried to open his eyes but couldn't," she said.

Unable to touch or apply her training, which calls for direct pressure to be applied by a cool compress, Stevens said she could do nothing but talk to him.

She said waiting for police with a bleeding Saxena was the only option, and estimated they had arrived after a nerve-wracking 10 minutes.

According to Stevens, the scene did not appear to be under control, although she felt it could have been if she had been better able to help Saxena and control his bleeding.

UMass spokesman Ed Blaguszewski said the University does not provide extensive first aid kits in cluster offices specifically because the staff is not trained in first aid. He added that in the case of an emergency, staff is trained to call the University of Massachusetts Police Department, an ambulance if needed, or to seek help from University Health Services.

"We don't want to put them in a position to be a trained first responder if it is not their role to do so," Blaguszewski said.

One resident assistant (RA) at UMass, who did not want to be named, said, "The official policy is that if we choose to help someone, we're acting as an individual and not as an employee of the University."

Stevens is at odds with this policy. "My friend who is an RA informed me in that in their training they are instructed not to give medical care," she said. "They are employed by school and anything they do wrong is considered liable." However, she said, although the majority of students aren't trained in first aid, many are.

Even if a responder isn't trained, the Massachusetts "Good Samaritan" law keeps responders free from liability if proper care is somehow mishandled.

It states: "No person who, in good faith, provides or obtains, or attempts to provide or obtain assistance for a victim of a crime as defined in section one, shall be liable in a civil suit for damages as a result of any acts or omissions in providing or obtaining, or attempting to provide or obtain, such assistance unless such acts or omissions constitute willful, wanton or reckless conduct."

"[It] just seems like common knowledge that any student can apply some kind of first aid. Even if they have no idea, they can't cause much harm," Stevens said. Of the situation on Friday night, she added, the University's policy "just made a bad situation worse."

Will McGuinness can be reached at wmcguinn@gmail.com.

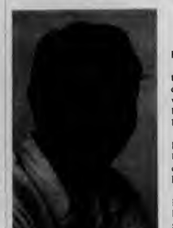
Summit addresses tech jobs

STEM from page 1

Massachusetts is not producing enough students to fill the open STEM workforce positions. According to a recent state survey, all four of the occupational groups were undergoing vacancy rates at or above the statewide rate average of 3.4 percent.

The STEM Summit plans to analyze this problem and its solutions by increasing student interest and preparation for careers in STEM, as well as increasing the number of highly qualified teachers and providing them with timely professional development program support.

According to Isa Zimmerman, the chair of the summit's organizing committee, "The program will include a range of related topics: policy sessions, curriculum, instruction, planning and the 'wingspread,' so popular in past years," she said. "We anticipate about 600 attendees from all the stakeholder groups and even have several people from outside of Massachusetts attending in order both to contribute and to learn from what we have been doing in STEM."



President Jack Wilson notes UMass's importance to the Summit.

"I am proud that the University is continuing to play a leadership role in organizing the Summit," he said. "And we are grateful to the planning committee and all of the sponsors for making this year's Summit possible, for contributing so many ideas and for identifying key focus areas."

Holly Seabury can be reached at hseabury@student.umass.edu.

Staffers 'honored' to represent UMass

UHS from page 1

LEW STERN/ UMASS STAFF

According to Fedorchak, UHS programs are recognized nationally.

leges," Fedorchak said.

Having the opportunity to represent UMass on the national level is a great privilege, the two health educators said. Their presence at the conference will garner more national respect and prestige for UMass. Other schools are eager to learn from the University's programs.

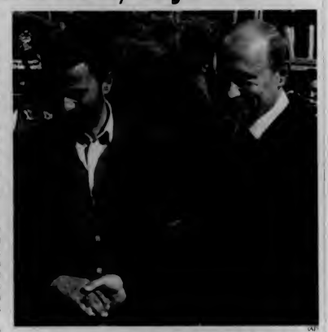
"It is an honor to be asked to represent University Health Services (UHS), Health Education, and UMass in such a way. Our programs are being recognized nationwide. We are leaders in the field of health education," Fedorchak said.

McNally and Fedorchak work at UMass in the Health Services Center for Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention (CADAP), which consists of programs supporting responsible decision-making towards alcohol and drug abuse.

McNally directs myStudentBody.com, an online course designed to enhance the awareness of drugs and alcohol to college bound students. MyStudentBody gives information, feedback, and advice for students. It offers articles and interactive tools to help prohibit alcohol abuse. Since 2006, the completion of the alcohol course is mandatory for all incoming UMass freshman.

BASICS, the program Fedorchak heads, is an organization designed for students concerned about their alcohol consumption or substance use. It is not therapy or a rehabilitation center, but a "drinker's check up."

The educators evaluate a student's substance abuse, and then point out lifestyle changes that could aid in lessening the risk of future problems. The strategies utilized are entirely evidence-based.



"There is evidence that students are drinking less at UMass. We are seeing changes in drinking rates, especially within the BASICS program," Fedorchak said. "We see, on average, that six months after the completion of the program, students drink less.

This includes our comprehensive programs, like myStudentBody. We address multiple segments of our student population, and we are seeing changes.

"People are looking at UMass in a different way," she continued. "They want to hear what we have to say."

Don't attack Iran, says Putin

BY VLADIMIR ISACHENKOV
ASSOCIATED PRESS

Iranian President Ahmadinejad and Vladmir Putin have both issued statements opposing a Western-controlled Caspian pipeline.

Vladimir Putin issued a veiled warning Tuesday against any attack on Iran as he made the first visit by a Kremlin leader to Tehran in six decades – a mission reflecting Russian-Iranian efforts to curb U.S. influence.

He also suggested Moscow and Tehran should have a veto on Western plans for new pipelines to carry oil and natural gas from the Caspian Sea, using routes that would bypass Russian soil and break the Kremlin's monopoly on energy deliveries from the region.

Putin came to Tehran for a summit of the five nations bordering the Caspian, but his visit was aimed more at strengthening efforts to blunt U.S. economic and military ties in the area. Yet he also refused to set a date for completing Iran's first nuclear reactor, trying to avoid an outright show of support for Iran's defiance over its nuclear program.

Putin strongly warned outside powers against use of force in the region, a clear reference to the United States, which many in Iran fear will attack over the West's suspicions that the Iranians are secretly trying to develop nuclear weapons.

Iranian President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad made similar comments.

"We are saying that no (Caspian) nations should offer their territory to outside powers for aggression or any military action against any of the Caspian states," Putin said.

The five national leaders at the summit later signed a declaration that included a similar statement – an apparent reflection of Iranian fears that the United States could use Azerbaijan's territory as a staging ground for military strikes in Iran.

Putin has warned against such attacks previously, but reiterating them in Tehran gave them greater resonance – particularly at a summit for a region where Moscow deeply resents U.S. and European attempts at greater influence.

The Russian leader also used the occasion to make a nod to Iran's national pride – describing it as a "world power" and referring to the might of the ancient Persian empire.

In Iran's confrontation with the West, Russia has tread a fine line, warning against heavy pressure on Iran and protecting it – for now – from a third round of U.N. sanctions, while urging Tehran to heed the Security Council's demand that it halt uranium enrichment.

Putin's careful stance on completing the Russian-built Bushehr nuclear power plant in Iran suggested the Kremlin is seeking to preserve solid ties with Tehran without angering the West.

"Russia is trying to sit in two chairs at the same time," Fyodor Lukyanov, editor of Russia in Global Affairs magazine, told The Associated Press. A pledge to quickly complete the plant would send a "strong signal to the West that Russia is with Iran," he said.

Putin showed he wouldn't be pressed into speeding up completion of the $1 billion contract to build Bushehr.

"I only gave promises to my mom when I was a small boy," he snapped when Iranian reporters prodded him to promise a quick launch.

Opinions differ on tie trend

UHS from page 1

buy the item for casual or formal occasions.

Alex Peterkin, a 22-year-old junior, said he wears his tie once a week for church. Peterkin added that the recent tie comeback is more of a "punk-rock thing."

He thinks musician Avril Lavigne might have been the source of the revival, with possibly its roots stemming from The Fall, a British post-punk band.

Keith Murray, a 25-year-old UMass alumnus, said it's important to present yourself in a positive way, but said he wears the tie only when he needs to.

"I really haven't noticed the difference," said 21-year-old senior Julius Bradley. Bradley, a native of Memphis, Tenn., said the trend hadn't made it in the south.

"I do my own thing," he said.

Women also agree that the necktie trend is peculiar.

"I would never let my boyfriend wear one," said Sherry Brahwa, a 19-year-old sophomore.

"What would possess you to wear one?" asked Mitali Biswas, a 20-year-old junior.

Biswas said ties should be reserved only for formal of professional situations and not for the casual.

"Fashion is something that you feel comfortable with, not what other people are wearing," Biswas said.

Leif Walcutt can be reached at lwalcutt@student.umass.edu.

UMASS CAMPUS RECREATION

GET THOSE FORMS IN BY:
Spring Basketball(M/W/C).....12/10

MANDATORY CLINICS FOR NEW SPRING BASKETBALL OFFICIALS ARE SCHEDULED FOR JANUARY 30 &31 AT 7 P.M. MANDATORY CLINIC FOR RETURNEES IS SCHEDULED FOR JANUARY 29 AT 6 P.M. CALL FOR REQUIREMENTS AND LOCATIONS.

On The Web: www.umass.edu/campusrec

Former Amherst Drop Zone
227 Russell Street (Route 9), Hadley, MA
Great Halloween Costumes
STORE CLOSING
Complete Liquidation
HUGE DISCOUNTS
Buy One Pair Of Boots At 50% Off, Get A Pair Of Mens Work Shoes Free! While Supplies Last! Must Bring This Ad To The Store
All Knives 40% Off
Shop Early For Holiday Gifts!
• Large Inventory Army-Navy Surplus
• BDU's Starting At $5.99
• Pea Coats $20.00
• Paintball & Airsoft Dept. 50% Off
FINAL THREE WEEKS!
Leather Jackets • Camping & Hunting Equipment
• American Patriotic Products & Much More!
All Sales Final
Sale Under The Management Of:
CRG Auction
Sale Ends November 3
Hours Of Operation
Mon. -Sat. 10am - 7pm | Sun. 12pm - 6pm
www.crgauction.com • (800) 300-6852

University Health Services

Support and Therapy Group Meetings • Fall, 2007

GRADUATE STUDENT INTERPERSONAL THERAPY GROUP
Start date and time TBA

"FIRSTS" GO TO COLLEGE
Thursdays, 2 – 3 p.m. beginning Oct. 22
For undergraduate and graduate students who are the first in their families to attend college.

KEEPING IT TOGETHER – HEARTS AND MINDS
Two separate sessions – Thursdays, Oct. 25 and Nov. 15, 4 – 5 p.m.
A seminar focused on self-care in the face of college stress and mood changes.

LIVING WITH LOSS
Sessions start Monday, Oct. 22
A support group for students dealing with the loss of a loved one.

LIVING WITH MEDICAL ILLNESS
Start date and time TBA
A support group for students dealing with chronic medical illness that affects daily functioning.

Pre-registration is required for all groups. Call 545-2337 or come to Mental Health Services, 127 Hills North, Monday–Friday, 8 a.m.–5 p.m.

Check out the Collegian online @

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
EDITORIAL OPINION

"It were best that we not all think alike; it is difference of opinion that makes horseraces"
– Mark Twain

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 17, 2007 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Abusing the right to free speech

Parisa Saranj

These allegedly hateful Iranians, as Cagan percieves them, have been living for decades under the authority of corrupt powers.

The most beautiful thing about America is the freedom it affords its people. How envious I am – as a Middle Easterner – of Americans for such beautiful gifts they have been granted as freedom of speech. It is indeed a wonderful thing to be able to express the heart and not be punished, imprisoned or tortured about it.

Last week, as I was wondering in the infinite world of American beauties, I come across a quote in The Daily Mail, an English newspaper, uttered by Ms. Debra Cagan, the deputy assistant secretary for coalition affairs to American Defense Secretary Robert Gates. In a meeting with six British Members of Parliament (MPs), Ms. Cagan expressed her heart by saying she hates all Iranians.

Cagan, one of President Bush's foreign policy advisers, made it abundantly clear that although the United States had no plans to attack Iran, it will be considered if the Iranians ignored warnings on the development of nuclear power and bombs. And, she added: "In any case, I hate all Iranians."

I, like the British MPs, was stunned by her statement. What was most resonant was a comment Cagan made on the future of Iraq. According to one of the MPs, she said if Americans leave the south of Iraq, the Iranians will take it over.

So, here I am reading these quotes from one of Bush's own advisers and reminding myself that I live in the 21st century, when the age of fascism, racism and talk of hatred is supposed to be passed. But, I remember that if I am a Middle Eastern, I also must be an ignorant, uncivilized marauder. Therefore, I must be mistaken about the true concept of Cagan's remark.

Freedom of speech, I remind myself. If a nation is so free and democratic to grant this privilege to all its citizens, then it must be with kindness and virtue that a government official makes such statements. Yes. Now, it makes sense. It is through the freedom of speech that citizens, politicians and officials can publicly assert such detestable observations and get away with it.

I believe that nowadays freedom of speech is just a figure raised by some to condemn non-favored groups, in the name of freedom, races and religious groups are addressed as hateful and brutish.

Who is to stop these unjust accusations? How, possibly, could some still point to an entire ethnic group and refer to them in resentment? Is there a line to separate free speech from hate speech, especially from a federal official?

So, I take another look at Ms. Cagan's claims to find my answers. The Pentagon and the White House deny that Ms. Cagan talks like this. I didn't see any coverage of her speech in the mainstream American media, and not many people aside from a group of voiceless Iranians and some unimportant English liberals seem to be bothered with her claim.

The evidence tells me that, no, there is no one to stop these accusations. In the name of American freedom and the inherent self-righteousness, anything can be said to achieve the desired goal. There is no line to be drawn. Why should there be one? It is one of the caveats of American free speech.

Finally, I find it a coincidence – I wrote this column on Eid-Al-Fitr, one of the most important Muslim Eids, or celebrations. It is a day of forgiveness, fellowship, and congregation. Muslims celebrate the end of fasting month of Ramadan, and thank God for His help and blessings. It is a time of giving and sharing. Muslims join one another to practice brotherhood, love and unity.

Iran, additionally, is country with a 98 percent Muslim population. Oppressed under the despotism of a group of fundimentalists, and lost in the game of labeling, Iranian people are simply associated with their government and thought to believe in the same inhumane principals. It's ironic that in such a day that my people are celebrating love, peace and unity, I find them being resented.

These people themselves are the victims of an unpopular minority that rules with force, terror and tyranny. These allegedly hateful Iranians, as Cagan perceives them, have been living for decades under the authority of corrupt powers which have been – from time to time – puppets of other powerful western nations.

The only question I can't find the answer to is, since I happen to be one of these people, shouldn't I hate Ms. Cagan? But I don't hate Ms. Cagan, or any other person who calls my people savages or developers of nuclear weaponry. I am taught to love and respect. I am just from a tried land which has been in the hands of the wrong people for centuries. We are serene, humanitarian, and hospitable people who hope and pray for peace on Earth and among nations. But if the western world, as expressed by Cagan, still thinks we're a violent, vile people, what am I being peaceful for?

Parisa Saranj is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at psaranj@student.umass.edu.

Guevara: fiend, not folk hero

Ben Duffy

Che was Fidel's right-hand man, but Castro was not the only dictator that Guevara gushed over.

Ernesto "Che" Guevara was executed 40 yearsp ago last week by U.S.-backed Bolivian soldiers in the South American jungle. The anniversary of his death has been marked by fawning journalism that has failed to exhibit Che's true legacy.

A Reuters video notes that, "Four decades after his death, Che Guevara remains the poster-boy of communist Cuba, where he joined Fidel Castro in the guerrilla uprising that ousted a U.S.-backed dictator in 1959."

Nowhere in the video does it note that he went on to become the handmaiden of another dictator named Fidel Castro. Even the assertion that Castro's foe, Fulgencia Batista, was a "U.S. backed-dictator" is more complicated than Reuters portrays it. In 1958, at the height of the Cuban Revolution, the U.S. government stopped supplying Batista with arms.

Che was Fidel's right-hand man, but Castro was not the only dictator that Guevara gushed over. His inspirations included Josef Stalin and North Korea's Kim Il-Sung.

As a young man, Che traveled to Guatemala just as communist forces were "nationalizing" the property of ranchers and farmers. Before departing for Guatemala, Che wrote, "I have sworn before a picture of the old and mourned comrade Stalin that I won't rest until I see these especially with the capitalist octopuses annihilated."

Did Che keep a picture of Josef Stalin at home? Che's idolatry is bad enough, but it's even worse that Stalin was its object. Che once signed a letter to his aunt as "Stalin II," and even placed flowers on Stalin's tomb when visiting the USSR in 1960. If Che wanted to follow in the footsteps of his hero, he succeeded brilliantly.

He proclaimed to the press that his ideal societal model was Kim Il-Sung's North Korea. North Korea has been arguably the most unlivable spot on earth since the end of World War II. Guevara traveled there in 1965, saw the brutality and poverty with his own eyes, and then made it his goal to import that system to Latin America. As a champion of the poor, Che aspired to emulate a society that truly benefits its poorest inhabitants –anyone not named Kim Jong-il or Kim Il-Sung.

Most of the whining about Che's death seems to revolve around the fact that he was executed without trial, and that it was carried out by another one of those "U.S.-backed dictatorships" that they talk so much about. Well, that's true. Che was executed without a trial, and our country's relationship with Bolivia was one of many deals with the devil consecrated during the Cold War. Leftists always have a problem with U.S.-backed dictatorships, but never with Stalinist and Maoist stooges like – well, like Che Guevara.

Che's execution was carried out against the wishes of the U.S. government. Former CIA agent Felix Rodriguez recently recounted his significant role in tracking down "Stalin II." Rodriguez had cooperated with the Bolivian army in rooting out Che and his Holshevik amigos. According to Rodriguez, the order for Che's execution came down from the Bolivian military high command. The British Broadcasting Company asked Rodriguez if Che deserved a fair trial.

"I could have tried to falsify the command to the troops, and got Che to Panama as the U.S. government said they had wanted," Rodriguez said. He commented that he acquiesced to the Bolivian presidency instead.

Actually, Che was a big fan of execution without a fair trial. As he once remarked, "To send men to the firing squad, judicial proof is unnecessary...These procedures are an archaic bourgeois detail. This is a revolution! And a revolutionary must become a cold killing machine motivated by pure hate."

The future T-shirt icon oversaw La Cabaña fortress, a true house of horrors where opponents of the reigning Castro regime were executed. José Vilasuso, a lawyer at the fortress, prepared indictments for people who were summarily convicted on little or no evidence. "The statements of the investigating officer constituted irrefutable proof of wrongdoing," Vilasuso said. "The defense lawyer simply admitted the accusations and requested the generosity of the government in order to reduce the sentence. [Che] reprimanded in private more than one colleague, in public, he chastised us all: 'Don't delay these trials. This is a revolution, the proofs are secondary.' They are a gang of criminals and murderers. Besides, remember that there is an Appeals Tribunal.'" Yes, there was appealing authority. His name was Che Guevara.

Vilasuso continues: "Nevertheless, in La Cabaña, until June of 1959, about 600 prisoners were executed, plus an indefinite number of prison sentences."

So Che executed hundreds of people, and he's the hero. Felix Rodriguez executed Che, and he's the villain. Whose face belongs on a T-shirt?

Should Che have gotten a trial? I suppose. It probably would have been a shenanigan from beginning to end, as the same communists who defended Sacco and Vanzetti, Alger Hiss and the Rosenbergs rushed to the aid of this totalitarian monster. Nonetheless, it probably would have been more judicious than what happened.

Still, I'm not shedding any tears over Che's death, and I'm surprised that its anniversary isn't yet an international holiday. He deserves to be identified as one of history's most brutal villains. He doesn't belong on T-shirts.

Ben Duffy writes on Wednesdays. He can be reached at bduffy@student.umass.edu.

Everybody likes a quitter

Dan Nicastro

As both Congress and the president have realized, it's hard to get anything accomplished when everyone hates you.

Whether you avidly follow the news, have a passing interest in the political realm or you sometimes accidentally learn something political while on Perezhilton.com, you should be able to recognize a new trend developing in the world of politics. Politicians are no longer the most influential policy makers in America.

Instead, former politicians are. Real ideologues who strongly believe in their message seem to be jaded by the bureaucracy, fundraising and pandering involved in the modern political process. This pushes them to the private sector where they have learned that "civilian life" offers many more opportunities to change the world.

There are dozens of recent examples of this. Jimmy Carter's efforts with Habitat for Humanity have helped to point out the plight of the poor in America. Bill Clinton is now using his "celebrity" to promote charity work and personal responsibility the world over.

Al Gore is the most impressive example of this trend, as he has won both an Academy Award and a Nobel Peace Prize for his efforts in combating and educating the world about global warming. What is the reason for this move from the political to the private?

The problem is that people just don't like politicians. The only professionals looked upon with more bitter resentment are lawyers, a profession so indelibly linked with politics that the two are virtually indistinguishable. As both Congress and the president have realized, it's hard to get anything meaningful accomplished when everyone hates you.

On the other hand, it's easier for private citizens (even former politicians) to get their message out because those in the private sector are not already hated by the public. This allows much more freedom for ex-politicians to express their ideas and accomplish many more of their goals.

It's clear that being out of office is quickly becoming more productive than being in office, which is why I'm here to help. I don't normally offer advice to Republican candidates, but I'm willing to make an exception in this case. The Republican nominees for president have fallen victim to infighting and have been counted out against an unnamed Democratic challenger, leading many Republicans to become one-issue candidates.

If Republican candidates really want to push their message and actually get things accomplished to better the nation, they should drop out of the presidential race immediately.

By joining the ranks of the private sector, these "super citizens" have a chance to mold America (and possibly the world) in whichever way they see fit. I've even thought of ways to help Republicans spread their various messages.

Rudolph Giuliani is running on an "I-was-the-mayor-of-New-York-on-9/11" platform, one which some may see as a cheapening commercialization of one of the worst days in the history of this country.

However, if Mr. Giuliani withdraws from the race and constantly reminds the citizens of this country about his role in 9/11, he will be doing us as a private citizen, meaning the American people will not get as sick of his repetitive message. These constant reminders may even convince New York City's Mayor Bloomberg to provide decent health benefits to the firefighters who worked at Ground Zero. Mr Giuliani would be a beacon of hope to the firefighters he originally screwed over when he was mayor of New York. Talk about bettering the world.

Next is Mitt Romney. Romney has been accused of "flip-flopping" his position on abortion and gay rights in order to please the fundamentalist wing of the Republican Party. However, if Mr. Romney withdrew from the race, no one would care about his constant policy changes used to advance his career. Most people in the private sector "change their mind" to advance their career all the time. It's called "brown-nosing" and it has served many citizens well. Romney would be able to switch his policy positions whenever he wanted without anyone seriously questioning his motives.

My advice is not just for the major candidates. In fact, it is especially useful for the lesser known candidates, such as Colorado Congressman Tom Tancredo. It's clear to pretty much everyone that Tom Tancredo, the representative who first proposed building a giant wall on the Texas-Mexican border to keep illegal immigrants out, will not win the Republican nomination for president. However, if he drops out of the race and resigns from Congress, Mr. Tancredo can put his money where his mouth is and help build that wall (with the help of some of his Mexican "friends").

He could even create an organization like "Habitat for Humanity," called "Strength for America" which builds really strong walls to keep the "foreign threat" out of America. This could only be done in the private sector because it would be considered "irresponsible" or "racist" for someone to do this in the public spotlight.

Some may question my motives in offering this advice free of charge, but I can assure you I'm only trying to do what is in the best interest of America the Republican Party. So if these candidates are listening, they should help America by getting out of politics. Only then will we realize how much good the private sector can do.

Dan Nicastro writes on Wednesdays. He can be reached at dnicastro@student.umass.edu.

Coming soon: nothing original

Anthony David Rueli

Nearly every movie I looked at turned out to be a sequel, a remake or based on another source.

October is usually my favorite month for cinema, as I am an avid horror fan. Upon investigation, however, I found only one big horror movie opening in the next couple weeks – the eagerly-awaited "Saw IV."

I recalled seeing the preview for it a few weeks back, with the hilariously self-aware tagline, "It's Halloween…so it must be Saw." This, of course, refers to the fact that since 2004, a Saw movie has been pumped out each and every October without fail.

Since "Saw III" ended with such closure, I actually tricked myself into believing that there wouldn't be another this year, but sure enough, word of the fourth part spread to the Internet not long after "Saw III" premiered in theaters. "When will they stop?" I asked myself, and answered my own question: "When they think of an original movie."

This got me thinking about recent cinema in general, and I took a peek at some current and recent movies. "3:10 to Yuma," the popular new western, is based on a 1957 movie of the same name. "Resident Evil: Extinction" is the third film in that series, which is already based on a series of video games. "Elizabeth: The Golden Age" is the sequel of the 1998 movie "Elizabeth." "The Seeker: The Dark is Rising" is based on a popular book for children.

Nearly every movie I looked at turned out to be a sequel, a remake, or based on another source, whether it be a novel, short story, video game, or another film. I looked back at previous months and found the same thing. "The Bourne Ultimatum," "Rush Hour 3," "The Simpsons Movie," "Hairspray," "Harry Potter and the Order of the Phoenix," "Daddy Day Camp," "Transformers," "Live Free or Die Hard," "Evan Almighty," "Ocean's Thirteen," "1408," "Fantastic Four: Rise of the Silver Surfer," "Pirates of the Caribbean: At World's End," "Shrek the Third," "Hostel: Part II" … the list goes on and on – and on. All of the summer's most popular films (and even most of the unpopular ones) fit in the sequel/remake/based-on category.

Even the "original" films that have been coming out are nothing but clichéridden semi-remakes of past films. Take "The Game Plan," for instance. The Rock is a big, macho, tough guy – but he has to take care of a little girl. Oh, no. Just thinking of all the comedic gold that could lie within that film is enough to give me a seizure.

Compare this with "The Pacifier." Vin Diesel is a big, macho, tough guy – but he has to take care of a group of children. Just thinking of all the comedic gold that could lie within that film is enough to give me another seizure.

You could make similar comparisons with, well, every single Will Ferrell movie that has come out in the past five years. Or let's see what Owen Wilson and Vince Vaughn get themselves into this time.

The three great films of the year so far – "Grindhouse," "Hot Fuzz," and "Superbad" – were all original, creative, hysterical, and emotional at once. So why did two of them bomb at the theater?

What is it about people that there is no originality or creativity left in the business? Or is it just that originality and creativity aren't rewarded because of audiences flocking to films with which they are already familiar via another source?

I think it's most likely a combination of both – if these are the only movies that get made, they are the ones that make money, and vice versa. Let's see if we can break this trend by going to see a movie by how good it looks, rather than because you have heard the name before.

Anthony David Rueli is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at arueli@student.umass.edu.

The Daily Collegian wants to hear from you!

The Collegian encourages reader responses. Letters to the editor should be under 550 words and can be emailed to editorial@dailycollegian.com. Due to space constraints, not all letters can appear in print; additional letters can be found online at dailycollegian.com in our new Letters to the Editor section.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 17, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

March this way...

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

The 33rd annual Multi-band Pops Concert will be held in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall this Friday at 8 p.m. The event will feature the University's Marching Band, University Dancers, Jazz Ensemble and six other campus groups.

Doc Martens return to the fashion scene

Emma Lifvergren

Remember the little baby doll dresses, leggings and ballet flats that have dominated the fashion scene the last few seasons?

Forget them.

Luxurious furs, DayGlo tights and statement boots have become the items to have this fall, and don't be caught dead without some form of the three. The 2007 fall season is all about feeling powerful and boldly chic.

For the imminent cold weather, ditch the ballet flats and slip on a pair of "wow" boots. Christian Louboutin created a stunning black ankle bootie covered in pyramid studs, which fit in well with the array of punk-inspired pieces scattered throughout various fall collections.

Doc Martens – those black leather boots that rocked the 70s and early 80s punk scene – are enjoying a surprising renaissance. Models at Chloé strutted down the runway wearing a blood red, patent leather version; slightly more girly but just as rocking.

If the chunky look of Docs isn't your thing, Nicholas Ghesquière for Balenciaga offers a more streamlined option of calf-length, lace-up leather stiletto boots with a twist; they're toeless and heel-less. Pair them with brightly colored tights and prepare yourself for some serious attention.

For those of you who aren't afraid of donning fur, the fall season will suit you perfectly. Whether real or faux, fur should occupy a small space (or large, depending on your taste) in everyone's wardrobe.

Color and volume are the most prominent characteristics of the fur trend among collections; Emilio Pucci's shocking purple fox stole is stunning, while a painfully chic citrine fox coat at Emanuel Ungaro is definitely drool-worthy. Michael Kors Furs has produced a magnificent, midnight blue fox fur coat that will definitely turn heads. Fendi and Moschino have developed fur stunners in more traditional hues for those not ready to take the color plunge.

"Bold color, bold scale. My favorite new furs this season are definitely not for the shrinking violet," said Kors.

commenting on the fur trend in this months issue of Vogue.

Thankfully, the leggings trend has seen its day, and a new wave of bright tights and stockings is taking their place. Instead of a pair of black leggings, which are so ubiquitous to the point of eye-gouging boredom, tights are a better option. Models at Balenciaga donned shocking teal stockings with leather boots, while at Emilio Pucci, stockings in vibrant hues of raspberry and pumpkin orange were the most prominent. Ribbed, wool stockings are also great, especially if they are in this season's in-hue: gray. If you want to be truly daring, Prada's fall 2007 collection included footless (yes, footless) socks in toxic colors like tangerine and pea green.

Not all tights have to blind you, though. Black is an entirely acceptable, chic option and will go with anything, and it extends the look of the leg if worn with black shoes. The thing to remember with tights is they must be opaque; sheer stocking are a little less runway and a little more Working Girl.

If anything, invest in a pair of black opaques in addition to some vibrant colors. Tights and stockings are a more affordable way to keep up with fall fashion if you don't want to drop hundreds of dollars on a pricey fur or risk breaking an ankle in a pair of sky-high boots.

Emma Lifvergren can be reached at elifvergr@student.umass.edu.

Swedish designer Paolo Melim Andersson puts a spin on the traditional Doc Martens for Chloe's Autumn/Winter 2007 show.

Inside the English archives

A quest to read the oldest surviving 'Beowolf' manuscript

BY JOHN MARK EBERHART
McClatchy Newspapers

LONDON—I keep trying not to squint.

But the light, an eerie purple, is very low. And there's a piece of heavy glass between my eyes and the object. If I lean in close I can make out the words: "sipen þe sege and þe assaut watz sesed at troye ..." Or, in modern instead of Middle English, "After the siege and the assault of Troy ..."

The words are worth the eyestrain, for they were written more than 600 years ago. The book, propped up behind a glass window pane, isn't much bigger than a paperback mystery, but it is the world's only original copy of the epic medieval poem "Sir Gawain and the Green Knight."

A few paces behind me, behind another pane: Shakespeare's First Folio, from 1623.

Around a corner lies the 15th century, in the form of a copy of the Gutenberg Bible.

And in a small chamber of its own is Magna Carta, or "great charter," issued by King John in 1215.

I'm in the British Library, one of the planet's most important repositories. Or, as the library trumpets on its Web page at www.bl.uk, "The British Library: The world's knowledge."

Here is a draft of Charles Dickens' "Nicholas Nickleby." There are some letters written by members of the family of Samuel Taylor Coleridge, author of "The Rime of the Ancient Mariner" and "Kubla Khan." Yet another wall of glass cases holds music manuscripts, including Handel's "Messiah" from 1741.

And yet my wife, Sherri, has to talk me out of a bad mood. Amazing as this room is, something is missing. "Beowulf."

There is no London fog anymore, really. Those "pea soup" fogs of the late 19th and early 20th centuries actually were billowing clouds of smog caused by the burning of soft coal. Such pollution is long gone; modern London is pleasant, especially in early fall. But if there's no fog in the streets, there's plenty in my brain.

For years decades I have wanted to see the "Beowulf" manuscript. Like "Gawain," only a single copy exists. Unlike "Gawain," "Beowulf" was written in Old English; it is centuries older. But my quest to see it has become a comedy of errors that began before we even left the States.

"'Beowulf'? It's in the British Museum," a well-meaning friend from St. Louis said when I told her we'd be spending a week in London.

I'm something of a skeptic; I like to double-check things. After we arrive in London I ask one of our traveling companions. "Oh, 'Beowulf,'" he says, "British Museum, that's right."

Just to be sure, I ask the concierge at our hotel. He nods vigorously; all those old manuscripts, he says, are in the British Museum.

Easy enough. The British Museum is a short Tube ride from our hotel. And it is filled with marvelous things: alabaster urns, bronze belt buckles, pewter tankards and so forth. But I see no manuscripts.

I approach a guide.

"'Beowulf'? It was moved to the British Library about 10 years ago."

I look at Sherri, who has been tolerant of this whole thing, but it's getting late. Plus, I promised her we'd have afternoon tea in a room that boasts a view of Buckingham Palace or at least the gate to its stables, the Royal Mews.

We strike out for the Library the next morning – a morning so beautifully clear that it would, with its lack of fog, baffle Sherlock Holmes. (The Library, by the way, has a sound recording of Arthur Conan Doyle talking about how he created the famous detective.)

Upon arriving, we make a beeline for the Sir John Ritblat Gallery, where, a guard tells us, all the "Treasures of the British Library" are on display. We walk up a short flight of stairs, out of the well-lit corridor and into that room with its purplish light. We wander from case to case, name to name: Gawain, Gutenberg, Shakespeare ...

No "Beowulf."

"This is getting ridiculous," I say to Sherri, and we walk back down the stairs to the front desk. I ask the man about "Beowulf," and he says three words;

"It's being rested."

I suspect I know what this means but ask for some elaboration. Because of the manuscript's age, he says, it is sometimes necessary to take it from its glassed-in display case and put it away for several months.

He starts to launch into an explanation that involves light, temperature, air and other factors, but Sherri is looking at me in alarm. I have seen this look before. She is waiting for my head to explode.

"John," she says. "There are other things to see here ..."

And I nod and nod, trying to calm down. What I'm thinking is that I've traveled nearly 5,000 miles, and this man tells me I can't see "Beowulf."

Well. You can't slay all the dragons on a single quest. "Beowulf" has survived a thousand years; one supposes it'll be around if we visit the Library again someday.

So we go back upstairs and gaze again at the portrait of Shakespeare, the pages of Magna Carta, the strange characters in "Gawain" letters of the alphabet that are no longer part of the English language.

We wander back over to the music manuscripts. And there, in a glass case we'd overlooked, is a scrawl both distinctive and heartbreaking:

There are places I'll remember
All my life, though some have changed
Some forever, not for better
Some have gone and some remain ...

Near the lyrics to "In My Life" is a photo of a young John Lennon, in his Beatle days, years before he was murdered by a madman.

Sherri and I are both fighting back tears.

"Well, it isn't 'Beowulf,' but isn't it wonderful?" she says softly.

And the cosmos or my memory, at any rate supplies my answer, in the form of a line from another Lennon song:

"Life is what happens to you while you're busy making other plans."

COURTESY BRITISH LIBRARY

The oldest surviving copy of 'Beowulf' is over 600 years old and is on limited display at the British Library in London.

For some brewers, never enough hops

BY MATT MCGUIRE
Chicago Tribune

CHICAGO—How could beer drinkers consider a beer with the name Hop Devil not hoppy enough?

"Newcomers think Hop Devil is quite substantial and they couldn't imagine a bigger beer," said Bill Covaleski, brewmaster and president of Pennsylvania's Victory Brewing Co., which brews Hop Devil. "Whereas in the mind of (seasoned beer enthusiasts), Hop Devil used to be a great beer but it's just not enough anymore."

Palates are changing. Beer drinkers are looking for bolder flavors, and heavily-hopped beers are one of the places they're looking. In response, American craft brewers are introducing hoppier and hoppier ales.

The hop bar, as it were, is being raised.

Hops, which are traditionally used in the brewing process to offset the malt's sweetness with bitterness, are nothing new to beer. Budweiser has always proclaimed that it's brewed "from the choicest hops," and one of Schlitz's most popular campaigns advertised it had "just a kiss of the hops."

The hop character found in these classic American beers, however, is nowhere near the level found in today's microbrews. Most would register between eight and 12 on the IBU (International Bitterness Units) scale, a standardized method of measuring the bitterness of beer. By comparison, Sierra Nevada Pale Ale, the original American craft brew, has 37 IBUs and was considered an extreme beer when brewer Ken Grossman introduced it in the late '70s.

"By our standards today, it's not an extreme beer," said Brewers Association president Charlie Papazian, who still holds the beer in very high regard.

"America's craft brewers are discovering unique and different ways to use hops in the brewing process," he said. "They can enhance a beer with tremendous hop flavor and aroma without necessarily going over the top with bitterness."

Delaware brewery Dogfish Head is one of the American breweries leading the hop charge. Three of the beers in its catalog (60 Minute, 90 Minute and 120 Minute India pale ales (IPAs) push hop levels to new extremes. They have 60, 90 and 120 IBUs, respectively. None are overwhelmingly bitter, however, since the brewery also uses a tremendous amount of malt to balance the taste.

Several of the newer, limited-edition brews from Chicago's Goose Island Brewery are its hoppiest yet, including its Imperial IPA, Bourbon County Stout and Demolition.

Two Brothers Brewing, in west suburban Warrenville, Ill., also has begun introducing hoppier beers over the years.

"When we started out, we were a very malt-oriented brewery," said Jason Ebel, who opened the brewery with his brother, Jim, in 1997. "One of our distributors actually said to us, 'Give us something with some hops in it.'"

In 2000, the brewery released Heavy Handed IPA, which has become the brewery's best-selling seasonal ale.

Making Heavy Handed IPA, a traditionally hoppy India pale ale, is no easy task. The beer calls for "wet" hops, fresh hops that have not been dried and are express-shipped to the brewery. To do this, Two Brothers buys the hops from a farm in Washington that picks the hops at 3 p.m. and ships them via FedEx at 5 p.m. so Two Brothers can start brewing with them the following morning at 10.

"By our standards today, it's not an extreme beer," said Brewers Association president Charlie Papazian, who still holds the beer in very high regard.

"America's craft brewers are discovering unique and different ways to use hops in the brewing process," he said. "For me, the source of pride is to take something with fruit many hops and balance it with the proper backbone of malt to give it the proper mouthfeel and taste."

Attendance, play of receivers and safety has Brown pleased chance with 20 seconds left to kick a winning field goal. Chris Koepplin's 48-yard field goal hit the upright, giving Moore the opportunity to make a big play in overtime.

FOOTBALL from page 8

That play came in the fourth overtime, when Moore hauled in Coen's pass for the two point conversion – giving the Minutemen the 32-24 lead.

Rancher was all over the field in Saturday's victory. On the drive that gave UMass its first lead of the game (7-6, on the first drive of the third quarter), the 6-foot-5 receiver caught three passes for 33 yards.

A few drives later, Rancher gathered in a 53-yard pass from Coen, but the drive ended abruptly when he was tackled one yard short of a first down on fourth and four.

After Moore's 15-yard punt return, Rancher had a 39-yard reception which was immediately followed with the Sanford touchdown.

Moore (525) and Rancher (452) rank second and third, respectively, in the CAA in receiving yards.

MILES UP IN THE AIR

Lost in the shuffle of Saturday's thriller was the play of safety Jeromy Miles. The transfer from Navy made the key defensive play of the afternoon, batting down Villanova's pass on fourth down in the fourth overtime to end the game.

He broke up four passes in the matchup, including three in the end zone. He also contributed five tackles. His batted down pass in the end zone in the first overtime went into the hands of linebacker Jason Hatchell for the interception.

"I thought our defense played extremely well all day long," Brown said after the game. "Some of those guys rose up. Jeromy Miles had a couple of key stops."

For his efforts, Miles was awarded the UMass Dinn Brothers co-Athlete of the Week alongside cross country runner Christina DeRosa.

Miles leads the CAA with three forced fumbles. He has 27 tackles, six passes defended and one fumble recovery this season.

STAT CENTRAL

David Burris leads the CAA in sacks with six, and the team ranks second in the conference with 19 ... The Minutemen have three of the top four leaders (Miles, Hatchell and Sean Smalls) in the CAA in passes defended ... UMass ranks third in scoring defense in the conference, allowing 19.2 points per game ... Koepplin and the kickoff team leads the conference in kickoff average (64.7 yards), touchbacks (10) and net average (46.0 yards) ... UMass is second-to-last in the CAA in time of possession at 28:11 and ninth in turnover differential at minus-1.

NOTES

UMass was held scoreless in the first half for the second consecutive game ... The four overtime game tied for the longest in school history, when UMass lost to Richmond, 52-51, on Sept. 19, 1987 ... Villanova had won six of its previous seven games in overtime before Saturday ... The Minutemen had just five first-half first downs ... UMass leads the CAA in most committed penalties (68) and penalty yardage (561). This weekends opponent, Northeastern, leads the conference in most opponent penalties.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@student.umass.edu.

Sophomore safety Jeroms Miles had four passes defended Saturday in the win over Villanova, including three in the end zone. He leads the Colonial Athletic Association in fumble recoveries with three.

Home-ice awaits for UMass

Sophomore goaltender Dan Meyers has started one game in net this season for the Minutemen, earning the victory, 3-1, over St. Lawrence in the second game of the season. Freshman goaltender Paul Dainton started the season opener against Clarkson, a 2-1 loss in overtime.

HOCKEY from page 8

appearance.

Regarding his playing time in the future, Cahoon alluded that Keane's play on Saturday may likely earn him more time as the season progresses.

"Usually when players play well, they get rewarded with further playing time," Cahoon said. "Brian's put himself in a good position to look forward to this weekend, hopefully he'll get a chance to play some more."

HOME-ICE ADVANTAGE

The Minutemen open their home schedule Friday night at the Mullins Center against UMass-Lowell, a team they went 2-1 against last season.

UMass was nearly unbeatable in Amherst year, going 14-3-3 inside at the Mullins Center, as opposed to the 7-10-2 mark on the road or at neutral sites.

The Mullins Center atmosphere has gained regional recognition, especially in Hockey East communities, as one of the more difficult places to play (take for example, Maine's four consecutive losses in nine days at the end of last season).

Maine was 2-II at home or on neutral ice against UMass). The home-ice advantage has not gone overlooked or unappreciated by Cahoon.

"The students have become a big hit throughout Hockey East," Cahoon said. "People talk about the student section at UMass at every other rink. I don't think there's a more vocal crowd, or a bigger one, in all of the East, so that's a tradition that we hope we can grow even more.

"We want to make this an event that everyone can come to where, there's a hockey game going on and that's the focus, but this is a sporting event that you really like to be a part of. The students are a big part of that, and I think the hometown fans have become central to that, too.

HOMECOMING SATURDAY

UMass recently changed the start time of Saturday's annual matchup with UConn to 4 p.m. instead of the original 7 p.m. to accommodate the school's homecoming event. The Massachusetts football team plays Northeastern, another regional rival, at noon, followed by the Mass Attack later in the afternoon.

The University hopes fans of either team will attend both games as part of one event.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jcrice@student.umass.edu.

Freshman pair tally rare goals in wins

M. SOCCER from page 8

Dayton match earlier than expected, but UMass coach Sam Koch typically uses the forward as a substitute for the last 20 minutes of the first period. Koch then follows the same procedure for the second half.

Last season, Olosa finished as one of the team leaders in scoring, tied with Hogan at eight points (three goals and two assists). The forward has one tally this season – the overtime game-winner against Dartmouth in the team's second match.

SUCCESS IN THE SECOND

Just as the Minutemen's season has evolved through stages of wins and losses, the team's scoring differential between periods has followed a similar pattern. During the first six games, UMass went 2-4 and scored one goal in the second half. In fact, the team had as many goals in the first period (two) as in overtime through that stretch.

But during the team's current five-game winning streak, the Maroon and White scored eight times in second half and once in the first.

"I think teams just feel each other out," said UMass coach Sam Koch, trying to explain his team's three-goal second half outburst on Friday. "It's the kind of thing where we're trying to find their weaknesses and determine, can we capitalize on those; is our game plan working – do we need to adjust it. I think our fitness helps us in the second half."

Becoming more perplexed about the second half success, Koch offered several reasons for his team's scoring differential after Sunday's win, including his team's playing against the wind in the first half.

Regardless, Koch admits how or when goals are scored is not essential to his team's success.

"I don't care. Score in any half, anytime, we'll take any goal," he said. "Goals are hard to come by."

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu.

UMass coach Sam Koch and the Minutemen have won five straight games, with the last two coming in Atlantic 10 play.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is looking for writers from within the five colleges area. Your news could be tomorrow's headline!

Call us at 545-1809 or send us an email at news@dailycollegian.com

Advertise in the Collegian!

thecollegian@gmail.com
545-3500

Download our ad rates online at www.dailycollegian.com/advertising

Hair By Harlow
Salon & Day Spa
Experience...
• Rejuvenating facials
• A variety of massages
• Nail pampering
• Hair design
Brazilian Waxing!
220 North Pleasant Street
Amherst, MA 01002
Phone: (413) 253-8897

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING
✓ Alcohol Awareness Program
✓ Credit Cards Accepted!!!
✓ Professional Bartending Training with "Hands On" Pouring Sessions
✓ Over 10 Years in Business!!!
✓ Access to Job Placement Database!!!
✓ Great Part-time or Summer Job
LEARN TO BARTEND IN A WEEKEND!
Oct 26th-28th Amherst College Dining Hall
CALL NOW! SPACE IS LIMITED!
1-800-U-CAN-MIX
www.universitybartending.com

MULTIBAND POPS
33rd Annual Extravaganza of Music & Dance
Friday, October 19
8 pm, Fine Arts Center Concert Hall
Homecoming Weekend
Minuteman Marching Band, Dance, Jazz, Wind, Percussion & Orchestral Music!
Producer: Grammy Award Winner Jeffrey Holmes
Tickets: Fine Arts Center Box Office 413.545.2511
$18 General public • $12 Elders, college students and children under 18

OCT 17 2007

Seven O's
EVERY WEDNESDAY
KARAOKE
* * * * * *
FRIDAY, 10/19/07
LOCAL TOUGH GUY
(STUDENT BAND)
SATURDAY, 10/20/07
MARK SNOW
STUDENT BAND WANTED.
NEED A PLACE TO PLAY? COME TO SEVEN O'S.
LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO
HAVE A PRIVATE EVENT/PARTY?
CALL 413-530-6996
ROUTE 116, 330 AMHERST RD SUNDERLAND, MA 01375 (413) 665-6788
3 PM TO 1 AM M-F
1 PM TO 1 AM SAT&SUN
NEXT TO CUTTYSIDE APTS.

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

		2			7	3
	8			7		9
7		9	1
		1	2	6		9
2						6
6		8	7	9
			3	5		2
	1		4		8
3		4		1

ACROSS
1 Pieces of confinement
6 Revue part
10 Part
14 Robbery
15 Important PC command
16 Foot part
17 Seeing red
18 Take off quickly
19 Cyberspace space
20 Kind of closet
21 Editor's note
22 Highway
23 Motor City
25 Counts (on)
27 Button alternative
29 House member, briefly
30 Cheap fiction
34 Recognized
36 Indy car, e.g.
40 Nymph
42 Average grade
43 Slightly drunk
44 Get hitched on the sly
45 Building wings
47 Merit
48 Golfer Ernie
50 Large number
52 USA part
56 Burdensome
61 Low-__ diet
62 First grandfather
64 Ball girl
65 Neophyte
66 Son of Leah and Jacob
67 Across Ekberg
68 Follow orders
69 North Carolina university
70 Gale
71 Spectrum hues
72 Caroled
73 Literary composition
DOWN
1 Tot
2 Lofty abode
3 James Dean film
4 Organic compound
5 Office pool members
6 Matter
7 Tie tie
8 Loaded (about)
9 Wobble
10 Rundown condition
11 USSR part
12 Two quartets together
13 Molts
24 Pen filler
26 Sassy
28 Pares
30 "The Gold Bug" author
31 Internet address, abbr.
32 Zodiac sign
33 News kids on the block
35 Freely admitting
37 Auditor's letters
38 NYC winter hours
39 Kind of whiskey
41 Salami seller
46 __ Diego
49 Fish covering
51 Degrade
52 Role seeker
53 Perhaps
54 Behaved humanly?
55 Ms. Rogers St Johns
57 Leases
58 Medleys
59 Far beyond the norm
60 Sordid
63 Mary Kay competition
Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

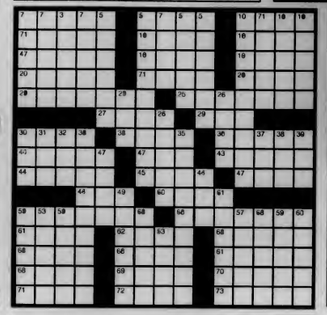
BridgeSide Grille
BRING MOM & DAD THIS WEEKEND!
SERVING LUNCH & DINNER DAILY
11:30-9
SUNDAY BREAKFAST
8-2
CLOSED MONDAYS
ROUTE 116
SUNDERLAND
CENTER
413-397-8101
WWW.BRIDGESIDEGRILLE.COM
Cozy Bar
High Def TV's
Outdoor Patio
Plenty of Parking

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"The less secure a man is, the more likely he is to have extreme prejudice."

-Clint Eastwood

PAUL By Billy O'Keefe



WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Josh Shalek

LABRAT By Richard Martelly

Submit your comics!
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Start an Oprah Club where all you do is watch Oprah, read books and lose weight.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
It's sad that your boredom in class has led you to read this horoscope multiple times.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Do you know how much squirrels pay to attend UMass? Nothing! That's inequality.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Break out the flannel, break out the plaid, autumn is here, start a lumberjack fad.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Real horses look sad, but at least they're noble. Seahorses are just pathetic.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You're a crazy tap dancing fool, but that's what makes you so darn sexy.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You are a peacock with lovely plumage and funny little feathers on your head.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Maybe the person you're talking to spits when they talk, but maybe they're rabid.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Your great love of High School Musical puts you directly on par with a sixth grader.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You'll find proof of a higher power embedded in the grill marks of your DC panini.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
The Cleveland Indians are the new Yankees, except in a crappier city.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Monger fish not war.

Clint Eastwood does not sleep
or use punctuation

collegiancomics at yahoo dot com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ACTIVITIES

Self Defense seminar Sat. Oct. 20th. 12:00-4:00 pm at the Mercy House $7.00 admn. Call 617-519-6515 for info.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Granby Apt. 4 rooms. $750.00 a month. Heat/ hotwtr included. Call Allen at Eaglecrest. 413-256-3442

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext. 162

CAFE HELP PART-TIME nights and weekends must be fast, accurate, efficient and friendly. Apply in person at the woodstar cafe. 60 Masonic St. Northampton.

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Nursing home companion in Sunderland $15/hr. 4 hrs per week. Elder experience desired. 413-539-0820

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes start soon. 1-800-U-CAN-MIX. www.universitybartending.com. Sign up now.

SALONS AND SPAS

HOLISTIC SALON AND SPA. Beautiful organic hair color! Foils, Hi, Low, party, etc. www.shearblissamherst.com 413-253-2322

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906,1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

Concerned About Your Eating? Do you eat too little? Eat too much? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic: 577-5101.

SERVICES

TAPESTRY HEALTH, providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling & rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St., Amherst www.tapestryhealth.org

TRAVEL

*#1 Spring Break Website! 4 & 7 night trips. Low prices guaranteed. Group discounts for 8+. Book 20 people, get 3 free trips! Campus reps needed. www.StudentCity.com or 800-293-1445.

TRAVEL

Spring Break '08 The New Math: 10+1=10. Book TEN of your friends on our SB '08 packages, the 11th is FREE. Contact STA TRAVEL: Campus Center, Room 224 (413) 256-1261 AMH@statravel.com www.freespringbreak08.com

WANTED

EGG DONORS WANTED. Help make a couple's dream of becoming parents come true by becoming an egg donor. Very generous compensation and expenses paid. Must be a non-smoking female between the ages of 21 and 32. For more info, please visit our website at www.robertnicholsesq.com or contact Julie at 781-551-0600.

EGG DONORS NEEDED $15,000 (PLUS ALL EXPENSES) We are seeking women who are attractive, under the age of 29, SAT 1300+ (math+verbal), physically fit and maintaining a healthy lifestyle. If you have a desire to help an infertile family and would like more info please contact us. Email: darlene@aperfectmatch.com www.aperfectmatch.com 1-800-264-8828

Owls stay hot, take two A-10 contests

By David Brinch
Collegian Correspondent

Temple improved its Atlantic 10 record with two home victories against Massachusetts and Rhode Island.

The Owls (12-5, 3-1 A-10) defeated UMass, 2-1, on Friday with help from sophomore forward Kasey Ruth.

Ruth had two unassisted goals for Temple. The first half went scoreless while the Minutewomen held the advantage in penalty corners (2-1) and the Owls out-shot the Minutewomen (3-2).

Senior back and team captain Mary Catherine Kinneman had a stellar game on defense, stopping the Minutewomen (8-7, 3-1 A-10) from converting a penalty corner with a defensive save.

A-10 Field Hockey

Two minutes, 11 seconds into the half, Temple had a fast break and Ruth dribbled into the UMass circle, dodging goalkeeper Becky Letourneau (four saves) for the first goal of the game.

Less than 10 minutes later, the Minutewomen responded with a goal from freshman forward Katie Kelly. Sophomore midfielder Cher King took a shot toward the cage off a penalty corner, and Kelly was there to tip it in for the Minutewomen's lone goal.

Ruth struck again in the 67th minute off a Letourneau save to cap off the victory for the Owls. Temple out-shot UMass (9-8), while both teams had seven penalty corners.

The Owls defeated Rhode Island, 6-1, Sunday. Senior midfielder Alli Lokey had four goals and an assist, the most individual goals in a game this season.

The Owls had 21 shots and 11 penalty corners in the victory. Lokey, the A-10 Player of the Week, has 15 goals and 37 points this season.

Spiders struggle

Richmond (4-10, 2-1 A-10) continued to struggle last week, losing at home Friday against West Chester, 4-2.

The Spiders gave up three goals in the first 20 minutes, and had their 44-game unbeaten streak against A-10 opponents snapped.

The five-time defending A-10 Champions attempted a comeback with a late first-half goal from sophomore forward Adrian Pickar. Pickar, the reigning Atlantic 10 Player of the Week, scored her fourth goal in three conference games.

Seven minutes into the second half, sophomore back Jess Weidner scored her first career goal, narrowing the lead to one.

Late in the game, the Golden Rams (5-9, 2-2 A-10) shut the door on any comeback with a goal from freshman forward Alex Swayze, her second of the afternoon.

The Spiders rebounded with a 1-0 overtime win against La Salle Sunday. In the third minute of OT, sophomore forward Meghan Thompson had the ball on a breakaway and sophomore back Jess Weidner tapped it past the line to hand the visiting Explorers their third straight loss.

The goal was Weidner's second in two games – and of her career. Richmond's goalkeepers, sophomore Jacki Raithel and junior Becca Weaver combined for the shutout.

SLU

Saint Louis recorded an A-10 victory, defeating La Salle, 2-1, Friday afternoon. Junior midfielder Jacklyn McGranahan scored early in the second half, snapping the Billikens (3-13, 1-3 A-10) seven-game losing streak.

Saint Louis lost its second overtime game of the season, 3-2, to West Chester Sunday. The Billikens host UMass at 1 p.m. Friday.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

Write for
The Massachusetts
Daily Collegian
Interested?
Contact
news@dailycollegian.com

Huecker lifts Charlotte over weekend

Midfielder scores four goals; 49ers defeat GW, Richmond

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

Charlotte found a new source for scoring this weekend as it won two home games. Midfielder Sam Huecker scored four of the five goals, allowing the 49ers to beat George Washington, 3-0, Friday and Richmond, 2-1, Sunday.

Huecker's weekend efforts earned her Atlantic 10 Rookie and Player of the Week honors.

The freshman is currently second on the 49ers (10-3-1, 5-0-1) in goals and points. She started off the regular season with zero goals on four shots and three assists in Charlotte's non-conference schedule.

That all changed once A-10 play began. Huecker scored her first goal of the season against Saint Joseph's Oct. 5.

Her efforts took immediate pressure off senior midfielder Lindsey Ozimek and freshman forward Whitney Weinraub, who leads the team with six goals.

Weinraub started the season with four goals before conference play started; since Huecker has shared the spotlight. However, the freshman tandem is not the only reason for Charlotte's success.

It has allowed two goals throughout conference play. Sophomore goalie Lauren Brown increased her saves total to 44. Last year she accumulated 33. She also boasts a goals-against average of .58 and eight shutouts.

She continued her success into the conference schedule where four of the six games were shutouts.

Although she posts a solid numbers against A-10 opponents, Charlotte's best offensive opponent was Duquesne. The Dukes rank fifth in goals scored, but dropped a 5-0 decision to the 49ers.

Charlotte's first game against a high-powered offense comes against Dayton Sunday. The Flyers lead the league in goals and have one conference loss.

A-10 Soccer

Their numbers on offense and defense are fairly close to Charlotte's.

It looks like a matchup of the A-10's two top goalies, with senior goalie Niki Reed being equally as impressive as Brown this season with five shutouts in conference play.

The 49er defense will have the responsibility of stopping the most threatening offensive player in Dayton sophomore Mandi Back. She leads the league in goals, points and shots.

Hawks on 11-game skid

St. Joe's (2-12, 0-6) is quickly falling out of contention for a spot in the A-10 Tournament.

The Hawks lost 11 straight games between the conference and non-conference schedule. Their last win came Sept. 7 against Robert Morris; since then, they have been outscored 39-7.

They have been shut out seven times this season, four of those against conference teams. Freshman Carly Salter is the only St. Joe's player who has scored more than once this season.

The Hawks have suffered in every category and are last in shots, points, goals, assists and goals allowed. In conference, they have struggled to compete in games, losing four of them by at least three goals.

Lately, St. Joe's has picked up the offensive effort scoring four goals in its last three games scoring against Saint Louis and La Salle. Yet the defense still had problems keeping the team in the game, giving up eight goals combined against both teams.

St. Joe's schedule for the rest of the season looks promising as well, playing only one team over .500. Its final part of the season has a combined 9-18 record in conference.

Billikens extend unbeaten streak

Saint Louis improved its unbeaten streak Sunday, beating George Washington, 1-0, to give the Billikens their fifth win of the season. Sophomore midfielder Kristen Sapienza came off the bench to deliver her first-career goal.

Sapienza's shot came off a Billiken corner kick from sophomore forward Julia Bradenberg into the penalty box. Sapienza headed the ball into the upper right corner for the game winner.

SLU goalie Dominique Turks finished with one save against GW.

St. Louis's win was its fourth shutout in A-10 play. The Billikens head to Ohio for the weekend to play Dayton and Xavier.

Adam Miller can be reached at ajmill0@student.umass.edu.

OCT 17 2007

Seven O's
EVERY WEDNESDAY
KARAOKE
* * * * * *
FRIDAY, 10/19/07
LOCAL TOUGH GUY
(STUDENT BAND)
SATURDAY, 10/20/07
MARK SNOW
STUDENT BAND WANTED.
NEED A PLACE TO PLAY? COME TO SEVEN O'S.
LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO
HAVE A PRIVATE EVENT/PARTY?
CALL 413-530-6996
ROUTE 116, 330 AMHERST RD, SUNDERLAND, MA 01375 (413) 665-6788
3 PM TO 1 AM M-F
1 PM TO 1 AM SAT&SUN
NEXT TO CUTTLEBUR APTS.

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

		2			7	3
	8			7		9
7		9	1
		1	2	6		9
2						6
6		8	7	9
			3	5		2
	1		4		8
3		4		1

ACROSS
1 Places of confinement
6 Revue part
10 Pairs
14 Robbery
15 Important PC command
16 Foot part
17 Seeing red
18 Take off quickly
19 Cyberspace space
20 Kind of closet
21 Editor's note
22 Highway
23 Motor City
25 Counts (on)
27 Button alternative
29 House member: briefly
30 Cheap fiction
34 Recognized
36 Indy car, e.g.
40 Nymph
42 Average grade
43 Slightly drunk
44 Get hitched on the sly
45 Building wings
47 Merit
48 Golfer Ernie
50 Large number
52 USA part
56 Burdensome
61 Low-__ diet
62 First grandfather
64 Ball girl
65 Neophyte
66 Son of Leah and Jacob
67 Actress Ekberg
68 Follow orders
69 North Carolina university
70 Gale
71 Spectrum hues
72 Caroled
73 Literary composition

DOWN
1 Tot
2 Lofty abode
3 James Dean film
4 Organic compound
5 Office pool members
6 Matter
7 Tie tie
8 Loafed (about)
9 Wobble
10 Rundown condition
11 USSR part
12 Two quartets together
13 Mots
24 Pen filler
26 Sassy
28 Pares
30 "The Gold Bug" author
31 Internet address abbr.
32 Zodiac sign
33 News kids on the block
35 Freely admitting
37 Auditor's letters
38 NYC winter hours
39 Kind of whiskey
41 Salami seller
46 __ Diego
49 Fish covering
51 Degrade
52 Role seeker
53 Perhaps
54 Behaved humanly?
55 Ms. Rogers St. Johns
57 Leases
58 Medleys
59 Far beyond the norm
60 Sordid
63 Mary Kay competition

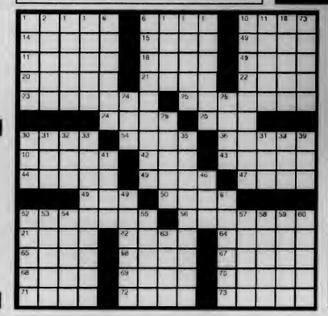
Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

BridgeSide GRILLE
BRING MOM & DAD THIS WEEKEND!
SERVING LUNCH & DINNER DAILY
11:30-9
SUNDAY BREAKFAST
8-2
CLOSED MONDAYS
ROUTE 116
SUNDERLAND
CENTER
413-397-8101
WWW.BRIDGESIDEGRILLE.COM
Cozy Pubs, High Def TV's, Outdoor Patio, Plenty of Parking

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"The less secure a man is, the more likely he is to have extreme prejudice."
-Clint Eastwood

PAUL By Billy O'Keefe



WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Josh Shalek

LABRAT By Richard Martelly

Submit your comics!
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Start an Oprah Club where all you do is watch Oprah, read books and lose weight.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
It's sad that your boredom in class has led you to read this horoscope multiple times.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Do you know how much squirrels pay to attend UMass? Nothing! That's inequality.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Break out the flannel, break out the plaid, autumn is here, start a lumberjack fad.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Real horses look sad, but at least they're noble. Seahorses are just pathetic.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You're a crazy tap dancing fool, but that's what makes you so darn sexy.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You are a peacock with lovely plumage and funny little feathers on your head.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Maybe the person you're talking to spits when they talk, but maybe they're rabid.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Your great love of High School Musical puts you directly on par with a sixth grader.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You'll find proof of a higher power embedded in the grill marks of your DC panini.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
The Cleveland Indians are the new Yankees, except in a crappier city.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Monger fish not war.

Clint Eastwood does not sleep
or use punctuation

collegiancomics at yahoo dot com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ACTIVITIES

Self Defense seminar Sat. Oct. 20th. 12:00-4:00 pm at the Mercy House $7.00 admn. Call 617-519-6515 for info.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Granby Apt. 4 rooms. $750.00 a month. Heat/hotwtr included. Call Allen at Eaglecrest. 413-256-3442

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided 1-800-965-6520 Ext. 162

CAFE HELP PART-TIME nights and weekends must be fast, accurate, efficient and friendly. Apply in person at the woodstar cafe. 60 Masonic St. Northampton.

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail. 545-6837

Nursing home companion in Sunderland $15/hr. 4 hrs per week. Elder experience desired. 413-539-0820

INSTRUCTION

University Bartending Classes start soon. 1-800-U-CAN-MIX. www.universitybartending.com. Sign up now.

SALONS AND SPAS

HOLISTIC SALON AND SPA. Beautiful organic hair color! Foils, Hi, Low, party, etc. www.shearblissamherst.com 413-253-2322

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906,1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

Concerned About Your Eating? Do you eat too little? Eat too much? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic: 577-5101.

SERVICES

TAPESTRY HEALTH, providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling & rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St., Amherst www.tapestryhealth.org

TRAVEL

*#1 Spring Break Website! 4 & 7 night trips. Low prices guaranteed. Group discounts for 8+. Book 20 people, get 3 free trips! Campus reps needed. www.StudentCity.com or 800-293-1445.

TRAVEL

Spring Break '08 The New Math: 10+1=10. Book TEN of your friends on our SB '08 packages, the 11th is FREE. Contact STA TRAVEL: Campus Center, Room 224 (413) 256-1261 AMH@statravel.com www.freespringbreak08.com

WANTED

EGG DONORS WANTED. Help make a couple's dream of becoming parents come true by becoming an egg donor. Very generous compensation and expenses paid. Must be a non-smoking female between the ages of 21 and 32. For more info, please visit our website at www.robertnicholsesq.com or contact Julie at 781-551-0600.

WANTED

EGG DONORS NEEDED $15,000 (PLUS ALL EXPENSES) We are seeking women who are attractive, under the age of 29, SAT 1300+ (math+verbal), physically fit and maintaining a healthy lifestyle. If you have a desire to help an infertile family and would like more info please contact us. Email: darlene@aperfectmatch.com www.aperfectmatch.com 1-800-264-8828

Owls stay hot, take two A-10 contests

By David Brinch
Collegian Correspondent

Temple improved its Atlantic 10 record with two home victories against Massachusetts and Rhode Island.

The Owls (12-5, 3-1 A-10) defeated UMass, 2-1, on Friday with help from sophomore forward Kasey Ruth.

Ruth had two unassisted goals for Temple. The first half went scoreless while the Minutewomen held the advantage in penalty corners (2-1) and the Owls out-shot the Minutewomen (3-2).

Senior back and team captain Mary Catherine Kinneman had a stellar game on defense, stopping the Minutewomen (8-7, 3-1 A-10) from converting a penalty corner with a defensive save.

A-10 Field Hockey

Two minutes, 11 seconds into the half, Temple had a fast break and Ruth dribbled into the UMass circle, dodging goalkeeper Becky Letourneau (four saves) for the first goal of the game.

Less than 10 minutes later, the Minutewomen responded with a goal from freshman forward Katie Kelly. Sophomore midfielder Cher King took a shot toward the cage off a penalty corner, and Kelly was there to tip it in for the Minutewomen's lone goal.

Ruth struck again in the 67th minute off a Letourneau save to cap off the victory for the Owls. Temple out-shot UMass (9-8), while both teams had seven penalty corners.

The Owls defeated Rhode Island, 6-1, Sunday. Senior midfielder Alli Lokey had four goals and an assist, the most individual goals in a game this season.

The Owls had 21 shots and 11 penalty corners in the victory. Lokey, the A-10 Player of the Week, has 15 goals and 37 points this season.

Spiders struggle

Richmond (4-10, 2-1 A-10) continued to struggle last week, losing at home Friday against West Chester, 4-2.

The Spiders gave up three goals in the first 20 minutes, and had their 44-game unbeaten streak against A-10 opponents snapped.

The five-time defending A-10 Champions attempted a comeback with a late first-half goal from sophomore forward Adrian Pickar. Pickar, the reigning Atlantic 10 Player of the Week, scored her fourth goal in three conference games.

Seven minutes into the second half, sophomore back Jess Weidner scored her first career goal, narrowing the lead to one.

Late in the game, the Golden Rams (5-9, 2-2 A-10) shut the door on any comeback with a goal from freshman forward Alex Swayze, her second of the afternoon.

The Spiders rebounded with a 1-0 overtime win against La Salle Sunday. In the third minute of OT, sophomore forward Meghan Thompson had the ball on a breakaway and sophomore back Jess Weidner tapped it past the line to hand the visiting Explorers their third straight loss.

The goal was Weidner's second in two games – and of her career. Richmond's goalkeepers, sophomore Jacki Raithel and junior Becca Weaver combined for the shutout.

SLU

Saint Louis recorded an A-10 victory, defeating La Salle, 2-1, Friday afternoon. Junior midfielder Jacklyn McGranahan scored early in the second half, snapping the Billikens (3-13, 1-3 A-10) seven-game losing streak.

Saint Louis lost its second overtime game of the season, 3-2, to West Chester Sunday. The Billikens host UMass at 1 p.m. Friday.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu

Write for The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Interested?
Contact

Huecker lifts Charlotte over weekend

Midfielder scores four goals; 49ers defeat GW, Richmond

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

Charlotte found a new source for scoring this weekend as it won two home games. Midfielder Sam Huecker scored four of the five goals, allowing the 49ers to beat George Washington, 3-0, Friday and Richmond, 2-1, Sunday.

Huecker's weekend efforts earned her Atlantic 10 Rookie and Player of the Week honors.

The freshman is currently second on the 49ers (10-3-1, 5-0-1) in goals and points. She started off the regular season with zero goals on four shots and three assists in Charlotte's non-conference schedule.

That all changed once A-10 play began. Huecker scored her first goal of the season against Joseph's Oct. 5.

Her efforts took immediate pressure off senior midfielder Lindsey Ozimek and freshman forward Whitney Weinraub, who leads the team with six goals.

Weinraub started the season with four goals before conference play started; since Huecker has shared the spotlight. However, the freshman tandem is not the only reason for Charlotte's success.

A-10 Soccer

It has allowed two goals throughout conference play. Sophomore goalie Lauren Brown increased her saves total to 44. Last year she accumulated 33. She also boasts a goals-against average of .58 and eight shutouts.

She continued her success into the conference schedule where four of the six games were shutouts.

Although she posts a solid numbers against A-10 opponents, Charlotte's best offensive opponent was Duquesne. The Dukes rank fifth in goals scored, but dropped a 5-0 decision to the 49ers.

Charlotte's first game against a high-powered offense comes against Dayton Sunday. The Flyers lead the league in goals and have one conference loss.

Their numbers on offense and defense are fairly close to Charlotte's.

It looks like a matchup of the A-10's two top goalies, with senior goalie Niki Reed being equally as impressive as Brown this season with five shutouts in conference play.

The 49er defense will have the responsibility of stopping the most threatening offensive player in Dayton sophomore Mandi Back. She leads the league in goals, points and shots.

Hawks on 11-game skid

St. Joe's (2-12, 0-6) is quickly falling out of contention for a spot in the A-10 Tournament.

The Hawks lost 11 straight games between the conference and non-conference schedule. Their last win came Sept. 7 against Robert Morris; since then, they have been outscored 39-7.

They have been shut out seven times this season, four of those against conference teams. Freshman Carly Salter is the only St. Joe's player who has scored more than once this season.

The Hawks have suffered in every category and are last in shots, points, goals, assists and goals allowed. In conference, they have struggled to compete in games, losing four of them by at least three goals.

Lately, St. Joe's has picked up the offensive effort scoring four goals in its last three games scoring against Saint Louis and La Salle. Yet the defense still had problems keeping the team in the game, giving up eight goals combined against both teams.

St. Joe's schedule for the rest of the season looks promising as well, playing only one team over .500. Its final part of the season has a combined 9-18 record in conference.

Billikens extend unbeaten streak

Saint Louis improved its unbeaten streak Sunday, beating George Washington, 1-0, to give the Billikens their fifth win of the season. Sophomore midfielder Kristen Sapienza came off the bench to deliver her first-career goal.

Sapienza's shot came off a Billiken corner kick from sophomore forward Julia Bradenberg into the penalty box. Sapienza headed the ball into the upper right corner for the game winner.

SLU goalie Domunique Turks finished with one save against GW.

St. Louis's win was its fourth shutout in A-10 play. The Billikens head to Ohio for the weekend to play Dayton and Xavier.

Adam Miller can be reached at ajmill@student.umass.edu

Service provided by AT&T Mobility. ©2007 AT&T Knowledge Ventures. All rights reserved. AT&T and the AT&T logo are trademarks of AT&T Knowledge Ventures and/or AT&T affiliated companies.

OCT 17 2007

OCT 18 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 17, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Attendance rising for UMass

McGuirk Stadium packed in four OT win over Wildcats

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Nearly all 16,174 fans who attended Saturday's game at McGuirk Stadium stayed until the final whistle. And considering what occurred in the four in the matchup between the Massachusetts football team and Villanova, they were treated to a hard-fought and exciting battle.

It was the 16th largest crowd in UMass history, and the largest non-playoff game attendance since Sept. 11, 2004, against Colgate.

"We're certainly getting the fan support that you like to see," UMass coach Don Brown said during this week's Colonial Athletic Association teleconference. "Your players have a chance to play in front of a good crowd and it certainly gives the guys some juice. We all talk about it as coaches; winning on the road in the CAA is a difficult process and it's doubly tough when you have a great crowd."

DYNAMIC DUO

If there was a concern about how UMass would replace the production of former wide receiver Brandon London, one just needs to look at J.J. Moore and Rasheed Rancher for the answer.

Both redshirt senior wideouts exploded against the Wildcats, coming up with big play after big play. Rancher had a career high in both receptions (eight) and receiving yards, with 155. Moore wasn't far behind, racking up 138 yards on seven catches; both receivers had catches of over 50 yards. QU quarterback Liam Coen's 355 yards passing, the duo of veteran pass catchers had 293 of those yards.

UMass Football

"Our big-time players made big-time plays," Brown said.

Moore made some key plays in the close victory, and had an 18-yard touchdown reception in the second quarter called back due to a holding penalty.

Moore's first big play came on a fourth-and-one play in UMass territory. His 4-yard reception kept the drive going and eventually led to the first score of the game for the Minutemen.

Later in the third quarter, he hauled in a 54-yard pass from Coen. It was the longest reception of his career and the longest completion for Coen this season.

Trailing late in the fourth quarter, Moore made two huge plays, one to help the Minutemen tie the game, and the other that set up place-kicker Chris Koepplin with an attempt to end the game as time expired.

His 15-yard punt return with under four minutes remaining helped set up Coen's 17-yard touchdown pass to Joe Sanford, which tied the game at 14 with 2:09 remaining.

And after a quick three-and-out for the Wildcats, Moore made a nice 30-yard catch along the sideline, giving the Minutemen a

See FOOTBALL on page 5

Senior wide receiver Rasheed Rancher had a career-high eight catches and 155 yards in Saturday's 32-24 four overtime victory over Villanova.

Keane notches game-winner against Saints

Freshman forward makes presence known in victory

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It's hard to make an impact in your first collegiate hockey game. The game is faster, the style of play is different and the atmosphere is certainly not the same as a high school or junior league game.

But Brian Keane of the No. 15 Massachusetts hockey team did just that. A day after the Mass Attack lost its rematch with No. 7 Clarkson, 2-1 in overtime, Keane scored what turned out to be the game-winning goal against No. 12 Saint Lawrence. The freshman took a feed from Cory Quirk and beat the Saints' Kain Tisi on the left side.

UMass Hockey

Keane did not play in the loss to Clarkson, but when he finally got on the ice, he did not disappoint.

"It was interesting. We went into the weekend thinking we had a lot of depth," said UMass coach Don Cahoon. "We said, 'Hey Brian, we want to get you in there but it's not going to be Friday night [at Clarkson].' The first thing he had to do was handle that, and not be devastated by that. A lot of these kids are top-end players coming out of junior leagues and high school, where they play a lot of games."

Keane handled that just fine, responding to the time Cahoon gave him on the ice.

"He did a great job of understanding that [not playing in the season opener] didn't diminish his value, that we were going to get him in there as soon as we could and to be ready when you get in there," Cahoon said. "And that's what he did. He did a great job Saturday night. He got involved in a couple of plays that were critical in the course of the game."

Keane played in 80 games last season as a member of the Chicago Steel in the United States Hockey League, registering 10 goals and 27 assists. After being traded to the Indiana Ice, he scored five more goals and a pair of assists en route to the Ice's USHL Final Four

See HOCKEY on page 5

Sophomore forward Brett Watson registered an assist on the first goal in Saturday's 3-1 victory over No. 12 St. Lawrence.

Rare goals highlight weekend for UM

Amick, Arikian find new ways to score, continue win streak

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

As the Massachusetts men's soccer team discovered this past weekend, it simply doesn't matter how the ball gets into the net – just as long as it does.

A pair of freshmen, forward Stuart Amick and midfielder Ben Arikian, scored unusual goals during this past weekend's Atlantic 10 soccer action. The two are the only first-year players to register points for the Minutemen (7-4-0, 2-0-0 A-10) this season.

UMass Soccer

Amick scored the game-winning goal Sunday against Xavier (4-8-0, 0-2-0 A-10) by banking a cross off a Musketeer defender. Amick's shot from the left side of the penalty area was intended for sophomore forward Bryan Hogan directly in front of the net. The defender successfully screened Hogan, but got in the way of the pass. It may not have been how Amick envisioned the goal, but it was his third of the season nonetheless.

The freshman is tied with Hogan for most goals on the team. Amick also earned Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week honors this week, sharing the award with Louis Vigliotti of Fordham.

The team tallied its third goal of the game against Dayton (6-3-2, 0-2-0 A-10) Friday via an untouched free kick off Arikian's foot. The midfielder launched the ball from 30 yards out on the left side of the field to the lower right corner of the goal.

Though there were multiple UMass and Dayton players crowding the net, the ball simply slipped past everyone, including goalkeeper Zac Gibbens.

"We practice that free kick every-day on the training field," said sophomore midfielder Mark DeSantis. "That really felt good, when everyday you practice it and try to make it perfect. [The kicktaker] hits it so if everyone misses the ball, it's going to hit the back post. Everyone missed it and it just went right in."

DAYTON MAKES PRINCE WINCE

Junior midfielder Prince Ofosu suffered an ankle injury in the 38th minute of Friday's win over Dayton. Ofosu originally entered the game in the first half, replacing Amick. The junior hurt his ankle on a tackle from a Flyer defender and immediately left the game in favor of sophomore Michael Jejna.

However, Ofosu re-entered the game in the 71st minute to spell Mark DeSantis, who had already scored two goals. The forward's style of play is best suited to counter-attacking situations, especially when UMass has a lead.

Even though Ofosu was favoring his right side after the game with a heavily iced left ankle, the junior played the final four minutes against Xavier.

The injury forced Ofosu out of the

See M. SOCCER on page 5

Stuart Amick was named the Atlantic 10 Co-Rookie of the Week Monday. He scored the game-winner against Xavier Sunday.

COLLEGIAN SPORTS ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

MARK DESANTIS, MIDFIELDER, MEN'S SOCCER

Sophomore Mark DeSantis of the Massachusetts men's soccer team scored the first two goals of his career in the Minutemen's 3-0 win over Dayton Friday. DeSantis scored both of his goals in the second half.

His first of the pair was the game-winner for the Minutemen. He took a pass from sophomore Bryan Hogan at the top of the box. He waited for the defender to make a play on him and turned the other way before rifling a shot into the high left corner.

His contributions to the team this season rarely appear in the game's box score, but the Wenham native is almost always one of the first people UMass coach Sam Koch praises after a win.

His ability to win loose balls for the Minutemen consistently provides the Minutemen with possession they can turn into goals.

DeSantis also accounted for an assist on the game-winning goal in UMass's 2-1 victory over Xavier Sunday.

With his back to the defender, he flipped a ball over his right shoulder to a streaking Stuart Amick who crossed the ball into the net. The ball deflected off a Xavier defender and into the net to give UMass a 2-1 lead.

He is tied for second on the team with six points on two goals and two assists. His other assist came on Prince Ofosu's game-winning goal against Dartmouth on Sept. 3.

RUNNER-UP: CHRISTINA DEROSA, WOMEN'S CROSS COUNTRY

Senior Christina DeRosa of the Massachusetts women's cross country team placed first overall at the Albany Invitational last week.

DeRosa led the Minutewomen to a fourth-place finish at the meet.

The win also earned her UMass/Dinn Bros. co-Athlete of the Week, as well as the Women's Atlantic 10 Performer of the Week.

DeRosa has competed in all five of the team's meets this season, placing first in all of them.

DeRosa finished the race at a time of 17 minutes, 21.7 seconds. In three career races at the invitational, this was a personal record for DeRosa by nearly a minute.

She beat last year's time by over a minute. DeRosa did not compete in the invitational as a sophomore. DeRosa beat out 239 other runners at the Albany campus.

Although never falling behind any of her teammates in any race throughout her UMass career, this was only DeRosa's second meet victory in her career. Her other first-place finish came as a freshman at the UMass Invitational, when she completed the course in 18:12.

DeRosa's previous top time at the Albany Invitational came as a freshman in 2004. She finished the race at a time of 18:16, finishing in ninth place overall. At this year's meet, DeRosa beat out Brown's Smita Gupta.

DeRosa narrowly came out with the victory, as Gupta was less than a second behind her.

COLBERT/COLBERT IN '08 | PAGE 6

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

FEW SHOWERS : HI: 76 LO: 60 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, OCTOBER 18, 2007

Lecture series to return

BY SARA EGLITIS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts will hold the first of the Distinguished Faculty Lecture series Oct. 22. Ben S. Branch, professor of finance and operations at the Isenberg School of Management (ISOM), will present a lecture entitled, "Are Markets Efficient? If Not, Why Aren't You Getting Rich?"

Branch has been a member of the UMass faculty since 1975 and is "honored and humbled" by this recognition.

He has held positions as acting department chair, associate chairman of the department of general business and finance and is currently chairman of the ISOM management personnel committee.

He is currently teaching investments classes. His academic interests include bankruptcy, investments and strategic planning.

On Monday, Branch will be speak on "eliminating money worries with respect to maintaining [one's] pres-

See SERIES on page 3

SGA debates financial status

BY DERRICK PERKINS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Senators discussed increasing student fees by $6 in 2009 to replenish the low financial reserves of the Student Government Association during last night's meeting.

"We want to talk about the importance of stabilizing our budget for next year," said SGA President Aaron Buford.

Buford presented the 2008 fiscal year's budget with recommendation for the upcoming 2009 budget alongside Allen Brainerd, director of finance and business services at the Center for Student Development.

Brainerd laid out the SGA's current financial situation for the 27 assembled student senators. Four or five years ago, he said, the SGA had been in possession of a financial surplus that was subsequently allocated to student activities. In recent years, according to Brainerd, the SGA has been allocating more funds than collecting in revenue, dipping instead into financial reserves.

"The SGA has been operating in deficit [for the past several years]," he said.

According to Brainerd, the SGA should have at least a quarter of a million dollars allocated as a financial reserve and funds have dipped below what he called a "minimal level."

Brainerd told the senators that they could either make "tough decisions" when it came to funding student organizations and activities, or they could raise student fees from $87.

A $3 fee increase, according to Brainerd, would match the rate of inflation, while a $6 rise in student fees would help to relieve the burden of the SGA's financial reserves.

Anything more than a $6 50 rise to student fees would exceed the 7.5 percent cap to any fee increases without a referendum allowed by section four of article five of the SGA constitution.

The senators were also concerned about an outstanding cash flow loan held by the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, part of which is due to be paid back by Jan. 1. The loan is drawn from the SGA's financial reserves.

Senators suggested holding a campus-wide referendum to increase fees above the 7.5 percent cap, which would further alleviate the current SGA financial reserves situation.

Any referendum on raising student fees above the 7.5 percent cap without the exception of the campus as to why there is a need for an increase would fail, Buford said.

"I don't have confidence [it would pass]," he told the senate.

Derrick Perkins can be reached at dperkins@student.umass.edu

Allen Brainerd addresses the SGA as President Buford looks on.

Squawkin' and Rollin'

A large number of Canadian geese take a break from their southward journey in the campus pond. The migrators group is especially partial to the body of water as friendly students often feed them.

Sarah Ivory/ Collegian Staff

Group highlights diversity

BY GISELLE SAILIAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Center for Latin American, Caribbean and Latino Studies at the University of Massachusetts capped off the last calendar day of Hispanic Heritage Month Oct. 15 as it introduced its fall research colloquium series "Reports from the Field."

The series showcased three researches who presented cultural and socio-economic issues in the Dominican Republic, Colombia, Argentina and Uruguay.

Juhe Skogsbergh, a Ph.D candidate for the anthropology department at the UMass, presented her field work, entitled "Race Matters: Whiteness, Beauty Culture, and Afro-Latinidad among the Dominican Diaspora in the United States."

The lecture said the new racial structure that Afro-Dominicans encounter upon arriving in the United States is quite different then what they are accustomed to.

"Black and white binary doesn't work with Dominicans," Skogsbergh said.

The census asks everyone to specify

See LECTURE on page 3

Cadets preview a life of enforcing law

BY COURTNEY LAVERY
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

It's 4 a.m. on Saturday. The University of Massachusetts campus is settling down and becoming quiet in the morning hours. Most students can be found in their beds or making their way home.

But for a select group of approximately 30 students, this is not the case.

At this time UMass student police cadets are leaving the buildings that they monitored all night and reporting back to the police station. Here, they will fill out their time cards, put their equipment back and finally go home for the night.

The cadets are stationed in what are seen as "problem buildings," including most of the buildings in the Southwest residential area and in dormitories with the most student traffic.

These students have been recruited from criminal justice programs in the area, including Westfield State College, Holyoke Community College, Springfield

See CADETS on page 3

Amherst unplugs its wires

Town's WiFi ready for use

BY CAITLIN QUINN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Amherst town officials and researchers from the University of Massachusetts are working together to launch a community wireless mesh network in down town Amherst.

The network, which has been in a test phase for the last several months, now allows the public to access services from Wi Fi-equipped mobile devices such as laptops and hand-held devices.

The project has been headed by UMass professors Mark Corner and Brian Levine of the computer science department. Their collaboration is Kristopher J. Pacunas, information technology director for the Town of Amherst, whose department will be managing and maintaining the network.

The wireless network has been funded through research grants given to UMass from the National Science Foundation and the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency, part of the U.S. Department of Defense.

The total area covered by the network is currently 17 square miles. Any laptop computers with a wireless network adapter can access the network after agreeing to the disclaimer and terms of use.

The Town of Amherst official Web site does not suggest sending confidential or personal financial information over the wireless network. The network is available in town hall meeting rooms, Hasting Community Center meeting room and courtyard, Jones Library and branches, the town common and Sweetser Park. Jones Library's color printer will soon be available to the network.

See WIRELESS on page 3

UM student charged with possession

University of Massachusetts student Kirby Tang, 23, was arrested Tuesday for possession intent to distribute Class D and B substances.

At approximately 3 a.m. on Tuesday, the Amherst Police Department responded to a domestic disturbance at Tang's residence at 366 B Hawkins Meadow Apartments.

The call pertained to a fight between two brothers. The officers were able to bring peace to the scene, and neither participant sustained any major injuries.

Narcotics-related items were found on the scene. Dozens of MDMA (Ecstasy) tablets and a large amount of marijuana were discovered upon further investigation under a search warrant.

This is not Tang's first drug-related issue. On Dec. 2, 2003, he was charged with possession of a Class D substance on campus.

Tang is a biology and economics double major at UMass. He was on the College of Natural Sciences and Mathematics Dean's List last semester.

Tang was arraigned Tuesday afternoon in the Eastern Hampshire District Court, and the investigation is ongoing.

Sarah Ivory/ Collegian Staff

Mass Attack opens new season with last year's success in mind

BY JOE MELONE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts hockey team blames no one but itself for its exit in the quarterfinals of the 2007 NCAA Division I Hockey Tournament.

Facing Maine for the fifth time in a three-week span, the Minutemen dropped a 3-1 decision to the Black Bears 24 hours after upsetting top-seeded Clarkson in the tournament's East Regional opening round, 1-0.

Thoughts of their two-day adventure in Rochester, N.Y., last March inevitably crossed the minds of the 18 players returning from last year's team when they took on Clarkson last Friday in the 2007 season opener.

But once UMass junior Cory Quirk drifted into the center ice faceoff circle for the opening draw against Clarkson's Nick Dodge, 2006-07 meant nothing.

"It's not last season. Last season's players and seniors aren't here anymore," Quirk said. "It's a whole new year, a whole new freshman class and everything. We've just got to come out and focus; last season's done with. It's over."

UMass coach Don Cahoon doesn't expect to replace the five players departed from last season's regular rotation. He hopes, however, that those now in uniform for the Maroon and White can replace the skill sets lost from last year. A dynamic freshman class brings new dimensions to the Minutemen (1-1-0) and another year of training only improved the skill level of those remaining.

Cahoon saw some of what his freshman bring to the Minutemen in this weekend's action. Brian Keane scored the first goal of his career in UMass' win over Saint Lawrence on Saturday. Perhaps the best part of the goal for Cahoon and the UMass coaching staff was the sequence of events that led to Keane's tally.

The Minutemen demand a great deal from their forwards on both ends of the ice. Keane intercepted an outlet pass from an SLU defender to initiate the break that led to his goal. He and Quirk combined for the score once the rush began the other way.

UMass's ability to quickly transition after intercepting neutral-zone passes allows it to match up with teams in its conference that have seemingly always held a noticeable size advantage.

The upcoming action will not be the best barometer to judge this season's edition of the Minutemen. UMass is superior to both UMass-Lowell and Connecticut and, as they have in recent years, can defeat both teams on skill alone. But to get back to where it is now expected of them to get, UMass must compete with – and consistently defeat – the teams regarded as the Big Four in Hockey East (Boston College, Boston University, Maine and New Hampshire.)

See HOCKEY on page 8

There will be two new banners on display when UMass plays its home opener Friday against UMass-Lowell. There will be a ceremony presenting the banners which honor last season's accomplishments against UConn Saturday.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVIII
Issue 32
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Nicholas Belanger
Managing Editor Katie Huston
Business Manager Dan Ester
Production Manager Chris Martin
Night Supervisor Meghan Murphy
Advertising Manager Alex Bender
Advertising Production Katherine Shea
Arts & Living Editor Tim McColl
Comics Editor Adam Naugin
Editorial Editor Sean Sullivan
News Editor Derrick Perkins
Sports Editor Jeremy Rice
Asst. Business Manager Eric Szymczak
Assistant Advertising Marsea Whooten
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Stephanie McPherson
Asst. Arts & Living Ryan McAskill
Asst. Arts & Living Teresa Reilly
Asst. Editorial James Mathews
Asst. Editorial Melissa Garber
Assistant News Will McGuinness
Assistant News Kasi Stein
Assistant News Holly Seabury
Assistant Sports Michael King
Assistant Sports Joe Meloni
Assistant Sports Eli Rosenwaike
Web Editor James Hale
Photo Editor Toan Trinh
Asst. Photo Editor Michael Phillis
Asst. Photo Editor Brian Tedder

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently owned, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Index Life, became the College News in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1904 and the Massachusetts Collegian in 1906. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian incorporated as a nonprofit since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call 545-3500 between 8:30 a.m. and 5 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Meghan Murphy

COPY EDITOR
Nichole Amaral

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

Haitian slaves found in Fla.

Servitude ring uncovered in culture gap

By Jennifer Kay
Associated Press

MIAMI — The teen slept on a rolled-up mattress on the dining room floor and bathed in the backyard with a garden hose. For six years, she washed dishes, made beds and cooked for a family that beat her and hid her in a closet when visitors arrived. She never went to school.

Simone Celestin's story sounds like a slave narrative from another century, but federal prosecutors say it happened in South Florida. They say Celestin is one of an unknown number of children and teens called "restaveks," who are hidden as slaves within the Haitian immigrant community.

"Restavek" is a Haitian Creole word meaning "one who stays with." The term applies to an estimated 300,000 poor children in Haiti, mostly girls, who are given or sold by their parents to wealthier families, or taken from orphanages.

The children work in exchange for food, shelter and the promise of school, but often end up victims of physical and sexual abuse, according to the U.S. State Department's annual report on human trafficking.

Some sneak into the United States when their host family emigrates, then hide in a Haitian-American community, which is often loath to discuss the practice with outsiders.

Haitian-American advocates recall about 30 instances that have come to light since 1999, when a 12-year-old came forward with an appalling story about being a Broward County couple's household servant and a sex slave for their son.

But authorities believe those examples are probably just a small fraction of the actual number, because so few cases are reported.

"Haitians don't see those kids as slaves," said Jean-Robert Cadet, a former restavek who published a memoir tracing his journey from Haiti's poverty to the American middle class.

Marleine Bastien, executive director of Haitian Women of Miami, said some Haitians view the practice as an informal foster care system.

"They may feel they were helping the little child by bringing the child here and express bewilderment that they are being prosecuted for 'doing the right thing,'" Bastien said.

Maude Paulin, a teacher, and her mother, Evelyn Theodore, are scheduled to stand trial in January on federal charges that they illegally brought Celestin into the country in 1999 and kept her in involuntary servitude. Prosecutors say Celestin, then 14, was taken from an orphanage Theodore owned in Haiti, the least developed country in the western hemisphere.

Paulin's ex-husband is also charged with human trafficking, and her sister faces forced labor charges. All four could spend decades in prison if convicted.

Richard Dansoh, Paulin's attorney, said this is a case of cultural misunderstanding. He said Celestin had been the favorite of Paulin's late father at the orphanage, and the family took her in at his wishes.

"They took her to improve her chances of having a good life. This is not a slavery case," Dansoh said.

Dansoh said Celestin could not be enrolled in school because she lacked the proper documents, but Paulin home-schooled the girl. Celestin protested when the family tried to curtail her involvement with older men who had promised to help her gain permanent residency in the U.S., he said.

Paulin and her family were trying to "shield her from a life of inappropriate relationships," Dansoh said.

Prosecutors and Celestin's immigration attorney declined to comment because her case is pending. They declined to make her available for this story. It's not clear how Celestin's situation came to the attention of authorities.

U.S. immigration authorities and advocates call human trafficking a hidden crime because victims do not contact police. They say law enforcement and school officials often miss the warning signs in young people, such as missing identification, isolation or behavioral problems.

Advocates say it's difficult to coax suspected restaveks to open up, even when they are identified, because they are told their work supports family members back in Haiti, and they fear relatives will suffer retribution.

Cadet remembers the shame he felt as a teenager when a high school teacher discovered he was homeless and asked why. Cadet spent his childhood in Haiti as a restavek for a prostitute and her son, then continued working for them after the family emigrated to New York. They kicked him out when school interfered with his chores.

"For me to tell that teacher I was a restavek was like telling him I was a dog. In Haiti, a restavek and a dog share the same social status. For me to tell this man that, I am not really a human being," said Cadet, who is now a college professor and an advocate for restaveks.

Danielle Romer, president of Haitian Support Inc. in Homestead, recalled one 15-year-old girl whose experience showed why restaveks don't reach for help: "She was working a.m. to p.m., not going to school, but where she sleeps is better than what she had in Haiti."

Dwa Fanm, a Brooklyn-based women's rights organization, decided in 2004 not to renew a federal grant for services directed at Haitian restaveks because the 20 women who came forward did not want to register as human trafficking victims. Registration would have allowed them to apply for asylum or specific visas to stay in the U.S.

"As soon as we said, 'You have to report it, we have to report it so you can be certified,' they said, 'Never mind, I've changed my mind,'" said Farah Jamis, the group's executive director. "They didn't want to prosecute. It makes sense — people are afraid for their lives."

Chocolate Jesus set to arrive in NYC

NEW YORK — "My Sweet Lord," an anatomically correct milk chocolate sculpture of Jesus Christ that infuriated Catholics before its April unveiling was canceled, returns Oct. 27 to a Chelsea art gallery, its creator said Tuesday.

This time, artist Cosimo Cavallaro said he expects the public exhibit to proceed without a problem.

"There is nothing offensive about this," Cavallaro said of his controversial confectionary work. "If my intentions were to offend, if I did do something wrong, I wouldn't be doing this. But I didn't do anything wrong."

Cavallaro, who received death threats before the April show was canceled, said the vast majority of his mail was in support of his six-foot piece.

"I got a lot of positive mail from people in the Catholic Church, people studying theology, people in monasteries, all kinds of letters and e-mails of support," he said.

The last show was criticized for its timing and its location. The exhibit, in a gallery visible to passers-by on a Manhattan street, was set to open one day after Palm Sunday and four days before Christians marked the crucifixion of Christ on Good Friday.

The Catholic League, which led the charge against "My Sweet Lord" back then, said the change to the Proposition Gallery and the exhibition's new opening date would keep it from calling for another shutdown of the sculpture's showing.

"We don't approve of the piece at all, but it's not something we're going to protest," said Kiera McCaffrey, the league's director of communications. "This is much less an in-your-face assault on Christians, and it's not happening during Holy Week."

The exhibit, at the Proposition Gallery in Manhattan, will be accompanied by a set of chocolate Catholic icons created by Cavallaro, a group that includes the Virgin Mary and Saints Francis, Augustine, Michael, Jude, Anthony and Jerome.

"After the cancellation of the show, it got me to look into the Catholic religion a little deeper," Cavallaro said. "I started thinking about the saints, how they were ostracized for their beliefs and then canonized."

Associated Press

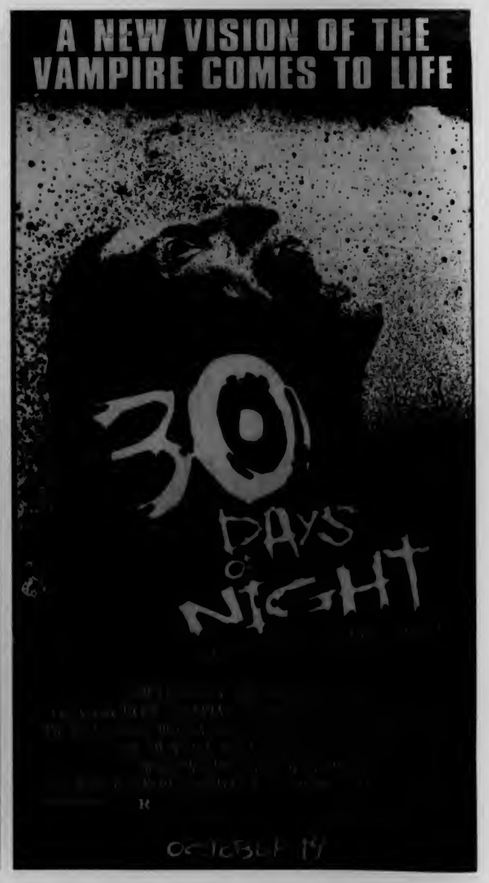
This milk chocolate, anatomically correct sculpture of Jesus Christ will be featured in a New York City art gallery later this month.

OCT 18 2007

FOUR Seasons
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS
WINE SALE 10% OFF 6 BOTTLES* OF WINE EVERYDAY!! MIX & MATCH *REGULAR PRICED 750 ML BOTTLES OF VARIETAL WINES

Beer

Samuel Adams 24 pk btl	$22.99*
Coronita 7oz 24 pk btl	$17.99*
Miller Lite 20 pk btl	$13.99*
Budweiser & Bud Light 20 pk btl	$13.99*
Red Stripe Lager 12 pk btl	$11.99*
Stella Artois Lager 12 pk btl	$11.99*
Bass Ale 12 pk btl	$11.99*
Heineken & Heineken Light 12 pk btl	$11.99*
Miller Chill 12 pk btl	$10.99*
Miller High Life 18 pk btl	$8.99*
Landshark Lager 6 pk btl	$6.69*
Sam Adams Summer Ale 6 pk btl	$5.99*



*all beer prices plus deposit

Liquor

Jack Daniels Tennessee Whiskey 1.75 liter	$39.99
Jameson Irish Whiskey 1.75 liter	$38.99
Sauza Gold Tequila 1.75 liter	$29.99
Stolichnaya Vodka 80° 1.75 liter	$29.99
Beefeater London Dry Gin 1.75 liter	$26.99
Ballantine Blended Scotch Whisky 1.75 liter	$24.99
Skyy Vodka 80° 1.75 liter	$24.99
Durango Gold Tequila 1.75 liter	$21.99
Jim Beam Bourbon Whiskey 1.75 liter	$20.99
Pinnacle Vodka 1.75 liter	$19.99
Myer's Platinum Rum 1.75 liter	$18.99
Svedka Vodka 80° 1.75 liter	$18.99
Canadian Club Whisky 1.75 liter	$18.99
Viking Fjord Vodka 80° 1.75 liter	$17.99
Sobieski Polish Vodka 1.75 liter	$16.99
Denaka Vodka 1.75 liter	$14.99
Ron Rico Vanilla Rum 1.75 liter	$11.99
Rubinoff Vodka 80° 1.75 liter	$9.99

FOUR SEASONS
584-8174
Sale 10/11 - 10/19
333 Russell St., Rte. 9, Hadley, MA
584-8174 • Mon.-Sat. 9AM-11PM • Sun. Noon-11PM

Students learn tough lessons in UMPD cadet program

CADETS from page 1

Technical Community College and UMass. They are required to work two shifts on Thursday, Friday or Saturday from 8 p.m. to 4 a.m.

Although they are required to work these shifts they are not limited to them.

"Many times I'll get called in for prisoner watch during my shift and have to stay overtime," said Caitlin Kennedy, 20, who has been a cadet at UMass for about a year.

Kennedy, one of five female police cadets, added, "If a female prisoner has to go to the hospital or to prison, I have to go as well because I'm a female. I've been called in on school nights to sit with prisoners as well."

Kennedy took this job after two weeks of "boot camp"-style training and becoming first responder-certified at the end of the summer because she was interested in law enforcement but didn't know if she wanted to commit herself completely.

"The cadet program would give me some insight without having to change studies completely," she said.

UMass Chief of Police Barbara O'Connor started the UMass Cadet Program for those specific reasons.

O'Connor said the program was started in April 2003 because she began her career in a similar program in Amherst.

"We implemented the program not based on any specific problem, but a general feeling that the UMass police department needed more help," she said.

"I think it's a great way to help young people begin a career in law enforcement," she said. "It also helps us recruit women and minority officers."

O'Connor also understands that being a cadet doesn't mean everything. The department still values the fact that these cadets are attending school. To participate in the program, one must maintain a GPA of 2.5, "but we tell them a 3.0 is better," she said.

Kennedy, who plans on becoming a full-time officer, described the job as "a great resume-builder," and said, "the basis of the program is to learn how a police department works and some of the things it takes to do the job."

These police cadets, however, are still students.

Students on campus are well aware of the cadets' presence in their dormitories, but know little about who they actually are and what they are there to do.

When asked what the cadet's reputation is among their peers on campus, Javier Ramirez, 21, said, "The worst, everyone hates them."

"They're on a power trip," said student George Codon. "They're just there for scare tactics, that's all."

Students on campus feel threatened, and as another student described it, "betrayed" by their peers being a part of law enforcement.

"Working where I live is hard because I run into people that I have had to deal with at work when I'm trying to go though my everyday business," she said.

Students must also deal with is the possibility of being present when someone they know personally is being arrested.

"People I grew up with have been arrested and I have had to hook people I've known when I'm on prisoner watch," Kennedy said.

Prisoner watch consists of either staying with a person who has been arrested until they are bailed out of prison or monitoring a person being held in protective custody for 12 hours or until they are no longer intoxicated, whichever comes first.

Kennedy has worked from 8 p.m. to 10 a.m. after being put on prisoner watch after her normal shift had ended, and she had to wait for a young woman to "sober up."

Although the students on campus may not respect the cadets as Kennedy said, "a lot of the time I get inappropriate comments from intoxicated males" – this is not the case with the police officers at UMass.

The UMass police officers respect that these students are certified in both prisoner watch and suicide watch, and that they play a significant role in helping decrease the incidence of criminal conduct in the residential areas.

"They know that I'm not an officer, but they also know that I'm learning and really want to get the job done right," Kennedy said. Many times, the UMass police officers will let the cadets come along and respond to low-risk calls in order to gain experience.

The presence of the cadets on the UMass campus is fairly new, yet particularly vital. O'Connor explained that until 2001, UMass used security officers but had to lay off all 19 of them.

"The cadet program fills that void and helps the police a lot more than the security program did," said O'Connor.

Group highlights diversity in grad series

Lectures shed light on issues

LECTURE from page 1

a race, which often leaves many confused, she said.

"The census tries to put Hispanics in specific race boxes," Skogsbergh said.

A "hierarchy of class and race" define the Dominican culture, where lighter is better and their African ancestry is denied, Skogsbergh said.

She said that Afro-Dominicans face a dilemma in the binary system America has put in place because they have never identified themselves as being black or white – they see themselves as shades in between.

Dominicans in the United States lose their Dominican identity as "in the United States, [Afro-Dominicans] are viewed as black," she said.

Erika Marquez, a graduate student in the sociology department at UMass, shifted her research presentation to Colombia, where she conducted her research work, entitled "The Security Policy and the Human Rights Movement in Colombia: A Preliminary report."

The purpose of Marquez's research is to examine the impact of security policies on the human rights movement in Colombia.

Colombia has proposed several bills that many deem are constituted around an anti-terrorist reform in the country, she said.

These reforms have put in place "legal discourse on human rights in Colombia as a response to the state's counter-insurgency strategy of granting judicial powers for the military to practice captures, house searches and wiretapping," said Marquez.

She said juridical language is often used.

"Although the justification of the human-rights discourse has a crucial role in the protection of human rights, it might limit the critical potential of movements as it concentrates its reaction on the institutional language and space of rights," she said.

"Afro-descendant movements show other avenues for mobilization that address human rights and the reaction to security policies in the context of their broader critique to neoliberal globalization," Marquez said.

Graciela Monteagudo, a graduate student in the department of anthropology, was last to present her research: "Rivers, Paper, and Genetically Modified Trees: Corporate Globalization in the Global South."

Bordering countries of Argentina have been protesting the installation of two cellulose plants in Fray Bentos, Uruguay for the past three years.

After an "extended economic recession in 1999-2002 – the Uruguayan government created a haven for international investors by lifting foreign ownership of lands or business and repatriation of capital or profits," said Monteagudo.

This decision the Uruguayan government took to allow Finland to build a massive cellulose plant has angered the residents of Gualeguaychu, she said.

Residents worry the pollution in the river will decrease their economy in "genetically modified soy, tourism, sailing in river, blueberries," said Monteagudo.

According to Monteagudo, this allows capitalism to replace skilled laborers for less skilled, mature laborers by immature laborers, and males by females.

She said that the residents of Gualeguaychu exhibit their democracy by blocking roads between Uruguay and Argentina and tend to lean towards hierarchical structures of power.

"This popular, environmental-social movement exhibits many of the characteristics of the struggles developed by the new Argentine social movements," Monteagudo said.

Giselle Saillan can be reached at gsaillan@student.umass.edu.

Lecture series to feature lauded staff

SERIES from page 1

ent lifestyle." He says that the topic is one "that someone without expertise can follow" but at the same time, won't bore someone who has prior knowledge about it.

He will explain how best to approach investing, a subject he has recently spent a lot of time looking at while writing his latest book, "If You're So Smart, Why Aren't You Rich?"

Branch has noted that starting early will reap the best benefits. Even if audience members are not newly independent undergraduates, this lecture will teach them to be wary of the "fools" trapped in investment mishaps.

The Distinguished Faculty Lecture series began in the mid-1970s on campus as a way to honor individual faculty members for their academic achievement. The selection process for each year's series begins in December. All faculty and staff at the University are able to nominate a faculty member for excellence in scholastic endeavors.

During the spring semester a committee of five, including at least three former lecturers, review all nominees and focus on academic credentials and proposed lecture topics.

At the end of each lecture, the Chancellor's Medal is presented to the distinguished faculty member. This medal comes with monetary value but signifies a great honor granted by the University – one that often adds to the décor of the recipient's office.

Along with Branch's lecture, the lecture topics this year include: "Are Educational Tests Inherently Evil?" by Stephen G. Sireci from the department of educational policy, research and administration, "An Archaeological Look at Us" by H Martin Wobst from the department of anthropology and "Claiming Blackness in Germany" by Sara Lennox from the department of languages, literatures and cultures.

These lectures will be on Dec. 11, March 3 and April 28, respectively. More information about each of these lecturers can be found on the Provost's Web site.

Each lecture this year will be held in the Massachusetts Room in the Mullins Center free of charge, starting at 4 p.m. and followed by a reception.

Branch said the lecture will be a unique opportunity for the UMass and regional Five College community "to get a sense of what people are doing across campus."

Sara Eglitis can be reached at seglitis@student.umass.edu.

Amherst unplugs: wireless network ready

WIRELESS from page 1

"This system will have a positive impact on town services by providing citizens the ability to pay for parking with a credit card, or initiating traffic calming though connected traffic," Pacunas said. "I also believe the possibilities surrounding economic development are endless."

"I am very excited about where this system and this partnership with the university will take this community," he added.

The wireless network's services to the public go beyond providing Internet access. It has the ability to monitor town assets through sensors it can provide to the Department of Public Works. These services include security systems, traffic light management and improved communication within the department.

The network will also provide improved communication for the police, EMS and fire departments.

Several major cities around the country, such as San Francisco, Calif., Portland, Ore., and Philadelphia, Pa., are planning similar municipal wireless networks.

"We are proud to work in Amherst, and we believe our research can positively impact the town," reads the project's proposal. "Our project seeks to advance Internet technology so that it can be used in the many environments where providing networking to mobile users is a challenge."

UMass researchers will be using the network to test projects that they believe will benefit society as a whole by improving Internet technology. These improvements will provide more reliable internet during natural disasters, power outages and to developing areas of the world.

The technology also allows wildlife and ocean researchers to monitor land wildlife as well as oceans with greater precision.

"We believe that the greatest research results come from experimentation done in a real test bed," said Corner.

Caitlin Quinn can be reached at cquinn@student.umass.edu.

THE FINE ARTS CENTER
LET'S GO GLOBE HOPPING!
CENTER SERIES 07-08 SEASON

Miguel Zenón Quartet
Thursday October 18, 7:30 pm, Bowker Auditorium
This dazzling young musician is quickly becoming a central figure in the new Latin jazz movement as he effortlessly blends bebop with Latin jazz. Miguel Zenón is a tour de force in contemporary jazz!
$25 $15 Five College Students $10 $7
Youth 17 and under $12
Sponsored by El Planeta, Bank of America, Open Square, Allison Bartmon and Angier and WEIB 106.3FM
Join us for a free Community Salsa Party at Open Square in Holyoke Wednesday October 17th from 7-11pm for some soul cleansing Latin dance music with Combo Sabroso
EL PLANETA Bank of America 106.3 Smooth FM WEIB

Rosanne Cash: Black Cadillac The Concert
Saturday, October 20, 8pm, Concert Hall
Using the music from Black Cadillac as a roadmap, Cash invites the audience on a stirring trip through a multi-media performance of music, video, and narration of her personal legacy.
$35 $25 $15 Five College Students $15
Youth 17 and under $15
Sponsored by PeoplesBank, Valley Advocate, and 93.9 The River. Come at 7:30pm for a tour of the current exhibition at the University Gallery
Peoples Bank Valley Advocate

Tosca
Performed by Teatro Lirico D'Europa
Sunday, November 4, 3pm, Concert Hall
Puccini's tale of selfless love is a timeless masterpiece that shows the dark side of intensely, passionate love between an artist and his muse. Sung in Italian with English supertitles
$35 $25 $15 Five College Students $15, $10, $7.
Sponsored by Lathrop Retirement Communities

UMass Amherst FINE ARTS CENTER
For tickets call or go online to www.fineartscenter.com!

University Health Services
Support and Therapy Group Meetings • Fall, 2007

GRADUATE STUDENT INTERPERSONAL THERAPY GROUP
Start date and time TBA

"FIRSTS" GO TO COLLEGE
Thursdays, 2 – 3 p.m. beginning Oct. 22
For undergraduate and graduate students who are the first in their families to attend college.

KEEPING IT TOGETHER – HEARTS AND MINDS
Two separate sessions – Thursdays, Oct. 25 and Nov. 15, 4 – 5 p.m.
A seminar focused on self-care in the face of college stress and mood changes.

LIVING WITH LOSS
Sessions start Monday, Oct. 22
A support group for students dealing with the loss of a loved one.

LIVING WITH MEDICAL ILLNESS
Start date and time TBA
A support group for those dealing with chronic medical illness that affects daily functioning.

Pre-registration is required for all groups. Call 545-2337 or come to Mental Health Services, 127 Hills North, Monday – Friday, 8 a.m. – 5 p.m.

Your Halloween Party Headquarters
TJ's TAYLOR RENTAL Party Plus.
Stuck Without a Costume?
RESERVE YOUR COSTUMES NOW
Carrying a Full Line of Halloween Costumes for Rent or Sale
(Custom Orders Available)
Full Party Rental Supply Store
Theme Parties, Balloons, Paper Products & More
Treat Your Guests to a Fog or Bubble Machine

SOUTH HADLEY
577 Granby Road (Rt. 202)
533-5503
www.taylorrental.com/southhadley

HADLEY
301 Russell Sreet (Rt. 9)
584-4184
www.taylorrental.com/hadley

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 18, 2007

"It were best that we not all think alike; it is difference of opinion that makes horseraces." - Mark Twain

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The tools to do the job

In recent weeks, the University has had the misfortune of experiencing two incidences of startling student violence. While it is clear that these incidences are largely coincidental, and do not reflect the student body or the University as a whole, important questions have been raised in their wake.

The discovery that Sean Saxena, one of the students accosted in the attack that took place in the Sylvan residential area this past week, had to lie bleeding for 10 minutes before the police and paramedics could arrive is startling. The fact that the situation would've been similar in any number of residence halls on campus, however, is downright disturbing.

Nellie Stevens, the certified reacuer who attended to the bleeding Saxena, could not aid him to the best of her ability because the cluster office had no first aid kit or rubber gloves. One could hardly blame the cluster office attendants who could not help Saxena; none of them were trained in administering first aid, and in fact they are directed by the University to do little besides call the police or Health Services and wait for assistance.

This, presumably, is to avoid legal liability on the part of the University or the individual member of the residence life staff. But Massachusetts' "Good Samaritan" law absolves any responder who "in good faith, provides or obtains, or attempts to provide or obtain assistance for the victim of a crime" from legal liability. And while the Residence Life staff – who are not trained first responders – should not be penalized for not taking immediate action in the event of an emergency, the resources should be available to them.

It is not the obligation of anyone witnessing the sort of violence that occurred in Sylvan to act as Stevens did. But in the event that victims are fortunate enough to have someone such as Stevens who is trained to provide emergency care, there is no conceivably legal reason that the University should not provide them with the means with which to do so.

Other than the perpetrator of this heinous act of violence, there are no individuals to blame for the mismanagement of the situation. But there is an issue of policy – which is probably more so the result of oversight than legal incompetence – that needs to be addressed.

The Residence Life staff and cluster offices exist to do more than distribute condoms, write up violators of the alcohol policy and put on events. They exist to ensure the general welfare of their residents. And in the event that one of their residents is attacked, suffers an accident or suddenly falls ill, they should be provided with the appropriate resources to handle it.

The events of the past few weeks are not paramount of daily life here at the University. But when heinous attacks or terrible accidents happen, there is no excuse for policy that inhibits action, making what Stevens described as "a bad situation worse."

Unsigned editorials reflect the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian editorial board.

Bright skies for a dark horse

Nick Milano

With a remarkably unpopular president, an increasingly hated war and discombobulation within the Republican Party, it appears the Democratic presidential nominee should be a lock to win next November. A token warning, however: it's never over 'til it's over.

The Democratic Party has shown its inability to squander political opportunities many times in the past. The one man who will give his nominee a serious run for his money is lurking in the shadows of Republican frontrunners Rudy Giuliani, Mitt Romney and Fred Thompson. Democrats should be hoping and praying that their opponent come November is anybody but Mike Huckabee.

Democrats should be hoping and praying that their opponent come November is anybody but Mike Huckabee.

The former governor of Arkansas and ardent supporter of the Second Amendment (and of the NRA) is armed with a plan to completely dismantle the federal tax code.

Who doesn't hate the IRS?

Owing to his remarkably successful decade as governor of Arkansas, he packs a resume with more punch than most any other candidate in the field. He has appeal to the powerful Christian Right for his track record on abortion, stem cell research and gay marriage. Still, he has been forced to fight out of the basement for the nomination. With his credentials, he should not be stuck in neutral, but lapping the rest of the field en route to the Republican nomination. Results have just begun coming in over the last few months as Huckabee is gaining in national polls and is inching toward the lead in Iowa.

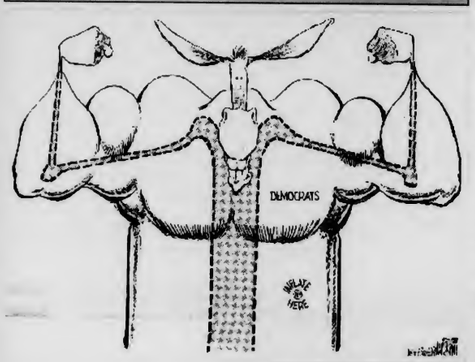
He is trying to present himself as the sole candidate without personal and professional baggage that will surely be exploited by the Democrats in the general election.

First, Mitt Romney has a long and documented history of flip-flopping on a smorgasbord of issues from abortion to his desire to serve in Vietnam. The extent of his indecisive nature makes it a crime to label John Kerry this way as well. Further, the Christian Right has been apprehensive of his Mormon religion and whether or not Mormonism shares the same goals and beliefs of other Christian sects.

Rudy Giuliani comes from the same type of model. His previous actions as mayor of New York endeared him to millions for his cool leadership after the terrorist attacks at the World Trade Center. But his record of mildly supporting gay marriage, gun-control and abortion has the Christian right and arch-conservatives expressing doubts – even with his lead in national polls.

Former actor Fred Thompson jumped into the game late, and this may turn out to be a poorly calculated move as he missed out on critical fundraising opportunities. His appearance in last week's Republican debate did very little to project a presidential image. The first televised debates were crucial in contrasting John F. Kennedy's youthfulness to Richard Nixon's pallid figure in 1960; the same will happen for Thompson, who looks eternally sad and exhausted. His performance was not very strong, either, and he appeared nervous, giving unsure answers. Thompson was hyped as the answer to the Republican woes, but he has not gotten off to a very impressive start.

In contrast, Mike Huckabee has those qualities that separate candidates from presidents. From the same small town as Bill Clinton, Huckabee served as a Southern Baptist pastor before entering politics. Time magazine named him one of the top five governors in the country and Governing magazine named him one of their eight Public Officials of the Year in 2005. He also exhibited a steadfast determination when he lost 110 pounds after being diagnosed with type II diabetes. His health turnaround was cemented when he ran the New York Marathon in 2006.



Socially, he is the conservative that the religious wing of the Republican Party is desperately looking for. With talks of the organization of a Christian third party, social conservatives are missing the fact that Huckabee opposes abortion, signed a ban on same-sex marriage into law and ardently refuses to allow stem cell research. No other serious candidate can brag of such a history, and his nomination would mobilize the powerful Christian Right, whose participation could swing the election in the Republicans' favor.

Still, Huckabee is not a perfect candidate. Though he claims to have lowered taxes 94 times, two think-tanks have ridiculed him for actually raising them. On his tax and spending policies, one gave him a failing grade and the other labeled him a liberal.

Huckabee is also more moderate on the rights of illegal immigrants because he believes this current wave of immigrants grant the United States a chance to depart from sordid racist history. For example, he has refused to ban them from receiving state services although he supports the construction of a wall along the shared border with Mexico.

As the first primaries edge closer, the Republican Party's core will continue to express dissatisfaction with the field of candidates, but Huckabee now has the third position in Iowa and is in prime position to build on the momentum. He seems like the perfect candidate for the Christian Right and whatever excites this enormously powerful organization causes nightmares for Democrats. Mike Huckabee has the resume, work ethic and leadership qualities to unite the Republican Party behind him. If he can do so the Democrats have no chance of winning the White House in 2008.

Nick Milano writes on Thursdays. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Editorial@DailyCollegian.com

ONE STUDENT HAS NO CLASS

DEAR EDITOR:

Why is it that almost every time I open a Collegian and turn to the editorial opinion section I am confronted with hateful and biased articles? It is almost as if a mutant child of Rush Limbaugh and Microsoft Word's thesaurus application has taken hold of the Collegian.

The article on dress codes was narcissistic, self righteous and full of hateful odious language against all who do not conform to Mr. DeFlumeri's idea of American youth. If one were to replace the word "hippie" and "liberal" with words like "Jew" or "homosexual" we would have literature fit for a Hitler youth rally.

Throughout the article Mr. Deflumeri brings up the fact that his career in the Navy instilled in him the discipline to be an upstanding man of character. Would a man of discipline and character really write such hateful articles?

The assumption that all people who don't fit Mr. Deflumeri's profile (collared shirt, slacks and what usually appears to be Army issue class A uniform shoes – I'll have to check the 670-1 uniform regulations to see if that's allowed) are not adequate students is very unbecoming of a true military man. I have spoken with many other members of the military who are all in various branches (Army, Marines, Air force) and we are all tired of seeing hateful ignorant articles written that appear to voice the mind of the average military person.

Although this article has one author, Brad Deflumeri, the bringing up of his military career makes it sound like he is speaking for all of us serviceman. This article is not an isolated incident either; several articles have been written where individuals use their military careers as a way to legitimize their extremist conservative or liberal opinions.

There is a huge population of men and woman on campus who are currently serving or have served in the United States Military, some having just gone through basic training, and some having performed tours in hot spots such as Baghdad, Fallujah and Abu Ghraib.

Yet rarely do these individuals who have committed to being in the military and have first hand experience speak out. Well I am sure that I can speak for all us in the military and say we don't agree with Mr. Deflumeri's opinion that everyone on campus is "shabby, shoeless, shower-less and generally detestable hippies who have no conception of what it is like to go to a job interview, much less serve in the military."

I know for a fact that there are several individuals in the military, and some of those who have been to what is considered the frontline, who would fit the profile of a "detestable hippie." It is obvious to me that the Navy failed to instill discipline, and especially respect, in Mr. Deflumeri. I would kindly ask Mr. Deflumeri to keep his outrageous comments to himself, and to stop giving serviceman on campus a bad image.

PV2 Nicholas Paul Papazoglou
UMass student

PROTECTION A NECESSITY

DEAR EDITOR:

(Re: "Guns are not a solution," Ed/Op Sept. 25)

While Josh Wilder appears to believe that guns are not a solution, I doubt very much that his reaction – as the target of a school shooting – would be any different than mine or yours.

I'm a grandfather and university student who would be looking for a responsible individual with a gun to stop the shooter. That normally translates to a call to 911 looking for the police to intervene. Unfortunately, when seconds count, police are only minutes away.

While police are responsible individuals, so are most other people. In schools, the ranks of the responsible include teachers, adult students, janitors, and visitors.

Some of these people are also qualified to carry sidearms, and any one of them is more likely to be on site if a shooting occurs than are police officers. Why is being politically correct more important than the safety of our children?

Wayne Justinen
Alberta, Canada

SAY NO TO DRUG PERSECUTION

DEAR EDITOR:

No doubt, certain provisions of the Higher Education Act must be amended ("No Financial Aid For Drug Violators," Oct. 15, 2007), to stop discriminating against cannabis users. Cannabis (kaneh bosm / marijuana) isn't even a drug but rather a relatively safe God-given plant. Do students lose financial aid if caught with alcohol?

Further discrimination exists because students convicted of murder or rape, are still eligible for financial aid in school.

Government's attempts to persecute, prohibit and exterminate cannabis is luciferous to begin with since Christ God, Our Father, The Ecologician, indicates He created all the seed-bearing plants, saying they are all good, on literally the very first page of the Bible (see Genesis 1:11-12 and 29-30).

Stan White

DEAR EDITOR:

Thank you for raising awareness of the Higher Education Act's denial of student loans to youth convicted of drug offenses. Instead of empowering at-risk students with a college degree, HEA limits career opportunities and increases the likelihood that those affected will resort to crime.

Speaking of crime, convicted rapists and murders are still eligible for federal student loans. Most students outgrow their youthful indiscretions involving illicit drugs. An arrest and criminal record, on the other hand, can be life-shattering.

After admitting to smoking pot (but not inhaling), former President Bill Clinton opened himself up to "soft on drugs" criticism. And thousands of Americans have paid the price in the form of shattered lives. More Americans went to prison or jail during the Clinton administration than during any past administration.

As an admitted former drinker and alleged illicit drug user, President George W. Bush is also politically vulnerable when it comes to drugs. While youthful indiscretions didn't stop Clinton or Bush from assuming leadership positions, an arrest surely would have.

The short-term effects of marijuana are inconsequential compared to the long-term effects of criminal records.

Robert Sharpe,
MPA Policy Analyst
Common Sense for Drug Policy
Washington, DC

RECOGNITION WHERE IT'S DUE

DEAR EDITOR:

(Re: "UM professionals will share drug and alcohol programs" News, Oct. 17)

The article on federal drug policy stated that "there is no SSDP chapter at UMass." This is true; however, UMass is home to the Cannabis Reform Coalition, the oldest drug policy political organization on any American college campus. The CRC has long worked with the SSDP, both the national office and regional chapters, on the FAFSA, and on many related issues. Several years ago, the SSDP held their national convention at UMass, hosted by the CRC, and with many members participating.

Terry Franklin
Amherst, MA

RULES FOR THE ROAD

DEAR EDITOR:

I live off-campus, and I ride my bike to school. I make a two-mile trip every day and I ride on the street in the bike lane. I'm sorry that this confuses some motorists, but it's where I am supposed to be. Riding on the sidewalk sucks, it is in bad shape in some places, and also, it is for pedestrians. I don't want to crash into anyone walking slowly, because I can get going pretty fast.

Now, that being said, sometimes I hate riding my bike. I do wish I had a car, then I wouldn't need to put all my stuff in a milk crate, and when I got places, I wouldn't be all hot and tired. However, I can't afford a car, my parents won't buy me one, so I have this bike from seventh grade to get me around.

What I'm getting at is: please don't hate me. I'm just doing what I'm doing. Last week, some guy yelled out his car window that he hated me because I was going straight through an intersection and he had to wait to turn left. Just today, a car that was next to me turned right and almost hit me. I had to slam on my brakes and he didn't even notice. I get scared. I wear my helmet, and I go where I am supposed to go. I'm trying to do my part.

Please, be aware of cyclists and bike lanes! Give a little room, and have a little patience. The common UMass theme of not even looking at people as they go by cannot be mirrored on the road. About 44,000 people die in car crashes in the U.S. every year, and about one in 54 is a bicyclist.

Luckily, we have not had any recent major accidents, but let's keep UMass a safe place by avoiding ignorance and accidents with awareness and more bike safety education.

Emma Welch
UMass student

POINT-COUNTER-POINT

"Freedom rings where opinions clash." - Adlai E. Stevenson

The Armenian genocide: Congress walks the line

Actions speak louder

Melissa Garber

The Ottoman Turks committed genocide against the Armenian people. This is a fact that cannot be denied or argued over by reasonable, intelligent people. As many as 1.5 millions Armenians were systematically massacred from 1915-1917 by the Young Turks, a group of revolutionary leaders who rose to power within the Ottoman Empire.

Modern day Turkey refuses to discuss – much less acknowledge – that this genocide had ever occurred. And, in order not to tarnish military affairs with Turkey, members of the Bush administration have been obstinately against officially recognizing the genocide as well.

The House, being as productive as they know how to be, is now trying to pass a non-binding resolution recognizing the Armenian genocide. The Turkish government has threatened that if this resolution passes, Turkish ties with the United States will never be the same.

"If this resolution passed in the committee passes the House as well, our military ties with the U.S. will never be the same again," Gen. Yasar Buyukanit told the daily Milliyet newspaper.

On Oct. 8, Kurdish rebels killed 13 Turkish soldiers. The Turkish government could send troops into northern Iraq at any moment. Two of our only allies in the Middle East, the Kurds and the Turks, are ready for war; the only thing stopping Turkey is the United States. If we lose diplomatic and military ties with Turkey, it will send Iraq into even more chaos. Turkey will invade northern Iraq and go to war against the Kurdish resistance.

According to NPR, 70 percent of supplies for U.S. troops in Iraq travel through Turkey. How can Congress be so careless to think that a non-binding resolution is more important than some semblance of stability in Iraq and the well-being of our already overworked troops?

Nancy Pelosi argued that "because many of the survivors are very old," the bill needs to be passed. But this same bill was almost passed by the Republicans in Congress during Clinton's administration and the survivors were very old then as well. Where was Democratic support of it then?

I'm sure all of the self-righteous Democrats in Congress are patting each other on the backs right now for taking the moral high ground. It's too bad the resolution is useless. It does nothing more than alienate Turkey and help Nancy Pelosi sleep at night. Why doesn't Congress make a non-binding resolution recognizing the legitimacy of the Tooth Fairy, or maybe one that admits unicorns into the White House? They would be equally effective, I'm sure.

Does it really matter? Aren't there other ways to recognize genocide? In France it is illegal to deny the Armenian genocide. But have the French even wiped the blood of the Algerians and the Vietnamese off their hands yet? For every country that has recognized the genocide, there has been a long, convoluted history of oppression within its foreign and domestic policies.

Recognizing the Armenian genocide via a non-binding, i.e. pointless, resolution is nothing more than grandstanding politics. It's a passive-aggressive way to protest the war in Iraq. Morality does not exist within the walls of Congress. They are not doing the Armenian people any favors by trying to get this resolution passed.

Recognizing the Armenian genocide via a non-binding, i.e. pointless, resolution is nothing more than grandstanding politics.

There is a genocide occurring in the Sudan at present – where is the binding resolution to send peace-keeping troops over there? What is the point of recognizing a genocide that has already happened for political reasons in place of doing something about the genocide that is happening right now in front of a worldwide audience?

If Congress felt so strongly about recognizing the Armenian genocide, it would have been recognized decades ago. America is already fully aware of the genocide that occurred. Congress should not be using the genocide of the Armenian people as a way to force American troops out of Iraq. Maybe they could consider a binding resolution forcing a timeline for when American troops leave Iraq instead of hiding behind their "morals."

Save the non-binding resolutions for when the United States can afford to make another enemy. Our government consists of the least qualified people to force the Turks to take responsibility for their country's history.

If Congress truly wanted to recognize the Armenian genocide, they would pass binding resolutions requiring all public schools to teach students more than just self-aggrandizing accounts of the Revolutionary War. High school social studies curriculums would include in full detail what happened to the Armenians during World War I and maybe perhaps what happened to the Native Americans and the African slaves as well.

A non-binding resolution that alienates a nation giving us a strategic advantage in Iraq isn't the moral high ground – it's political pageantry.

Melissa Garber is a Collegian editor. She can be reached at mhgarber@student.umass.edu.

Practice what you preach

S.P. Sullivan

In December of 2006, Iranian President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad held a two-day Holocaust revisionist conference in Tehran. Ahmadinejad played host to such intellectual dignitaries as former klansman David Duke, and discussed various theories of historical revisionism with reference to the events of the Holocaust, many of which were to the tune of "it never happened."

The world collectively guffawed.

Genocide is, understandably, a very hard thing to ignore, or deny, or otherwise brush off. Even before the advent of YouTube and the ubiquity of the Internet, it has always been very difficult to hide the deaths of thousands – or hundreds of thousands – of people.

In 1915, the Turkish government, under the leadership of the Young Turks, deported and massacred anywhere from hundreds of thousands to well-over 1.5 million Armenians. Topped only a few decades later by Hitler's Final Solution, the Armenian Genocide was a prime example of human ingenuity gone horribly wrong: a systematic attempt at the extermination of an entire race.

Well, the Turkish government wouldn't go that far.

To date, 22 countries, in the face of overwhelming evidence, have officially recognized the atrocity as genocide – as if an event needs international recognition to be found atrocious. To date, the United States has made no such recognition, despite our self-congratulatory claim to being purveyors of freedom and justice the world over.

Just this past week, Speaker of the House Nancy Pelosi introduced legislation to officially recognize the "Great Calamity" as the genocide it most obviously was. While one could argue that such measures should not be on the top of the to-do list of a war-time Congress, in an age when our representatives focus attention on steroid use in Major League Baseball, there are worse things the do-nothing Democratic Congress could concern themselves with.

The Turkish government, which legally prohibits its own citizens from referring to the incident as genocide, reacted angrily to the proposition, however symbolic in nature or non-binding it might be. Likewise, critics argue that now is not the time to wag the proverbial finger at Turkey, as the possibility of Turkish military action against Kurdish separatists in Iraq has worried U.S. officials. Pelosi, however, stands her ground.

"When I came to Congress 20 years ago, it wasn't the right time because of the Soviet Union," she told CNN. "Then that fell, and then it wasn't the right time because of the Gulf War One. And then it wasn't the right time because of overflights of Iraq. And now it's not the right time because of Gulf War Two."

So while critics argue that a hostile situation in the Middle East makes such condemning measures dangerous, one must raise the obvious question: When is the situation in the Middle East not hostile?

It seems even direr with the recent passing of the Kyl-Lieberman amendment, which raises the looming possibility of military action in Iran. Invariably, even if the situation in Iraq quells in the next few years, which is in itself unlikely, critics will cite the possibility of conflict with Iran as another reason that "now's not the time" to make Turkey face the music.

Genocide is not an easy thing to have on one's conscience. Nobody wants to feel responsible for nearly wiping out an entire race, but the refusal to recognize the atrocities of the past as such have been an all-too-common trend across the globe.

Failure on the part of the United Nations to classify the conflict between Hutus and Tutsis in Rwanda as genocide caused an unnecessarily long period of inaction from the international community, and is now considered a dark stain in the U.N.'s history. Much of the mistreatment of Native Americans in our own country's history stems from the failure of most American institutions to recognize the extent of damage suffered by indigenous peoples.

Demagogues and unscrupulous governments will continue to get away with atrocity until the global community begins outright condemnation of acts of genocide.

Demagogues and unscrupulous governments will continue to get away with atrocity until the global community begins outright condemnation of acts of genocide. A non-binding resolution that asks President Bush, quite peevishly, to withdraw troops from Iraq can be, and has been, largely ignored. But calling a spade a spade – or rather, an act of genocide an act of genocide – sends a message to the global community that it will no longer be tolerated.

A nation such as the United States that purports itself to be a moral presence across the globe cannot afford to ignore the call of morality when it comes at an inconvenient time. The Chinese government has committed numerous human rights violations, with little resistance from the U.S. government, assumedly because of the economic ties that bind. Similarly, little has been accomplished to getting the Chinese government to divest resources from Darfur, what will most likely be considered historically another modern genocide.

Too often we do too little because obtaining moral high ground requires us to step on a few toes. But recognizing an act of genocide as the atrocity it is sends a message to governments that think the outside world is much too busy to take notice of their crimes.

The message?

Don't do it.

S.P. Sullivan is a Collegian editor. He can be reached at editorial@dailycollegian.com

An exercise in futility

C.A. Chase

Sitting next to angry hippies and feminists, glancing at the cops leaning against the wall, watching last week's lecture about the harms of the E.R.A. and feminism, I tried to pigeonhole the last lion of familial conservatism, Mrs. Phyllis Schlafly. I had uneasily settled on an unholy mixture of Betty Crocker and Margaret Thatcher, but when she referenced the "sexual harassment Gestapo," with a smile stiffer than month-old cupcake frosting, I had a realization. Somehow, she is the sum of everything that makes me uncomfortable about human existence. She is the embodiment of everything repressive and authoritarian about your parents.

Phyllis Schlafly is a conservative author and activist opposed to feminism and the E.R.A. who mainly appeals to religious conservatives threatened by a growing "secular progressive" movement.

Schlafly asserted that American women are the most privileged population in the world, after which many feminists in matching T-shirts walked out, leaving our Phyllis to bravely march on, saying: "What the feminists say is that mothers are oppressed because the government won't take care of their babies." She summoned Jocqueville from the grave, ("I have nowhere seen women in a loftier position [than in America]"). I thought that Machiavelli would have been more fitting, but I was too distracted by her frosted beehive-cum perm to effectively judge.

You can't give Schlafly the shaft so easily, as she is the not-so-logical conclusion to parental suffocation. Instead of "eat your vegetables," it's "fulfillment lies with the family." Instead of "you watch your tone when you're talking to me," it's "you watch your biological clock, young lady." Does fulfillment lie in lecturing people about what they're doing wrong, by trying to force us all into the roles of our parents, by encouraging us to force our miserable children to clear their plates?

Was the lecture productive in any sense of the word? Did it get anyone anywhere?

The lecture and the subsequent Q&A with the 1992 Illinois Mother of the Year smacked of a tense family dinner with uncomfortable, strained conversation avoiding politics. Clenched teeth ..."pass the salt" ... "pass the pepper," ... "the E.R.A. sucks," "no it doesn't" ... "no language like that at the dinner table, please." Schlafly is stuck on the E.R.A., something relevant 30 years ago. When she railed against Betty Friedan, I half-expected someone to mention the bicentennial or shag rugs, or one of the protestors to run by in a Tricky Dick Nixon mask. She attacked a moral turpitude that is now firmly entrenched in our culture. She isn't reactionary against a new propriety, she is reactionary against an entire new world. And that is the heart of the matter.

And the questions. Oh my God, the questions. From both sides, they were not applicable, and brought out the nihilist in me. Add to this a swirling vortex of home-maker desires and male women's studies grad students, and I felt that "Helter Skelter" should have been playing in the background. A 30-year-old that looked 15 stood up and gushed to Schlafly about how she had "conquered her lusts and desires," and was now happily married and homeschooling her three children. A boy slyly queried Schlafly if she would go running to the "sexual harassment Gestapo" if she worked for him and he called her "sweet cheeks." Sweet cheeks.

Just listening to what she had to say about how I should live my life, coupled with the audience's inane questions that had nothing to do with Schlafly's speech made me lose all faith in humanity. There is no way I can give structure to the crumbling chaos that "Sweet Cheeks" wrought, no way to give justice to her grim, reactionary thin lipped smile, her air of "mother knows best."

It was a meaningless political existential vacuum, consisting of this weird lady spewing clichés about irrelevant, outdated politics, with the right and left factions on campus poised to attack over canned controversy existing only because of her presence. Was the lecture productive in any sense of the word? Did it get anyone anywhere? No minds were changed.

The Republican Club already salivates over her every word, and the women studies bloc has an equally Pavlovian response. Nothing is changed by her speech. Any politically minded people on campus are just reactionary because it's the thing to do when you're in college, to "fight the man" and be liberal, or to wear a tie and be conservative. And to what purpose is all this? What was the point of Schlafly's speech?

It is a horrible stale stasis, and it's irrelevant who holds the moral hegemony, the feminists or the anti-feminists, because no one really cares beyond spouting granola or faux-patriotic drivel. The lecture's tag, "the great debate about feminism" was a static lie, because there was no debate. There is no intellectual closure, no political catharsis, no rational discourse, and in the end it means nothing.

C.A. Chase is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at cchase@student.umass.edu

To all the hopeful candidates

Brad Leibowitz

Dear Rookies and Thieves,

Hey ladies and gents, how is the fall breeze treating you up on Capitol Hill? It's about the time in President Bush's second reign of stupidity where you lawmakers are raising vast amounts of money to determine your chances of getting elected. This being the fact, here's an open letter to all you hopeful young whippersnappers who are aiming for the executive office late next year.

To Sen. Ron Paul, (R) Texas

Congratulations, you're the Al Sharpton of the G.O.P. You speak the truth and tell it as it is. You're a good honest man who wants to make good honest changes in Washington. Sorry, you have no chance.

To Sen. Dennis Kucinich, (D) Ohio

Have you ever seen yourself, sir? You look like a 12-year-old boy who lives with the Keebler Elves, crafting their cookies. My advice for you grow a good foot taller, lower your voice and change in your name. You cannot win an election if when I look at you all I think is, "Which Boy Scout knots can you tie," and "When's the last time you Instant Messaged Mark Foley?"

To Rudy Giuliani, (R) New York

Hey Rudy, how have you been lately? Still taking in one too many Yankee games, trying to figure out how Derek Jeter looks ohh so good in those pants? Don't worry though I like you. I'm from your city. You did a fantastic job with the post-9/11 efforts within NYC and we all tip our hats to you for that. For those grand-ing moments you provided in those harrowing days, you will have a soft spot in the hearts of New Yorkers forever.

However, for this exact reason you should not run for the Oval Office. You would receive votes based on what you did for all of us New Yorkers in those dark days back in 2001, and not your current policies. Adding to this, when 9/11 happened, you were cited as saying, "Thank God George Bush is our president right now." That immediately rules you out. So thank you, sir, for all you have done, again, we tip our caps to you.

Speaking of caps, I like what you have done with your hair lately. You and Bruce Willis are pulling the chic-bald-look off wonderfully.

To Former Sen. John Edwards, (D) North Carolina

Looks-wise, you're a breath of fresh air – smooth talker with natural charm and a smile that could upstage, say, Billy Bob Thornton. Back in '04 you were being compared to John F. Kennedy for all of your potential. To be honest, I can't say I know much about your policies or stances, but I will promise this:

If you run with Al "Movie Star" Gore as your wingman, you will be the black-horse odd-couple, and if you make your main issue "Convincing the nation that global warming should be renamed 'Oh crap, we are all going to die,'" well then, you, sir, have my vote.

To Senator John McCain, (R) Arizona

Glad to see you're still alive. If you won the race, to date you would be the oldest sitting president to enter the White House. I know you had your problems overseas in those torture camps, but seriously, why now, John? It's not like you're getting any younger.

On a policy note, you seem like a good man. Being a military man, I am sure you wouldn't rush into another war. Another great quality you regularly disagree with the sitting president on mostly everything. I say make a strong run. Who knows, we might have the first president ever to be supported by Viagra.

It's about the time in President Bush's second reign of stupidity where you lawmakers are raising vast amounts of money to determine your chances of getting elected.

To Senator Barack Obama, (D) Illinois

Another breath of fresh air. Not a lot of experience, which is good. This means you have not been corrupted by the system yet. I smell a change in the air. On a more personal note, it's about time people in this country wise up and elect either a person of African decent or a woman.

We are the only nation in the world who is still blunt enough to think that a woman or anyone of African decent has no place as a leader of a nation. So, Mr. Obama, I have read into your policies and political stances, you're highly intelligent, extremely savvy and a gifted, noble leader. I hope you win, you have my vote.

Former Governor Mitt Romney, (R) Massachusetts

On a political scale, you're the smoothest of all the candidates. Movie-star hair, great talker, natural charm, yet you can't bring yourself to have a backbone on any issue. On a personal note, Gotham: three wives. Fred Thompson: three wives. McCain: two wives. You seem to be the only monogamous candidate and you're a Mormon. I thought polygamy were pimps with a religious doctrine. What gives?

Senator Hillary Clinton, (D) New York

All I have to say here is, please oh please, let Ol' Bill loose on some of those interns. If anything, it would provide comic relief for the nation and keep us distracted from how badly, as a people, we are getting screwed.

Respectfully and Sincerely,
Brad Leibowitz

Brad Leibowitz writes on Thursdays. He can be reached at bleibow@student.umass.edu

OCT 18 2007

Homecoming brings Cash

Daughter of legendary musician to play at Fine Arts Center

BY ANDREW SHERIDAN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

This Saturday, country music star Rosanne Cash will be bringing her latest act entitled "Black Cadillac: The Concert" to the Fine Arts Center at the University of Massachusetts. It is the premiere event scheduled for this week's Homecoming festivities, and the only one to feature a nationally known artist.

As the daughter of country music legend Johnny Cash and stepdaughter of June Carter, Rosanne Cash's musical pedigree is as good as it gets. Her original passion, however, was acting, and she studied "The Method" at Lee Strasberg's institute in the early 1970s. That life course did not pan out, and she returned to the career that she was bred to follow: music.

The "Black Cadillac" tour is in promotion with her latest album of the same name. Her tour is arriving at the University straight from The New Yorker Festival in New York City.

The album, which she describes as "a personal history, family tree and an archaeological dig into my life," follows Cash as she deals with the passing of her father, mother and stepmother, all within 15 months of each other. The work on the album earned her a Grammy nomination for Best Contemporary Folk Album.

Although most college students know little of country music aside from Rascal Flatts and Garth Brooks, these artists are not true country, but rock fusion.

Cash's music is in a similar vein, blending different styles of music with what some would call country to create a distinct sound of her own. She does not even classify herself as a country artist, saying in an interview, "I don't know anything about today's country music."

Much of her early work possessed a definite '80s rock edge, complete with synthesizers and pop undercurrents. Typical of the decade but atypical of her genre, Cash's image was that of a hairspray-laced material-girl.

Although the music was quite shallow, some of her songs, like her first No. 1 hit "Seven Year Ache," show her country roots strongly.

As she has progressed as an artist, she has borrowed from folk, pop, rock 'n' roll, soft rock, and more recently, blues.

Her recent work, as seen in the albums "Interiors" and "Black Cadillac," is introspective and downbeat, much like her father's. The music, while not exactly catchy, is certainly soulful, and the imagery she uses paints a picture of deep personal tragedy.

Her storytelling skill is formidable, deftly capturing the essence of her sorrow in tracks such as "House on the Lake."

Her debut album, entitled "Right or Wrong," was released in 1979 and score three top-25 country hits. She has recorded 14 albums over a 25-year career and scored 11 number-one country singles. She has also appeared as a guest performer on numerous albums with the likes of Lyle Lovett, Vince Gill and her father Johnny Cash.

Cash has been nominated for multiple Grammys, winning the coveted award in 1985 for her single "I Don't Know Why You Don't Want Me" and again in 1986 for Best Female Vocalist-Country.

Cash had a brief marriage to country music singer Rodney Crowell, which ended in 1992. She is currently married to her producer John Leventhal, and lives with her three daughters in New York City. She has published two books – a collection of short stories entitled "Bodies of Water" and a children's book entitled "Penelope Jane" – and is currently working on her memoirs, due to be published in 2008.

The show starts at 8 p.m. with a pre-performance tour of the exhibition currently on display. Tickets cost $15 for five-college students and range from $15 to $35 for non-students. They can be purchased at the Fine Art Center box office.

Andrew Sheridan can be reached at asherid@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY OF ROSANNECASH.COM

Roseanne Cash, daughter of Johnny Cash, will be performing at the Fine Arts Center as part of Homecoming weekend festivities.

ROSEANNE CASH
OCTOBER 20
FINE ARTS CENTER
8 P.M.
$15-$35

Too much exercise not a good thing

Nicole Ferguson

You're on your 10th mile. Your entire body is telling you to stop, but you can't. Why? With the pressure to become thin in America it's no wonder many young females are spending too much time working out. With role models such as actresses, singers and models, all a size zero, how are females supposed to know what's "normal" anymore? To become the frail figure of their role models, young girls often fall into the trap of compulsive exercise.

Compulsive exercise can best be described as an addict's frame of mind. They no longer choose to work out; instead, they feel compelled to do so. This guilt ridden attitude can make a compulsive exerciser work out even through injury and illness. It can make them give up time with friends or other social outings. Compulsive exercisers can begin to plan their life around the best time to exercise.

The media portrays celebrities as fitness gurus. Many magazines feature "how-to" techniques to achieve the perfect body. But is this actually attainable? Do the methods magazines publish about how celebrities lose weight actually work?

When the girl doing crunches on the floor doesn't see results in 10 minutes like her favorite actress said she would, where does she turn next? For her, exercising may not be enough. Exercising may just be the beginning for those who become obsessed with attaining perfection.

She may turn to other techniques to lose weight. Eating disorders are often associated with compulsive exercise. As exercising increases, eating may be restricted drastically. This can result in anorexia. It can even result in bulimia when purging calories by exercise isn't enough.

Guidelines by the American College of Sports Medicine (ACSM) and American Heart Association (AHA) call for at least 30 minutes of moderate intensity activity five days per week or vigorous intensity at least 20 minutes three days a week. However, a compulsive exerciser may exercise so much that it causes physical harm.

Tendons, ligaments, bone, cartilage and joints can be damaged when minor injuries don't have enough time to heal. Too much exercise can cause damage to muscle mass. This occurs when the body does not get proper nutrition, causing it to break down muscle for energy.

Injury may not be reason enough to stop working out, though. A major side-effect of too much exercise is an imbalance of hormones. Many girls change or even lose their menstrual cycle altogether when they exercise too much. This can increase the risk for bone loss. Excessive exercise can place a lot of stress on the heart. The stress is even greater when combined with an eating disorder. The combination can be deadly.

At this point in the time, the girl doing crunches doesn't care about how deadly the combination of an eating disorder and exercise can be. All she's worried about is how much weight she can lose and how fast she can do it. So she'll skip meals, stop hanging out with friends, and stop doing all her other responsibilities just to work out.

What if she does miss one workout, though? You may notice that she works out for twice as long the next day, just to make up. You may not even see her sit still. It's because she's afraid that she's not burning enough calories while sitting down. Her self-esteem may be based on the number of workouts completed, and the effort put into those workouts. You may find that the compulsive exerciser is never satisfied with the physical achievements she's made.

Don't wait until the point of no return. Getting help right away is vital. Professional help may be necessary for someone suffering from compulsive exercising. This can include therapy and in

See NUTRITION on page 7

Colbert/Colbert ticket announced for '08

Pundit, comedian offically declares presidential bid

BY RYAN MCASKILL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

For the last couple years it was not uncommon to see a Colbert/Stewart '08 bumper sticker on the side of a mini-fridge. The sticker would usually get a good laugh and raise fun political conversation. As it turns out, those bumper stickers may not be so far off.

On Tuesday night, the political landscape was shaken up. It all began on The Daily Show with Jon Stewart. Stewart opened the show by saying they had a major political announcement involving presidential candidates. Following a quick piece about the current presidential candidates, he brought out Stephen Colbert to make the major announcement.

Colbert made his entrance on a carriage pulled by Uncle Sam on a bicycle and immediately pulled a bail of hay and a beer out to show that he was an "average Joe."

Stewart opened by reading a cue card prepared by Colbert which ended, "The people cry out for a hero. Are you planning a run for president of the United States?"

Colbert responded, "Tonight, I, Stephen Colbert, am officially announcing that I have decided to officially consider whether or not I will announce that I am running for the president of the United States. I will be making an announcement of that decision very soon, preferably on a more prestigious show."

That announcement left Colbert Nation wanting more, and he would not make them wait long.

Following The Daily Show, Colbert started his show, The Colbert Report, by making yet another announcement. "After nearly 15 minutes of soul searching, I have heard the call," he said. "Nation, I will seek the office of the President of the United States. I am doing it!"

With red, white and blue balloons falling from the sky, Colbert stood and soaked in the applause.

He went on to add that his candidacy would be in "one state and one state alone" – South Carolina.

"I am from South Carolina, I am for South Carolina and I defy any other candidate to pander more to the people of South Carolina – those beautiful, beautiful people."

As "South Carolina's favorite son," Colbert will be running as both a Republican and a Democrat and announced three possibilities for running-mate: Colbert-Huckabee, Colbert-Putin or Colbert-Colbert, noting that Colbert-Colbert was "a strong ticket."

He then brought out CBS political analysis Jeff Greenfield to help him with his campaign strategy. Greenfield pointed out, "This is one for the books."

The news of Colbert entering the presidential race has been gaining steam for over a week. While members of "Colbert Nation" have been pandering for the political pundit to throw his hat in the ring, nothing – other then bumper stickers and tee-shirts – had appeared.

With the release of his new book "I Am America (And So Can You!)," Colbert hit the promotional circuit and the prudential flames were fanned. Publishing a book to test the political waters before announcing is a long-running tradition among politicians. Democratic presidential candidates Barak Obama and John Edwards did the same before

See COLBERT on page 7

With a hit cable television show and a popular new book, Stephen Colbert is becoming one of the hottest commodities in the country.

Colbert brings mock-Bill O'Reilly persona to the page

BY CARY DARLING
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

Stephen Colbert has to hate himself right now. After all, he has just written a book that evil totem of intellectuals who read in their ivory-tower lairs overlooking the Hudson or the Hollywood Hills while plotting ways to warp the souls of people in flyover country. The only thing more surprising would have been if he had written a book about bears, America's godless killing machines.

Colbert acknowledges as much in the opening paragraph of "I Am America (And So Can You!)", a new book in which he brings his mock-Bill O'Reilly Comedy Central personality to the printed page. "I am no fan of books," he declares. "I want you to know that this is the first book I've ever written, and I hope it's the first book you've ever read. Don't make a habit of it."

Of course, Colbert's claim that he wrote this book is as much part of the enjoyable sham as is the righteously red-state, right-wing shtick that's made his TV show, "The Colbert Report," such water-cooler fodder since it debuted in 2005. The first page acknowledges a list of 14 writers and/or editors, only one of whom is Colbert.

So, anyone looking for the real deal about Stephen Colbert the man needs to go elsewhere, though he does bring a few things from his "real life," such as his Catholicism, into his fake one. But if you're looking for more "truthiness" about Stephen Colbert the fake Fox TV windbag, this book's for you.

Divided into the three phases of his life "My American Childhood," "My American Adolescence" and "My American Maturity," "I Am America" riffs on all his favorite topics, some of which he's for (The Family, Religion, Class War) and others he's against (Hollywood, The Media, Sex & Dating).

For fans of those who know the TV show, much of the book and some of the jokes feels familiar. It's often even written to echo Colbert's vocal cadence, complete with "moving ons" and "pick a sides." But there's more than enough here to keep the faithful quoting him through the holidays, like his jab at CBS and "60 Minutes". "The Tiffany network is responsible for the perennial Sunday Night Post-Game buzzkill, '60 Minutes.' Morley Safer and his team of aged jackals present what I believe is the worst kind of investigative journalism the kind with investigations. On the other hand, I like the innovations that Katie Couric has brought to 'The CBS Evening News,' especially the innovation of having viewers turn elsewhere for news."

The book is interactive. It comes complete with a sex quiz and a page of stickers in a chapter on the elderly ("to remind you when you agreed with me most"), and it sends readers to www.colbertnation.com to click on a "religionizer" button (though, as of last week, that feature wasn't yet up on the Web site).

Even with such extras, "I Am America" can't equal the televised Colbert, because much of his appeal rests on his man-

See BOOK on page 7

Colbert seeks to rule nation

COURTESY OF COLBERTNATION.COM

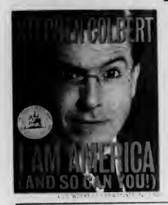
On Tuesday night, Stephen Colbert announced that he is running for President of the United States, but only in South Carolina, on his show "The Colbert Report."

COLBERT from page 6

announcing this year.

During numerous interviews, including Larry King Live, Colbert was asked if he was considering a run for president, to which he always replied that he wasn't ready to announce.

Last Sunday, as a guest columnist for New York Times columnist Maureen Dowd, Colbert wrote, "While my hat is not presently in the ring, I should also point out that it is not on my head. So where's that hat?



"Nevertheless, I am not ready to announce yet – even though it's clear that the voters are desperate for a white, male, middle-aged, Jesus-trumpeting alternative. What do I offer? Hope for the common man. Because I am not the Anointed or the Inevitable. I am just an Average Joe like you – if you have a TV show," he wrote.

It remains to be seen what the reaction to Colbert entering the race will be. His presence on the South Carolina ballot will cause some changes. Any debate in South Carolina will be compelled to have him, and Comedy Central may need to block his show in the state due to the equal-time rule.

Looks like the South Carolina primary in January just got a lot more interesting.

Ryan McAskill can be reached at rmcaskil@student.umass.edu

Political pundit writes his first book

BOOK from page 6

nerisms and intonations. Those who read the book but haven't watched the show won't have Colbert's voice running through their heads, so "I Am America" may sometimes fall flat.

Still, the Colbert conceit is more than just a clever persona delivering broadsides at political and pop culture. While it's most obviously a send-up of O'Reilly and crew, Colbert calls Sean Penn, Barbra Streisand, Tim Robbins and Kirsten Dunst "the four horsemen of the Apocalypse-Left." It's also a broader slam on ego-stoked media commentators and celebrity in general.

For all the work he seems to put into keeping a distance between Colbert the man and Colbert the satirist, his true feelings sneak out in the final pages. As an appendix, he includes his much talked-about 2006 White House Correspondents' Dinner speech in which, as his TV persona, he skewered President Bush with parody posing as praise.

"I stand by this man because he stands for things," Colbert said. "Not only for things, he stands on things. Things like aircraft carriers and rubble and recently flooded city squares."

The speech reportedly didn't play well with some in the audience. But as a peek behind his "Faux Reilly" mask, it was a smart way to end "I Am America."

Exercise and eating disorders prove fatal extreme cases – hospitalization. Treatment is never a quick fix though. It may take months or years to get back to good physical and mental health.

NUTRITION from page 6

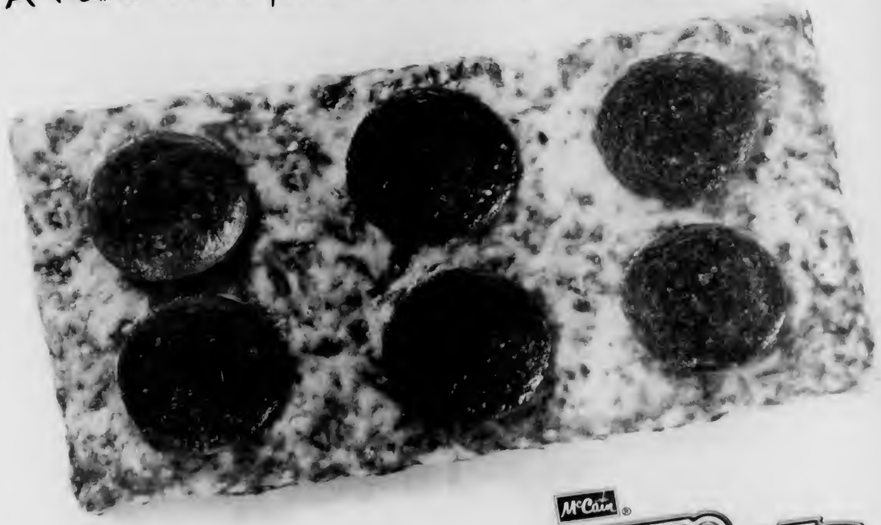
Improvement of self-esteem and body image are two of the most important issues in therapy. Healthy eating habits are also important, and thus a dietitian may be essential to help compulsive exercisers understand healthy eating habits.



What society has deemed as "normal" is anything but. Being too thin should never be what's "in." Compulsive exercisers will push to the point of perfection, and most of the time way beyond that point. Sadly, they may only see perfection as their favorite size-zero celebrity. Over-exercising is not in the vocabulary, but maybe getting help should be.

Nicole Ferguson can be reached at nferguso@student.umass.edu

Compulsive exercise and eating disorders are a deadly combination for women who strive to be thin.

Made by hand.
A hand that pushes buttons & pulls levers.

McCain
Ellio's
GET IT.
©2007 McCain Foods USA, INC.

OCT 18 2007

Late-season HEA games critical for UMass

HOCKEY from page 1

Not until Nov. 9, when the Minutemen travel to Boston to take on the Terriers, will they see any of those teams. Five games against talented, yet beatable, opponents stand between that matchup with BU, including four Hockey East games. UMass won four of its first five conference games last season before dropping a 3-0 decision to Vermont on Nov. 21.

"[Friday's game with UML] is a critical game because it is a Hockey East game. We have 27 of them and they're all so valuable," Cahoon said. "It's our home opener and a chance for us to showcase what we have. The fact that it's a league game makes it critical and they're very, very important. The points that we're able to get this time of year count as much as the points you're getting in February. People might not look at them the same, but they're all worth the same two points."

Six of UMass's final 10 conference games are against BU, BC or Maine; so winning games against inferior opponents early will allow the Minutemen a cushion if they struggle down the stretch. The most challenging portion of their schedule is certainly a weekend series in Orono, Maine, with the Black Bears and a home-and-home pair with BU on consecutive weekends. The Minutemen close their season with Merrimack, which won a conference-low three HEA games last year – two of which came against UMass.

"I don't think we were prepared or mentally focused," Quirk said of UMass's two losses at Merrimack. "We were thinking 'it's Merrimack, they're not that good.' They don't have the names that some other teams have in the league, but they're still a good team. They're Division I players and everyone in Division I is pretty good. We took them a little lightly."

Playing two home games against Merrimack rather than a pair on Hockey East's smallest ice surface will benefit the Minutemen. But having players who learn from previous mistakes, like Quirk has from last season's struggles with the Warriors, certainly alleviates the holes left by the departure of captain Matt Anderson and assistant captain Mark Matheson.

Senior defenseman Mike Kostka dons the "C" for UMass this season, along with his job anchoring an experienced UMass defense. Senior P.J. Fenton served as an assistant last season and will again in 2007-08; Quirk and senior defenseman David Leaderer are the other assistant captains.

"In terms of what last year's team had that this year's team hasn't developed yet, and I say that underscoring developed because it's our job to find it, is the presence of a Mark Matheson, being able to advance the puck on power plays," Cahoon said. "He was able to gain zone and organize our power play unit. That's probably as significant a piece that we're looking for right now."

CAMPUS MASS MEDIA BUREAUS

Junior forward Corey Quirk and the Minutemen head into the 2007-08 season looking to replace the offensive production of last year's seniors.

The power play wasn't remarkable for the Minutemen, converting 16.1 percent of the time, but it was still a source of chances for a team who struggled to create many. Matheson quarterbacked the power play very well; Kostka and sophomore Justin Braun demonstrated offensive playmaking skills last season and figure as the primary options for Cahoon this season. Each player saw time with the unit in the opening weekend, Quirk, Fenton and junior Alex Berry made up the rest of UMass's top power-play unit to start the season.

The departure of Jon Quick stands as the most difficult hole to fill for Cahoon. But the performance of the two men vying for the job last weekend encouraged the eighth-year head coach. Freshman Paul Dainton made 31 saves in the loss to Clarkson and sophomore Dan Meyers made 22 saves in a win over Saint Lawrence. Dainton is a self-described butterfly style net minder; relying on athleticism more than positioning. However, as he sees more time over the season, his positioning will only improve.

"Nothing [about Dainton's performance] really surprised me," Kostka said. "He's a good all-around goalie. He plays the puck really well; it's one of those good positive attributes. He did a lot Friday night and I thought he had a great game.

"[Dainton's aggressiveness] really helps the defense out a lot. We don't have to get back to the puck as quickly; we can just go to the walls and he can pass it up to us. So it does make our job a lot easier when you have a goalie who plays the puck as well as he does."

Meyers is the bigger of the two net minders and the more experienced. In his first season in Amherst, he played in five games – starting three – and posted a 2.97 goals-against average with a 2-1 record. Late in the season, he won a game at Northeastern to setup the crucial matchup against Maine, which decided the No. 4 seed in the Hockey East Tournament. Meyers feels that the experience he gained under Quick last season will benefit him in the coming year.

"[Hockey East] is an unbelievable league, it's arguably the best conference in the country," Meyers said. "I grew up watching it and I think it's the best. It's been my dream to play in Hockey East and the league is wide open. I think we're capable of winning it and getting to the top. All of the teams are quality teams and every game against a Hockey East team is going to be a battle. I think we'll handle it fine."

Dainton isn't the only UMass freshman expected to produce as a rookie. Forward James Marcou drew praise from his teammates for his performance in early season workouts and the season's first weekend. Playing on a line sophomore Brett Watson and Berry, he assisted on UMass's first goal in its 3-1 win over Saint Lawrence. His play drew comparisons to Chris Capraro, who led UMass with 35 points last season. The skills of other freshman brought back memories of key players from last season's run.

"Marcou is a playmaker and a real clever kid and Capraro was a clever kid," Cahoon said. "The only difference is that Capraro was a senior and Marcou is a freshman. So there's some growth that needs to take place, but I think the skill sets are there. Matty Anderson was a good two-way center iceman and [freshman] Mike Lecomte is a good two-way center iceman. So we've complimented what our needs were."

Joe Meloni can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu.

UMass coach Don Cahoon guided the Minutemen to their first NCAA Tournament appearance last season in his seventh year.

Goalies provide different styles for UM

CREASE from page 12

for them to keep the pucks out of the net because they rarely drop to their knees.

"If I wasn't happy with one thing [from the win over No. 12 Saint Lawrence] it was my rebound control," Meyers said. "I can remember two times off the top of my head where the puck just kind of popped out in front of me. Thankfully, my defense did a great job clearing it. It was the only thing I was really disappointed with."

In the win over SLU, Meyers made 22 saves on 23 shots as the Minutemen won 3-1. Goaltenders like Meyers rely heavily on scouting. The goal SLU put by him came on a play he knew they ran, but failed to recognize.

"It's enormous," Meyers said of scouting opposition. "All teams are different; some like to cycle the puck low a lot. Some like to use their defenseman a lot on the offensive side. If I know about it, it helps us tremendous. We've got such a great coaching staff, it always brings us video and shows us different things."

The in-depth scouting performed by the UMass coaching staff is even more important for the freshman. Dainton's butterfly style leaves him susceptible to shots toward the upper corners of the net. Senior defenseman Mike Kostka lauded Dainton for his aggressiveness, but oftentimes, goaltenders of this suffer because of their aggressive play. More skilled forwards will let them make the first move, knowing they can shoot high if the goaltender goes down.

"As a goalie, you've gotten to know the players on the other team and who to look for," Dainton said. "Any player in any situation can be just as good as another one, but it's the skill guys that you notice when you're out there and that you look for. And when they're on the ice, you're more aware."

"[Dainton]'s a very athletic kid. One of his key strengths is his ability to handle the puck," Cahoon said. "Like anything else, you can overdo it and it will be his challenge to make sure that he stays within himself and takes advantage of his skill set so that he's choosing when to do it appropriately."

Cahoon hopes that both Dainton and Meyers perform well enough all year to justify a season-long rotation. Neither has seen action against UMass-Lowell, but Dainton did play the third period against UConn last season after the Minutemen built a 4-1 lead entering the final period. They went on to win the game 8-1.

Joe Meloni can be reached at jmeloni@student.umass.edu.

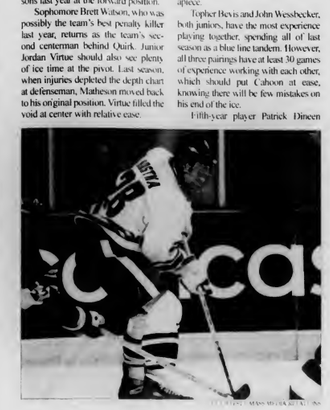
Butterfly
Chinese & Japanese Restaurant
WWW.BUTTERFLYHADLEY.COM
GRAND OPENING!
蝴 蝶
Presented by the former owner of Panda Garden in Northampton
Vegetarian Menu Available
Enjoy drinks at the full bar!
Free Delivery Hadley (Min. $15.00) Out of Town (Min. $20.00)
(413) 585-8989
Mon. – Thurs.: 11:30am – 10:00pm | Fri. & Sat.: 11:30am – 11:00pm
Sunday: 12:00noon – 10:00pm
48 Russell St (Rt. 9) Hadley, MA 01035

SKYPLEX
18 Plus College Night
Thursdays
The #1 Place to Party!
3 Different Rooms/3 DJ's spinning the best in Top 40, Dance, House and Select Mashup
THE ULTIMATE HOT BODY CONTEST
$100 Best Male $100 Best Female
SKYPLEX is NOW HIRING:
SkyPlex 10 Stearns Sq. Downtown Springfield 413.827.9000 www.SkyPlex.us

UNIVERSITY LIQUORS
Monday - Saturday 11am - 11pm
Open Sunday 3pm - 9pm
Under New Management
Free V2 Vodka Tasting at 2:30 Following the Football Game
Beefeater Gin 1.75 Lt $27.99
Busch 30 pk $14.99 + Dep.
Myer's Platinum Rum 1.75 Lt $19.99
Sam Adam's 24 pk $23.99 + Dep.
Grey Goose Vodka 1.75 Lt $45.99
BEER WINE LIQUORS LOTTERY CIGARETTES
LOW LOW PRICES
6 University Dr., Amherst, MA 549-5758
Easy free parking

UM returns blueliners, new forwards added to rotation

ROSTER from page 12



top center. As a scorer, he's quick, great with the puck and can make even the best goalie look foolish. He's also one of the best defensive players on the team, leading the Minutemen last season plus-15 rating.

"Cory's just a good player," Cahoon said. "He skates well, he handles the puck well. He's competitive. He'll get his big goals before the year is over, and if he's not, he's finding ways to chip in, whether it be killing penalties, or taking a key faceoff, or blocking a shot, or setting up someone else to finish a play.

"He's a player we're comfortable putting in any situation."

Behind the Fenton-Quirk-Davis line, sophomore Will Ortiz, juniors Berry and Scott Crowder and senior Matt Burto return after productive seasons last year at the forward position.

Sophomore Brett Watson, who was possibly the team's best penalty killer last year, returns as the team's second centerman behind Quirk. Junior Jordan Virtue should also see plenty of ice time at the pivot. Last season, when injuries depleted the depth chart at defenseman, Matheson moved back to his original position. Virtue filled the void at center with relative ease.

CAMPUS MASS MEDIA BUREAUS

Serving as captain of the Minutemen this season, senior Mike Kostka heads a defensive unit that returns all six starters from last season.

Lecomte, a freshman, will likely be the team's fourth center.

DEFENSEMAN

If there was one spot Cahoon should not have to worry about, it would be his defenseman. All six defensemen who saw the majority of play last year return for the Minutemen in 2007.

Team captain Mike Kostka, likely the team's most talented all-around player, leads the UMass bluefiners. The fact that all six defensemen are back means Cahoon can keep the same pairings that worked so well for him last year.

Kostka spent much of last year playing alongside highly-touted rookie Martin Nolet, whose season was cut short by injury.

David Leaderer and Hockey East All-Rookie team member Justin Braun were outstanding as defensive threats as well. They shared the team lead for goals by a defenseman with four apiece.

Topher Hevis and John Wessbecker, both juniors, have the most experience playing together, spending all of last season as a blue line tandem. However, all three pairings have at least 30 games of experience working with each other, which should put Cahoon at ease, knowing there will be few mistakes on his end of the ice.

Fifth-year player Patrick Dineen will likely play in a reserve role for the Minutemen, and Doug Kublin is the only freshman addition. Kublin suffered an injury in the preseason but is back practicing with the team.

"The experience those guys bring in, it showed itself in a big way last weekend [against Clarkson and St. Lawrence]," Cahoon said of his deep pool of defenseman. "We weren't great offensively either night, and yet we managed to stay in both games, just because we were solid defensively in the back end."

GOALTENDER

Talk about turnover. Possibly the best goaltender in the history of UMass hockey and the team's most valuable player last season, Jon Quick departed after the season to sign an entry-level contract with the Los Angeles Kings organization, playing briefly for their AHL affiliate in New Hampshire last spring.

That left a monstrous, gaping hole in front of the net where Quick used to slide around on his pads.

Cahoon has started the season with a goalie-by-committee approach he has used in the past – Quick and Gabe Winer split time during the 2005-06 season. Sophomore Dan Meyers, who played admirably in relief of Quick and in a couple spot starts last season, will compete with freshmen Paul Dainton and Matt Gedman.

Dainton started the season for the Minutemen, taking the loss in overtime against Clarkson. Dainton gave up two goals, including the game-winner in the extra frame, while making 31 saves.

Dainton is an athletic goaltender, who is not afraid to leave the crease and handle the puck.

Meyers earned the third win of his career against St. Lawrence, giving up one goal and stopping 22 shots, including 13 in the third period. He has a somewhat similar style in the crease to Quick, always finding a way to keep the puck on his side of the goal line.

Gedman has yet to see the ice, but Cahoon said he expects to get him playing time soon.

Cahoon said he's in no rush to determine a single starter for the entire season.

"I'd be fooling myself to say I think I know what's going to happen over the long haul," Cahoon said. "I like what I see from both guys right now, and I have no reason to think they both won't be able to contribute."

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu.

Squads feel graduation pinch

Vermont and Maine struggle to replace early flights and departed seniors in 2007-08

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

The Maine Black Bears have a completely new look this season. Maine had seven rookies in its lineup this past Friday night and eight on Saturday in an away series against Denver (2-0-0).

The Black Bears (0-2-0) are trying to find a groove, and the loss of five of their top-scorers from last season due to graduation is not helping anything either. Maine is without last year's freshman phenom Teddy Purcell, too. Purcell signed with the Sacramento Kings organization of the National Hockey League. The only returning top-scorers for the Black Bears are seniors Billy Ryan, Bret Tyler and Keenan Hopson.

Thus far in the season, the top scorers for the Black Bears are Tyler, Ryan and junior defenseman Matt Duffy. Tyler and Ryan are the only players on the roster who have scored at least 20 goals in their collegiate careers.

Vermont also started seven skaters new to collegiate competition, five of which are true freshman. Vermont lost its leading scorer last year in Torrey Mitchell. Mitchell signed with the San Jose Sharks organization of the NHL.

The Catamounts will now be led by junior forward Dean Strong, last year's second leading scorer on the team. Maine also returns senior net minder Joe Fallon, who last year led the conference with a goals-against-average of 1.86.

Return of the Masked Men

All except one of the teams in the Hockey East conference will have returning goalies. Joe Fallon leads a talented senior class of net minders. In his career as a Catamount, Fallon has notched over 2,000 saves. Last year, Fallon had a 1.86 goals-against-average that was good enough for second in the nation among all collegiate goalies and was a Catamount single season record.

Also returning is Kevin Regan of New Hampshire. Last year was Regan's first full-time season as a Wildcat. He established a school record .935 save percentage and also recorded three shutouts. His save percentage led the nation and his 2.06 goals-against-average was good enough for fifth in the nation.

Senior Tyler Sims will lead Providence in his final year. As a junior, Sims posted a 2.76 goals-against-average in 31 games and recorded his fourth career shutout.

The next longest-tenured starting goalie in Hockey East is junior Pat Watson of Merrimack. Watson earned his first career shutout last year. He also ranked 11th in the conference in both goals-against-average (3.17) and save percentage (.896).

Ben Bishop of Maine rounds out the junior class of goalies in the conference. As a sophomore, his 34 games played in a season ranks fourth most in Black Bear history. A 2.14 goals-against-average ranked fifth in the nation. Also, his .923 save percentage ranks third most in Maine single season history.

Brett Bennett of BU leads the sophomore class. As a freshman, Bennett started only one game for the Terriers. He had 17 saves in a 2-1 victory over Merrimack.

Northeastern's Brad Thiessen joined the Huskies last year as a freshman and immediately won the starting job. His .921 save percentage last year is a Northeastern single season record. He recorded four shutouts as well. Thiessen was named to the Hockey East All-Rookie Team.

UMass-Lowell's sophomore goalie Jon Dejkowicz-Burck is new to college hockey. He played in an exhibition game against New Brunswick this season, notching 15 saves while allowing two goals in 40 minutes of play. Sophomore Nevin Hamilton played the final 20 minutes of the game against New Brunswick, earning the victory.

BC is the only team in the conference that is starting a freshman goalie. John Muse earned US Hockey Report Goaltender of the Year last year as a senior at the Noble and Greenough School.

Purple Eagles left Black and Blue

The Merrimack Warriors (1-0-0) relied on the defensive prowess of junior goalie Pat Watson (28 saves) as Merrimack won its home opener against Niagara (1-1-0), 4-2. Watson had 12 stops in the first period alone. Sophomore forward Matt Jones got the scoring started for the Warriors when he took a Pat Kimball pass and one-timed it past the Purple Eagles' goalie Juliano Pagliero with five minutes remaining in the first period.

Junior forward Grant Ferrell added to the Warriors' lead when his wrist shot found the back of the net with 17:04 left in the second period. The goal was Ferrell's first as a Warrior after transferring from UMass-Lowell.

The Purple Eagles fought back when senior forward Matt Caruana capitalized on the Purple Eagles' power play and scored at 10:19 in the second period. The two teams would trade goals once more, including the first goal of Merrimack freshman forward Chris Barton's collegiate career.

Senior captain Derek Pallardy all but ended the game for the Purple Eagles with an empty net goal at 19:43 in the third period.

The star of the game was Watson, who with his shut-down performance earned Hockey East Player of the Week honors.

Eagles Fly High After Being Grounded

No. 4 Boston College (1-1-0) rebounded nicely from their loss in last year's national championship game against Michigan State by defeating the Rensselaer Engineers (1-2-0), 4-1, in the consolation game of the Icebreaker Invitational. Rensselaer freshman forward Ben Contini broke the scoreless tie at 12:05 in the first quarter when he scored on BC goalie Mupse (22 saves).

BC senior defenseman Mike Brennan pulled the Eagles even again with a score in the final minute of play of the first period. From that point on, it was all BC.

In the first period, the two teams traded goals. However in the second period, the two teams traded penalties. BC and Rensselaer combined for nine penalties in the second period alone. By the final buzzer, the combined penalty tally was 26 for 61 minutes. Penalties were the Engineers' downfall. The Eagles scored three more goals, all in the final period. All three goals were power play goals.

The end result was not befitting of the effort put forth by Engineer senior goalie Jordan Alford. Alford's defense did not support him the entire game. Although he allowed four goals, he also made 44 stops in the losing effort.

The win was the first win in goal of Muse's collegiate career.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu

STAND
UP, OUT AND FOR SUSTAINABILITY
GET INVOLVED AT THE HYBRID.STAND™ EVENT
CAPE COD LOUNGE
MONDAY • OCT. 29, 2007
5:30 PM – 7:30 PM
WIN $25,000
VIEW OFFICIAL ENTRY RULES AND ENTER ONLINE AT KEENFOOTWEAR.COM/STAND
KEEN is launching the Hybrid Stand campaign for those who are passionate, active and involved with making a difference around sustainability. We will reward the best ideas or projects that fit into one of the following categories:
STAND UP.
Artists, filmmakers, designers, sculptors, photographers and writers. Any person who is using their creative skills to create a message or work that addresses sustainability.
STAND OUT.
Hikers, kayakers, swimmers, climbers or any athlete who is passionate for outdoor adventures.
STAND FOR.
Environmental or sustainability activists who are looking for help in supporting their cause, research project or big idea.
KEEN HYBRIDLIFE

OCT 18 2007

Brown: we must stop the run

FOOTBALL from page 12

After shifting from linebacker to defensive end after his freshman season, redshirt sophomore Michael Hanson has been a pleasant surprise for the Minutemen this year.

Defensive end Michael Hanson had a career game against the Wildcats with 14 total tackles and one sack for a 10-yard loss. Hanson is now third on the team with 39 total tackles behind linebackers Charles Walker (57) and Jason Hatchell (51). He is also tied with Brandon Collier for second on the team with three sacks behind fellow defensive end David Burris, who has five.

"I felt good," Hanson said. "I was in a zone out there. It was one of those days where you just feel it."

Even against a team that protects the quarterback as well as the Huskies have done this season, Hanson says the approach won't change for the Minutemen.

"We approach every game the same way," Hanson said. "Week in, week out, practice never changes. It's always the same thing. We just go into the game with the same mindset. It's just another team in our way."

On the other side of the ball, the Husky defense has been stingy at times, holding No. 8 James Madison to three scores in a 21-14 loss at home two weeks ago.

"They're a physical defense," Coen said. "They've been playing really good defense. They're definitely making teams earn their points."

No. 14 Delaware put up 30 points last week in a 30-20 win over the Huskies, but that included scoring drives of 21, 13, 12, 11 and nine plays. The Blue Hens were 8-of-13 on third down, and that may be where UMass will have to be successful to put up the 30-plus points they have been accustomed to scoring this season. The Minutemen are 34-of-82 on third downs this season (41 percent).

Coen said Tuesday his knee is pretty much back to normal. He is still wearing a brace on it, but not nearly as large as the one he wore earlier in the season. Senior tight end Brad Listorti – who has yet to see action this season due to a lower back injury – is once again day-to-day.

Northeastern has never won at McGuirk Stadium, losing in all 11 of its visits. They have not scored a point against UMass since 2004, in a 26-22 loss on Nov. 6. The Huskies have been shut out in the last two meetings between the teams, losing 27-0 in 2005 and 7-0 last season.

Last year on Homecoming, UMass trounced Rhode Island, 41-16, on Oct. 21.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu.

Minutewomen lose key player for second consecutive season

STOLL from page 12

ence play and has been out this season. When she went down last year, the team struggled to regroup and just lost out on making the A-10 tournament. Stoll, who is close with Rodriguez, received some advice from her.

"She told me sitting on the bench and watching will actually make me a better player," Stoll said. "She [said] there has to be a good thing about this, it just hasn't happened yet and keep your head up."

Stoll is also keeping her arm up in a sling for the next three weeks and said the collarbone should heal in six to eight weeks. She said the rehab, which would start after the bone heals, consists of simple arm motions to get full range back into the shoulder area. It has been one week since she broke the collarbone and she is still in a lot of pain.

"It hurts a lot actually," Stoll said. "It hurts in the mornings more than anything just because I'm sleeping in one position the whole time, but it's getting better I guess."

UMass coach Jim Rudy remembers that his playing days at Rollins College was not an injury free environment either.

"I know that feeling, with broken ribs and broken bones," Rudy said. "[It was] a product of soccer and I know that feeling well."

When Stoll went down, Rudy replaced her with sophomore forward Christina Adams in the lineup. Adams did well in relieving Stoll, as she scored a goal and notched an assist. After the game Rudy said she would need to prepare her fitness level in order for her to play a 90-minute game. Rudy continues to not make excuses for his team, but also understand that the Minutewomen are losing a top scorer.

"That all remains to be seen," Rudy said when asked how the team would be impacted without Stoll. "You are who we put on the field, and we're obviously losing somebody at the collegiate level coming into her own."

Stoll was tied with top goal scorer senior forward Britt Canfield with six goals. Her .353 shooting percentage was tops on the team for players who had at least three shots.

Stoll is unsure when she will be fully recovered from the injury, but she hopes to start running and doing drills when students come back from winter break at UMass.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@student.umass.edu.

Work pays off for lineman

HANSON from page 12

It's a transition that many first-year players make under Brown in his complex defensive scheme. But it's also a move that Hanson has handled well and thrived on.

"Sometimes guys in our system struggle at linebacker from the learning curve," Brown said. "The minute you take some of those things off him it lets the guy be a football player and good things happen, so we've been fortunate there.

"He goes from being a solid linebacker to a fast, athletic defensive end."

The 6-foot-2, 240-pound redshirt sophomore may be a tad undersized at the defensive end spot, but he makes up for that with his quickness, burst off the line of scrimmage and never-take-a-play-off attitude.

"It started right after last season," Hanson said, referring to getting ready for a possible starting job entering training camp. "Right after the championship game, I knew I had to work hard and the job was for me to get. Hard work got it for me."

Hanson's relentlessness in the weight room in the offseason gave him the strength he needed to push the offensive line and get to the quarterback. And with his good acceleration, better understanding of game film and more repetitions, he's been more of a run stuffer than was expected of him.

"Michael has done real well, and game by game he does better and better," senior starting right defensive end David Burris said. "I think with my experience a lot of teams understand that I know what I'm doing out there, so they are more apt to maybe run to his side. And now with the way he's playing, it kind of makes our defense really versatile."

The Teaneck, N.J., native played sparingly last season, appearing in 13-of-15 games, all in a reserve role. His season highlight came in his first-career game, when he blocked a field goal in the third quarter of the season-opening victory over Colgate on Sept. 2. He finished the 2006 season with 11 tackles (one against Appalachian State in the national championship game), two tackles for a loss and one sack.

He either tied or topped all of those season totals just last Saturday against Villanova. Hanson was seemingly involved in every play against the Wildcats, recording 13 tackles (12 assisted), 2.5 tackles for loss and one sack. He tied or set career-highs in all three categories in the 32-24, four-overtime victory.

"In the starting role I get more reps out there, and it's easier for me to read plays," Hanson said. "I feel a lot more comfortable and last year coming in at the end of games I just worried about not messing up so much."

Considering he's only made six starts thus far in his collegiate career, Hanson probably should be making some rookie mistakes. Perhaps he is on occasion, but his athletic ability is helping counteract his relative inexperience, especially at the defensive end position.

"Michael is a growing player, very explosive and still learning the system," Brown said. "He's come up with some big plays when needed. From an athletic specimen standpoint and just from an explosive standpoint and being a competitive guy, I couldn't be any more happy with how he's competed on a day-to-day basis."

"I knew he was going to be a real good pass rusher because in the spring he was a force," Coen said. "Coming into camp all I heard was people questioning our defensive line, and who was going to fill a few positions up front. I think he's done a great job."

Coen's just glad it hasn't been against him.

Eli Rosenwaike can be reached at erosenwa@student.umass.edu

MICHAEL ZHELENYAKOVICH

Junior defensive back Sean Smalls takes one on the chin against Villanova last weekend. Smalls and the Minuteman defense take on Northeastern as a part of the UMass's Homecoming Weekend.

Ellio's wants you to Get It here!
-FRIDAY 10/19-
Women's Soccer vs. Fordham 3 p.m.
-SATURDAY 10/20-
UMASS Football vs. Northeastern 12 p.m.
Free Ellio's Thursday 10/18
@ The Harp 10:30 p.m.-12:30 a.m.
from Ellio's
ADVERTORIAL GET IT.

Live It Up...Go Bowling!
UMASS College Specials...
SPARE TIME
EVERY THURSDAY
Unlimited Bowling ~ Only $12
9pm-Close
50% OFF Open Bowling
Every Monday & Tuesday
9pm-Close
also featuring...Grandstands Bar
Live Bands ~ Every Sat night
Spare Time Northampton
(formerly Northampton Bowl)
525 Pleasant St 584-4830

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL - W. SPFLD
Special Student Rate
Local-National Placement
Includes Certification
1-800-357-3210
BostonBartender.com

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
POTTER'S
AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement

QUALITY · AFFORDABLE · BICYCLES
Come in now for end of season specials!
Many 13" 14" 15" models
Ready to Enjoy Your Fall?
we can help...
FEATURING KHS
· Road · Mountain · Comfort
· Urban · Cruisers · Kids
Sales - Service - Rentals
Trailside Bicycles
8 Bridge Street Hadley MA
413-582-0733 or 413-265-6055

comedy CONNECTION
HUKELAU
413•593•5222
785 Memorial Drive in Chicopee
www.hukelau.com
ORDER YOUR TICKETS TODAY!
THIS SATURDAY!
Host of NBC's "Last Comic Standing" and from the TV show "Fastlane"
BILL BELLAMY
NOV. 3RD
From "The Howard Stern Show" and star of the HBO special "Robert Schimmel: Unprotected"
ROBERT SCHIMMEL
DEC. 1ST
Star of the HBO special "D.L. Hughley Unapologetic" and Host of BET's "S.O.B."
D.L. HUGHLEY
OCT. 27TH
From the movies "Norbit," "Date Movie," "Deuce Bigalow" & "Undercover Brother"
EDDIE GRIFFIN
Back By Popular Demand
NOV. 10TH
"Dr. Dirty" Returns!
JOHN VALBY

555 deal
Three Medium One-Topping Pizzas
$5.55 Each!
Domino's Pizza
413 - 256 - 8911
OPEN LATE NIGHT TILL 4 AM!

ENTERTAINMENT GROUP PRESENTS
THE MACHINE
AMERICA'S PREMIERE PINK FLOYD EXPERIENCE
FRI. OCT. 19 • 8:30 PM DOORS 7:30 PM/BALLROOM
GET BACK TO MUSIC TOUR
LITTLE BROTHER
plus Evidence (of Dilated Peoples), Psalm One, The Problemaddicts
FRI. OCT. 19 • 8:30 PM DOORS 7:30 PM/CLUBROOM
RYAN MONTBLEAU BAND
plus Leah Randazzo, Peter Prince
SAT. OCT. 20 • 8:30 PM DOORS 7:30 PM/BALLROOM
BackStreet 30 PEARL ST Pearl Hall NORTHAMPTON, MA
THEY MIGHT BE GIANTS
plus Oppenheimer
CALVIN by Kelley's NORTHAMPTON, MA
SAT. OCT. 20 • 8:00 PM DOORS 7:00 PM 14+ Show
TO PURCHASE TICKETS OR FOR MORE INFO VISIT OUR WEBSITE OR CALL: WWW.IHEG.COM
413-586-8686

Free Delivery to UMass
Menu Online @ andiamo.cc

4				8				1
		3			2	6		9
	5
	6			3	5
	4	1	7		9	3	5
			1	8			6
							9
8		6	4			7
9			8					3

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

ACROSS
1 Lucy's Amaz
5 Offshoot group
9 Biblical land
14 ___ go braghi
15 Smeltery waste
16 Spud
17 Reiken and Coolidge
18 Repeat initial sounds
20 Got a bite
22 Pay the price
23 What history often repeats?
26 Champion
30 Finishes
34 Dotty
35 Made in the 36 Squalid
37 Bits of gold
38 Play about Capote
40 Extended clan
42 NASA partner
43 Spiritual nourishment
45 One who works at a trade
47 Skater Midori
49 Proficient
50 Parts of words
52 Gem weights
54 Burns with hot liquid
55 Gave rise to
59 Actor Wallach
60 "Back to School" co-star
64 Poker game
67 Little green man e.g.
68 Computer input
69 Objectives
70 Meanders, as a river
71 Litigates
72 Golf entrance exams

DOWN
1 Winter mo.
2 Notable period
3 George Eliot character
4 Part of a foot
5 Retirement letters
6 Ms. Fitzgerald
7 West source
8 Week-ending shout
9 Free from bacteria
10 Fiercely loyal
11 LAX stat
12 Make a wager
13 Ewtil
19 Muzak
21 Pipe bends
23 Hospital letters
24 Tex-Mex choice
25 Distance measure
27 Throat inflammator
28 Drugged with narcotics
29 Type of bread
31 Waterproof covers
32 Actress Watson
33 Actress Thorndike
39 Performed a post-trip chore
41 Moray's kin
43 Butt
44 Achievers
46 Indy, e.g.
48 Forerunner of the CIA
51 Aromatic resin
53 Phoenix caliger
56 Caesar and Vicious
57 Jigroll's twin
58 Oberlin TLC
60 Vowed
61 Boxing great
62 Hour div
63 Mr. Installation
65 Ms. Thurman
66 Spring forward syst.

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

URBAN EXCHANGE
Interior Home & Designer Clothing and Accessories

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"If you want a guarantee, buy a toaster."

-Clint Eastwood

ECOLOGY By Jen Fill

LAST DITCH EFFORT By John Kroes

LABRAT By Richard Martelly

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
You might not be able to see him on today's page, but Clint Eastwood is here.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
You never know what the Minuteman is really doing inside that large protected suit.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
If you never delete your Facebook messages, people will think you're super cool.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
The twenty-seventh person in your cell-phone contact list is a frequent masticator.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Flash drives have a really flamboyant name for a product that is not actually so flashy.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
All the world's coloring books would mean nothing without crayons. Beautiful crayons.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
It isn't the victory that matters, it's the money. Money=big pimpin'.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
If your professor wasn't restricted by state and federal law, he would hit on you.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
If you use the term "super cool" people will think you're a loser.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Clone dinosaurs and let them loose on campus. Welcome to UMassic Park.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Your lips could launch 1,000 ships, but your breath would burn holes in their sails.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Midterms are about to academically molest you. Make like Scar and be prepared.

TONIGHT!
fluid
3 YEAR ANNIVERSARY
Breakbeat Science's:
DJ DARA
Please help us welcome underground legend direct from NYC
A-SIDES
Live and direct from London's thriving scene.
Don't miss a beat!
Drum n Bass every Thursday
THE ELEVENS, 140 Pleasant ST
10pm-2am! 21+ $2 cover

Chicago Pizzaria
Free Delivery!
PIZZA · CALZONES · SUBS · WRAPS
SALADS · PASTA · DINNERS
RIBS · SEAFOOD · SLICES
PARTY SIZE PIZZA NOW AVAILABLE!
Now Hiring
Counter/Cashiers and Drivers
HOURS
Sun-Wed: 3pm-2am
Thurs-Sat: 3pm-3am
Order For DELIVERY or PICK-UP
(413) 549-6073
150 Fearing Street
Next to Patterson Dorm
Amherst, MA 01002

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ACTIVITIES
Self Defense seminar Sat. Oct. 20th. 12:00-4:00 pm at the Mercy House $7.00 admn. Call 617-519-6515 for info.

EMPLOYMENT
Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext. 162

Want to earn some MONEY and have some FUN at the same time? Join the In-Seat Vending team during the New England Patriots home game. For immediate information, contact us at hawkers@patriots.com or by phone at 508-384-4315

EMPLOYMENT
CAFE HELP PART-TIME nights and weekends must be fast, accurate, efficient and friendly. Apply in person at the woodstar cafe. 60 Masonic St Northampton.

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Nursing home companion in Sunderland $15/hr. 4 hrs per week. Elder experience desired. 413-539-0820

EMPLOYMENT
INTERNSHIP
Financial Services Industry please call Robert Burke @ 413-584-1080

INSTRUCTION
University Bartending Classes start soon. 1-800-U-CAN-MIX. www.universitybartending.com. Sign up now.

SERVICES
Need a website but don't know where to start? I can help. ifranzen@student.umass.edu

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906,1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N.

SERVICES
Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

Concerned About Your Eating? Do you eat too little? Eat too much? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic: 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH, providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling & rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St., Amherst www.tapestryhealth.org

TRAVEL
"#1 Spring Break Website! 4 & 7 night trips. Low prices guaranteed. Group discounts for 8+. Book 20 people, get 3 free trips! Campus reps needed www.StudentCity.com or 800-293-1445

Spring Break 2008 Sell Trips, Earn Cash & Go Free. Call for group discounts. Best Deals Guaranteed! Info/Reservations 800-648-4849/ www.ststravel.com

Spring Break '08 The New Math: 10+1=10. Book TEN of your friends on our SB '08 packages, the 11th is FREE. Contact STA

TRAVEL
TRAVEL: Campus Center, Room 224 (413) 256-1261 AMH@statravel.com www.freespringbreak08.com

WANTED
EGG DONORS NEEDED $15,000 (PLUS ALL EXPENSES) We are seeking women who are attractive, under the age of 29, SAT 1300+ (math+verbal), physically fit and maintaining a healthy lifestyle. If you have a desire to help an infertile family and would like more info please contact us. Email darlene@aperfectmatch.com www.aperfectmatch.com 1-800-264-8828

OCT 18 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 18, 2007 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

OCT 19 2007

From the field to the rink

Redshirt senior running back Matt Lawrence and the Minutemen take on Northeastern as a part of Homecoming Weekend. Last week, Lawrence rushed for 106 on 26 carries and scored two touchdowns.

Huskies take on UMass in search of first conference win

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

The last time the Massachusetts football team met Northeastern, it slipped and slopped its way through torrential rain and mud to a 7-0 victory in Boston.

The No. 4 Minutemen will be hoping for sunnier skies and a drier field this weekend when they host the Huskies (1-5, 0-3 Colonial Athletic Association) Saturday at noon for the UMass homecoming game.

Fresh off a 32-24, quadruple-overtime victory over Villanova at McGuirk Stadium last week, UMass (5-1, 3-0 CAA) finishes its final stretch of consecutive home contests – the Minutemen play three of their last four games on the road.

UMass put up 450 offensive yards against the Wildcats through regulation and four extra frames. Quarterback Liam Coen threw for 355 yards and two touchdowns in the game.

However, the Minutemen let up 243 yards rushing in that game, including 176 to running back Matt Dicken. Northeastern represents another run-heavy style of offense. UMass is going to need to find a way to plug the middle of the field, where Dicken earned most of his yards on draws out shotgun formation.

"We're going to need to get their run game under control if we're going to have a chance to win this football," UMass coach Don Brown said before practice Tuesday.

Maurice Murray has been a force on the ground for the Huskies, totaling 683 yards on 147 carries, an average of 4.6 yards per carry.

In the passing game, Anthony Orio has not been outstanding, but has gotten the job done for Northeastern (780 yards, five touchdowns, 57.1 completion percentage). However, he has been careful with the football (just three interceptions) and has had excellent protection (three sacks allowed in six games).

"They've been a big run-first team. I'll be honest, if we don't get the run stopped, it's not going to matter," Brown said.

See FOOTBALL on page 10

Meyers, Dainton vie for time in net, look to replace Quick

By Joe Meloni
Collegian Staff

At lower levels of hockey, the most talented player will almost always dominate. Forwards with the best hands and speed can easily maneuver around lesser opponents. And goaltenders can rely on raw athleticism to shutdown an opponent. Technical skills factor into the mix, but not until the highest levels must a player combine the two to succeed and skate with the best.

Sophomore Dan Meyers and freshman Paul Dainton both learned this already. But this adjustment isn't the biggest task facing the duo as the 2007-08 season begins. The departure of All-American Jon Quick turned the Minutemen into a question mark throughout college hockey.

Expecting this pair to replace Quick isn't realistic and they, along with UMass coach Don Cahoon, understand this better than anyone.

Their job is only to compete.

Compete against themselves, each other and the rest of college hockey to backstop the Minutemen on their way to national prominence.

"Quick is a really good goalie and he set the bar pretty high," Dainton said. "But both Dan and I are up to the challenge. We've gotten really close and we work together and push each other. I'm excited for the challenge and I'm pretty confident that I can do it."

"We're at the point where we welcome criticism from each other," Meyers said. "If [Dainton] comes to me and says something in practice or vice versa, we're not going to snap at each other. We help each other out, we're in this together. It's a really healthy competition."

Sophomore Dan Meyers is one of the candidates to replace All-American Jon Quick in net, guiding UMass to its first win last weekend.

While the duo spends most of its time helping each other progress, the styles they employ are very different.

Standing 6-foot-2, Meyers has the luxury of filling out the net. Since arriving in Amherst, he's focused on improving his footwork around the net to become more fluid in moving across the crease. Teams in Hockey East feast on goaltenders who struggle to shift from side to side within the crease.

Meyers' standup style also prevents rebounds. By squaring up to the shooter whenever possible, he can see pucks easier and therefore control them. More athletic goaltenders sometimes struggle to corral shots they don't cleanly catch. But when standup goaltenders do allow rebounds, it's more difficult

See CREASE on page 8

Cahoon lauds roster's depth

New freshmen add dimension, team deals with departures

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

During its memorable run to the NCAA Tournament in the 2006-07 season, the Massachusetts hockey team established a new identity.

No longer just a "trap" team, the Mass Attack proved last year it could, at times, score at will against any opponent, and along the way made it clear that UMass is a name everyone will be hearing in the Hockey East and national hockey scenes.

Players like Cory Quirk and Chris Davis, both in their sophomore seasons, and freshman Will Ortiz gave the Maroon and White some offensive firepower it had lacked in the past.

Joining seniors Mark Matheson, Chris Capraro and junior PJ. Fenton in the offensive end, last year's Minutemen went further than any squad before them, earning their first NCAA bid in program history and coming within a game of the Frozen Four.

This year, UMass coach Don Cahoon expects to build on that mantra of being a bigger threat offensively, and you can see it in his latest round of recruits.

Goaltenders: two. Defenseman: one. Forwards: six.

Front-line prospects James Marcou, Marc Concannon, Chase Langeraap, Michael Leconte and Brian Keane (who scored a goal last weekend in the win over St. Lawrence) join an already imposing group that includes Quirk, Davis, Ortiz, Fenton and Alex Berry.

Two games into the season, the Minutemen open their home schedule against UMass Lowell Friday. It will be most UMass fans' first chance to see the 2007-08 version of the Mass Attack. So with that in mind, here's a look at how the roster breaks down.

Forward

The largest amount of offseason turnover took place at the forward position. Chris Capraro, Kevin Jarman, Matt Anderson and Mark Matheson were all top scoring threats for the Minutemen last season (Capraro led the team in points with 35).

Fenton, Quirk and Davis are now the team's best options in the offensive end, and played together as the top line against Clarkson and St. Lawrence. They played together in a select few games last year, though Quirk and Davis were together nearly the entire season, with Capraro on the other wing.

Quirk is possibly the team's best player at the forward position, and the

See ROSTER on page 9

Hanson gives UM forceful play on D-line

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

Massachusetts quarterback Liam Coen would hate to play against Michael Hanson.

The UMass signal-caller feels fortunate he only has to do so in practice. But the other quarterbacks in the Colonial Athletic Association don't have that luxury.

Hanson, the starting left defensive end on the Minutemen, is making an unexpected impact this season – becoming a force with his relentless pass rushing skills. And with his versatility and athletic ability, teams are shying away from running the ball anywhere near him.

"He plays with that motor all game long and doesn't stop," Coen said. "That's something, as a quarterback, you don't like playing against a guy like that."

Hanson has used that motor to help lead a talented UMass defense. He ranks second in the team in both sacks (3) and tackles for loss (7.5). More impressively, his 39 tackles are the third-most on the defense, a ranking that is typically filled by linebackers.

The linebacker spot is where Hanson originally wanted to be. He came to UMass as a linebacker, but was shifted to the defensive line after he redshirted in his freshman season. It was a move that he was reluctant to make.

"It wasn't a good move at first," Hanson said. "I mean, my freshman year they moved me and I didn't really think I could do it. [UMass] coach [Don] Brown said stick with it, try it, and if you don't like it we'll move you back. But it worked out for the best."

See HANSON on page 10

Redshirt senior captain J.J. Moore had a career long reception of 54-yards against Villanova last week.

One of the Minutemen's premier penalty killers, sophomore forward Brett Watson will see time at center on the team's second line.

Sophomore forward Sydney Stoll is out for the season after suffering a collarbone injury against Rhode Island last week.

Forward suffers season-ending injury

Stoll leaves game against URI after collision with goalkeeper

By Steve Games
Collegian Staff

For the second consecutive season the Massachusetts women's soccer team will be without one of its key players.

Last week, sophomore forward Sydney Stoll was forced to leave the game early in the first half against Rhode Island with a broken collarbone. The Ram goalkeeper slid under Stoll's legs, forcing her into a diving motion. She landed on her right shoulder and when she got to her feet, she tried to move – but she was in too much pain.

"It hurt a lot," Stoll said. "I make falls like that all the time during games. I didn't really think that it was broken and then I was jogging back to get onsides [and] I hear my dad yell and he was like, 'try to lift it.' I tried to lift it and I couldn't. Then as I was running back I heard the bones touching each other and I [thought that] can't be normal, so then I just took a knee."

Stoll's parents attend every home game and most away games. Her father, Barry Stoll, feels for his daughter, but also understands that injuries are a part of the game.

"I told her it could have been worse, it could have been the lower extremity injury," Barry Stoll said. "Injuries are part of the athlete's life [and] there's nothing you can do about them. She plays hard anyways so I'm surprised it hasn't happened before, to tell you the truth."

Last year the Minutewomen lost their central defender and one of their leaders in senior Tina Rodriguez. Rodriguez tore her ACL during Atlantic-10 confer-

See STOLL on page 10

UMASS HEADS TO SAINT LOUIS | PAGE 8

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

T-STORMS : HI: 77 LO: 61 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, OCTOBER 19, 2007

GEO pickets 'New Dirt' site

By Derrick Perkins
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts graduate students joined the Graduate Employee Organization (GEO) and community union members in picketing at "New Dirt" sites across campus yesterday morning.

According to Boone Shear, the GEO's political advisor, bargaining with the University administration over four key issues had led to the protest. The GEO is asking the UMass administration for continued healthcare, childcare, higher wages and lower fees.

Shear is concerned that the University is attempting to rollback past union gains, including those made on childcare and healthcare.

"The University has take-backs on the table," Shear said. "They're trying to reverse gains we've made in the past."

Over a 100 local union members, graduate and undergraduate students picketed outside construction sites, which included the future Visual Arts and Integrated Sciences buildings. A GEO picket line had also formed outside of the Mullins Center, according to Shear.

According to the GEO, the administration is refusing to negotiate on a possible reduction of the current level of fees graduate students must pay to be employed by the University. The Board of Trustees

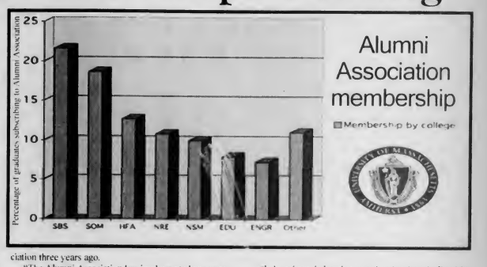
See PICKET on page 2

Alumni memberships waning

By Frank Vitale
Collegian Staff

According to the Boston Globe, the University of Massachusetts Amherst may be losing touch with its alumni.

Membership in the University of Massachusetts Amherst Alumni Association lags heavily behind schools of comparable size, according to an article published in the Globe last Tuesday.



With around 6,000 members, the Alumni Association represents a scant three percent of the nearly 210,000 UMass alumni worldwide. In comparison, Iowa State, with a size nearly identical to that of UMass – with slightly more undergraduates, but slightly less graduate students – boasts a 19 percent membership rate.

Alumni involvement goes beyond donations. An extensive alumni network brings in not only money, but also political support and political and business connections. Alumni also serve a valuable role in recruiting students, as well as serving as spokespeople to help enhance the image of the school.

Kathleen Mitchell, President of the Alumni Association, called it a mistake to gauge alumni involvement solely by membership numbers in the association.

"Alumni Association membership is only one measure of alumni involvement," wrote Mitchell in an e-mail to the Globe. "We continually strive to increase alumni participation as the 210,000 alumni worldwide propel the university forward as the flagship within a world-class university system."

In an unprinted letter to the editor, Mitchell responded to the article, backing up her previous claims and explaining that although membership had declined over previous years, other measures of alumni involvement had improved greatly over that same time period. Mitchell also outlined the strategic plan implemented by the association three years ago.

"The Alumni Association has implemented an aggressive strategic plan that includes: enhancing professional development and social networking resources for alumni and students, expanding outreach and programming for students, strengthening our network of regional Alumni Clubs, providing more opportunities for alumni volunteerism and advocacy, growing membership levels, increasing on-campus and system-wide, collaborations."

According to Mitchell's letter, since implementing the plan, event attendance has increased 82 percent, alumni-volunteer activity increased 193 percent and alumni participation in services and communications offered by the association increased over 400 percent.

"I do acknowledge that membership has declined by 4 percent over this same time period," Mitchell said in the letter, "but the Alumni Association has also seen an increase in young alumni membership participation and life Memberships have dramatically increased by 21 percent – with 124 new members joining at this $1,000 level just over the last year."

When asked what other steps were being taken to increase alumni involvement, Deborah Masloski, interim executive director and director for Alumni services and board relations, pointed out the on-line alumni database

See ALUMNI on page 2

A night at the Blue Wall – Page 4

On Wednesday night, the Blue Wall hosted the annual Homecoming Minutemic talent competition. Teresa Franco (left) plays the acoustic guitar and freshmen singing duo Brendan Ream and Ryan Harrington (center) took first place. Jake DiGregorio (right) was among the other acts which included multiple singers, slam poetry readings and stand-up comedy (see story on page 4).

UPenn prof. talks public ed.

By Jennifer Hesbon
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts students gathered on Wednesday night to listen to Professor Adolph Reed Jr. lecture at an event sponsored by the Public Higher Education Network Of Massachusetts (PHENOM).

Reed gave a lecture followed by an open discussion session. Reed a professor of the Department of Political Science at the University of Pennsylvania discussed the increasing costs of public education.

"I think this is a very perilous time for our sector, both public and private," said Reed to a crowd of students gathered in the library of New Africa House located in the lower Central residential area.

Reed is a leading advocate of the Free Higher Education campaign, as well as a nationally recognized expert on American and African-American

See PUBLIC EDUCATION on page 2

Gov. stars in UMass TV ad

By Joshua Walovitch
Collegian Correspondent

On Monday, the University of Massachusetts launched its newest television advertising campaign.

The ad titled "Transform," features Massachusetts Governor Deval Patrick, who preaches the importance of education while touring the campus.

Robert P. Connolly, the associate vice president for communications of the president's office at UMass, produced the television ad along with the other ads the University has aired over the past decade.

"This ad was derived from listening to the Governor speak about the power of education, how education changed his life, and from his many comments about the University and how its students, faculty and graduates are key to the state's social and economic future," Connolly said.

Edward F. Blaguszewski, director of the Office of News and Information and the logistical coordinator for the television ad, worked with Governor Patrick and helped choose the locations in front of the Fine Arts Center, near Professor Derek Lovely's lab and in the Learning Commons of the W.E.B DuBois Library. In the ad, Patrick commends the influence of education.

"Education is one of the most powerful forces in the world. It can transform lives," he said.

The ad appeared after the Governor's institution of a new 10-year, $2 billion higher education bond bill. The new legislation will include consent for new building and renovation projects at each of the five UMass campuses. Half the money will be dedicated specifically to the University of Massachusetts campuses and the other half will go to improvements to the state and community colleges.

"This administration is committed to providing our students the highest quality public education possible so that they are prepared to compete with their peers across the country and throughout the world," said Patrick. "If we ask our students to put forth their best effort to succeed then we must be willing to invest in the tools to help them their laboratories, their classrooms and their libraries."

Mr. Connolly approached the governor's office with the ad idea earlier this year. The ad was filmed last spring, a couple months after Patrick had been elected. Patrick had been in town to speak at Hampshire College and afterwards came here to shoot the advertisement.

"During his first year in office, Governor Patrick has been widely described as the most ardent champion UMass has ever had in the Corner Office and for a variety of reasons, we see him as a very effective and compelling advocate," said Connolly. "Governor Patrick truly is committed to UMass and its future, and we believe that his enthusiastic endorsement will resonate across the state."

This is not the first time a familiar face has been the center of attention for an UMass television ads. The previous ad titled "Something to be Proud of," won an Emmy. UMass alumni such as former Chairman and CEO of General Electric Jack Welch, comedian Bill Cosby and astronaut Cady Coleman have all been in television ads supporting the University. Professors John U. Sullivan and Dr. Craig Mello have also been in ads. The ad can be viewed at www.massachusetts.edu/transform/index.html.

Joshua Walovitch can be reached at jwalovit@student.umass.edu

Rowers compete in Head of the Charles

By Colby Michalik
Collegian Correspondent

This weekend is monumental in Boston. Not because the Boston Red Sox are playing the Cleveland Indians in the American League Championship Series, but because the 42nd annual Head of the Charles Regatta will be taking place on the Charles River in Cambridge, and the Massachusetts rowing team will be one of the competing squads.

"The best in the country will be there. Fordham, George Washington, URI, Yale, Michigan, etc., it is our biggest race of the year," said UMass coach Jim Dietz regarding this weekend's meet.

The season as young, but the Minutewomen have started strong, placing in their first two meets of the season. Last weekend featured a split-squad scrimmage in preparation for the Head of the Charles.

"The idea behind the scrimmage is to get the stroke rating up for the team," Dietz said. "We're looking to get up to about 30-32 strokes per minute and throughout the season we've been gradually building up to this pace."

This weekend UMass will participate in one of the most respected events in the crew community. The Head of the Charles Regatta was started in 1965 by members of the Cambridge Boat Club, in combination with Northeastern University. The regatta holds 52 separate events divided into age, weight experience, and gender and separated into single- or eight-seated boats.

Each event features a minimum of 20 boats racing upstream for three miles. The races begin at Boston University's DeWolfe Boathouse and finish at Herter Park in Brighton.

This challenging course is known for the narrowness of the bridges alongside the tight corners. The best place to watch the race is said to be at Weeks Footbridge at Harvard's Weld Boathouse, which provides the best view of the most difficult portion of the regatta. At

See ROWING on page 6

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 33

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Ester
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Tim McCall
COMIC EDITOR Adam Seagen
EDITORIAL EDITOR Sean Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsee Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ryan McAskill
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Teresa Reilly
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olson
ASSISTANT NEWS Will McGuinness
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Michael King
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenwinkle
WEB EDITOR James Hale
PHOTO EDITOR Toan Trinh
ASST. PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
ASST. PHOTO EDITOR Brian Tedder

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN is published Monday through Thursday during the University of Massachusetts academic year, except for vacations and exam periods. THE COLLEGIAN is a student-run newspaper. Subscriptions are available for $150 per semester. Back issues are available for $1 each. Mail subscriptions are $200 per semester. POSTMASTER: Send address changes to Daily Collegian, 113 Campus Center, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, MA 01003.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jeremy Rice

COPY EDITOR
Amber Vaillancourt

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

If you see news happening, call us at 545-1809 and snap a photo with your cell phone, then send it to news@dailycollegian.com

UMass honors faculty

LUCAS CORREIA

On Monday, October 22, a symposium will be held in the Campus Center Auditorium to acknowledge the accomplishments of many UMass faculty members.

It will be an interdisciplinary discussion, involving at least one professor from each college. All 10 panelists and presenters have been specifically identified by the Dean of their college as an academic leader.

The common thread they share is that they have all had impacts in communities outside of the University.

Dr. Bill Miller, director of planning and evaluation for the University of Massachusetts Extension, said the symposium is "an opportunity to pose questions about the kind of university we want to be."

He added that it is a chance to see how faculty, students, and the administration "can work together to achieve greater distinction for our work, and be perceived as a more accessible resource and active presence in Massachusetts."

The primary function of the symposium is "to document and disseminate knowledge in a way that's transparent so that others can determine the quality and value of it," according to Miller.

The Faculty Senate Outreach Council and the Office of Outreach are sponsoring the symposium, entitled "Beyond Outreach to Scholarly Engagement."

The Outreach program gives the University the role of an "expert," and shares the knowledge of the University with surrounding communities. Their main goal is engagement, or forming a deeper relationship with the public and providing the best ways to enhance learning and teaching.

From 1:2:30 p.m., there will be a panel discussion which will include assistant professor in political science Raymond La Raja, the public health's department's Dr. Elaine Puleo, professor and chair of teacher education and curriculum studies.

Jerri Willett, professor and head of the landscape architecture and regional planning department, Elizabeth Brabec and associate professor of mathematics and statistics, Nathaniel Whitaker. The Dean of Commonwealth College, Priscilla Clarkson, will moderate the panel.

Following the panel, there will be five poster presentations from faculty and staff members on their personal outreach efforts from 2:30-3:15 p.m. The five presenters are David McLaughlin (electrical and computer engineering), John Reiff (director of the Office of Community Service Learning), Cynthia Jacelon (nursing), Joseph Krupczynski (art), and Todd Crossett (sports management).

At 3:15 p.m., keynote speaker Loritee Sandmann of the department of lifelong education, administration and policy at the University of Georgia will speak.

This event is free, but all attendees must pre-register. Anyone interested in attending the symposium can register online at www.umass.edu/outreach/symposium.

Lucas Correia can be reached at lfcorrei@student.umass.edu.

Loritee Sandann of the University of Georgia will be the keynote speaker at UMass Outreach's faculty symposium.

GEO pickets 'New Dirt'

PICKET from page 1

has not as of yet determined the current fee amount for graduate students, leading members of GEO to suspect that fees will be rising in the future, especially if there is a wage increase.

"Any wage increase we get, and UMass isn't offering much, will be offset by a rise in fess a few months down the road," said George Liu, graduate student and teaching assistant in the communications department.

"No union would agree to a contract where they didn't know how much they would earn," Shear said. UMass spokesman Ed Blagiszewski declined to comment on the GEO picket line.

"We don't discuss the details of our negotiations with the public," he said.

Shear also accused the University administration of trying to cut paid staff positions within GEO, from four down to just two.

"Some people would term that union busting," he said.

Members of the Massachusetts Nursing Association and Massachusetts Teaching Association also walked the picket line in what union member and former UMass graduate student Leo Maley called an act of "solidarity."

"We're all in it together, that's what being part of a union is about," Maley said. "The community supports the struggle."

In a show of support, union construction workers delayed beginning construction at the Visual Arts and Integrated Science buildings until shortly before 8 a.m. this morning.

At 8:15 a.m. GEO picketers from the other sites around campus joined together in front of Skinner Hall and the Integrated Science building to form a larger picket line.

Nate Johnson, a graduate student in labor studies, had begun his morning picketing outside of the new Visual Arts building.

"We talked to a number of the construction workers," he said. "We stopped a few trucks from delivering supplies [to the construction zone]."

Much of the $1.2 million dollars appropriated by graduate student fees is used towards financing the University's "New Dirt" projects, according to the GEO.

Representing more than 2,500 graduate student employees at UMass, GEO is affiliated with the United Auto Workers Local 2322 based in Holyoke. UAW 2322 represents 3,600 employees in Western Massachusetts working in the fields of higher education, early childhood education, and health and human services.

"To truly improve education, UMass needs to make a commitment to its grad student workers," said Rachel Daniel, a graduate student in the Afro-American department and member of the GEO bargaining committee.

Derrick Perkins can be reached at dperkins@student.umass.edu

PHENOM hosts UPenn prof.

PUBLIC EDUCATION from page 1

political thought.

On behalf of the campaign, Reed spoke of the rising financial costs which prevent students who qualify for acceptance into public colleges from attending school while financial aid programs and assistance continue to decrease. Over the last ten years, the inflation adjusted cost of public higher education in Massachusetts has increased by 26 percent.

"If we can't find a way to meet these challenges in 10 years, or 20 years, there might be nothing left that we recognize as a college," Reed said.

Many students who do attend college begin their professional careers in massive debt, according to Reed.

The average student graduates with $17,000 in debt from student loans, while others are crippled by costs and cannot go to college, or are forced to take time off from school in order to work and save money to pay tuition.

Meanwhile, the importance of a college degree has become more and more necessary in finding employment.

"Working and middle class students are being priced out of public higher education, just at the time a college degree has become what a high school degree used to be," said Jeff Napolitano, president of the graduate student senate.

Reed insisted that the federal government can afford to pay the full cost of tuition and fees for all college students.

"Society is obligated to give you the tools that you need to live independently," said Reed.

The total cost of tuition and fees for students enrolled in an institution for public higher education in 2001 was about $32 billion, which is less than 2 percent of the federal budget.

Just as high school education is a basic right, Reed said the federal government should guarantee all academically qualifying students an equal opportunity at higher education.

"The only benefits that actually work are the ones available to everybody," said Reed.

Free public higher education was enacted by the GI Bill of Rights which gave post World War II veterans full tuition and stipends to attend public colleges.

"The GI Bill let people go who wouldn't be there otherwise, but now only people whose parents have the resources can go," said Reed.

When reviewed by a subcommittee of the Congressional Joint Economic Committee it was estimated that the GI Bill returned $6.90 in revenue for every dollar spent on education for veterans because of increased income and productivity.

Free tuition was offered by the City University in New York until the 1970s, bringing higher education to tens of thousands of people who never imagined going to college and were able to earn more rewarding jobs as a result.

Private universities were not considered in the Free Higher Education campaign's proposal because if education is considered a right it should be in public institutions.

According to the campaign, 83 percent of all students attending college are enrolled in public institutions, and to include the remaining 17 percent receiving a private education would make the program twice as expensive.

"Education is a public good and if people want to pay for private education that is their decision," Reed said.

The Free Higher Education program has been endorsed by numerous academic and labor organizations. Next week, PHENOM will hold a statewide Higher Education Summit on October 26 from 10 a.m. until 4 p.m. at Framingham State University.

Jennifer Heshion can be reached at jheshion@student.umass.edu.

Alumni Assoc. losing members

ALUMNI from page 1

She explained how the site will be upgraded to include a social networking aspect by December or January. The association hopes that it will help to keep strong, and in some cases renew, the bond between alumni and the bond to UMass.

She echoed Mitchell in stressing that although membership was down, the university enjoyed good alumni involvement and boasts a 95 percent good contact rate.

When asked how today's students could be convinced to become tomorrow's involved alumni, Masloski smiled and mentioned how the Alumni Association was going to be working on that.

"We need to sort of build a culture around campus," she said, "one centering on service and philanthropy, and giving back to your alma mater."

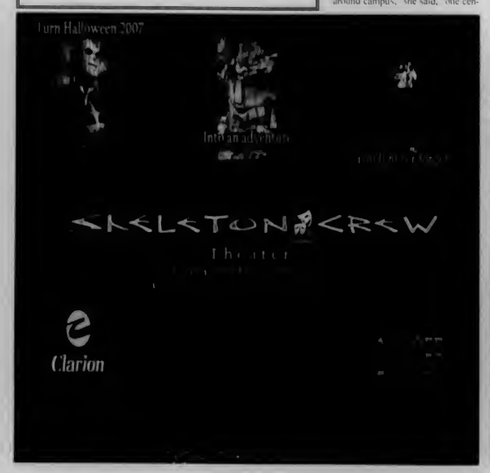
As for the comparison to Iowa State, Masloski mentioned the difference in attitudes between Amherst and Ames – the town where ISU is located – and how alumni involvement is a greater part of the culture.

She also pointed out that the UMass Alumni Association has only been in it's current form as a dues-based program since 1994, while Iowa State has been that way for much longer.

The highly competitive university atmosphere in the Northeast may also have played a part, she added, especially in comparison to the somewhat sparser concentration of schools in the nation's heartland.

"They're the only show in town," she said.

UMass's origins as a school nearly entirely supported by state funding may have hampered alumni involvement. Since private fundraising took a back seat, the university made fewer and less fervent attempts to maintain graduate involvement.



Membership in the Alumni Association offers a wide array of benefits, including discounts on things from hotels to restaurants to Kaplan Test Preparation Courses, not to mention on tickets to UMass sports events.

Alumni receive a newsletter, and members can stay updated on campus events by utilizing their discounted subscription rate for the Daily Collegian. Membership prices range from the $40 annual rate to the one-time $1,000 lifetime fee, according to their Web site.

Despite the drop in Alumni Association memberships, UMass continues to receive respectable donations from alumni, with 13 percent of graduates giving money to the university, a rate slightly above the national average.

Frank Vitale can be reached at fvitale@student.umass.edu

COME AND MEET REPRESENTATIVES OF THE MASSACHUSETTS HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY who are coming to campus on Monday, October 22 to give a one hour power-point presentation about their gardens at "Tim Bank" in Wellesley and about their portions of the Rose Kennedy Greenway above the Big Dig in Boston.
Where? Tenth floor of the Campus Center
When? Monday, October 22, 2007.
What time? 6:00 p.m. to 7:00 p.m.
Who is invited? All students with an interest in these topics.
Why? MassHort is announcing it's exciting future and recruiting college student interns for next summer.
SPONSORED BY THE STOCKBRIDGE CLUB
FUNDED BY ALPHA TAU GAMMA
THE SOCIAL SERVICE AND ACADEMIC FRATERNITY
OF THE STOCKBRIDGE SCHOOL OF AGRICULTURE

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
EDITORIAL OPINION
FRIDAY, OCTOBER 19, 2007
"It were best that we net all think alike; it is difference of opinion that makes horseraces."
Mark Twain
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

What makes a job important

Marr

Yesterday I attempted the near impossible – reading the jumble of flyers on a campus bulletin board. Amidst the hodgepodge, somehow I managed to zero in on an advertisement for prospective RAs. For those of you who get dizzy just looking at the mosaic of paper, I'll give a recap.

The ad features a mock résumé, beginning with the clearly mediocre "summer job at the beach" and "summer job at the mall." Then comes the beacon of light on this otherwise dreary resumé: "Resident Assistant," followed by a bulleted list of its many impressive responsibilities.

All I have to say is that I'm relieved that I didn't work at the mall or beach this past summer, or I'd be feeling a little slighted by Housing and Residence Life right now.

Good thing that I worked at a pool instead.

June through August, I was the pass-checker at my local pool. It's a job which many people seem to equate with sunbathing poolside. Last time I checked, though, "sunbathing poolside" wasn't synonymous with controlling entry, selling passes, arguing over rates with out-of-towners and dealing with uncooperative children, fresh teenagers and officious adults.

In fact, working at a pool, undoubtedly similar to a mall, beach and a host of on-campus jobs warrants its own bulleted list of challenges.

Yet, universally these jobs are downplayed, while RAs, and most commonly interns, are almost given pedestal status. Why? Is it because of a mistaken assumption that employees in supposedly menial jobs lack the ambition or education to do anything more? And that interns and RAs are engaging in something nearly comparable to saving the universe?

Some people get to feel great about photocopying countless reams of paper, merely because "intern" is in their job title.

Of course, diligent, conscientious interns and RAs certainly exist, but often there's an equally lackadaisical side. I've known RAs who were themselves responsible for the halfway's worst "quiet hours" violations.

I've heard of numerous undergraduate interns who enter data in a cubicle, only stretching their legs to do the grunt-work of sharpening pencils and fetching coffee. They are permanently affixed to a Xerox machine, nearing carpal tunnel syndrome with every hit of "Copy." They are alphabetizing so many files that they're humming the "ABCs" in their sleep; or they harbor the ever so important responsibility of pooling their employers' playlists into an office iTunes mix.

Some people get to feel great about photocopying countless reams of paper, merely because "intern" is in their job title. And others are made to feel guilty about working as summer camp counselors, just because their attire is sandals and a t-shirt opposed to a business suit. Now, I can photocopy-alphabetize-type with the best of them, but personally I think I've taken those skills as far as I can.

Instead, I ask: How can you exercise interpersonal skills when you're holed up in a cubicle? How can you acquire practice as an authority figure when you're surrounded solely by superiors?

How diverse an experience can you truly get in supervising a hallway full of typical college students? Of course, in some instances, it's worthwhile to tolerate a less-than-meaningful internship to achieve your ultimate goal. But for some of us, being able to brag about an internship has no other benefits than being able to brag about an internship.

As students scramble for the most coveted internships and agonize over selecting careers with the most potential, I ponder how caught up we get in the hype of what "sounds best." Although an example relatively distant to our futures, consider this.

In order to be involved in their children's schooling, my mother was a recess monitor throughout my sisters' and my elementary school years, and my aunt is currently a cafeteria lady at her children's school.

So there you go – someone with a Masters of Science degree keeping kids from falling off a jungle gym, and a former bank manager with an MBA collecting lunch money. Isn't that the equivalent of a Commonwealth College student working at a dining hall because it rewards them in some way? Everyone has different priorities, but just because you supposedly take a step backward, doesn't mean you cannot carry that experience with you into the future.

Believe it or not, people actually take these jobs with the intention of holding them to the same high standards as so-called "real jobs," and of ultimately gaining something from them. If a job is interesting, enjoyable and impels you toward your goal, it's worthwhile to pursue, regardless of the stigma.

Myself, I want to be a library media specialist. Would typing in the isolation of a cubicle or overseeing college students' melodramatic lives help me achieve that? No more than the work that I did all last summer. Gaining experience that coincides with your own agenda. I've decided, is more important than grabbing just any internship within reach. And if that happens to entail a cliché college student job at the mall, beach or pool that's somehow personally rewarding, you should feel good about it.

Katherine Marr is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached kmarr@student.umass.edu.

Equality for all

S.P. Sullivan

I've always had a soft spot for underdogs. Third-party and fringe presidential candidates have always impressed me, usually because the less likely you are to get elected, the more willing you are to tell the truth (or is it the other way around?).

Generally, these candidates better serve as wild cards to keep the other candidates honest – or at least as honest as presidential candidates can be. But with growing dissatisfaction of both major political parties, an ever-increasing number of Americans are looking to these Bad News Bears candidates for answers.

Perhaps one of the most impressive of this election season's cast of underdogs is Ron Paul, the Republican representative from Texas. Paul is a libertarian, an isolationist Air Force veteran and physician who once worked as an obgyn without accepting Medicare or Medicaid payments for his services. I know, he doesn't sound very electable to me either.

And the other Republican candidates and news organizations agree with me. In a recent Republican presidential candidate's debate, Paul answered pointed questions about his position on the war in Iraq, and provided his staunch, isolationist "bring the troops home" stance.

As Paul espoused his talking points – which was the very purpose of the debate – Rudy Giuliani found his suggestion that the war in Iraq was a mistake laughable – literally. Giuliani repeatedly and vocally scoffed at Paul's arguments. Listen, Rudy, just because you were mayor of New York during 9/11 doesn't mean you get to forget your manners.

After another recent Republican presidential candidate's debate, CNBC.com ran an unscientific poll asking readers who won the debate.

After a few hours, Ron Paul was at 75 percent. CNBC took the poll down. Why?

Allen Wastler, managing editor of CNBC.com, explained in a letter entitled "An Open Letter to the Ron Paul Faithful," that "our poll was either hacked or the target of a campaign. So we took the poll down."

Now, this is a pretty shocking revelation – that the insidious "Ron Paul Faithful" had hacked or otherwise manipulated a news organization's poll on the results of a major political debate. The evidence for such allegations, however, was less than concrete.

Basically, Ron Paul won, and couldn't possibly have won without some sort of vast internet conspiracy, so CNBC.com thought it was their journalistic duty to remove the unscientific poll. The "Ron Paul Faithful" cried censorship, conspiracy or worse. I'm betting on poor judgment, but it's still up in the air.

Wastler stood by the news organization's decision to remove the poll. In his open letter, he offered the following defense:

"When a well-organized and committed 'few' can throw the results of a system meant to reflect the sentiments of 'the many,' I get a little worried. I'd take it down again."

It's already difficult for third-party and fringe candidates to get a foot in the door of major elections

There is another system in which the power of the "few" who take the initiative to vote trumps that of those who didn't make themselves heard. It's called democracy, and nobody is suggesting that we recount election ballots factoring in the people who didn't make it to the polls on election day.

The poll was unscientific, and was presented as such. Likewise, the internet is still a somewhat new medium, and people who vote in online polls can't possibly be expected to be the same sampling as those who vote in primaries. A look at user-generated news sites Digg.com and Reddit.com on a day-to-day basis will show you that Paul has a big following on the internet, so it wouldn't necessarily take an organized campaign to get him big numbers in an online poll.

It's already difficult for third-party and fringe candidates to get a foot in the door of major elections, they don't need news organizations to make the likelihood of defeat a self-fulfilling prophecy.

Do I endorse Ron Paul? No, as a journalist I have a habit of being skeptical of anyone who steps in front of a podium. Do I agree with all of his policies? No, but I do think he ought to be given the same size soapbox as Rudy Giuliani or Mitt Romney or Hillary Clinton.

CNBC.com should know that it's their responsibility to inform the public about candidates so they can decide who the viable ones are and who the loons are, and sort them out themselves. They shouldn't, however, cut the middle man and only present candidates that have been pre-approved as legitimate.

In an age where it's growing increasingly difficult to tell a Democrat from a Republican, candidates should be applauded for having the courage to distinguish themselves from the photocrats of the pack. More so, if these parties want to make their best efforts at trumping dissent and originality among their ranks, the media certainly shouldn't be complacent in it.

That's why this election season, I'm hoping for a third party. Bull Moose, anyone?

S.P. Sullivan is a Collegian editor. He can be reached at editorial@dailycollegian.com.

A TEXT MESSAGE FROM HOME

WRITE A LETTER TO THE EDITOR

IT'S THE COOL THING TO DO EVERYONE IS DOING IT

Send an e-mail to:
editorial@dailycollegian.com.

A letter to UMass fans

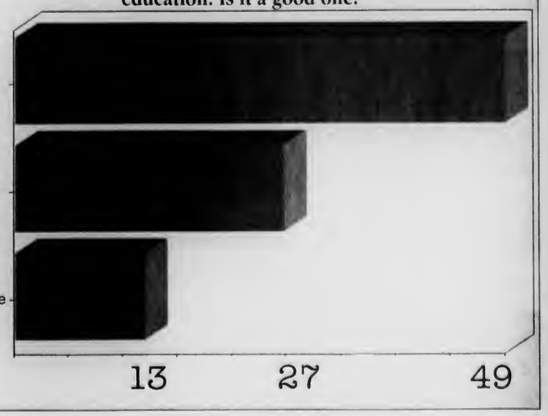
Dear Editor,

As sports fans we share two common connections, an intimate knowledge of the joys of victory and the disappointment of losing. Our allegiance to one particular team or another is an emotional investment. It is no wonder then, that when we are either rewarded with an amazing win or let down by an unexpected loss that there is sometimes an outpouring of emotion. These emotions manifest themselves in many different ways. Some are positive and celebratory in nature and others that are negative and destructive.

At UMass, most of us can all recall the riots that occurred last year in line with UMass' loss to Appalachian State. Our seniors can also recall the riots that occurred with the Red Sox World Series victory in 2004. Both of these examples indicate how easy it is for a crowd to gather quickly and in a short time, show a lack of respect for property, other individuals, and law enforcement.

The majority of students did not go outside with the intent of causing a riot and the ensuing destruction. A select few actually were interested in damaging property or fighting each other and the police. However, any student who made the decision to go outside contributed to the riotous situation.

Once everyone is involved it is extremely hard to think about what was going on. When everyone is wrapped up in such collective emotional irrationality, things like consequences and repercussions generally go out the window. This is exactly when people make poor decisions that could negatively affect the rest of their lives. It is important that we realize this fact, if you choose to participate in any way, you could be risking a great deal by violating University policy and the law.



Why turn something as fun and exciting as sports into something with such potential for harm? Surely, none of us want to take part in anything that would hurt people, destroy property, damage the University's reputation, or devalue the very degrees we are here to attain. But in reality, this is exactly what riots do. When parents, potential employers, and the public hear that there were riots at UMass, we are hurting ourselves in several key ways.

First of all, our parents worry about our safety and the safety of the environment here. Secondly, we affect the opinions of potential employers who will judge the quality of the student body at the University we attend. Thirdly, the general public will view the University with concern and in a negative light.

It is the responsibility of every member of our community to prevent any further riots and to encourage everyone to celebrate safely and responsibly. It is our collective duty to behave appropriately by protecting the reputation of the University we love, our friends, and ourselves. The bottom line is that riots negatively impact everyone. Respect the University's policy, the police, property, your friends, and yourself. If we work together and practice good sportsmanship, we can all have fun and be safe at the same time.

Philip Melo Benevides
President of the Theta Mu Chapter
Pi Kappa Phi Fraternity

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
READER RESPONSE POLL RESULTS
A lecture at the New Africa House this Wednesday will present the idea of free higher education. Is it a good one?

OCT 19 2007

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 19, 2007

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Freshman guitar duo outlast comic champ

Annual Minutemic talent show takes over Blue Wall

BY HOLLY J. GALVIN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

For at least one night, Boston sports on the Blue Wall Café flat-screen televisions took a back-seat to UMass talent, at the 2007 Homecoming Open MinuteMic competition facilitated by the sisters of Alpha Chi Omega.

With Wednesday night's Celtics preseason home opener being broadcast, unattended, off to the side, 12 starry-eyed student acts claimed the main stage as sorority sisters Kira Lew and Nikki Bienia emceed. After a two-and-a-half hour itinerary of poetry, crooning and comedy, crowd voting determined that freshmen duo Brendan Ryan and Ryan Harrington had ousted their upperclassmen competition.

Introduced by the charismatic Omega sisters as the night's only duo, Braintree's Ryan and Harrington wasted no time impressing the Blue Wall crowd of about 50 students by sandwiching a Guster cover song with two well-received originals, one off of Ryan's 2007 demo "Compilation of You."

Occasional microphone static and a thinning midterms-week crowd did little to hinder the longtime best friends, as they entertained with colliding harmonies and lyrics of abandoned love such as: "For what it's worth I'm all yours now." The Southwest crooners have both recently released solo demos and are in the process of having their music made available to fans on iTunes.

Unsurprisingly, guitar dominated the event's artistic medium. Along with the winners, students Teresa Franco, Jake DiGregorio, Kate Barnett and Gina Rybarczyk all brought acoustics onstage, with Barnett strumming along to Rybarczyk's warm rendition of this semester's chart-toppling Cobie Caillat hit "Bubbly" rounding out the evening.

Freshman theater enthusiast DiGregorio cracked up the crowd during a "The Who" cover when he accidentally dropped his guitar pick and lamented a stone-faced four letter word into the mic. Likewise, slam poet Sean Sullivan earned some chuckles with the explanation that slam poetry was, "Like hip-hop for people wearing sweater vests."

Even the Chi Omega emcees got in on the humorous action, cracking various jokes in between University-forced readings and re-readings of Homecoming public service announcements. "Remember, real minutemen wear maroon," Lew said sarcastically, upholding the uneasy task of keeping the otherwise lame Homecoming event plugs bearable by complimenting performers with cheerful words such as, "That was beauteous!"

However, no wisecrack would rival the crowd reactions conjured by the comedy of defending MinuteMic champion Adam Szajgin. Opening his stand-up set with a plea for the crowd to donate money rather than votes in his favor, the senior political science major had students rolling with self-deprecating bits ripping everything from cringe-worthy pick-up lines to the male race's stereotypical inability to navigate a female's nether regions.

Holding up an anatomical map handed to him in the Campus Center concourse, Szajgin suggested couples tape it onto their bedroom walls for reference, "[This diagram] is just a subtle way of saying, men of UMass, you don't know what you're doing, okay? You need some help. Then again, if you really want an upgrade, get [the anatomy] tattooed on your inner thigh, he deadpanned, adding, "Then I can look down and be like, oh, okay! That's where I am."

Casually dressed in his signature backwards Eagle Scout cap, Szajgin earned huge points with Wednesday's Blue Wall dwellers for his rant on sexual innuendo in breakfast cereal mascots, "I'm concerned about the little animals that are used

See TALENT on page 5

STAMAN / COLLEGIAN

Sizanna Shrestha has a tender moment during her performance at the Minutemic talent contest at the Bluewall Wednesday night. She was amoung several acts the entertained the audiance.

'Power and Class' highlight concert

33rd annual 'Multiband Pops' festival at the Fine Arts Center

BY BRIAN WOOD
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Tonight, the Department of Music & Dance hope to dazzle the senses, while stirring up excitement over the commencement of homecoming weekend with the 33rd annual "Multiband Pops" concert at the Fine Arts Center.

The annual homecoming tradition will feature a vast range of visually and auditorily stimulating performance art. Jazz, choral, dance, and marimba are just a few of the mediums that will be presented during the fast-paced musical showcase. Featuring several of the University's most acclaimed performing arts groups, the concert has something for just about anyone, regardless of your tastes.

Attendees will be treated to an array of selections performed by the University's own award-winning Jazz Ensemble I, under the direction of Professor Jeffrey Holmes. This big band has earned national acclaim, earning top honors at several collegiate jazz festivals while also gaining recognition for their excellence in Downbeat Magazine's Annual Student Music Awards. The Ensemble performs a mixture of student- and faculty-created pieces while mixing in significant historical selections, creating a sense of comfort and originality to their sound.

In addition to Jazz Ensemble I, the Vocal Jazz Ensemble, directed by Catherine Jensen-Hole, and Chapel Jazz Ensemble, directed by David Sporny, will also perform. The Vocal Jazz Ensemble puts a heavy emphasis on jazz, blues and soul styles, while the Chapel Jazz Ensemble works jump from traditional big-band pieces to experimental compositions of pop and rock.

Moving from the world of jazz, the event will also showcase the Minuteman Marching Band, under the leadership of George N. Parks, founder of the George N. Parks Drum Major Academy, and assisted by Thomas Hannum. This year's incarnation of the band consists of 390 musicians, making it the largest in the history of the university.

Nationally recognized and known as the "Power and Class of New England" the Minuteman Marching Band will bring a level of enthusiasm and excitement to the Fine Arts Center that they routinely invoke during halftime performances at McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

Similarly energetic will be a performance by the Percussion Ensemble, directed by Eduardo Leandro. No strangers to the road, Leandro and the Ensemble are regulars throughout the Northeast, while remaining active on campus with numerous performances. Combining the various forms of classical percussion, the ensemble will provide a unique contrast to the

See MULTIBAND on page 5

The drum line of the UMass marching band provides the back bone for the 'Power and Class of New England.' The Marching band, along with Jazz, dance, choral and marimba groups from within the music department will be part of the 'Multiband Pop' concert tonight.

Birbiglia opens up his 'secret journal'

BY STEVEN STAFFORD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Shrewsbury native Mike Birbiglia's new CD, "My Secret Public Journal Live," is his first CD in a year, which, for comedians, is considered prolific. In it, Birbiglia meanders through a surprisingly well-crafted and cohesive act, riffing on such disparate issues as technology, being a celebrity, and his parents.

"As a comedian, when people laugh it's very exciting, and when they don't, it's like you're performing jazz," Birbiglia jokes. "They just sit there and bob their heads and look around, which gets me worried, because sometimes jazz sucks."

Through most of this disc, the audience remains enthusiastic and at the end it seems they want more. That's as good a sign as any that Birbiglia's work is a fresh alternative to much of popular comedy.

He jokes on the president, Phil Simms and Kenny G, but most of his material is based on his personal experiences, mostly awkward moments that he can somehow translate into great stand-up. He basically tells the best had-to-be-there stories you've ever heard, which is a remarkable achievement, since those are almost never funny day to day life.

His delivery is just about impeccable, he seems able to read his audience's mind and time his lines perfectly based on their reactions. Just as they stop laughing to take a breath, he typically, and gracefully, drops another joke on them and then they explode again in laughter.

He is even able to use silence as a comedic weapon. His stories are average, ones that we all can probably top somehow, but his execution of the jokes is why he has a successful career.

His man simply has charisma. His lines aren't funny on paper and he doesn't have many great punch lines. His God-given charm allows him to mine for humor in such unexpected subjects as peanuts, buying a pretzel and ordering a big screen TV.

This freedom allows him to have one of the freshest acts of any established American comedian today.

He isn't awkward in the same

See BIRBIGLIA on page 5

Comedian Mike Birbiglia has a completely unique style based around his charasmatic personality and had-to-be-there stories.

Smith professor directs new play in Noho

'Soul of the City' for one night only

BY ANDREA MURRAY
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The new play "Soul of the City" by Smith College Professor Ellen Kaplan plays one night only tonight at Hallie Flannigan Studio Theatre at Smith in Northampton. The show will start the theatrical season over Family Weekend at Smith.

